This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google books

https://books.google.com

Digitized by Google

N. 24724. d. 16.
1855-61.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

PRISON AND REFORMATORY GAZETTE;

A RECORD OF SOCIAL AMELIORATION, AND JOURNAL OF CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

No. 1, New Series.] LONDON, JUNE 1, 1855. [Price 5d. Stamped 6d.

LIFE ASSURANCE.

UNITED Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution.

1, ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON-BRIDGE, LONDON.

Established, 1840, for the Mutual Assurance of Lives, Endowments, Annuities, etc.

ACCUMULATED CAPITAL, £125,000.

Since the commencement of this Institution it has issued Ten Thousand Policies. In the year 1852, it issued 1,177; in the year 1853, 1,318; and in 1854, 1,331.

This is the only Life Assurance Office in which abstainers from Distilled and Fermented Liquors, can secure the full benefit of their Temperance.

The Temperance and Public Sections are kept in separate classes, and will each receive their own profits.

Policies are indisputable, except for palpable fraud.

Entire profits belong to the assured.

Edinburgh Office, 17, George-street; Manchester, 41, John Dalton-street; Liverpool, 48, Castle-street; Glasgow, 106, Hope-street.

Prospectuses, &c., may be obtained at the Branch Offices, or of any of the agents.

WILLIAM RICHARD BAKER, Resident Director.

ASYLUM FOR FEMALE ORPHANS, Westminster Road, Lambeth.

A Special General Court of the Guardians of this Charity will be held at the Asylum, on Monday, June 11th, at 12 o'clock, for the purpose of electing Ten Orphans to be received into the Establishment. The Poll will close at 3 o'clock precisely.

LONDON

Philanthropic Society,

For Relieving the POOR with Bread and Coals in all parts of the Metropolis and Suburbs.

ESTABLISHED IN THE YEAR 1841.

Under the Patronage of

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, THE RIGHT HON. LORD STANLEY, M.P., &c. &c. &c.

A FANCY SALE,

In aid of the Funds of the Society, will be held at the Hall of Commerce, Threadneedle St., City,

On the 19th, 20th and 21st of June, 1855,

Under the Special Patronage of

The Countess of Lichfield. Lady Louisa Primrose. The Countess of Rosebery. The Lady Mayoress.

Rev. Hugh Allen, M.A.	Rev. Frederick J. Jobson.
Rev. Thomas Binney.	Rev. William Kirkus, LL.B.
Rev. Joseph Brown, M.A.	Rev. John Letts, M.A.
Rev. John Davies.	Rev. J. W. Markwell, M.A.
Rev. W. H. Dickinson, B.C.L.	Rev. John Russell, D.D.
Rev. Alexan. Fletcher, D.D.	Rev. William Tyler.
Rev. J. H. Hinton, M.A.	Rev. George Wilkins.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF

NEEDLEWORK, BOOKS, DRAWINGS, PRINTS, MONEY, &c., &c.,

Will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Mrs. Mills, Treasurer, at the Society's Offices, Moira Chambers, 17, Ironmonger Lane, Cheapside.

Bazaar Open each day from 10 o'clock till dusk.

Admission, ONE SHILLING, to be returned in purchases made.

Children accompanying their Friends, admitted free.

THE ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL, HAVERSTOCK HILL.

Patron.—THE QUEEN.

For Children of both Sexes of all Denominations, and from any part of the Kingdom.

TWENTY-FIVE Vacancies are declared for the Next ELECTION, which will take place in November. Candidates must be in good health and between seven and eleven years of age. Forms to fill up and all requisite information may be obtained by applying to the Secretary. All the votes are carried forward from one Election to another, so that with reasonable effort every case will succeed. The greatly increased expenditure arising out of the War might justify the Committee in reducing the number for Election, but they look rather with confidence for support from a Christian public, not doubting that their appeal will meet with a willing and hearty response. The expenses of 1854 were above £1000 more than in 1852, with about the same average number of Children. There are now 269 Orphan Children under the care of the Charity. Contributions will be thankfully received.

Office, 32, Ludgate Hill. JOSEPH SOUL, Secretary.

CRIMINAL REFORM.

PREVENTIVE and Reformatory Institution, 19, New Road, near Gower Street North, under Government Inspection. President, The Earl of Shaftesbury. This Institution, one of the earliest established for the Industrial training and placing out of criminals and outcasts, which has already provided for 35, and has accommodation for upwards of 40, is languishing for want of funds; an opportunity is presented to the Committee of doubling their operations, but they are compelled to pause before filling up even their present number. Having exhausted all their efforts in bringing the Institution to its present state they are driven to make this appeal to the public, and earnestly hope it will not be made in vain, as applicants are numerous, and those who are rejected are left without hope and almost inevitably relapse into crime. Donations thankfully received at Prescott and Co., 62, Threadneedle-street; Williams and Co., Birchin Lane; S. Cave, Esq., 23, Wilton Place; and G. J. Bowyer, Esq., 43 Ampthill Square.

Second Edition. Just Published, price 5s., elegantly bound in cloth,

WANDERINGS among the WILD FLOWERS: How to See and How to Gather them. With Two Chapters on the Economical and Medicinal uses of our Native Plants. By SPENCER THOMSON, M.D., Fellow of the Botanical Society of Edinburgh; Author of "A Dictionary of Domestic Medicine and Household Surgery," Illustrated with 170 Engravings on Wood.

"A pretty volume devoted to Botany. The author has evidently a love of plants, and throws a sufficient amount of feeling into his descriptions of the parts of plants, to render them less dry and tedious than such are usually found. As an introduction to Botany for young people in this country, we can recommend Dr. Thomson's Wanderings among the Wild Flowers."—Athenæum.

"'Wanderings among the Wild Flowers' is a book of remarkable beauty."—Christian Weekly News.

Groombridge and Sons, Paternoster Row, and at the Office of the "Family Economist," 32, Paternoster Row.

THE HEALTH RESORTS AND BATHING PLACES OF BRITAIN: Scarborough, Buxton, Isle of Wight, Isle of Man; their Climate, and suitability as temporary resorts for various classes of Invalids, &c., &c. By a Physician. In the Family Economist, Volume for 1854. Price 2s. 6d.

Office of "Family Economist," 32, Paternoster Row. Sold by all Booksellers.

ALL persons insuring during this year will share in the next division of profits

BRITISH EMPIRE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

37, NEW BRIDGE-STREET, BLACKFRIARS LONDON.

DIRECTORS.

JOHN GOVER, Esq., Chairman, New Kent-road.
BENNETT, C. Esq., 32, Royal Exchange.
BUNNELL, P. Esq., Edmonton.
BURTON, J. R., Esq., 189, Great Dover Street.
CARTWRIGHT, R., Esq., 57, Chancery-lane.
CUTHBERTSON, F., Esq., 123, Aldersgate-street.
GARDINER, B. W., Esq., 20, Princes-street, Cavendish-square.
GROSER, W. Esq., 35, Hemingford Villas, Barnsbury park.
LEWIS, G. C., Esq., 1, Lowndes-terrace, Knightsbridge.
MILLAR, R, J., Esq., 1, Holland-grove, North Brixton.
PRATT, D., Esq., 3, Bolt-court, Fleet-street.
SANDERS, J., Esq., 5, Sutherland-square, Walworth.

AUDITORS.

BURGE, G. W., Esq., 10, Clarence Villas, Hackney.
PORTER, JOSEPH, L., Esq., 43, Sloane-street.

BANKERS.

LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK.

SOLICITORS.

Messrs. WATSON and SONS, 12, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street.

SURVEYOR.

THOMAS TURNER, Esq., 24, Bucklersbury.

SURGEON.

JOHN MANN, Esq., 4 Charter-house-square.

SECRETARY.

JAMES INGLIS, Esq.

The Proposals for Life Assurance received during the year 1854 amounted to 1034 for £243,968; out of which 876 Policies have been issued, assuring £195,759; 158 for £48,209 being in progress, or declined.

The number of Policies now in force is 5,069, assuring £988,050.

The present Annual Income is £36,568 18s. 1d.

The Company has an Accumulated Fund of £70,000.

The period having arrived for the Second Division of Profits to the Assured, a complete and detailed valuation of the assets and liabilities of the Company has been made by the Actuary, F. G. P. Nelson, Esq., by which it appeared, that of the realised profits during the three years that have elapsed since the first division, there is a disposable balance of £20,000; and, after deducting 10 per cent. for the purposes of the Reserved Fund, there remains £18,000 to appropriate as bonus to the members, which will be found to be in the ratio of about 27½ per cent. of the amount of premiums paid by them.

JAMES INGLIS, Secretary.

FIRE COMPANY. — Subscribed Guarantee Fund, £200,000; Pure Mutuality; Policy-holders not liable for Losses; Entire Profits Divided Triennially; Policies issued, 13,438 for £6,019,185; 12½ per Cent. per Annum has been returned at each triennial division on the entire premiums paid.

FRANCIS CLOWES, Secretary.

Now ready, in foolscap 8vo. price 3s. cloth,

ANTI-MYSTICISM; or, Man in his Relation to the Holy Spirit, Revealed Truth and Divine Grace. By W. R. BAKER, Author of "Our State Church," "Intemperance the Curse of Britain," &c

Also Fourth Edition, price 3s. cloth,

THE CURSE of BRITAIN: an Essay on the Evils Cause and Cure of Intemperance. With an Introductory Chapter on the Maine Law. By W. R. BAKER.

Also, price 2s. cloth,

OUR STATE CHURCH: Her Structure, Doctrines Forms, and Character.

Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster-row.

Digitized by Google

WESTBOURNE-GROVE
BAPTIST CHAPEL AND SCHOOLS.
FANCY FAIR AND BAZAAR.

IT is proposed during the Month of JUNE to hold a FANCY FAIR and BAZAAR, in the SCHOOL-ROOMS of WESTBOURNE-GROVE CHAPEL, the entire proceeds of which will be devoted towards liquidating the debt remaining upon this Place of Worship and Instruction. Any Articles included in the following list will be most thankfully received, and duly acknowledged, by the Rev. W. G. Lewis, 44, Chepstow-place, Bayswater; or Peter Broad, 28, Poultry:—

Money to Purchase Materials for Sale.
Needlework, Plain and Ornamental.
Engravings—Pictures—Autographs.
Shells—Geological Specimens.
Scientific Apparatus.
Curiosities, Natural or Manufactured.
Toys—and Articles of Vertu.

THE Penny Pulpit.—Accurately reported Sermons, issued Weekly, Monthly, and in Vols. bound in cloth, 10s. 6d. each. No. 2,319, Rev. S. Bridge, "The Expectation of the Creature"—2,316, Dr. Guthrie, "The Power of Love"—2,334, Rev. R. Shulte, "Pardoning Mercy"—Rev. J. J. West, "My Doves"—2,338, Rev. H. Melvill, "The Borrower Servant to the Lender."

Selections of the following, bound in cloth.

	s.	d.
120 by Clergymen of the Church of England	12	0
70 by Rev. H. Allen, A.M.	7	0
19 by Rev. J. Sanderson Robins, A.M.	4	0
48 by Rev. J. Cumming, D. D.	5	0
36 by Rev. T. Binney	4	0
31 by Rev. J. C. Philpot	4	0
15 by Rev. J. H. Evans and Rev. B. W. Noel	2	6
96 by Congregational Ministers	10	6
48 at Exeter Hall, during Exhibition, 1851	6	0
14 on the Proverbs, by Rev. T. Binney	1	6
6 on Formation of Character, by ditto	1	6
History of Joseph, by W. Mason	1	0
Peace among Christians, by Rev. M. H. Seymour	1	0
Goodrich's Lecture to Children.	1	0

THE GOLDEN LECTURES, delivered at St. Margaret's, Lothbury, by the Rev. HENRY MELVILL, A.M. during the years 1850 to 1854, Five Vols. 6s. each.

COUNSEL and COMPLIMENT; or, the Old Year's Exhortation and the New Year's Compliment. By Rev. J. CUMMING, D.D. Cloth, 8d.

BUNHILL MEMORIALS. Authentic Records of 300 Ministers and others, buried in Bunhill-fields. Cloth, 5s.

THE DREAM of Heaven; or, the Sister's Tale, A Fact and not a Fiction. By. Rev. T. SHARPE. Cloth, 6d.

THE SHEPHERD KING; an Exposition of the XXIII. Psalm. By Rev. THOMAS BINNEY. Price 6d. cloth.

London: James Paul, 1, Chapter House-court, North Side of St. Paul's.

A Midsummer Holiday Book for Boys, embellished with characteristic Engravings.
Price One Shilling, fancy boards. A cheaper Edition, Ninepence sewed.

THE Boys' Start in Life; and How They Succeeded.

Opinions of the Press.

"A tale of extraordinary merit."

"A story as fascinating as "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

"We accord to it a higher meed of approbation than to the 'Wide, wide World.' We doubt not it will have its THOUSANDS of readers."—CHURCH OF ENGLAND QUARTERLY.

"The story is most fascinating."

"A tale which will be read with pleasure by young and old."—IPSWICH EXPRESS.

"The book is admirably adapted for youth, and the spirit of piety which runs through the whole of its pages contributes greatly to its worth. Few of our young friends can read it, we think, without being the better for its perusal."—GOSPEL HERALD.

"This story is likely to be more popular than even the "Wide, wide World,' and 'Queechy;" and the sale bids fair to equal that of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin." It breathes everywhere, says the editor of the BANNER, a manly spirit. The fact that the first English Edition was introduced to readers in this country by the amiable and excellent clergyman Mr. Tayle, is itself a sufficient guarantee for its purity and tendency."

"Contains many useful lessons, and is pervaded by a good and healthy spirit."—LITERARY GAZETTE.

"A tale of practical business-life, showing how individuals may raise themselves, by forethought and steady industry, from a wretched to a comfortable condition."—DAILY NEWS.

"An exceedingly interesting and instructive book."—MOTHER'S FRIEND.

"It is a fine book for boys."—NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE.

LONDON:—J. F. SHAW, 27, SOUTHAMPTON ROW AND 36, PATERNOSTER ROW.

In One Vol. imp. 32mo. 2s. 6d. cloth; 3s. cloth, gilt edges, URGENT Questions.—Personal, Practical, and Pointed. By the Rev. JOHN CUMMING, D.D.

Each Question may also be had separate.

1. WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST? 2d.
2. WHAT MUST I DO TO BE SAVED? 2d.
3. HOW SHALL WE ESCAPE? 2d.
4. WHO IS ON THE LORD'S SIDE? 3d.
5. LOVEST THOU ME? 2d.
6. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT? 2d.
7. WHAT IS YOUR LIFE? 2d.
8. WHY ART THOU CAST DOWN? 2d.
9. WHAT WILT THOU HAVE ME TO DO? 2d.
10. WILT THOU BE MADE WHOLE? 2d.
11. WHO CAN BE AGAINST US? 2d.
12. O GRAVE, WHERE IS THY VICTORY? 2d.

John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row.

DR. CUMMING ON THE PENTATEUCH.

SABBATH Morning Readings on the OLD TESTAMENT. The PENTATEUCH. By the Rev. JOHN CUMMING, D.D.

Volumes complete:—
THE BOOK OF GENESIS. 5s. cloth.
THE BOOK OF EXODUS. 5s. cloth.
THE BOOK OF LEVITICUS. 5s. cloth.
THE BOOK OF NUMBERS. 4s. cloth.

John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row

DEVOTIONAL COMMENTS ON THE PSALMS.

MANNA in the Heart; or, Daily Comments on the Book of Psalms. Psalm First to Seventy-eighth. By the Rev. BARTON BOUCHIER, A.M., Author of "Manna in the House; or, Daily Comments on the Gospels."

John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row.

FAMILY COMMENTARY.
The Gospels complete in Three Vols., 18s.

MANNA in the House; or, Daily Comments on the Gospels; specially adapted for Reading at Family Worship. By the Rev. BARTON BOUCHIER, A.M. St. Matthew and St. Mark, 6s.; St. Luke, 6s.; St. John, 6s.

John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row.

Four Vols. imp. 8vo. Two Guineas cloth.

THE Domestic Commentary on the OLD and NEW TESTAMENTS. By the Rev. ROBERT SHITTLER, Vicar of Alton, Pancras, Dorset. Second Thousand. Beautifully printed in Large Type with the Text. In Two Vols. imp. 8vo. £2 cloth; or in Four Vols. 42s. cloth. May also be had in a Variety of Bindings suitable for Presents, varying in price from £3 10s. to £5 10s.

John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row.

Now ready, a New Edition, in One Vol. post 8vo. 7s. cloth,

BIBLE Teaching; or, Remarks on the Books of Genesis, Exodus, and Leviticus; with a Recommendatory Preface. By the Rev. W. B. MACKENZIE, Incumbent of St. James's, Holloway.

John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row.

Fourth Edition, with an Index of Subjects.

VINTAGE Gleanings; gathered from Sermons delivered by the Rev. JAMES HARRINGTON EVANS. Royal 32mo. cloth, gilt edges, 3s.

John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row.

NEW WORK BY DR. CUMMING.
Preparing for immediate publication, in One Vol. fcap. 8vo.

THE End; or, The Proximate Signs of the Close of this Dispensation. By the Rev. JOHN CUMMING, D.D., F.R.S.E.

By the same Author,

A WORD in Season; or, Comforting Thoughts for the Relatives of the Fallen Brave, Second Edition enlarged, fcap. 8vo. 2s, cloth.

John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row.

NEVER TOO LATE TO LEARN.

MISTAKES of Daily Occurrence in SPEAKING, WRITING, and PRONUNCIATION CORRECTED, 12th Thousand, sewed 6d.; by post, 10d.

By the same Author, price 6d.,

SCOTTICISMS corrected. "A Scotticism is not so much Scottish Words as English Words in a Scottish use or construction." Every Scotchman ought to possess this work.

London: John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row.

Third Thousand, fcap. 8vo. 5s. 6d. cloth.

MORNINGS with Jesus; a Series of Devotional Readings for the Closet and the Family. By the late Rev. WILLIAM JAY, of Bath. John F. Shaw, Southampton-row, and Paternoster-row.

A HOME Book for Children of all Ages. Illustrated, in fcap. 8vo. price 2s. cloth, elegant.

"It would be difficult to speak of this little volume more highly than we think. It is admirably adapted to the capacity of children; and by the variety of its contents,—poetry and prose,—narrative, fable, and homily,—it keeps alive their attention, and is well suited to supply them with pleasure and instruction."—ECLECTIC REVIEW.

"Beautiful poetry and touching narratives alternate in this little volume. It belongs to a class of books that are always welcome both to young and old, and that cannot be too greatly multiplied."—CHRISTIAN WEEKLY NEWS.

"One of the healthiest-toned and most interesting home-books that have ever courted the attention of our young readers. Love and obedience to parents, and encouragement in the path of duty and morals, are inculcated in the purest and most agreeable language."—SHERBORNE JOURNAL.

Ward and Co. 27, Paternoster Row.

JACOB ABBOTT'S NEW STORIES.

STUYVESANT; A Franconia Story. Illustrated, price 2s. cloth.
Ward and Co. 27, Paternoster Row.

CAROLINE; A Franconia Story. Illustrated, price 2s. cloth.
Ward and Co. 27, Paternoster Row.

AGNES; A Franconia Story. Illustrated, price 2s. cloth.

"Books so delightful to boys and girls of the school-age as these Franconia Stories I have never seen before. But delight is not the end with Mr. Abbott. He uses it as an instrument. I should feel that my children had suffered a great loss in their moral education, if they failed to become acquainted with such characters as Stuyvesant, Caroline, Mary Bell, and the renowned Beechnut (the hero of the tales)."—REV. JOHN CURWEN TO WARD AND CO.

"Three of the fascinating and heart-improving Stories of the charming Abbott."—CHRISTIAN WEEKLY NEWS.

Ward and Co. 27, Paternoster Row.

THE Child's Commentator on the Holy Scriptures. By the Rev. Ingram Cobbin, M.A. A new Edition, Illustrated with superior Engravings. Complete in 2 vols., 10s. 6d. cloth, (nearly 1000 pages.)

"A book eminently attractive to the young. It is valuable as omitting nothing in the whole range of Biblical knowledge that can be considered important."—UNION MAGAZINE.

Ward and Co. 27, Paternoster Row.

MARY and her Mother; Scriptural Stories for Young Children, fifth edition, 18mo. with Fifteen Superior Engravings, and a Frontispiece in Colours, 2s. 6d. cloth.

"These are certainly the most simple and engaging scriptural stories we have seen. It is a delightful book for young children."—THE UNIVERSE.

Ward and Co. 27, Paternoster Row.

"THEY that sow in tears shall reap in joy." A Story for the Young. Translated from the German of Franz Hoffman. In 18mo. price 1s. 6d. cloth.

"Just such a book as ladies of every age would delight to ponder; and it may be, while doing so, they will drop a tear. It is largely fraught with encouragement."—BRITISH BANNER.

"Really a very interesting and truly profitable story,—one of the best we have read for a long time."—CHRISTIAN NEWS.

Ward and Co. 27, Paternoster Row.

THE Teacher's Offering. Vol. for 1854. Illustrated with a Frontispiece in Colours, and many Wood Engravings. In 18mo. price 1s. 6d. cloth.

The work is published Monthly, price One Penny. An Illuminated Almanack for 1855 is given with the Number for January.

"The present volume (1853), in our judgment, surpasses all its predecessors in neatness, and appropriateness of contribution. There is scarce an inferior article in it; while many of the communications are in a high degree calculated to engage and elevate the youthful mind."—EVANGELICAL MAGAZINE.

Ward and Co. 27, Paternoster-row.

Digitized by Google

Benevolent Institutions.

THE MARINE SOCIETY.—The anniversary dinner of the Marine Society, was held on the 18th of April, at the London Tavern, Admiral Hinton, C.B., in the chair, supported by Captain Richards, C.B., R.N., Captain H. D. Austin, R.N., Captain John Shepherd, deputy master of the Trinity House, Captain John Sykes, R.N., and Captain J. P. Clarke, R.N.

The usual loyal and patriotic toasts having been disposed of, some of the boys (who, in the whole, number some 120) were introduced to the company, presenting a clean, healthy, and contented appearance. Subscriptions, amounting to upwards of 500*l.*, were afterwards announced, including 100*l.* from her Majesty, 100*l.* from the East India Company, and 50*l.* from the corporation of the Trinity House.

THE JEWISH INDIGENT BLIND.—A ball took place at Willis's Rooms, on the 24th of April in aid of the funds of the institution for relieving indigent blind persons of the Hebrew persuasion. The rooms were fully and fashionably attended, and the festivities were protracted to a late, or rather an early hour. Mr. B. S. Phillips and the committee of which he was the chairman, exerted themselves in every way to promote the enjoyment of their guests. The number of persons who have been relieved at this institution is from 80 to 90, and the amount expended exceeds 16,000*l.* The collection on Tuesday was about 400*l.*

NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT SOCIETY.—The thirty-first anniversary meeting of this Society, which has for its object the preservation of life from shipwreck, was held on the 26th of April, at the London Tavern; the Duke of Northumberland, K.G., president of the society, in the chair. The report of the committee stated that the establishments of the institution on the coasts had been considerably increased, by the transfer of nine life-boats, eight boat houses, and five life-boat carriages, from the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Benevolent Society, consequent on the relinquishment by the latter of its life-boat establishment; but a large outlay would be required, to make alterations and improvements in some of the boats. The Board of Trade would in future afford pecuniary aid to the society, conditional on every exertion being made to obtain voluntary contributions. The board had decided not to contribute to the primary outlay incurred on a life-boat establishment, but would afford aid by repayments to the institution, to a limited amount, of awards to the crews of life-boats for saving, or trying to save life, and by payments to life-boat crews, for a quarterly exercise and trial of their boats, and other incidental charges. The society had established during the year life-boat stations at Alnmouth, Lytham, Rhyl, Portmadoc, Llanelly, Tenby, Teignmouth, Hornsea, Whitburn, Berwick-on-Tweed, Dover, Fishguard, Pakefield, Lowestoft, and Southwold. The life-boats in connexion with the society had been the means during the year of saving the crews of 13 vessels, the number of lives saved being 132. The committee had to lament the demise of the veteran Captain Manby, whose mortar apparatus had, it was supposed, been instrumental in saving a total of about 1,000 lives. The committee deeply regretted that notwithstanding the extraordinary and successful efforts made during the past year to save the lives of persons shipwrecked on our coasts, the loss of life from shipwreck had been unprecedentedly large, 987 wrecks having taken place in the year on the shores and in the seas of the United Kingdom, in which some 1,549 lives had been sacrificed. The record of such disasters showed the necessity that existed for well-organised and well-directed efforts. 9,222 shipwrecked persons had been saved by the institution since its establishment in 1824. Since then also 79 gold medallions and 546 silver medals had been voted for distinguished services in saving life, besides pecuniary rewards, amounting to 9,292*l.* The committee concluded with an earnest appeal for increased pecuniary aid. The expenditure on the year had been 3,672*l.* and the income 1,744*l.*

The CHAIRMAN announced that the Emperor of the French had presented the institution with a donation of 1,500fr.

The report was adopted, and the usual routine business having been transacted, the meeting separated.

HOTEL AND TAVERN KEEPERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.—This Institution celebrated its sixteenth anniversary on the 27th of April last, at the Thatched House Tavern. The chairman, OCTAVIUS E. COOKE, Esq. in proposing the toast of the evening, said, circumstances had induced him to make inquiries, which had satisfied him of the soundness of the Institution, and the principles on which it was established. He had been informed, that among the trade there were certain parties who were adverse to the Institution; and at his suggestion, a deputation was appointed to wait upon those parties, to ascertain the cause of their hostility. He had accompanied the deputation, and they had waited upon fifty of those who were opposed to them. It turned out that their objections were reduced to two—one was, that they did not believe the Institution could stand ten years; and that objection had been removed by the fact, that they were now celebrating their sixteenth anniversary.—(Loud cheers.) The second objection was against the hotel and tavern-keepers associating with their servants. Now, that was an objection which he (the Chairman) thought could not enter into any generous mind—(hear and cheers)—for nothing, he thought, could be more agreeable and praiseworthy in every point of view, than to see the employed and the employers meeting together in such an association, and the latter extending a kindly and proper consideration towards those upon whose attentions and assiduity they placed so much dependance. (Loud cheers.) At present he understood the Institution had a capital of near 6,000*l.*, but, considering the importance of the body, he was rather surprised they had not come up to the minimum capital of 10,000*l.*, and he was of opinion that that amount ought to be raised at once. In conclusion, he gave the toast of "Prosperity to the Hotel and Tavern-keepers' Provident Institution," which was drunk with all the honours and loud cheering.

The object of this Institution, is the establishment of a Fund for the permanent assistance of Hotel and Tavern Keepers, Club Houses, Confectionary Establishments, Cooks and Waiters, being Members, and their Widows, and temporary assistance of Members, their Widows and Children, when in necessitous circumstances.

THE LITERARY ASSOCIATION OF THE FRIENDS OF POLAND.—The annual meeting was held at the Sussex Chambers, Dulee Street, St. James's on the 3rd of May last, chairman, the Marquess of Bredalbane; among the company present were the Earl of Harrington, Lord Kinnaird, the Earl of Zetland, Mr. M. Milnes, M.P., Mr. J. Abel Smith, M.P., Prince Ladislas Czartoryski, Captain Townshend, R.N., M.P. Mr. D. Urquhart, &c. From the report it appears that the number of Polish refugees now in this country amounts to 753, whose conduct, under severe privations, is stated to have been most exemplary. The total expenditure of the past year amounted to 1,646*l.*, including the sum of 1,153*l.* for relief alone, and the balance in hand amounts to 369*l.*

THE YORKSHIRE SOCIETY.—The Forty-fourth anniversary dinner took place at the London Tavern on the 3rd of May last, Lord Cardigan in the chair. After the usual and patriotic toasts, the children of the Yorkshire School were introduced by the stewards, preceded by the newly-appointed master, Mr. Myers. The healthy and neat appearance of the children was the theme of general approbation, and his Lordship, in a very eulogistic address, expressed his great satisfaction with the management of the charity. The attendance at dinner was numerous, and several influential gentlemen connected with the county of York were present, including the mayor of Halifax, Mr. J. Hutton, of Clifton Castle, Major Tempest, and others. Subscriptions for the charity amounted to 550*l.*

SOLDIERS' INFANT HOME.—A public meeting was held at Willis's Rooms on the 7th of May, on behalf of this institution, the object of which is to clothe, maintain, and educate the infant daughters of soldiers. The Duke of Wellington in the chair. The Rev. W. H. Foy, honorary secretary to the institution, observed that it was proposed that the girls should be instructed in the duties of domestic servants, and that those who exhibited the highest intellectual attainments should be sent to training schools, with the view to their becoming school teachers and governesses. The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Rev. Charles Mackenzie, the chaplain-general, Colonel Crawford, the Rev. Mr. Jackson, Viscount Ingestre, and other gentlemen.

LONDON FEMALE DORMITORY.—On the 8th May, a public meeting in behalf of this institution (the object of which is to afford temporary protection to friendless young women, and to effect the rescue of fallen females) was held at the National School-room, Southampton street, Euston Square. The chair was taken by the Rev. T. Dale, M.A. The proceedings having been opened, as customary, with prayer, Lieutenant Blackmore called upon the meeting to support the society in its philanthrophic work, and stated that although the number of inmates was reduced by want of funds, from September, 1850, to Christmas, 1854, no less than 554 poor females had been admitted into the home. Of these 178 had been restored to society and enabled to obtain honest livelihoods; 177 had returned to their friends; 34 had been respectably married; while 27 had emigrated. The chairman said that this institution was the first to grapple with the dreadful evil it was founded to remedy, and which existed in the very heart of society to so great an extent. It was the custom of the superintendent and others to perambulate the streets of London by night, and they had been the means of rescuing many miserable women. The receipts for the past year had amounted to 2,278*l.* 5s. 5d., and the expenditure to 2,336*l.* 12s., leaving a deficiency of 58*l.* 6s. 7d., together with outstanding liabilities amounting to 445*l.* 19s. 10d. The meeting was subsequently addressed by the Rev. T. Jackson, the Rev. W. Ashley, J. Payne, Esq., and others, and the meeting separated with a cordial vote of thanks to the reverend chairman.

ROYAL MEDICAL BENEVOLENT COLLEGE. The annual general meeting of the governors of this institution was held in Hanover-square Rooms on the 8th of May. In the absence of the president, Earl Manvers, Lord Viscount Ebrington, M.P., was called to the chair.

His Lordship expressed the admiration which he felt for the skill, great liberality, kindness towards the suffering, charity towards the distressed, and heroism in danger—the nature and extent of which only men of the same scientific acquirements as themselves were able to form an adequate opinion of—which characterized the medical practitioners of this country.

Digitized by Google

Dr. Sieveking, Honorary Secretary, read the report of the council, which stated that the general results of their labours during the past year were of the most gratifying character. At the anniversary dinner, held on the 28th of February last, under the presidency of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the subscriptions amounted to 2,300*l.*—a tangible proof that the institution was assuming a permanent character. Its funds had also been increased by legacies to the extent of 700*l.*, and by a donation of 500*l.* There was at present before parliament a bill for the incorporation of the college, which the council were confident of having passed into a law. The buildings at Epsom were fast approaching completion, and it was proposed to open a portion of them on the 1st of October next, for the reception of pensioners and foundation scholars.

The Treasurer (Mr. Propert) stated that since the founding of the college the council had received 27,509*l.* 7s. 5d., and had the promise of subscriptions which would bring the amount up to 30,809*l.* The expenditure up to the present time had been 16,465*l.* 7s. 4d. So that there was in hand a balance of above 8,000*l.* The liabilities of the institution amounted to 24,000*l.*

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS OF FOREIGNERS IN DISTRESS.—The 49th anniversary was celebrated at the London Tavern on the 9th of May, Mr. J. Labouchere, treasurer of the society, in the chair; Mr. Labouchere was supported by Sheriff Sir Charles D. Crosley, Mr. J. D. Powles, Mr. J. Deacon, the Rev. Dr. Gehle, Mr. Doxat, Mr. Cesar Azemar, and other gentlemen of high standing in the city of London. The toast of the evening, "Success to the Society of Friends of Foreigners," was proposed from the chair in a sensible and business-like speech, the hon. gentleman relying on the benefits actually rendered to the pensioners of the society, and taking occasion to announce that during the past year 100 Russian subjects (at present unfortunately our enemies) had been relieved in this metropolis at the expense of the society. Improving on this fact, he went on to assert the great principle of the charity—viz., that its benefits were extended to all foreigners, without reference to nation or to creed. This speech was responded to by subscriptions amounting to nearly 1,500*l.* It appears from the report that during the past year, and more particularly during the last six months, the applications for relief have been on the increase, and that relief has been afforded to no fewer than 1,655 instances, independently of the wives and children. At the date of the report (1st of March) the distress, especially among the labouring classes in the east end of London, had reached an almost unprecedented neight, in consequence of the severity of the weather, the lengthened suspension of work in the docks, the high price of provisions, and the extreme depression of some branches of trade. Under these circumstances the directors have acted in a manner worthy of the crisis, and, as they have not only given more liberal relief than their means allowed them to do, but voted money to be distributed by the clergy of the eastern districts of the metropolis, it behoves the public to extend to the charity a more than usually liberal amount of contributions. The toast of "The Corporation of the City of London" was responded to by Sir C. D. Crosley in a neat and effective speech. The chairman announced that next year would take place the jubilee festival of the society, and took occasion to express a hope that all the firms connected with the foreign trade would send at least one representative on that auspicious occasion.

SOLDIERS' FRIEND AND ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY.—The anniversary meeting of this society was held on May the 9th, in the large room of Exeter Hall, Lord Robert Grosvenor presiding. From the report it appeared that the society had been some years in existence, but that it was only during the past year that it had received any enlarged support. It was, however, at the present time in a position to render comparatively efficient assistance through its agents to our soldiers and sailors in the East. Till within the past year it had only four agents, and it now numbered twenty in England and seven in the East, while from a state of debt it had emerged to the position of having a balance of over 2,600*l.* in the bankers' hands. The report was adopted, and the meeting was subsequently addressed by several clergymen and distinguished members of the laity.

FEMALE SERVANTS' HOME SOCIETY.—The annual meeting was celebrated at Exeter Hall on the 10th of May, Joseph Payne, Esq. in the chair. The report, which was read by the secretary on the occasion, stated that the object of the society, which was established in 1836, at the suggestion of the Rev. Joseph Brown, was to provide a safe Home for female servants when out of place, and for young women coming from the country to seek situations in London. It was calculated that there were nearly a million female servants in the kingdom, and more than a hundred thousand in London, of whom ten thousand were always out of place or changing their situations. As many as six thousand servants had been received into the two Homes of the society, in Nutford-place, Edgeware-road, and Hatton-garden, and had thus been shielded from the numerous temptations of the metropolis, and brought under religious instruction. Thirty thousand servants had availed themselves of the society's free register, most of whom had been provided with situations; many had been restored to health by a short rest and residence in the Home, and returned to their places; while others had been furnished with admission to hospitals, or received thence in a state of convalescence till able to obtain employment.

The society had also sheltered many, unable, from age or incapacity, to obtain places, and assisted them in returning to their friends in the country; providing, in some cases, temporal assistance, spiritual consolation, and Christian burial. Rewards for good conduct and length of service were also given—namely, a Bible, (with suitable inscription) and a sovereign, for three years' continuous service in one family; for six years, a certificate of merit and a book; and for nine years, a silver medal. After a brief address from the chairman, several domestic servants, who had received the highest characters from their mistresses, were presented with rewards, as above mentioned. One of these, it was said, employed her Sunday afternoons in teaching in a ragged school, for which she received special commendation from the chairman. —The meeting was then addressed by the Rev. W. S. Rowe, the Rev. W. Hall, the Rev. J. Hutching, the Rev. H. B. Sternschuss, Mr. C. Cochrane, the Rev. J. Keene, the Rev. Henry Smith, Mr. H. Perry, and the Rev. Joseph Brown. An urgent appeal was made for additional funds to extend the society's usefulness by the establishment of additional Homes. The proceedings terminated by a vote of thanks to the chairman.

SAILORS' HOME AND DESTITUTE SAILORS' ASYLUM.—The annual meeting of the above institutions—the former established in 1835, and the latter in 1827—was held on May 10th in the museum of the "Home," Well-street, London Docks. Vice-Admiral Bowles, C.B., the president, took the chair, and was supported by Earl Manvers, Lord Henry Cholmondeley, the Right Hon. Earl Waldegrave, Rear-Admiral Harcourt, the Hon. Captain F. Maude, R.N., Captain W. E. Farrer, Captain R. F. Gambier, R.N., and other friends of the institutions.

The proceedings were opened by prayer by the Rev. Charles R. Gribble, M.A., the chaplain, after which

The Secretary (Capt. George Pierce, R.N.) read the reports, from which it appeared that while in the first twelve months of the career of the Home 528 seamen were admitted, in the last year 6,869 have been received, of whom 1,721 were old boarders. The total number admitted from the opening of the institution, in 1835, to the present time, has amounted to 73,715. These were chiefly natives of our own land, but among them are also to be found the representatives of every maritime nation in the world. The balance sheet shows the receipts for the year to have been 8,505*l.* 12s.; and the expenditure for the same period, 8,015*l.* 3s. 8d.; leaving a balance in the hands of the bankers of 488*l.* 8s. 4d. (Hear.)

Lord H. Cholmondeley, Earl Waldegrave, Rear Admiral Harcourt, the Hon. Captain Maude, and Captain Gambier, R.N., addressed the meeting in support of the objects of the Institution.

Col. Hughes moved a vote of thanks to the gallant chairman, which was seconded by Capt. Farrer, who was happy to inform the meeting that it was in contemplation to establish an asylum for the wretched Lascars and others, who were wandering about the streets of London by hundreds, in a state of utter destitution and misery. (Hear.)

The motion was carried by acclamation, and the compliment having been duly acknowledged by the Chairman, the proceedings terminated.

CORPORATION OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY.—The Meeting of the Court of Assistants took place at the office of the society, Bloomsbury place, on the 12th of May, Mr. Alderman Copeland in the chair. There were also present his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, the Marquis of Westminster, the Bishops of Oxford and Ripon, the Rev. Lord John Thynne, Lord Radstock, and other influential supporters of the corporation. A resolution was unanimously passed to record on the minutes of the Court the regret caused by the death of the senior treasurer, the late Sir R. Inglis. The Court then proceeded to elect 28 widows and 19 single daughters of deceased clergymen as pensioners of 10*l.* per annum. It appeared from the report that 30 pensions had been increased from 10*l.* to 20*l.* per annum each, and 100 pensions from 10*l.* to 15*l.* per annum each, in addition to the income of 5*l.* per annum each ordered by a recent court to be made in 42 other pensions. It is, however, painful to find by the report that about 500 widows and single daughters of clergymen, still receive only pensions of 10*l.* per annum each. An order to summon a general court on the 16th of June next, for the election of a third treasurer, closed the proceedings.

SUPPRESSION OF MENDICITY SOCIETY. The annual meeting of this society was held on May 12th, at their rooms, in Red Lion-square; the Marquis of Westminster, president, in the chair. After a few introductory remarks from the noble chairman, the report was read. It stated that the results of last year's operations were favourable to the society; the war, the demand for labour, and emigration, having diminished the pressure on its resources. The registered cases of applicants with ticket at the office had fallen from 419 in 1853, to 332 in 1854. The unregistered cases fell from 7,661 to 6,801. The meals given fell from 62,788 to 52,212. The money relief given to mendicants fell from 1,263*l.* to 1,144*l.* Meantime the income from donations and subscriptions remained nearly stationary, being 2,977*l.* in 1853, and 3,015*l.* in 1854. The number of vagrants committed had not varied much, being 354 in 1853, and 326 in 1854. There was a great diminution in the number of Irish applying for relief. During the severe frost in February last 494 men and women, independently of children, had been relieved, and 13,000 meals given. 3,277 begging letters had been sent for investigation, which was more by 232 than in 1853. Of these 1,000 had been favourably reported upon, 36 fraudulent begging letter-writers were apprehended, and punished. The receipts of the year amounted to 4,244*l.* 2s. 11d., and at its close there was a balance in hand, and at the bankers, of 786*l.* Lord Calthorpe moved, and Mr. Slaney seconded, the adoption of the report, which was carried unanimously. Some other resolutions of a formal character were agreed to, and the meeting separated.

Digitized by Google

GENERAL DOMESTIC SERVANTS' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—The ninth annual meeting was held at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 15th of May, Lord Robert Grosvenor, the President of the society, took the chair. The report was read by the Rev. Mr. Austin. In it the committee congratulate the supporters of the institution on its continued prosperity, and on the large amount of assistance it has rendered to various sick and distressed members. Five additional pensioners were elected last July, making the number of annual recipients of relief twenty-four. In that interval two have died, leaving twenty-two; and the committee recommend a further election of pensioners to take place in July. Thirty-seven members in urgent temporary distress have been relieved, still allowing the committee to invest the further sum of 816*l.* 17s. 1d., making the present amount of the funded capital 9,198*l.* 13s. 10d. The meeting was subsequently addressed by the Bishop of Sodor and Man, Admiral Harcourt, the Rev. Mr. Veitch and other gentlemen. It was numerously attended.

OPERATIVE JEWISH CONVERTS' INSTITUTION.—The annual meeting of this institution took place at the Freemason's Tavern, on the 16th May, the Earl of Morton in thec hair. The secretary read the report, from which it appeared that there were at present thirty Jews enjoying the benefits of the institution, and nine others employed as journeymen in the establishment; twenty inmates had been admitted during the past year, and twelve had left; the twenty-two remaining at the close of the previous year bringing the present number up to thirty, as above stated. Since the establishment of the institution, 362 Israelites had partaken, more or less, of the important benefits therein provided. The subscriptions and donations during the past year had amounted to 933*l.* 11s 5d.; 400*l.* had been transferred from the trade account, which, together with 91*l.* 13s. 4d., received as interest upon investment, made the total income 1,425*l.* 4s. 6*d.* The total expenditure had amounted to 1,511*l.* 3s. 7d., of which 964*l.* 4s., had been expended upon the inmates exclusively, in food, clothing, rewards, &c.; while the remaining 546*l.* 19s. 7d. represented the whole cost of management, including salaries, rent, taxes, &c. The receipts for work done at the institution were about equal to those of the previous year, viz., 3,443*l.* 1s. Of this amount, there had been received for work done through private channels, 2,025*l.* 10s., being an increase of 909*l.* 10s. 4d. over those of the preceding year. The Hon. W. Ashley, the Revs. F. C. Ewald, C. J. Goodhart, John Scott, W. Cadman, Dr. M'Caul, and W. Ayerst, Joseph Payne, Esq., and Rev. J. W. Reynolds then addressed the meeting in succession; and the proceedings terminated in the usual manner.

SOUTH SHIELDS BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.—The receipts of the first-half year of this establishment are of a highly satisfactory character, being about equal in proportion to the third year's receipts of Bishopwearmouth, which has hitherto been the most successful, and nearly equal to the whole of the first year's receipts at Monkwearmouth. There have been upwards of 600 more bathers during the first six months at Shields, than the first twelve months at Monkwearmouth: and the corresponding total receipts for the above-named times are, for Monkwearmouth, 267*l.* 8s., against 206*l.* 12s. for Shields. It is expected the income will be upwards of 500*l.* at the end of the first year. The cost of the building, exclusive of ground, fittings, &c., is 3,066*l.*, and but for the necessity of changing from the original site, owing to the tenure of the land, a saving would have been effected of between 400*l.* and 500*l.*

Religious Societies.

FRIEND OF THE CLERGY SOCIETY.—The fifth annual dinner party was held on the 25th of April, at the London Tavern, the Earl of Chichester in the chair. In proposing "Prosperity to the Corporation of the Friends of the Clergy," the chairman remarked, "he had a somewhat painful task; a very painful matter had occurred in the history of the society to which he was obliged to allude; a considerable defalcation, unhappily had been detected in the funds of the society, which had been traced to the misconduct of an officer of the society, in whom they had all the greatest possible confidence. He (the Earl of Chichester) had now satisfied himself that every pains had been taken to ascertain the total amount of the defalcation, and all due precautions to guard the funds of the society against a similar occurrence; and by the labours and the active self-denying conduct of some of the executive, the society was now placed on such a sound footing as to be conducted henceforth with perfect regularity, and without any risk of such a thing happening again." Before the close of the proceedings, donations amounting to 319*l.*, and life subscriptions amounting to 861*l.*, were announced by the Rev. Mr. Cox.

CHURCH PENITENTIARY ASSOCIATION.—The third annual meeting was held on the 26th April. From the report it appeared "that with respect to the institutions in connection with the association, the most satisfactory accounts have been from time to time received. An urgent need still existed for the immediate establishment of more houses of refuge and penitentiaries, as well in London as in other large towns. Unless this were done, and a far greater increase were made in the accommodation at present provided for the reception of many fallen women who now sought in vain for a refuge from their course of sin, many associates who were now engaged in seeking out, in the hospitals and streets, such hopeful cases, would be obliged to cease from their work." The balance-sheet showed a satisfactory account of the funds of the association.

SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.—On the 26th April the Bishop of London presided at the eleventh annual meeting. The report stated that "during the past year the number of hours employed in visiting had been 181,801; visits or calls accepted, 320,565; refused, 8,766; number of persons to whom the Scriptures had been read, 319,266; number of persons visited professing to belong to the Church of England, 243,999; other protestant denominations, 41,360; the Church of Rome, 34,167; no religious communion, 85,871; professing to attend divine worship regularly, 122,321; sometimes, 178,755; never, 119,270. At the close of the year, although through the most extraordinary exertions the income of the society had been maintained, and had even slightly exceeded that of the previous years, the expenditure had exceeded the income by upwards of 500*l.* One hundred and twenty-one grants were still in existence, involving an annual liability of upwards of 10,000*l.* The committee reluctantly confessed that they could only renew the grant from month to month, and to support the society would require, in addition to more sources of income, at least 3,400*l.* in donations."

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—The sixth anniversary meeting was held on the 27th April, at the Hanover-square Rooms, Lord Calthorpe in the chair. The report stated the amount received from all sources in the year 1854 at 39,489*l.* 2*s.*, being an increase of 2306*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* over the receipts of the previous year.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY. — The 56th annual meeting was celebrated at Exeter Hall, on the 1st of May last; Chairman, Earl of Chichester, supported by Viscount Midleton, the Bishops of Winchester, Meath, and Melbourne, Bishop Carr, the Dean of Carlisle, Lord Henry Cholmondeley, M.P., General Alexander, Vice-Admiral Hope, and a large number of the clerical and lay friends of the society. The chairman having briefly opened the proceedings, the Rev. John Venn read the report, which gave an encouraging view of the missionary operations during the past year. "The income of the Society during the past year amounted to 107,343*l.* 2s. 9d. The expenditure to 116,256*l.* 10s. 8d. It would be seen from this statement that the expenditure of the year had exceeded the receipts by the sum of 8,913*l.* 7s. 11d: but as there was a balance in hand at the commencement of the year of 3,292*l.* 5s. 9*d.* the actual excess of expenditure was 5,621*l.* 2s. 2d. The Society had connected with it in various heathen districts 121 stations, 189 clergymen, 39 schoolmasters, &c.; 11 European female teachers (exclusive of missionaries' wives), 1697 native and country born catechists and teachers of all classes, and 17,899 communicants." Resolutions were passed, pledging the friends of the society to renewed exertions, in availing themselves of the many opportunities now afforded for the progress of missionary labours. The meeting was addressed by the Bishop of Meath, Mr. J. F. Thomas (late member of Council at Madras), the Dean of Carlisle, the Rev. F. Close, the Rev. Archdeacon Hunter, the Rev. E. H. Bickersteth, Mr. M. Wylie, from Calcutta, the Bishop of Melbourne, and the Rev. J. C. Miller.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society was held at Exeter Hall, on the 2nd of May last, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. His Lordship, in opening the proceedings, congratulated the meeting on the fact that, notwithstanding the pressure occasioned by the war, the income of the society exceeded that of any former year, except on the occasion of the Jubilee, and the total circulation of copies of the Scriptures was greater than during any previous year of the society's existence. Every day's experience convinced him that the circulation of the Scriptures had a mighty effect upon the temporal and spiritual condition of the human race, and that the very existence of the British empire as an empire, depended to a great extent, upon the vitality and activity of its religious societies. The secretary read the annual report, from which it appeared that the amount received during the year for the general purposes of the society was 64,878*l.*, being 5,221*l.* more than the preceding year. The amount received for Bibles and Testaments was 59,600*l.*, making the total receipts from the ordinary sources of income 124,478*l.* There had been also received 3,694*l.*, further contributions to the Jubilee Fund, and 7,860*l.* to the Chinese New Testament Fund; making a grand total of 136,032*l.* The issues for the year had been as follows:—From the depôt at home, 1,018,882 copies; from depôts abroad, 431,994 copies; total 1,450,876; being an increase of 83,348 over the circulation of last year. The total issues of the society now amounted to 29,389,507 copies. The expenditure for the year was 149,040*l.* being an increase on the payments of 29,782*l.* The meeting was then addressed by the Bishop of Meath, Lord Ebrington, Mr. Wylie, the Bishop of Melbourne, the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Pelham, the Rev. Norman M'Leod, the Rev. Mr. Farrer, the Rev. Mr. Harrison, the Rev. Mr. Gill, from Raratonga, and Mr. T. Farmer, and resolutions were passed approving and commending the objects and operations of the society. A vote of thanks was unanimously accorded to the chairman, with whose reply the proceeding terminated.

Digitized by Google

COLONIAL CHURCH & SCHOOL SOCIETY.—The anniversary meeting was held May 2nd, at Freemasons' Hall; the Marquis of Cholmondeley, President, in the chair. The Report called attention to the increasing extent and variety of the society's work. In the various provinces of British North America, in the West Indies, in South Africa, in the colonies of Australia, in the Presidencies of Bengal and Madras, in China, Malta, and on the continent of Europe, the society had thirty-eight clergymen, ninety-eight lay missionaries and schoolmasters, thirty-six female teachers, in all 172, being an increase of nineteen on the agency of the preceding year. The income of the society, it appeared, was 13,439*l.* 0s. 11d., being an increase of 1,316*l.* 13s. 9d. on the preceding year; the expenditure, 14,109*l.* 2s. 11d. The meeting was addressed by the Bishop of Meath, the Rev. C. F. Childe, A. H. Campbell, Esq., the Bishop of Melbourne, the Rev. J. C. Ryle, and other gentlemen.

PRAYER BOOK AND HOMILY SOCIETY.—The forty-third anniversary was held at Willis's Rooms, on May the 3rd, the Marquis of Cholmondeley in the chair. From the Report it appeared, that the year's receipts, including a balance of 21*l.* 11s. 2d., amounting to 2,677*l.* 7s. 4d., and the expenditure, including the purchase of 450*l.* Consols (to form the commencement of a Capital Fund), to 2,665*l.* 17s. 4d. In the port of London, during the past year, the society's agents have visited 5,045 ships, which has led to the sale of 2,890 Prayer-books, besides other works. Out of the number of those commanders of whom inquiries could be made, fully two-thirds profess to assemble their crews for the worship of Almighty God on the Lord's day—a wonderful and blessed contrast to the neglect of this sacred duty which prevailed a few years ago. During the year just ended, 104 emigrant ships have been specially visited several times just before their departure. About 10,000 emigrants, proceeding chiefly to Australia and New Zealand, have been partakers of the society's sympathy and benevolence; and 9,954 Family Prayer-books have been distributed to willing recipients, in order to encourage social meetings for daily prayer. The meeting was addressed by the Bishop of Melbourne, the Revs. W. T. Marsh, Dr. Helmuth, C. F. Childe, R. Jeffers, W. Mungeam, W. Vincent, and E. Stallybrass.

BOOK SOCIETY.—The annual soirée and Public meeting was celebrated at the London Coffee House, Ludgate Hill, on the 3rd of May last; Sheriff Crossley in the chair. The committee reported that in addition to all the works published by the Religious Tract Society, the Sunday-school Union, and many of those on the catalogue of the Christian Knowledge Society, which Subscribers might obtain at the same terms as members of those societies, they propose to issue from their depository every work of standard merit bearing on the subject of sound morality and true religion. This had called for more efficient agency than that hitherto employed, and they earnestly prayed that the Divine blessing might rest upon their increased exertions. The committee were happy to be able to state, that after a year's experience the happiest results had followed this change, the amount of sales having been increased from 241*l.* 3s. 7d. to 669*l.* 15s. 3d. The Revs. Messrs. Alexander, Owen Clarke, Joseph Brown, Gittens, and Wheatly, Edward Owen Jones, Esq., Dr. Barber, and Joseph Payne, Esq., afterwards addressed the meeting.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.—The fifty-sixth annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall, May 4th, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. In opening the proceedings, the noble chairman said, the immense circulation of publications by the Tract Society was almost of itself sufficient to commend it to public support. The number of tracts issued by the society, in 112 languages, amounted to no less than 673,000,000 exclusive of other publications. These were now more than ever necessary, in order to assist in staying the flood of immoral and pestiferous writings which were spreading so much pollution throughout the country. He believed that very great preparations were now being made to take advantage of forthcoming changes in the law to extend the penny press, which many persons apprehended, and perhaps with justice, would be subversive of decency, morality, and religion. It would be the duty of the society to counteract, as far as possible, the mischief which might ensue from the change in the law, or endeavour to turn that change to the account of morality and religion. The secretary then read the annual report, which detailed the operations of the society at home and abroad, enumerating the various donations of tracts and other publications made during the year, among which were large grants to the soldiers and sailors in the Crimea, the Baltic, and the hospitals at Scutari. The total receipts for the year amounted to 69,236*l.*, being an increase over those of last year of 1,111*l.* The total issues during the year were 28,292,194, showing an increase of 915,619. The meeting was then addressed by several clergymen and others, and resolutions were past commending the society to the public interest and support. The proceedings terminated by a vote of thanks to the chairman.

LONDON SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIANITY AMONG THE JEWS.—The forty-seventh anniversary, was held at Exeter Hall, May 4th, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. The Rev. Mr. Goodhart read the report of the committee. The total income of the society for the past twelve months amounted to 28,781*l.* 13s. 3d., and the expenditure to 28,974*l.* 4s. 5*d.* Of the books and publications issued by the society during the past year we may briefly notice The Old Testament, in Hebrew and other languages, 2,006, exclusive of those sold wholesale to the Bible Society and booksellers in Poland, amounting to 3,811. Portions of Old Testament, 7,158. New Testament, in Hebrew and other languages, 1,465. Hebrew commentaries on the New Testament, 1,575. Liturgies, 307. Books, tracts, &c., 55,657. Amount by sale of Scriptures, 641*l.* 1s. 3*d.* With regard to results during the past year, there is a steady ingathering of converts throughout the missions, though not to the extent they could desire. The Bishop of Melbourne, the Rev. Canon Bickersteth, the Bishop of Meath, the Rev. Dr. M'Caul, the Rev. Mr. Ewald, the Rev. Mr. Reeve, and the Rev. W. Freemantle, addressed the meeting, and resolutions, approving of the exertions made by the society, having been agreed to, the cordial thanks of the meeting were accorded to the noble earl in the chair, and the proceedings terminated.

CHURCH PASTORAL AID SOCIETY.—The twentieth annual meeting took place at Exeter Hall on May the 8th. The Earl of Shaftesbury took the chair, and was supported during the proceedings of the meeting by the Bishop of Winchester, the Bishop of Melbourne, &c. The platform and body of the hall were much crowded. The Chairman having briefly addressed the meeting, called upon the secretary to read the report; which, after enumerating the instances of aid supplied to clergymen, proceeded to state that the society had, during the last twelve months, sustained great loss by the death of many valuable supporters. The total receipts for the year amounted to 38,173*l.* 7s., being a deficiency on those of the former year to the extent of 401. The expenditure for the same period had been 37,936*l.*, exceeding that of the preceding year by 450*l.* 5s. 8*d.* The total liabilities of the society were calculated at 42,635, a sum greatly exceeding its reliable annual income. The experiment of open-air preaching was being carried on with vigour and success, and the people in the manufacturing districts were greatly improved in their moral and religious condition. A good deal of this change was to be attributed to the early closing of the public-houses on Sundays, and the committee looked forward with hope to seeing a measure passed into law for the total prevention of the traffic in intoxicating liquors on that day. The Bishop of Winchester, the Marquis of Blandford, the Bishop of Melbourne, the Rev. Canons Miller and Champneys, the Rev. Mr. Magee (Bath,) the Rev. Mr. Barry, the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, and the Rev. Mr. Jebb, addressed the meeting in support of the objects of the society, and votes of thanks were passed to the noble Chairman, and to the Rev. Canon Miller who had preached the annual sermon.

THE PROTESTANT ASSOCIATION.—The nineteenth annual meeting, was held May 9th, at Exeter Hall; Robert Baxter, Esq., of Doncaster, occupied the chair. The Chairman commenced the proceedings with a speech of some length, insisting upon the duty of Protestants to elect as their representatives those only who recognized the supreme authority of the Almighty as the governor of the world, and maintaining that the adherents to a system which could not train them in freedom of thought and conscience, and was everywhere incompatible with civil and religious liberty, should not be intrusted with the government of freemen. The report, read by Mr. Lord, referred to many circumstances which had arisen in connexion with Romanism during the past year, and concluded with an expression of confidence in the final success of truth. The receipts up to 31st of March were 708*l.*, the expenditure 697*l.*, and the amount of liabilities about 700*l.* The meeting was addressed by the Rev. R. Bickersteth, the Rev. G. Rogers, the Rev. C. Prest, Mr. J. Bateman, and other friends of the society, and the proceedings terminated in the usual manner.

THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall, on the 10th of May, the Earl of Shaftesbury took the chair. The Report was read by Dr. Tidman. The facts detailed were of an encouraging nature. The ordinary income of the society, it appeared, exceeded that of last year by nearly 500*l.* China, it stated, now opened her cities and villages to the Missionary; and India of which the legislature confidently affirmed that all efforts to detach the Hindoo from the gods of his country would prove dangerous and Utopian, was still secure, and yet in that stronghold of idolatry there were more than 330 Missionary churches, more than 18,000 believers in communion, and more than 112,000 of the people turned from dumb idols to serve the living God. In Polynesia, South Africa, and China, the Missionaries of the society were honoured to plant the Christian standard, and to invite the help of their other brethren. In China the Bible had been translated by Dr. Medhurst and two other gentlemen into the Mangalee, the pure and standard language of the empire; and a large portion of the million New Testaments destined for that country had been circulated. In the South Seas the Gospel had been proclaimed to the very murderer of Williams, and had been carried to a group of islands of which Commodore Wilkes stated that the inhabitants were the most wild and savage that he met with in all the islands of the Pacific. Very gratifying communications had been received, showing the improvement in the general character of Mission Churches; and a proof of the interest they took in the work might be gathered from the fact, that the aggregate of their contributions during the past year was 12,500*l.* or more than one-fifth of the entire income of the society. The Rev. W. Ellis's special mission to Madagascar had not been productive of such satisfactory results as were sanguinely anticipated. The number of native Christians it was impossible with any certainty to calculate, as they were still legally prescribed; but it would be satisfactory to the assembly to be reassured, that in spite of fines, imprisonment, slavery, and death, princes, warriors, and multitudes of the people were serving the Lord. The Report next referred to the travels of the Rev. Robert Moffat, who had gone to visit by invitation the most formidable chief in South Africa, and of the Rev. David Livingstone, who had explored a country situated very far in the interior, where he found the natives considerably advanced in the arts and enjoyments of social life, and was received with kindness and hospitality. After a reference to the present unsettled state of the Chinese empire, as rendering missionary operations there somewhat difficult, the report concluded with a powerful appeal to the society's supporters in behalf of the Missionary cause.

Digitized by Google

The Rev. E. Prout read the cash statement. The contributions from Great Britain and Ireland were 45,319*l.* 17*s.*, legacies, 1920*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*, contributions raised at the Missionary stations, 12,424*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.*—total 59,665*l.* 10*s.* The first item included 1,231*l.* 11*s.* for the enlargement of the Chinese Mission, and the Chinese New Testament. The aggregate expenditure for the year was 64,678*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* The society is about 13,000*l.* in debt.

Resolutions were moved and seconded by the Rev. Henry Allon, Mr. Thomas Baxter, M.P., Mr. M'Leod Wylie (from Calcutta) the Rev. W. Landells, the Rev. W. Arthur, and others. Mr. Prout announced that the contributions towards paying the debt already amounted to 1,800*l.*

THE CLERGY PROVIDENT SOCIETY.—A public meeting on behalf of this society was held at Willis's Rooms on the 11th of May last. The report stated the result of the labours of the committee appointed to prepare the rules of the society. It is proposed to assist the poorer clergy in assuring one or other of the three following benefits: 1. A provision in sickness; 2. A deferred annuity; or, 3. An endowment for a child. These assurances are limited to a very moderate amount, and must be in each case effected by the clergy themselves in assurance societies so called. The meeting was addressed by the Bishop of Oxford, Lord J. Manners, M.P., Messrs. Hubbard and Strahan, the Bishop of Chichester, the Bishop of Sodor and Man, and other gentlemen.

RAGGED CHURCH AND CHAPEL UNION. On the 15th of May, the second annual meeting of this society was held at Exeter Hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury presiding. The objects of the association are to provide buildings as places of worship for the destitute adult poor of London, in the most neglected districts, and the report gave a very satisfactory account of the society's operations. They had established 30 preaching stations, with accommodation for 3,000 or 4,000 persons, built a church of a plain kind at Mile-end, and had also open-air preaching, provident societies, and tract distribution, &c. In all the districts there was a marked improvement. The receipts from every source amounted to 480*l.* 14*s.* 1*d.*, and the expenditure to 315*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* The preaching stations and the style of discourse were sought to be adapted to the capacities of those who attended, and it was pleasing to see the man who only had his flannel jacket, or ragged coat, and the woman her single gown, enter the church without fear or embarrassment. The Earl of Shaftesbury, and other friends of the society, having addressed the meeting, the proceedings terminated.

JERUSALEM DIOCESAN FUND.—The Earl of Shaftesbury presided at the second annual meeting. From the report it appeared that the income had risen from 698*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* to 1,474*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*; that 1,310*l.* had been transmitted to the Bishop, whose outlay during the year on those objects in which the committee had undertaken to assist him had been 2,129*l.*; that Protestant congregations and schools had been established in Nazareth, Bethlehem, Nablous, Jaffa; and that upwards of three hundred children were receiving the benefits of a sound Scriptural education, as well as of good secular instruction in geography, history, languages, arithmetic, and mathematics.

Schools.

THE LONDON SOCIETY FOR TEACHING THE BLIND TO READ.—The annual meeting of this society was held on the 24th of April, at the Hanover-square Rooms, the Bishop of London in the chair. His Lordship, in his opening speech, said he felt it a great privilege to preside on the occasion. The society had existed 16 years: it had gone on increasing in prosperity, and all that he had seen of it, as president, convinced him of its great utility and growing importance. The report read to the meeting was very encouraging; there has been an increase both in the annual subscriptions and the general fund, but a debt of 520*l.* still encumbers the institution and it would be well if a few liberal contributors would come forward and enable the treasurer to clear it off. In the course of the afternoon some of the blind pupils played on the pianoforte in a very creditable manner; and specimens of their industry, which were exhibited in the rooms, attracted much attention. The meeting was a crowded one.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND METROPOLITAN TRAINING INSTITUTION.—On Wednesday, 25th April, the Earl of Shaftesbury presided at the annual meeting, at Highbury. The report stated that, during the last year, twenty-eight students were appointed to schools, making altogether ninety-eight young men who have been trained in the college. The new lecture-room has been completed and fitted up, at a cost of 2000*l.*, including a grant of 450*l.*, from the Committee of Council on Education. There have been seventy students in the college throughout the year, being as many as it will conveniently accommodate. Fifteen pupil teachers presented themselves in December as candidates, of whom fourteen were successful. Five were placed in the first class, and nine in the second; and another Queen's scholar, examined elsewhere, was subsequently admitted. Seventeen Queen's scholars of the previous year have had their scholarships renewed, and remain a second year. All the students who had resided one year (fifty four in number) were examined in December. Of these, eight had previously obtained certificates; all of them passed a successful examination. There were twenty-two Queen's scholars, not one of whom failed. The receipts during the past year have amounted to 5841*l.* 2*s* 2*d.*, which, with 378*l.* 14*s.* 1*d.*, the balance in hand at the commencement of the year, make the sum of 6219*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* The expenditure has been 6213*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.* leaving a balance of only 6*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* in the hands of the treasurer.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND EDUCATIONAL SOCIETY.—The second annual meeting of this body was held on the 14th of April, at Willis's Rooms; Lord Charles Russell in the chair.

The noble Chairman, in opening the proceedings, said, that before supporting any society, he would try it by two tests, the purity of its objects and the earnest sincerity of its managers. The present society had been established because it had been thought necessary, when the committee of council was enlarging its grants, that it ought to be able to have recourse for information to some body fairly representing the church of England, which, it was felt by himself and others, that the committee could not have from the National Society.

The Secretary then read the report, which stated that numbers of schools in connexion with the church of England had, previous to the society's establishment, sank to so low a state of efficiency, mainly through the want of a regular and reliable source of income, as to be precluded from being placed under the operations of the minutes of the committee of council on education, and with the thorough conviction of this fact, the primary object of the society had been to assist in the establishment or support of schools by a grant towards the salary of the teachers, and to promote the supply of earnest-minded, intelligent and truly protestant instructors. To this latter end they had granted exhibitions in the training colleges previously established towards defraying the expenses of necessitous persons, of whose piety and aptness for teaching they had sufficient evidence. They had also from the first endeavoured to meet the want of school requisites, such as books, slates, paper, &c., and had completed their arrangements for a depository on an extensive scale. The report then entered at some length into statements shewing the beneficial result of their efforts. Schools long closed had been re-opened, and the conductors of struggling institutions had been induced to renew their efforts. The income of the society during the year had been 2,646*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, the subscriptions having been cheerfully paid notwithstanding the unprecedented pressure of the times.

Mr. J. J. Cummins moved the adoption of the report, the re-election of the retiring members of the committee, and a resolution expressive of the satisfaction with which the meeting heard that the cause of protestant and scriptural education was being materially advanced by the society's operations.

Mr. C. Buxton seconded the resolution, and in doing so, pointed out the inconveniences which would in his opinion attend the course of education if supported by local rates.

The resolution was then adopted.

Rev. J. C. Miller moved the next resolution to the effect that the great impediment to the general efficiency of the National School system was the want of a regular and adequate income, and that the society, from its endeavours to supply the want, was deserving of support.

Mr. J. C. Colquhoun seconded the proposition.

Rev. Mr. C. R. Alford stated that the society had 17 teachers in training at Highbury, whom they had assisted by a grant of 170*l.*

Mr. Reynolds advised the country clergy to be on the watch for persons of religious views having a taste for teaching, and to send them to the training institutions.

The proceedings then terminated, with a vote of thanks to the noble chairman.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—The annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall, on the 3rd of May last. F. Crossley, Esq. M.P. for Halifax, in the chair. The meeting was densely crowded. Mr. W. H. Watson read extracts from the report, which stated that, "The grants made by the committee in aid of foreign schools have been sent to France, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and especially to various parts of the West Indies, where christian Education is being extensively prosecuted under many outward disadvantages, which call for much sympathy and aid. Energy, with which the Paris sunday school society is pursuing its labours, where the existence of nearly 300 evangelical Sunday schools have been already ascertained. During the last year a union under the title of the New South Wales Sunday-school Union, has been formed at Sydney, and the committee were agreeably surprised, a short time since, by receiving from Melbourne, South Australia, an order for books amounting to £300. The committee have also sought, as far as lay in their power, to promote the establishment of an union in every town of adequate size so as to form a centre of Sunday school influence for the surrounding district; and they aimed to secure a systematic visitation of existing unions once in two years, as a means of keeping them in a state of healthful activity. They have further sought to secure an enlarged use of the Press, and greatly increased efforts to promote the circulation and regular use of the publications of the union. Notwithstanding the influence of many unfavourable circumstances affecting trade in general, the sales at the depository for the year ending 31st December, 1854, slightly exceeded those of the preceding year, and amounted to £10,819, 2s. 9d. The committee believe that very few persons have the slightest idea of the very little pecuniary support given to the Union. The sum received on account of the benevolent fund of the Union during the past year, including the collection at the past annual meeting, subscriptions and donations, and a small legacy, only amounted to £357 11s. 1d., while the committee have been called upon to make sixteen grants in aid of the erection of new school rooms amounting to £205 10s.; to grant 217 lending libraries at one third of the retail prices, being a gift to the schools of £487 7s. 2d.; to expend more than £200 in books and money in aid of schools, to sustain a system of visitation throughout the country, and to provide a library of circulation and reference, and a reading room for teachers at a nominal subscription of 1s. per annum. The result has been, that after taking into account the profit made on the business, the balance of £741 10s., which stood against the benevolent fund of the Union at the commencement of the year, has been increased to £805 7s. 10d., and will be still further augmented, unless pecuniary support is yielded." The meeting was addressed by the Rev. Samuel Martin, (Westminster,) on the sentiment, "The Lives of Faithful Men, an Example to the Young," by the Rev. J. C. Miller, (rector of St. Martin's Church, Birmingham,) on the "Religious instruction of the Young, the best Safeguard for Society;" by Mr. Edward Ball, M.P., on "The Sunday School, as the necessary Companion of the Day School;" by the Rev. C. Vince, (of Birmingham,) on "The Christian Sabbath," a blessing, physically, morally, and spiritually; and by Mr. N. T. Langridge, on "The Teachers' Influence on the Home of the Scholars." At the meeting for electing officers, the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird was appointed president of the Union, in the room of Mr. W. B. Gurney.

Digitized by Google

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SCHOOL SOCIETY.—The annual general meeting of the members and friends of this society was held on the 8th of May, at the Institution in the Borough-road. The proceedings began with an examination of the children, and at 12 o'clock the business of the meeting commenced, the Duke of ARGYLL, one of the Vice-Presidents, in the chair.

His GRACE, in opening the proceedings, referred to the great progress the schools had made during the last few years, and then dwelt upon the value of the society as the mouthpiece and the standard of important educational principles. It must be gratifying to the friends of education, that five, if not six, measures of education were at present before parliament, competing for the favour of the representatives of the people. He thought, if these schemes were well discussed, it would be found that the differences were small, and that all difficulties would vanish. The first great party of educationists to which he would allude, was the sectarian party, against whose views great clamour had been raised. He thought it was a mistake to accuse that party with being adverse to religion. He knew several persons who supported the secular plan of education, who set a high value upon the inculcation of religious principles. They said, that considering the division of religious opinions, all they could do was to unite in giving secular education to the children, leaving religious instruction to the parents and guardians of the children themselves. But he thought that in the secular plan the advocates forgot that they had to deal with a large number of children, whose parents and guardians had no means of education to give them. Of course secular education might be conducted religiously or irreligiously; but if there were no strong party bias on the part of the teacher, he believed his mode of instruction could not have an injurious effect upon religion. The next great scheme was that under which, while religious education might be strictly attended to, secular education might be entirely neglected. A third party was that to which the British and Foreign Society belonged, conveying religious teaching on the basis of Scripture alone. That system he believed to be the best. He was quite sure that religion could be thoroughly taught by Scripture alone, and without reference to catechisms and creeds: and he trusted that some measure would pass through parliament this session which would overtake the "waste places" that existed, and which would be the means of educating the poor in a scriptural and yet liberal manner. (Hear, hear.)

The report stated that the total receipts of the year have been 17,358*l.* 16s. 5d., and the expenditure, including a repayment of loan, 15,691*l.* 19s. 1d.

Several resolutions in support of the Society were unanimously adopted.

ROYAL NAVAL FEMALE SCHOOL.—The annual general meeting was held at Willis's rooms on the 12th of May, Earl Manvers presiding. Among the company present were:—Admirals Hawker, Lord Byron, Meynell, and Vernon Harcourt; Captains Sir George Back, Hon. F. Maude, Charles Shea, H.C.S., Hills, Bate, Fishbourne, Woodgate, Hand, Furneaux, Sweny, Barnet, Gambier, Lean, &c., Sir B. F. Outram, C. B., General Powney, Colonel Rawlins, the Rev. J. D. Hales, Mr. John Tarn, R.N., Mr. James Pinhorn. Several Ladies were also present, including Lady Williams. The routine resolutions were moved and seconded by several zealous friends of the school, who eloquently advocated the cause of this valuable society, and it is to be regretted that an institution, conferring such substantial benefits on the families of naval officers, is not more generally known and supported. The venerable president was warmly greeted by the company present, at the conclusion of the meeting.

TRAINING INSTITUTION FOR NURSES.—The seventh annual meeting took place at 79, Pall Mall, on the 15th of May, The Bishop of London presided. The Rev. C. P. Shepherd (the master) read the report of the council, by which it appeared that the house at present numbered forty-two members, viz., four resident sisters, seven associate sisters, twenty-five nurses, and six probationers. The balance sheet shewed that the total income of the house during the past year amounted to 2,503*l* 14s 11d., of which upwards of 500*l.* consisted of extraordinary donations towards the fund for sending nurses to the East. The total expenditure in the same period amounted to 1,641*l.* 11s. 5d. The report was adopted; and after the routine business had been disposed of, the meeting separated.

ROYAL FREEMASONS' SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—The sixty-seventh annual dinner took place on the sixteenth of May last at the Freemasons' Tavern; chairman, the Earl of Yarborough, deputy Grand Master of the Order. About 300 members of the fraternity attended. In proposing the toast of the evening the Grand Master, Lord Zetland, adverted to the fact of upwards of 600 children having been educated at this establishment, and added, that out of that number not one had gone wrong. Never was the school in a more flourishing state, although during the last year they had lost their excellent matron, who during a period of 50 years had held that situation. Notwithstanding the brethren had from time to time come forward in the most handsome manner, yet, in consequence of the new building, the funds were not in so prosperous a state as could be wished. Brother Crew, the estimable secretary of the institution, read the list of subscriptions and donations in the room, which amounted to 1,407*l.* It is a practice peculiar to this society that the scholars should select one of their number as entitled to receive the medal given by the president at the anniversary meetings, and in no instance have they been wrong in their choice, it having invariably been confirmed by the visitors. This year Matilda Clubb was the fortunate girl, who was addressed in the most feeling terms by the noble Lord, who put the medal round her neck. Prizes were given to six other children for good conduct and proficiency in different branches of education. Many excellent speeches were made, and the meeting altogether was highly satisfactory.

Ragged Schools.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION,—The 11th annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall, on the 7th of May; chairman, the Earl of Shaftesbury. The noble chairman opened the proceedings by referring to the astonishing success which had attended the establishment of ragged schools. No one, he said, acquainted with the haunts and localities which were the scenes of the society's labours, could doubt that they had been greatly benefited by them. Ragged schools, he believed, were important, not only in their effect upon children who were gathered within their wall, but as softening the habits and manners of hundreds who lived in their vicinity. If the amount of contributions were increased, there was no reason to doubt that there would be a proportionate increase in the favourable results. It might be a moot point how far they should ask or receive the assistance of the public moneys; for his part, he maintained his old opinion—that he would reject all public assistance, if it in the least degree involved interference with the system, which would then be destroyed, or to a great extent vitiated. The report commenced with a reference to the decease of Mr. Starey, one of the oldest friends of the Ragged School movement. The labours of the Union during the past year were then reviewed. Several additional schools had been established. In connexion with the 137 institutions now on the society's list, there were 113 Sunday schools, with 14,248 scholars; 79 day schools, with 10,449 scholars; 108 evening schools with 7,184 scholars. The increase of scholars during the past year was—in sunday schools 1,148; in day schools 1,449; in industrial classes, 294. The average of shoeblacks engaged was 95, 54 of whom had been sent out during the last 6 or 7 months. The total earnings were 1,453*l.* 7s. and the number of pairs of boots and shoes cleaned 346,404; 837 scholars had been sent from 54 of the schools to situations, the remaining 80 schools not having forwarded their returns. Since the last annual meeting, 17 boys had been sent to the colonies, and arrangements were completed for sending 10 in addition. A prize of 50*l.* had been awarded to the Rev. G. J. Hall, of Linton, Cambridgeshire, for the best essay on ragged schools. The total income of the Union was 5,085*l.* including 500*l.* drawn from the reserved fund; the balance at the bankers 453*l.* The meeting was addressed by Viscount Ebrington, M.P., the Dean of Carlisle, the Revs. J. M. Hussey, H. S. Brown, W. Curling, Mr. Joseph Payne, and other gentlemen, who severally advocated the claims of the institution.

Digitized by Google

ST. GEORGE THE MARTYR RAGGED SCHOOLS.—The annual meeting of the promoters and friends of the six Ragged schools of this extensive and populous parish was held on the 23rd of April, in the parochial school room, Borough-Road, Southwark, to receive the report of the committee for the past year. The meeting was most numerously attended. On the platform were the Rev. W. Cadman, Robert Baxter, Esq., P. F. O'Malley, Esq., Q.C., James Lord, Esq., J. Payne, Esq., Rev. J. Turner, J. H. Barlow, Esq., M. Ware, Esq., R. J. Snape, Esq., &c. The Rev. W. Cadman, in the absence of the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, took the chair.

The honorary secretary, Arthur S. Newman, Esq., read the report of the proceedings of the friends of the institution during the past year, which in the abstract was most satisfactory. The revelations of the last census had made known the fearful want of education amongst the poor, and that on the calculation, generally received as a correct one, that 7 per cent. of the population ought to be under school instruction, in the parish of St. George's there were no less than from between 2,000 and 3,000 children of sufficient age growing up without education, and as a true type of the others, "the Mint," had long enjoyed a bad pre-eminence, even amongst metropolitan dens of depravity, for thieves, prostitutes, receivers of stolen goods, coiners of base money, mendicants, and other similar characters. In this district multitudes of ragged children may be seen at all hours of the day obstructing the thoroughfares, delighting in filth, and using most profane and foul language. This is the natural result of occupations which barely produce them the common necessaries of life, much less clothing and the means of furnishing them with instruction, and the consequent result is that of drunkenness. The promoters of this institution have done much good by their previous efforts, but much of the evil remains. It is a common thing to find 15, 20, or even 25 individuals living in a house in these localities, damp, dirty, and ill-ventilated and drained.

The promotion of these schools in this district originated with the Rev. William Cadman, the rector, who has been most ably supported in his great work of reducing this frightful and monstrous evil. The number of children who have passed through the schools has amounted to a little over 5,000. The present number in attendance is about 1,000, the staff of voluntary teachers being very considerable. The progress of the industrial training class attached to each school has been most satisfactory; to each of the six schools that had been formed, under the direction of a clergyman, were attached a scripture reader and numerous teachers. In one of the districts no less than 49 children had obtained situations, and in another district no less than 60 were reported, and the principal number of the Southwark Shoe-Black Boys had come from their schools. The report proceeded to say that in addition to the subscriptions from the inhabitants of the parish of St. George's, they have received from many persons sympathy; from a friend, through the Earl of Shaftesbury, 150*l.*; from a friend of the chairman, 31*l.* 17s. 5d.; grants from the Ragged School Union, 246*l.* 5s. From the corporation of London, 105*l.* By the sale of fancy work, 394*l.* The total amount received up to the 31st December last being 1,969*l.* 16s. 1d. The annual expenses of each school amounted to 100*l.*, making 600*l.*, which called for the greatest exertions on the part of the friends of the schools to increase their support.

Mr. Tindal Atkinson, Mr. Robert Baxter, Mr. W. Ware, Dr. Barlow, Mr. Snape, P. F. O'Malley, Esq., Q.C., and Mr. J. Payne addressed the meeting; and resolutions were carried appointing a committee for the ensuing year, consisting of the Rev. Wm. Cadman, president; the Revs. G. M. Jolley, H. N. Wheeler, G. R. Cooke, J. Banks, J. Turner, J. Lincoln; Messrs. Collinson, Babbage, Jenner, Fitch, and Arthur S. Newman.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL, CLERKENWELL.—The Annual Meeting at the Parochial Schools, Amwell Street, was held on the first of May last, the Earl of Kintore in the chair. The tenth annual report was read by Mr. Watts, the secretary; it gave a very flattering account of the progress of the schools. The Rev. Mr. Morton moved, and the Rev. Mr. Curling seconded, the adoption of the report; and Mr. J. Atkinson proposed a resolution urging subscriptions to liquidate the deficiency. These, with other resolutions, were agreed to nem. con., and thanks voted to the noble chairman.

Reformatories.

LONDON REFORMATORY FOR ADULT MALE CRIMINALS.—The annual meeting of this institution was held on the 26th of April, in St. Martin's-hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. The noble chairman, in opening the proceedings, expressed his disappointment that a greater number of reformatory institutions had not been established. Every day revealed to him more and more the great desire of criminals to avail themselves of means of reformation, and it was only recently that a man had walked from Wakefield, in Yorkshire, on purpose to obtain admission to the London Reformatory.

The following were a few of the statistics of the institution:—At the commencement of the past year there were within its walls 100 inmates, of whom 60 emigrated, one went to sea, 12 enlisted in the army, three, being militiamen, were obliged to leave, two were provided with situations by their friends, and one proved to be an impostor. There had been admitted on probation during the past year 215, of whom 33 would not submit to the test of probation, which consisted of isolation and bread and water diet for a fortnight, but with full liberty to withdraw at any moment; ten left after a month's residence, eight after three months', four after six months'; four were dismissed for idleness, three for bad habits, six were restored to their friends, 23 enlisted for soldiers, five obtained situations; 15 militiamen were obliged to leave, two had gone to sea, two had died, and 100 were at present in the institution. The ages of the inmates varied from 17 to 50; 67 out of 100 commenced stealing under 15 years of age, and most of these between the ages of 12 and 14; 32 had received a boarding-school education, and two had been to College. Almost the whole of these criminals had commenced their career by stealing money to go to penny theatres and other low places of amusement. During the last seven years no less than 580 had completed their twelvemonths' education, and learned a trade, and he believed there were not more than one or two instances of a relapse into evil habits, and those were habits of intoxication. Notwithstanding, however, the great success which had attended the labours of the institution, 3,000 applicants had been refused during the past year from want of funds. Mr. Ernest Bunsen, the hon. secretary, read the report, which detailed the principal facts mentioned by the chairman. The income of the institution was 4,300*l.*, and the expenditure 3,300*l.*, leaving a balance which was absorbed by emigration, building, and other expenses now in contemplation. The meeting was addressed by Lord Henry Cholmondeley, Alderman Wire, Mr. E. Ball, M.P., Mr. Barnes, M. P., and other gentlemen.

ST. PANCRAS AND MARYLEBONE REFORMATORY.—The first public Meeting of the Preventive and Reformatory Institution for St. Pancras and Marylebone was held on Thursday, May 3rd, at the School-room, St. Pancras, kindly lent for that purpose by the Rev. Thomas Dale.

The Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair.

The Rev. L. W. T. Dale opened the meeting with prayer, after which Viscount Ebrington, M.P. the first speaker said, he felt that the Reformatory movement would be of infinite benefit, in an economical, as well as in a moral and religious view. He had himself witnessed its success in foreign countries, under a religion less pure than our own. He had visited Mattray, formerly the scene of splendid vice under the French kings, now famous for one of the earliest Reformatory establishments in Europe. In Belgium at Ruysselede he had heard of inmates sent from the parent society to various branch establishments on errands, refusing food at the latter, from fear of trenching on their limited funds: and others when they had received money bringing it into the common stock. He observed that Mr. Bowyer's institution was not singular, that others were springing up in London, and even far in the country: and indeed this movement was forced on us, for since transportation had ceased, we could no longer get rid of our criminals, but must either reform them, or be pressed upon by them.

The Rev. N. Norman read a statement of the origin, objects, and progress of the institution, in anticipation of the report which the committee hoped to issue at the close of the year.

The institution was opened in December, 1852, with six inmates. There was now accommodation for 40, but applicants were constantly rejected for want of room and funds—35 had left the institution, 4 of whom had quitted prematurely, unable to endure the discipline; 3 had emigrated to Australia; 15 had been established in trade, with most of whom a correspondence had been kept up; 2 had been provided for by friends; 11 had gone into the army and navy; 1 had been dismissed for misconduct; 31 were at present in the institution, 9 as carpenters, 8 as smiths, 8 as turners, 3 shoemakers, 2 kitchen boys, 1 tailor; 5 of these had passed their full time and were on the point of leaving, 3 as emigrants and 2 for situations at home.

The probation, a fortnight's separation from the rest, on bread and water, was not here a preliminary measure, but was enforced after a new comer had been some little time in the institution and learned to appreciate its value. Besides the number received into the institution itself, great benefit had been indirectly conferred on the neighbourhood by the breaking up of gangs of thieves in consequence of the leaders coming into the Reformatory, and the less hardened giving up their evil courses and returning to an honest life, when their pernicious influence had been removed. That this was confirmed in a remarkable manner by the testimony of the police to the improvement of the vicinity.

Digitized by Google

S. Cave, Esq., Secretary and Treasurer, said that the financial affairs of the institution were in a very bad plight, they had hard work to push on from week to week, and still harder to pay off their debts. It was difficult to turn away the pitiable objects who came imploring to be admitted, knowing as they did, that if denied there was no hope elsewhere: they felt almost responsible for that man's career which must be from bad to worse: and that responsibility must rest somewhere: some one who could have given, and would not give, was responsible for the murder and execution which followed the rejection of Levi Harwood from the Westminster Reformatory, and when he heard of 100*l.* given for an Opera ticket, which humanly speaking would have turned four thieves into honest men, he could not but think that a fearful account would some day be rendered by those who spent their money on their own pleasures, and closed their ears to appeals like this. The expences were very great, especially during these high prices; but their chief difficulty was want of publicity. Meetings for charitable purposes were thinly attended: newspapers would only put in advertisements, which were very expensive, overlooked by many readers, and looked upon with suspicion by many others. It had been said that thieves could not be reformed; but they had instances of self-denial which shewed a change of character. Last year the inmates gave up their supper for five weeks to subscribe to the Patriotic Fund, and this year when bread was dear, they clubbed part of their daily allowance, without speaking of it to the governor, and distributed it to the neighbouring poor. One of the most steady of the inmates, now about to leave, had been in prison six or eight times, had never known a mother, his father had died in gaol, two sisters were the worst of characters, and two brothers had been transported. What chance had he ever had of being other than what he was? Another who had come at seventeen, an old, wayworn sinner, had recovered not only the feelings and demeanor, but positively the looks of youth and innocence. It was much to be deplored that one so adapted, and so devoted to the cause as the honorary governor, Mr. Bowyer, should be hampered and crippled in his operations by want of funds in such a metropolis as this.

The Rev. David Laing then addressed the meeting, and alluded to the case of a poor Irish lad, upon whom much kindly labour had been apparently spent in vain, but who had passed one year in the Reformatory, and was now a teacher in the school.

Captain Williams, Government Inspector of Prisons, said, that the reformatory met with his entire approval. He had closely looked into its working, and there was only one fault he had to find. It was deficient only in one respect, and that was in funds. It had but one want—want of support. He found great fault with the neighbourhood for allowing so useful an institution to languish. It was all very well saying government ought to support it; but government would not, unless the inhabitants of the district first interest themselves warmly in it; and then exercise a pressure upon the government, and urge them to contribute, in which case it undoubtedly would. He advised the meeting liberally to support an institution which was doing so much towards the suppression of crime.

The Rev. Edward Auriol said there was no longer any excuse arising from the doubtful nature of the experiment, that the success was obvious, and remarkable. We had tried severity, we had hanged, transported, imprisoned; then we had tried education, we had national schools, then ragged schools, and now we had come to reformatories; and now for the first time the problem seemed to be solved of the management and reformation of our unfortunate criminal population.

Joseph Payne, Esq., said, this institution was preventive as well as reformatory. It reformed one thief, and prevented another from taking his place. This age was wiser than former ages in this respect at least. Formerly punishment for crime was merely vengeance—mercy was not thought of. He felt sure that there would be no rivalry between this institution, and that at Westminster, that they would work hand in hand for a similar grand object. He related a striking instance of self control in the inmates of the Westminster reformatory leaving the Park when the Emperor was coming by, because their time was up, and concluded with some amusing lines, comparing the institution with the Diorama, shewing two views, one preventive and the other reformatory.

The Rev. R. W. Burton, minister of the church which the inmates attended; had every reason to be satisfied with their behaviour; had lately administered the sacrament to one. He bore testimony to the encouraging assiduity of the Governor. Thought it a bad sign that whilst three and a half millions were expended in a harbour of refuge, and fifty millions on spirits and tobacco, and thirty millions on war, the institution languished for want of a small sum.

The Rev. L. Dale mentioned having placed a lad he could do nothing with in the Reformatory, who was now teacher in a school. This was another instance of the reformatory succeeding when ordinary means had failed. He concluded by proposing a vote of thanks to the noble chairman; well known under his present, but, perhaps, better under his former name, as champion of the oppressed and neglected, and promoter of everything useful.

R. Ricardo Esq., seconded the motion, which was unanimously adopted.

The Earl of Shaftesbury after acknowledging the vote of thanks, said, that it was surprising we should now have to argue about the utility of such institutions; he thought every one was agreed upon that point and only differed about the mode. Ignorance was their chief opponent. He recommended the committee to advertise; saying that money laid out in advertisements was amply repaid. He agreed with the secretary that the charity of England in the aggregate was not proportioned to its wealth; but that was because so many gave nothing—those who did give, were called upon so much that they often gave beyond their means. Difficulty of disposing of inmates was great, he felt sure they ought to be removed far from their old haunts, and from a recurrence of temptation which they dreaded much themselves. Instancing a case of a boy in the Westminster reformatory, who when sent to pay a bill in the place of his former crimes, ran all the way there and back lest he should meet any old associates. He passed a high eulogium on the Honorary Governor, who had proved himself fully qualified for the task he had undertaken, and made it the one sole object of his life; and said that he thought far less of what the system was, than how it was carried out. The best system ever devised, unless carried out by a man, heart and soul in the cause, would result in confusion and failure; whereas even a faulty system in the hands of a thoroughly competent and zealous man, might be productive of the best results. His Lordship then made a most feeling address to the five lads about to quit the institution, and four militiamen who had formerly been inmates; one of whom had written the governor a very touching letter, begging that as he was billeted near, he might be allowed to pass the time he was off drill, in the institution, and continue his education, rather than lounge about in the tap-room.

At the conclusion of His Lordship's address a letter was handed in from the Bishop of Lichfield, expressing his regret at not being able to attend, as he had fully intended to do; and after the benediction by the Rev. L. Dale, the meeting separated.

THE BOYS' REFUGE, Commercial Street, Whitechapel.—Treasurer, Robert Hanbury, jun. Esq., 3, Sussex Square; Honorary Secretary, Charles Buxton, Esq., 7, Grosvenor Crescent.

We have pleasure in drawing the attention of our readers to this valuable institution. As originally established, it might be considered an experiment, hitherto untried, to prevent crime amongst the poor juvenile population of the metropolis, by giving to children, orphans, homeless, and neglected of their parents—and so cast on a world full of temptation—employment and instruction in a Christian home. It was however soon discovered that to draw a line of demarcation between the outcast and the criminal would be almost impracticable, and the committee found from experience that it would be unadvisable, if not impossible to exclude from the institution boys who had been convicted of crime. So that very many of its inmates had been convicted, and some even in prison.

It opened on the 8th Nov. 1853, by the admission of two boys, and during the year 94 have been admitted. The general conduct of the boys has been good, they are obedient to orders; as a general rule, industrious; and in their demeanour, quiet and decorous in private or public worship; and habits of truthfulness and cleanliness are acquiring a steady hold upon them; so that the difficulties arising from the novelty of the experiment are fast passing away, and the institution may now be considered in good working order; and the committee are stimulated to fresh exertions, by the success with which these efforts have been blessed.

The first report has just been issued, and affords strong reason to wish for the multiplication of similar institutions.

It appears that during the year, there have been admitted ninety-four boys, of whom 36 were orphans. 17 had fathers known to be alive. 15 had mothers. 22 had both parents. 22 had been deserted by one or both parents; and, in some instances, left in the streets. In these instances it is not known whether the parents are alive or dead. 9 had run away from their parents; and several came under feigned names. 43 were entirely homeless, or had at times been driven into the streets by their parents. 32 had been in workhouses. 21 had been in prison.

Of these 29 could read intelligently, write or cipher. 22 could read a little. 43 could not read at all. During the year 1 has been expelled for planning a robbery. 8 have been restored to their parents. 23 have absconded. 62 are still in the Institution, of whom five boys considered fit for emigration, are about to be sent out by special subscription for that purpose.

It is to be observed that those who have been the longest in the Institution, are least disposed to quit its shelter. Of the above named 23, 15 have absconded, after having remained a short time at the Refuge. 6 in less than three months. 1 at the end of six months. 1 at the end of seven months.

Digitized by Google

In the Tailor's Shop 672 garments have been made, and 200 repaired.

In the Shoemaker's Shop, 355 pair of Shoes have been completed, and 200 repaired; while

In the Carpenter's Shop, above £80 worth of labor has been executed by the boys for the Institution; and, besides this, various orders have been completed, to the amount of £49. 5s. 9d.

At an examination held by the Committee a short time ago, the general proficiency of the boys in reading, writing, and arithmetic was considered satisfactory.

Asylums.

ROYAL ASYLUM OF ST. ANNE'S SOCIETY. On the 24th of April, the anniversary festival of this society, established for the purpose of affording clothing, maintenance, and education to children of those in prosperity, whether orphans or not, was held at the London Tavern. Sir ROBERT PEEL, Bart., M.P., presided, and was supported by his Grace the Duke of Wellington, Lord Berners, Mr. Sheriff Crosley, the Rev. Joseph Brown, M.A., rector of Christchurch, Blackfriars, and a large number of other gentlemen. The institution was formed in 1709 by a few persons who resolved upon raising subscriptions and contributions, which being effected, with the aid of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge they instituted a day school in Aldersgate for educating and clothing 30 boys and 30 girls, each subscriber in rotation having the right of placing a child in the school. In the year 1860 a most important addition was made to the original purposes of the institution, a country asylum having then been opened for the entire maintenance and education of 20 additional boys. From these small beginnings has arisen the Royal Asylum, containing 225 children, wholly maintained, clothed, and educated. Additions have been made at various times under peculiar circumstances. On the occasion of the revolution in France, in 1848, six children were instantly and gratuitously admitted into the asylum from an orphan institution which could no longer be supported in Paris. On the melancholy occasion of the loss of the Amazon steamer, and the deaths of Mr. and Mrs. Cumming, of Brixton, two orphans, also gratuitously, found a home in this asylum—instances which suffice to show how justly entitled the institution is to general support. Since the establishment of the society upwards of 2,000 children have been placed out or apprenticed, and there are now nearly 300 children under its care.

The right hon. baronet who presided dwelt with considerable eloquence upon these and similar facts, and deduced from them the duty as well as the privilege of liberally contributing to an institution which was productive of such important results. As an earnest of his sincerity he contributed 50 guineas towards the funds of the society, and a like sum was immediately afterwards contributed by the Duke of Wellington. Other subscriptions also flowed in, yielding a total of 1,800*l.*

A very admirable and touching address was delivered by one of the boys of the institution, and two of the children who had most distinguished themselves received decorations from the hands of the right hon. baronet.

In the course of the proceedings the children of the school walked in procession round the room, and excited great attention by their cleanly and healthful appearance. They were addressed by the Rev. Dr. Croly.

THE ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS. — The spring election and annual meeting of this charity took place on the 26th of April, at the London Tavern, for the purpose of electing fifteen children, from a list of 170 candidates. Sir George Carroll presided; and, after a few brief remarks, called upon the hon. secretary to read the report. It stated that there were at present in the Asylum 322 children, making with those to be elected a total of 337 inmates. The mental and physical condition of all the children had considerably improved; and three of them had become so far responsible as to have obtained engagements as servants. The new building at Essex Hall, Colchester, intended to accommodate 400 additional pupils, it was expected would be opened in the course of July next, when H.R.H. Prince Albert, who laid the first stone, had intimated his intention to preside. The great increase in the price of provisions, &c., had affected the funds of the society to a serious amount, and made the financial statement show a balance at the bankers' of 492*l.* 16s. 8d. against 568*l.* 15s. 8d. in the previous year. The report having been adopted, and thanks voted to the treasurer, honorary secretaries, and the chairman, the business of the election was proceeded with.

JEWS' ORPHAN ASYLUM, GOODMAN'S FIELDS.—The annual festival of this institution was held at the London Tavern on the 7th of May. About 150 gentlemen sat down to a dinner prepared, according to the strict injunctions of the Jewish ceremonial law, by Mr. Myers, of Aldgate. The chair was taken by Mr. J. Abel Smith, M.P., supported by Sheriff Sir Charles Crosley, and many highly respectable members of the mercantile community in the city of London. After the usual loyal and constitutional toasts, the chairman proposed "Success to the Jews' Orphan Asylum" in an earnest and forcible speech, previously to which the children of the Asylum were introduced and paraded round the room in the usual manner, their healthy complexions and contented countenances eliciting warm expressions of satisfaction from the assembled guests. The hon. chairman observed that he thought he should do wisely if he confined himself to pointing to the children who had just entered the room. He had had the privilege of going over the institution that morning, and he could conscientiously bear his testimony to the healthiness, comfort, and cheerfulness of the inmates. Whatever our religions might be, we were one as a nation, and it was our first duty, (a duty less political than religious) to educate and to train the young. The hon. chairman concluded his speech with an address to the children, after which they sang in chorus, at his suggestion the popular song, "Britannia, the pride of the ocean." The health of the chairman was proposed by Mr. Philip Lucas, president of the institution, and after the usual complimentary toasts to the vice-presidents and other officers of the asylum, the company separated. It appears from the report that, notwithstanding the increased resources of the institution, the augmentation in the number of its inmates, (there being at present 38 children in the asylum), the cases still requiring its assistance, the high price of its provisions, and the expenses of improved education far more than absorb the income, so that it is still requisite that the committee should raise the necessary supplies by public contributions. The subscriptions announced amounted to upwards of 800*l.*

LICENSED VICTUALLERS' ASYLUM.—The twenty-seventh annual festival took place at Highbury Barn Tavern on the 16th of May last. Mr. Henry Allsopp took the chair, and between 400 and 500 guests sat down to dinner. The report of the asylum shows that during the past quarter of a century, 368 unfortunate persons have found shelter within its walls, of whom 153 are still enjoying its benefits. The subscriptions raised in the course of the afternoon attained the unusually large amount of 2,826*l.*

THE LOCK ASYLUM.—This Asylum is connected with the Lock Hospital, and receives from its wards the unhappy women who have been driven to it for medical care. These young women are in the Asylum trained to industrial pursuits, instructed in a knowledge of divine truth, and then restored to society useful, instead of dangerous, members of the community. Since the establishment of the Asylum, 1,360 penitent young women have received the benefit of its training and its shelter. There are now 86 inmates. It is proposed by the Governors, in order to make this Penitentiary more widely useful and beneficial to the outcast class for whom it has been established, to add an aditional probationary department, and it affords us much pleasure to announce, that besides several subscriptions which the Governors have already received from private individuals, the new Philharmonic Society has liberally devoted the proceeds of its fourth grand concert, which took place on the 23rd of May, at Exeter Hall, to assist this desirable object.

Hospitals.

FESTIVAL OF THE LONDON HOSPITAL. The London Hospital celebrated its 115th Anniversary on the 26th of April. The proceedings of the day commenced with Divine service in the chapel of the hospital, where a sermon was delivered on the occasion by the Rev. Dr. Croly, rector of St. Stephen's, Walbrook. The friends of the charity afterwards adjourned to the London Tavern to enjoy a sumptuous entertainment provided for them by Mr. Bathe, and shortly after half-past 6 o'clock a flourish of trumpets announced the entrance of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, who had most graciously consented to preside at the festival. His Royal Highness was attended by Lieutenant-General Macdonald, and supported by Mr. Bramston, M.P.; Mr. J. Scott Smith (chairman of the house committee); the Rev. Dr. Croly, &c. On rising to propose the first toast, his Royal Highness was received with the most enthusiastic cheering, and for some moments was unable to obtain a hearing.

His Royal Highness said, that having in accordance with his usual custom, paid a visit of inspection to the London Hospital, he was happy to be able to give a most favourable report of the organization, discipline, and cleanliness of the establishment, and he thought that its order and regularity reflected great credit on all the gentlemen connected with it. It was unnecessary to enter into details, but he deemed it his duty to show the necessity of giving further suppert to the hospital. The London Hospital was situate in a poor and densely populated district of the metropolis (in the vicinity of the docks, where accidents were constantly occurring), and he might inform the company that the hospital was so far a free one that out of the 22,574 patients of all classes admitted last year, 12,635 were received without recommendation, the accident cases alone amounting to 10,780. But large sums were required to keep up the establishment. The regular revenue of the hospital was £11,000 a year, but the wide extension of its benefits had resulted in an annual excess of expenditure over income, amounting to £4000 on ordinary occasions, and, during the past year, to an additional £2000, or £6000 altogether. His Royal Highness, in a fervent appeal to the sympathies of the company, expressed a hope that in the course of the evening something would be done to meet these extraordinary demands on the charity. He was gratified to notice several improvements made in the hospital during the past year, including the construction of fireproof staircases, the opening of attics for "separate" cases, and the building of a medical school, complete in all its parts, in alluding to which his Royal Highness paid a marked compliment to the medical officers of the hospital. The subscriptions announced amounted to about £1,300.

Digitized by Google

ST. MARK'S HOSPITAL.—The 19th anniversary of St. Mark's Hospital (in the City Road), for the cure of fistula and diseases of the rectum, was held at the London Tavern on the 25th of April. The Lord Mayor, Sir Francis G. Moon, Bart., presided on the occasion, and was supported by Mr. Sheriff Crosley, Mr. Under-Sheriff Farrar, Mr. J. Masterman, M.P., and other gentlemen. The utility of this institution, and the wonderful cures effected by its skilful surgeon, Mr. Salmon, are not perhaps so generally known as they deserve to be, from the very peculiar nature of the diseases which are treated, and we may therefore safely re-echo the conviction expressed by the committee, that there are thousands of charitable individuals who, if acquainted with the existence of the institution, and the invaluable benefits which it confers on the suffering poor, would feel it a privilege, as well as a duty, to co-operate in so useful a work. This is now the more necessary, we regret to find, inasmuch as the committee have lately sold out funded capital to pay all existing liabilities, and thrown themselves on the friends of the hospital and the benevolence of the public for the income required to maintain the charity with its present complement of 20 beds. The interests of the institution were most ably advocated by the Lord Mayor, and the amount of subscriptions raised was about £1,400.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL, PADDINGTON.—The anniversary dinner in aid of the funds of St. Mary's Hospital, Cambridge-place, Paddington, took place at the London Tavern. The Earl of Cardigan had intended to preside on the occasion, but his Lordship sent an apology at the last moment, on the ground of sudden indisposition, and his place was supplied by Viscount Ebrington, M.P. for Marylebone. After the usual loyal and constitutional toasts, which included "The Army and Navy," "The Emperor of the French," and "Our Foreign Allies," the noble viscount proposed, "Prosperity to St. Mary's Hospital," in a terse and pointed speech, which was received with much applause by the audience. It appears that during the past year the hospital relieved 1,447 in-patients, 4,372 out-patients, and 3,127 casualties, but that the increased number of patients, the special expenses of the cholera wards, and the rise in the price of provisions, have added very seriously to the expenses, while the receipts have been lessened by additional taxation and other causes. Of the merits of this hospital, and the value of the medical aid afforded by its eminent surgeon, Mr. Coulson, and his able colleagues, there can be no question, and it is therefore hoped that the public will come forward and enable the hospital to pay off the debts incurred last year, and which amount to 2,600*l.* The subscriptions announced during the evening amounted to between 1,500*l.* and 2,000*l.*

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—The anniversary Dinner and Meeting was held at the Albion Tavern on the 3rd of May last; chairman, the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, M.P. who was supported by Lord Radstock, Lord Feversham, the Rev. Dr. Jelf, Rev. A. M'Caul, Dr. Guy (the Dean of the Medical Department, King's College), and other gentlemen. After the usual loyal toasts, the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to King's College Hospital" was proposed and drunk with acclamations. The right hon. gentleman referred to the statistics of the institution (a summary of which we subjoin), as the best argument in its favour, and in the course of his speech returned thanks to the medical officers for the aid they had afforded to the Government in the establishment of hospitals at the seat of war in the East. This appeal was responded to by subscriptions and donations amounting to nearly 3,000*l.* King's College Hospital is situated in the very heart of the metropolis, and may therefore lay claim to be considered as the unendowed hospital of the central districts of London. It is the resort of the poor from every part of the metropolis, and it is to all intents and purposes a free hospital. In 1854 there were entered on the books 27,694 patients, and since the year 1839, when the hospital was first opened, 282,705 patients have enjoyed the benefits of the charity, of whom 17,943 were in-patients, and 259,235 out-patients, and 5,527 poor married women attended at their own homes. Out of the large number just stated, 12,436 in-patients, and 262,712 out-patients, were admitted without letters. This vast amount of relief is administered at a cost of 5,000*l.* a-year, and, as the hospital is maintained entirely by the voluntary contributions of the public, while the annual subscriptions only amount to about 1,500*l.*, the charity is dependent for nearly 3,500*l.* upon the free gifts of friends.

HOSPITAL FOR THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST.—The Annual Meeting and Dinner were held on the 9th May, at Willis's Rooms; Lord Ravensworth in the chair. From the report read by the secretary, Mr. Cross, it appears that during the past year 434 patients were admitted, of whom 293 were discharged more or less relieved, 51 died, and 90 remain on hand. The number of out-patients relieved last year amounted to 3,224, the average daily number treated having been nearly 100. It appears that 3,000*l.* will be required to complete the building. The committee have nevertheless determined to throw open the whole of the western wing, capable of receiving 130 patients—an extension which will raise the yearly expenditure to the sum of 8,080*l.* The announcement of these facts, backed by a stirring appeal from the noble chairman, resulted in a subscription of 1,500*l.*

ORTHOPŒDIC HOSPITAL.—The fifteenth annual dinner party was held on the 16th of May last, at the London Tavern, the Marquis of Westminster, vice-president in the chair. The company included Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P., the Rev. Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Quarles Harris (the founder of the hospital), Mr. Adams (surgeon), Dr. Quain, Dr. Daniel, and other gentlemen immediately connected with the institution. After the usual loyal and constitutional toasts, the noble chairman proposed the toast of the evening—"Success to the Royal Orthopœdic Hospital," in a very able speech, seasoned with much humour and many classical allusions. His Lordship took occasion gently to criticize the title of the hospital as not strictly correct in a purely etymological point of view, inasmuch as if the object be to straighten the feet of the patients "orthopodic," not orthopœdic, would seem to be the proper designation. The noble chairman laid before the audience the statistics of the hospital, and wound up his speech with a very happy allusion to the healing of the impotent man by St. Peter and St. John at the beautiful gate of the Temple of Jerusalem. The report of the hospital shows that it has cured and relieved nearly 17,000 cripples, and rescued thousands from destitution and despair. More than 700 are now under treatment, and nearly 200 more are waiting to be received as in-patients, but cannot be admitted for want of funds. The building fund, moreover, is very far short of the sum required, and a more than usually strong appeal is therefore made to the benevolence of the public by the friends of the charity. The subscriptions announced amounted to the sum of 2,100*l.*

FOUNDLING HOSPITAL.—The anniversary Sermon of this Charity, was preached in the Church of the Hospital on Sunday Morning, the 20th of May, by the Rev. Dr. Goulburn, Head Master of Rugby School, before the president, the Duke of Cambridge, and other distinguished persons. The collection amounted to 126*l.*

Notices to Correspondents.

The present NEW SERIES of THE PHILANTHROPIST, is published by Messrs. Partridge, Oakey, and Co., Paternoster Row; and, owing to the suggestions made to us of the inconvenience attending fortnightly publications, will, in future, be issued on the first of every month.

On account of a large portion of our space being devoted to Notices and Reports of the Anniversaries of various Benevolent and Religious Societies, we have been obliged to postpone the insertion of other important articles and reports till next month.

Communications, books, reports, relating to prisons and reformatories, for notice or review, to be addressed, free, to the EDITORS, care of Messrs. Partridge, Oakey, and Co.

Orders for the paper, or for advertisements, to be addressed to the Publishers.

Attention is called to the following scale of charges for advertisements:—

SCALE OF CHARGES.

	£	s.	d.
Five lines and under		2	6
Every additional line			4
A column	1	15	0
Half-page	2	5	0
A page	4	0	0

Blocks received. For any amount under £1, postage stamps received as cash.

The Philanthropist,

AND

PRISON & REFORMATORY GAZETTE.

JUNE 1st, 1855.

THERE can be no doubt that the philanthropic Institutions of England are not only one of the characteristic features which reflect glory on the age, but are a vital reproductive force sustaining the moral life of the nation. They assist to give power and stability to our character and materially aid our influence for good throughout the world.

A distinguished foreigner who recently visited this country, after examining its condition and prospects, was asked what he considered were the best evidence of England's greatness, and of what we as Englishmen might be most proud. He said three things in particular: namely, the social freedom of the subject, the sacred rights of asylum guaranteed by us to the refugees of Europe, and our public benevolent institutions.

More than one author has recently laboured with considerable diligence to prove that England is declining, that the sun of our prosperity and power has passed its meridian, that our most heroic ages are gone, and that the mildew of decay is imperceptibly growing around the nation's heart. They have enumerated facts and framed arguments to maintain this theory. We, however, do not concur in these opinions, and we point to our Philanthropic Societies as a testimony against such reasoning and its conclusions. These ocieties are generally in a very healthful condition and are gradually increasing to meet the moral necessities of the age. It is a remarkable and cheering fact, that, where we see a national evil, we see an organisation of men and means, meeting that evil full in the face and aiming at its destruction. We see virtue struggling with vice, right with wrong, Christianity with irreligion, in every direction. We are in the midst of a great moral conflict between Good and Evil. At one time Slavery existed in our colonies, and British philanthropy organized its forces and emancipated the oppressed. That struggle exists now only in History. But the spirit which animated it is not dead. The beneficent energy which battled manfully and overcame evils in past years is now confronting the moral maladies of the present time. And though the work to be done is vast and varied, philanthropy adapts itself in various ways and uses various agencies to accomplish its purposes. We have therefore Hospitals for the sick and wounded, Asylums for the disabled and indigent, and Schools for the ignorant. Have we intemperance, a vast national sin staring us in the face from ten thousand gin-palaces?—We see Temperance Societies waging war with that extended evil. Are our great cities polluted with prostitution?—We see Institutions for the recovery of the lost; Refuges for the unsheltered, and manifold means for the prevention of the vice. Is a large proportion of our juvenile population devoted to criminal pursuits?—Reformatories are springing up to receive and improve them. Do the thunders of war reverberate over the beating billows of the Euxine, and send agonizing vibrations to ten thousand British homes?—We hear the voice of Peace Societies whispering the prophetic inspirations of scripture that the time is coming when "War shall be no more," and when the Prince of Peace will reign in the world; and we witness noble contributions to the Patriotic Fund from all classes of society to mitigate the fearful calamities of war. We might go on and enumerate the catalogue of evils and follies which exist among us, and specify on the other hand the corresponding, ameliorating, reformatory or preventive institutions which exist in vital activity, vindicating the power of British Philanthropy. If doing good to one's neighbour, striving for a holier future, erecting charities and organizing the benevolent dispositions of the people, be an evidence of national strength and progress, then is England, instead of commencing its decline, only entering on a new campaign of usefulness and honour.

Digitized by Google

Philanthropy for some time past has devoted itself with increasing attention to reforming the unfortunate victims of society, and preventing their increase. This we regard as a significant sign of the times. John Howard went forth with a heart charged with disinterested zeal, to alleviate the sufferings of the most degraded of our race. To this work he devoted his property and consecrated his life, and in so doing opened a pathway for future labourers. For many years after, it was the chief consideration with benevolent men and women how best to mitigate suffering and sorrow; to cure rather than to prevent. A change however has recently come over their intentions and their hopes. Philanthropists are now demanding schools for the untaught, shelter for the unprotected, and reformatories for the erring. We consequently see Ragged Schools springing up in our great cities, accompanied by Industrial Institutions, and Homes for Outcasts. A more merciful spirit has penetrated our prisons, and a more healthful discipline has been promoted. Statesmen, Magistrates, and Chaplains of Gaols have been paying more attention to the causes of crime, so that they might multiply not only remedies but means of prevention. Philanthrophy in fact is becoming more philosophical, practical, and useful.

Though philanthropy as it is embodied in our public charities and remedial institutions is unquestionably one of the principal facts of the age, it possesses no recognised organ through which it can make its appeals, offer its earnest suggestions, and record its progress. It is proposed therefore to supply this evident deficiency by THE PHILANTHROPIST, whose especial mission will be to present and popularize useful and cheering facts, to tell the world what England is doing, what it ought to do, and what it may do, to elevate and bless mankind.

The columns of the PHILANTHROPIST, in its new series, will be open to all who have useful information to communicate, or suggestions to propose appertaining to benevolent thought and action.

Like other benevolent works, THE PHILANTHROPIST appeals to its friends for support, relying on the necessity of its existence, the purity of its motive, and the candid consideration of the public. Though it is not in the power of mortals to command success, the PHILANTHROPIST will do its best to deserve it.

THE PHILANTHROPY OF CHRISTIANITY.

The religion of Jesus Christ is pre-eminently humane in its principles and tendencies. Prior to the advent of the Messiah, even among the most refined and enlightened nations of the world, as those of Greece and Rome, Hospitals for the sick, or Almshouses for the poor and destitute, were establishments unknown. These have owed their erection, management, and support, to the humanity of the gospel. Indeed, if one looks abroad through the world, he may easily, and with accuracy, divine the various countries professing christianity, from the nature, variety, and number of the institutions founded for the relief of the miseries to which mankind is heir. It is a fact which cannot be denied, that the nations which are most eminently christian, are also the most eminently philanthropic.

Without fear of contradiction, and without any spirit of presumption, to the glory of God it may be affirmed, that no nation presents so many friendly and charitable institutions as the British. The various societies, whose proceedings we report in this single impression of our Journal, give an exalted exhibition of the power of the christian religion, to make its inhabitants humane and charitable. Among the institutions established in our land, however, none more illustriously exhibit the humanity of the gospel, than those which have for their object, the prevention of crime, or the reformation of criminals.

It is the duty of the sovereign, in order that he may be "a terror to evil-doers, and a praise to them that do well," to punish his subjects who impugn his authority and transgress his laws. This is a duty which natural religion dictates; but to seek at the same time to make offenders better, more religious and happy men, as well as more obedient subjects, is the inspiration of the gospel. The transgressors of their country's laws, are the enemies of the commonwealth, and, according to the maxims of the world, incur the hatred of men. "Ye have heard," says the Saviour, "that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy, but I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." Here is the humanity of the gospel,—the divine philanthropy of Christianity, the existence and exemplification of which we may search for in vain among the nations unswayed by the religion of Jesus. Our model prisons and our reformatory institutions embrace this grand principle and endeavour to carry it out on an enlarged scale. The exhibition of it, even in a single instance, presents a noble and admirable trophy of the humanizing power of the christian religion,—that man is a marked man who loves his enemies, and does good to them that hate him,—the name of Howard will be immortalised in the annals of christianity,—but when we witness its operation throughout the length and breadth of a land, in its prisons and reformatories, it certainly does argue that that nation must be pre-eminent for the divinity of its teachings and the humanity of its principles.

Digitized by Google

The christian religion makes its professor essentially a philanthropist. The plans which he devises for the carrying out the purposes of his heart, are as various as the claims which misery, destitution, and distress demand. These embrace the education, civilization, and conversion of mankind. For these purposes he establishes schools, founds colleges, and erects churches. He builds alms-houses, endows hospitals, and, with the soothing and reformatory principles of the gospel, superintends prisons, and provides homes, dormitories, or schools of industry, for its discharged inmates.

We sympathize with the christian philanthropist in all his "work and labour of love," and desire by the present and future pages of our Journal to aid his efforts, to sustain his hands, and extend his usefulness. It will be our object, not with a view to the gratification of selfish boastings, but for the laudable and sacred purpose of eliciting "every good word and work," to record all that the universal philanthropist has done, is doing, and yet has to do for God and Man.

The Lecturer.

LONDON REFORMATORY AT WESTMINSTER.

We have pleasure in giving the extracts from the Sermon preached by the Rev. H. Alford, at Quebec Chapel, Portman Square, in behalf of the London Reformatory at Westminster, after which the very handsome sum of £237 was collected. The text was, Psalm cxlii. 4:—

"I had no place to flee unto, and no man cared for my soul."

Perhaps these words never received a more striking or affecting illustration, than in the case of a convicted criminal, whose term of punishment is expired. Let us suppose that punishment has had the desired effect upon him. His heart is softened, good resolves have sprung up within him: the instructions which he heard in prison have entered and gained an abiding place. "What does society wish, what does the Christian Church wish, for such a man? For what purpose did we sentence him to imprisonment? For the safety of society, and for the correction of the offender." What then can we Christians wish more, than that the good work begun may be carried on in him, that the returning prodigal should be received with open arms by the Church, and here in earth, as in heaven, there should be joy over one sinner that repenteth? But, he has no place to flee unto, and no man seems to care for his soul. As there are some trees, which not only bear poison in their vital juices and the savour of their fruit, but even disperse it in the odour of their blossom, and taint the air around them, so is it with crime. There rises around the criminal an atmosphere and neighbourhood of distrust, (too often, alas! deserved,) wafted outward by the poison within, he cannot be trusted, cannot be believed, cannot be received for what he is and feels and intends. Shall he seek that home, where he once lay upon his mother's bosom, or climbed his father's knee? Woe unto him, for he has brought that mother's grey hairs with sorrow to the grave; he has beaten with repeated strokes of rebellion on that father's heart, and it is hard as the nether millstone: that door is shut to him, there is no home for him there. Shall he wander away and seek employment in some far distant part of the land, where none know him? Such may be and such sometimes has been his course: and work has been obtained: and for a time all has prospered: confidence has been gradually gained: he begins to breathe more freely: the regular habits of a family seem to him like another home, and the teaching of the house of God keeps alive the good seed sown within him. But at last the fatal moment brings some customer into the shop, who has known him; or some officer of detective justice crosses his path; at once the fair vision melts away, the fabric of hope is shattered. "This man in your employ is a thief, a convicted felon,—take heed!" Then follows the sharp reproach, the angry and sudden dismissal,—another door shut upon the outcast, and the wide world before him again, with one more avenue of hope closed for ever. Thus his sin finds him out and hunts him down: so easy is it, to fall into degradation; so more than difficult to climb back again, to escape into the upper air, and recover in any measure what has been lost.

But the world and the Christian Church, have they no blame in this matter? Are they, have they been right, in thus shutting the door of hope against the repentant criminal, and thrusting him away from every possibility of regaining his lost position? For whither shall he fly, now that his employer's house is forbidden him? Where shall he obtain sympathy,—where a home,—where the necessaries of subsistence? There is but one haunt where he will find a welcome,—but one course by which he can now live,—but one set of faces that will brighten at his approach. Can resolution, the infirm breast of man, withstand the temptation, when on the one side is the blank chill world, closed doors and closed hearts, disgrace, reproach, starvation, and on the other the haunts of old companions, the excitement of perilous adventure, with the chance of success and prosperity in crime,—and our answer is: "This may be so, for God's spirit is all-powerful; but it is not, for God's spirit is not given to remove the consequences of our delinquency. Society and the Church of Christ have not done their duty to these poor men. Verily, of such it might be said: "They had no place to flee unto, and no man cared for their soul." Year after year our gaols were sending forth discharged criminals into society. Had we invented a system to foster and perpetuate crime, we could not have done it more effectually. Having utterly lost caste,—branded in name and character, outcast and degraded; there was no course open for them but to rejoin their former companions and haunts, with hearts, however benefited by instruction in prison, yet all the more hardened by the very casting off of that instruction. And thus have we not only failed in all our attempts, on a large scale, to repress the spread of crime, but we have brought, in many most lamentable instances, the guilt of our brother's blood upon us. It is natural enough in the ungodly world, to hunt down those who are once degraded; to close all place of repentance; nay, to do more—to cry out upon all who would act otherwise, as if they were incurring moral pollution by contact with their fallen fellow-creatures. 'This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them,' was the taunt of the Pharisee once, and is the taunt of the Pharisee now. But for the followers of him who came to seek and to save that which is lost, to shut the door of mercy and bar the place of repentance to the fallen, is as direct a denial of our Saviour as we can pronounce: as direct a testimony that we are not like Him and have no part in Him.

Such, I rejoice to say, has not been the conduct of all Christians. The foundation and progress of the reformatory which I count it an honour this day to advocate, is a bright exception, one which we may imitate, and in which we may participate as largely as we please. Owing mainly, under God, to the self-denying labours of one man, the LONDON REFORMATORY for Adult Male Criminals has reached its present position of remarkable usefulness. I will not detail to you those labours; you will find them related at length in a little work, entitled "A Place of Repentance," which has been written on the subject. There are now in course of reformation One Hundred Inmates, all of them discharged criminals; and the founder lives among them, delighting in his work, and looked up to by all as their father and their best friend.

In some few cases, situations are obtained for them in this country; but these are but rare. The greater part become emigrants, and their kind friend does not then lose sight of them. Numerous and most interesting are the letters, received from distant lands, full of gratitude and affection to their "Father," as they call him, and to the institution and its supporters. Upwards of 400 criminals have been now sent out in this manner, not more than 3 or 4 of whom, as far as can be ascertained, have relapsed into immoral habits; and those, be it noted, through intemperance.

The applications for admission are far more numerous at this moment, than there is any chance of entertaining. Similar Institutions are springing up elsewhere; both in London and the provinces. But the provision as yet is but a trifle compared with what might be and ought to be done. All these reformatories ought to be largely and efficiently aided; for their work is one of the most important that it is possible to conceive in a christian country. For it is cutting off crime at its very fountains:—humanizing and christianizing those, who, if not humanized and christianized, would be leaders and decoyers of the young and feeble-purposed into mischief. It is the most genial and blessed labour in which a Christian can be engaged: for it is no work of coercion: we have no sculptured shackles scanning our door-ways; our only fetter is the constraint of Christian love. It lies not on the limbs, but on the heart, where no rough servitors bind it on, but it grows like a twining plant of fragrance, in the silent hours of the night, and the busy hours of the day—no hindrance, but a support,—no badge of shame, but a clothing of heavenly glory.

Digitized by Google

And let me not forget to impress upon you, that in the case of the reformatory now before you, this blessed work might be vastly increased by additional funds. Who can think of a repentant criminal turned away—who can follow him in his despair—trace him back to his old haunts and companions—to renewed crime, committal, conviction, and perhaps a life of penal servitude, or even a death of public shame—who can pursue such a train of thought, and lie quietly in his bed, if he could have prevented it? Nor is this an imaginary picture. I had the following history from the Governor's lips but yesterday. In the autumn of 1850, the infant institution was carried on in a confined house, which was completely and indeed unwholesomely full. The poor fellows were even sleeping on the boards of the landings and on the stairs; and he, being apprehensive of an outbreak of fever, was reluctantly compelled to refuse all new applicants. One day a young man presented himself, who begged very hard for admission. On refusal he said: "To convince you that I am a sincere man, I will submit to a month's probation instead of a fortnight: only do admit me." It was impossible; and he was turned away. A few weeks afterwards, the news of a terrible midnight murder rang through the land. An aged clergyman, at Frimley in Sussex, had been the victim; the murderer was the same young man, on whom the doors of the reformatory were compelled to be closed. What a scene of horror and mourning, what a degraded death of shame might have been spared, could that door have been opened to him! And who can tell now, how many such cases may daily be sent away from that haven of Refuge?

Let me mention another circumstance, calculated to bespeak your interest in these poor men. From some of the newspapers sent by kind friends to their reading-room, they heard of the Patriotic Fund being raised for the widows and orphans of our soldiers. By their own proposal, in order to send a contribution to it, they abstained from all food from 5 o'clock on Sunday Evening till 8 o'clock on Tuesday morning, casting in by that means the sum of three guineas and a half into the treasury of the work of love. Was there ever a case to which the words of our Saviour more pointedly applied: "Verily, I say unto you, they have cast in more than they all; for the rest did cast in of their abundance: but they of their poverty did cast in all their living, even all that they had?" And is not their act a bright example to us to-day? I know of no purpose, for which you could give your money, where it will go more direct to its object for good; or where you may yourselves (and this is no small matter,) with more satisfaction and interest track your contribution to its work, and see it employed. It is an object eminently patriotic, as well as eminently christian. What can be better deserving of our country, than to be recovering her lost ones, to be purifying her moral atmosphere, to be raising her in the scale of nations more than war will ever raise her, by deeds of love, and mercy and long-suffering? What can be more like Christ,—Him who ate and drank with publicans and sinners, who sought and saved that which was lost,—than to spend your substance in throwing wide the doors for the penitent to enter,—in giving him the means of returning to his Father's house, and becoming again one of God's great family? The lost sheep, the coin buried in the dust, the prodigal son,—here we have them all,—all our Lord's comments on his own practice; here we are in the direct path of His most holy example. And I must direct your attention to another circumstance, which to my mind tells much in favour of the institution for which I plead. It is Christian, and it is for ALL CHRISTIANS. There are certain objects, such as education, such as missionary work, where each body of Christians must have its own societies, its own separate agencies; must carry on its own views in its own way: but in all objects of general benevolence and amelioration, that Institution, in my view, cripples its usefulness, which confines its work to one body of Christians, and does not take in the whole. And therefore I shall be always found, and I trust I may carry you with me in this,—where there is a choice between two similar benevolent institutions, one confined to our own Church, and the other resting on the broad foundation of our common Christianity, preferring the wider basis and freer air for works of love, whose aim should be vast as the heavens which they will fill with joy, and unlimited as that humanity which cries out for their help.

One word on the particular wants of the Reformatory at this time. Four hundred pounds are urgently needed to complete the fund of eight hundred pounds necessary to pull down the back premises, which consist of a heap of mean old houses, and erect on them more commodious buildings. A sum is wanted to assist the emigration of thirty inmates, at about ten pounds a piece. Increased subscriptions are wanted, to maintain its income at about three thousand pounds a year. Visits of inspection are wanted; for the more the institution is known, the more it will be admired and supported; and it may be not without profit to mention, that just now presents of cast-off clothing are much required. From want of decent clothes, about twenty of the inmates are obliged to remain at home by turns on Sundays, while the rest go to church. Presents of books also will be thankfully received for the library and reading-room.

You see then, beloved, what God has done for our poor criminals, and in what he calls each of you to stand on his side. It can no longer be said of all of them, that "they have no place to flee unto, and no man careth for their soul." But remember how this has been brought about; by the self-denying labours of one Christian man, and the self-denying generosity of many. To carry on the work, to extend it, your help is needed—your self-denial, your generosity: not the mere perfunctory discharge of a recurring duty, but the large liberality of a generous and sympathizing heart; the constraint, not of custom, but of the love of Christ.

These hundred men of whom you have heard, I saw yesterday, plying their honest trades with ardent though subdued satisfaction; I saw them assembled in their hall, and heard them sing with one voice the prodigal's resolve, 'I will arise and go to my Father.' Let every face among them be brightened when they hear to-day what we have done for them. Let us win for ourselves a strain of thanksgiving in their affecting hymns of praise, and an abiding mention in their prayers. And more than this;—let our example go forth among our friends and neighbours, till one and another congregation join in its bounty to the work: till reformatories like this spring up in every province:—till England learn to fold her returning wanderers to her bosom,—till every repentant criminal has 'a place to flee unto, and those that care for his soul.'

HOME FOR OUTCAST BOYS,

BELVEDERE CRESCENT, HUNGERFORD BRIDGE, LAMBETH.

A Sermon was preached on behalf of this Institution, on Sunday, the 15th of April, by the Rev. H. Whitehead, at St. Luke's Church, Berwick Street, Soho, from 1 John v. 4, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." After which a collection was made amounting to £15.

An additional interest was created by the fact that the institution in its infancy, was situated close to the church, the north wall of the sacred edifice being in fact the south wall of "The Home,"—and still further by the fact which was feelingly impressed upon the congregation, that the inmates had been removed to their present home, immediately previous to the inroads of that dread disease the cholera in the district; a radius extending beyond St. Luke's Church of 250 yards from the centre of Broad Street, included an area within which nearly 700 persons died of cholera during the first few days of last September, and they could not but rejoice that it had pleased God to remove this little hopeful body of young worshippers, from so much probable evil to come. A gratifying incident was related showing how the institution had already become as it were the parent of another similar establishment. "It might be that, in like manner, this strong faith that had already produced such happy results was destined, under the favour and protection of heaven, to reproduce itself in divers ways throughout the length and breadth of the land. Many now present might live to see the day when it should so pervade all classes of society as to bring about a total change in our penal system, and in our method of dealing with youths upon the verge of crime. They (the congregation) might then have reason to look back with grateful recollection to the day, when God gave them the opportunity of bestowing their sympathy and support upon a righteous cause in the early season of its need and difficulty."

DOVER SAILORS' HOME.—On the 10th of May, nine men, forming part of the crew of the Crœsus, the unfortunate vessel which took fire on her passage from Genoa to the Crimea, with Sardinian troops on board, landed at Dover, and were received and accommodated with board and lodging at the Sailors' Home, when every comfort which the establishment could command was freely afforded them. On the day following, the men left for London, deeply grateful for the kindness with which they had been received at the Home. A short time since six destitute French sailors who were driven on shore were received, and provided with everything necessary for their accommodation. In little more than two years 140 shipwrecked men have met with a refuge at the Dover Home. It is gratifying to know that a large and commodious building is about to be erected, which will freely provide every requisite and comfort for the shipwrecked and needy sailors. The Dover Home differs from all others in its constitution, inasmuch as it is always a refuge for the wrecked mariners of all nations.

Digitized by Google

PUBLIC EDUCATION IN GREAT BRITAIN. A parliamentary paper has been issued, containing an estimate of the sums required to be voted for the year ending the 31st March, 1856, for public education in Great Britain. The estimate to be moved on the re-assembling of the House of Commons for the current year is £381,921, of which £70,000 is required for building, &c., elementary and normal schools: £4,000 for books in elementary schools; £145,000 for pupil teachers and gratuities to their instructors. Sums are required for training schools. In London the salaries of the establishment amount to £9,431. The secretary has £1,000, and an advising counsel £300. The cost of inspection is no less than £31,940 in the year. There are 41 inspectors, at from £200 to £600 a year.

Correspondence.

A LINK WANTED.

To the Editor of The Philanthropist.

Sir,—Permit me to call your attention to what I consider a decided want in our public institutions and educational machinery. England abounds in societies of various descriptions, which have for their object, either the education of the young, of reforming criminals, or alleviating suffering. But it has struck me that we want institutions of an attractive nature for boys and girls, or if you think proper, for young men and women after they have left the Sunday school and day school.

Thousands of boys and girls who learn to read and write at our Sunday and day schools, not only lose all taste for continuing their education as they grow older, but frequently forget almost all they previously learned. If strict enquiries were made, it would be found that a considerable proportion of men and women who get married and who cannot sign their names, were enabled to write with more or less facility when they were young; but who, from want of exercise and encouragement, have become (if I may call it) de-educated.

It has also been ascertained that a large proportion of our criminal population had the privilege of a Sunday school or day school education when they were young, but afterwards got corrupted by the evil circumstances and vicious associations of society.

What I want to see, is some kind of institution established in our villages and towns which shall attract young men and maidens, so that the good impressions they received when young may be deepened and strengthened.

I will not now attempt to describe the character of the institution desiderated, I only wish to call public attention to an obvious deficiency in our educational establishments with the hope that something may be done to supply the desired link, and that philanthropic enterprise and public morality may point to another pledge of security, and another agency of usefulness.

Yours most respectfully,
J. P. E.

HOSPITAL COOKERY.

(From The Times.)

Sir,—Three weeks have elapsed since the opening of my large kitchen in the Barrack Hospital, Scutari, where the new system of diet I have introduced is now in brisk operation, and the kitchen in excellent order.

Since that epoch I have also introduced the system at the General Hospital, at the Hyder Pasha's three small ones, and likewise the institutions at Kulalee, comprising some of the largest Hospitals in the Bosphorus, in all of which it is being actively adopted to the universal satisfaction of my numerous brave and worthy guests (the sick and wounded); and especially has the plan met with the approval of the medical gentlemen and the Sisters of Charity in the different establishments, who are taking the same lively interest in the improvement of the food as did Miss Nightingale at the Barrack Hospital. The whole of the kitchen department at the several hospitals have, through my suggestions, at a mere nominal expense undergone some important alterations both for comfort in cooking, cleanliness, expedition, and economy in the use of fuel; a matter of no small importance in this country, where the article is expensive, of an inferior quality, and always difficult to be procured. I cannot conclude without returning my sincere thanks to all the authorities at the different establishments for their kind assistance, without which I feel I never could have succeeded. To-morrow I shall start for Balaklava, hoping to be as successful at the seat of war, in cooking for the strong and healthy, as I have been for their enfeebled brethren and sufferers now lying within the walls of the various hospitals in the Bosphorus. As soon as all my recipes are in correct order, I shall do myself the pleasure of forwarding them to you, which if published in your mighty journal, will, no doubt, prove both agreeable and useful to the public, and especially in large institutions.

With the highest consideration I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,
A. SOYER.

Scutari Barrack Hospital, Constantinople, May 2.

PARISH UNIONS.

To the Editors of The Philanthropist.

Gentlemen,—If you carry out the proposed objects of your Philanthropist efficiently and honestly, you will confer a great boon on society, and all who have the welfare of our country and people at heart, will support you. What you desire to effect has long been in my idea, very much wanted; for, while every sect of religion, every class and shade of politics, every branch of commerce, of science, and of art, has its accredited organ and representative in some portion of the free press of England, I believe that the golden rule of neighbourly love, in the extended application of it contemplated in the Philanthropist, is the single exception—to our shame be it spoken. However, you have now stept in to wipe away the disgrace, and supply the omission, and I heartily wish you success. The field you purpose to beat is very extensive, and very important and full of fair game for philanthropic interference, and if your "Juno" and "Fan" are up to the mark, and their noses in good order, and your Harvey and Manton as they should be, you will be able to bag plenty of game—only don't shoot larks when game is to be had. I have read your prospectus—you will have enough to do—but allow me to say that in it I do not observe any allusion to work-houses, and I hope you do not intend them to escape your notice, but that you will examine their deficiencies, and listen to suggestions from practical parties for their reform. If I am rightly informed, gentlemen, as to your identity, penal and reformatory matters may fairly be expected to meet with a Benjamin's portion of your regard and attention—indeed, your title implies as much; but you will find that work-houses, and their management, exercise a considerable effect on that class of the community which constitutes the great bulk of prisoners, and are as much worthy of your scrutiny as prisons and reformatory schools, having in fact identically the same object in view, though carried out in different ways; the one, tending to diminish crime by assisting poverty; the other, by what may be termed punishing poverty; our work-houses are not what they ought to be:—there must needs be "Something rotten in the state of Denmark," when we so constantly hear the complaint, that the criminal of England is made more comfortable than the honest poor: that the convicted felon obtains more readily the comforts and nourishment necessary to sickness, than the hard-working mechanic or labourer, who endeavours to support his growing family by honesty and industry. If this is not so, let it be disproved in your pages; but if your experience teaches you that it is a fact, is it not a disgrace to our country, to philanthropists, to Christians, worthy of all your efforts and influence to remove. When the memorable Howard, earned the honourable title of Philanthropist, by searching into and bringing to light, the terrible condition of our Prisons, he could scarcely have contemplated that the result of his labours would act so beneficially on the rulers and management of our prisons, as that it should become a desirable object to many an outcast, to be committed to prison, as a means of shelter and livelihood, rather than avail himself of the provision made by the legislature for his wants. Is there no Howard who will now labour as energetically to unfold the mysteries of the Union, to search out the causes of the dislike and even abhorrence of "the House," which so evidently prevails among the poor—to apply the proper remedies, and after personal and impartial investigation, to suggest improvements, so as to enable Parliament to frame their laws more in accordance with the dictates of practical experience, than of theoretical expediency. I hope your influence will call forth the right man, and that your pages will countenance and encourage him, and render him every aid in an object so very desirable.

I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,
Hic et ubique.

May 25th, 1855.

[We thank our Correspondent: it is true that the subject of Work-houses was not entered in our "Prospectus," but it has already engaged our attention, and we shall be glad if our correspondent, or any other persons conversant with the internal system of parish unions will give us the benefit of their remarks and observations.—Editors.]

INSTITUTION FOR NEEDLEWOMEN.

An institution is about to be established at the west end of town which we feel will be attended with a vast amount of moral good amongst the young women for whom it is designed. The prospectus states that "it is proposed to provide rooms for the use of such young women engaged in shops, &c., as do not sleep in the houses of their employers and have no friends to whom to return at night."

"For a small weekly sum each young person will have, in addition to her bed, the use of a kitchen fire, sitting room and library; other means of instruction will it is hoped, also be provided.

Digitized by Google

It is intended that the payments of the inmates shall cover the cost of the rent, household expenses, &c. But it is calculated that from £300 to £400 will be required to furnish the house, and make the necessary preparations of ventilation, and other alterations for securing the health of the inmates. With this purpose it is proposed to raise donations of £5 or less from the neighbourhood of this locality for the benefit of which the Rooms provided will be established—viz., the Edgware Road, and the west end of Oxford Street, also subscriptions of 10s. per ann. to defray the expenses of the Lectures, evening classes, &c.

We are pleased to find that the project has been taken up by Lady Hobart and the Viscountess Goderich, who have consented to undertake the business arrangements and will act as the lady visitors.

The inmates of the establishment will be provided also with medical attendance if invalided, and we understand Dr. Edwards of Bryanston Square, has kindly consented to become the Honorary Physician.

Donations or subscriptions should be paid to Lord Hobart, or to his account at Messrs. Herries, Farquhar & Co., (Bankers) St. James' Street, Pall Mall.

The terms of admission to inmates at present proposed are the following:

	PER WEEK. s.	d.
A single Bed in a Dormitory, with use of Kitchen Fire, Sitting Room, Library, &c. . . .	2	0
Ditto (partitioned off to secure privacy), with ditto . . .	3	0
A double Bed for Two Persons in Dormitory, with ditto (each)	1	6
Ditto (partitioned off to secure privacy), with ditto . (each)	2	0

We heartily wish success to this admirable enterprise, and shall again recur to it when it comes into operation.

RECORDER HILL ON CRIMINAL REFORMATION.

A short time since an important meeting, having for its object the reformation of Criminals, was held at Warwick. Mr. High Sheriff Hoskins occupied the chair, who, after an able speech, introduced Mr. Recorder Hall of Birmingham. We consider Mr. Hall's speech of sufficient importance to merit a large portion of our space, and consequently give it almost verbatim.

Mr. Hall rose and said—

Mr. High Sheriff,—Though neither a Magistrate nor a freeholder of Warwickshire, I have been honoured with an invitation to this meeting, and with a request to take part in your proceedings. Sir,—I offer my hearty support to the motion before you. (Cheers.) Not only do I feel that the establishment of a Reformatory School for this county is greatly to be desired, but I must be permitted to say that it stands before my eyes as an imperative duty on the inhabitants. It is difficult, if not impossible, for me to produce in other minds the deep impressions which, in my own, have been the work of many long years, and of a large experience in the treatment of criminals. My best chance, however, of shewing in a clear light the practicability of reformation and the value of Reformatory Schools in effecting that object, will be to yield myself up to the train of thought which the town where we are assembled, the audience I address, and the object which has called us together, have set in motion, and to recapitulate very briefly the steps by which I arrived at these conclusions. Five-and-thirty years ago I joined the Bar of the Midland Circuit, and became a member of the Warwickshire Sessions. At that time, the whole judicial business of the county, including that which arises at Birmingham, was transacted at Warwick, with the exception only of such as belonged to Coventry and the small district forming the county of that city. Such being the case, I hardly need say that the docks of the two courts in the neighbouring hall were, every Sessions and every Assizes, filled, emptied, and replenished many times in the day, and for many successive days. It is needless, also, to tell you that a young barrister, whose friends were not numerous, and whose pretensions were humble enough, was not so encumbered with briefs but that he had sufficient leisure to observe what was hourly challenging his attention, and to reflect upon the consequences which flowed from the administration of criminal justice as the law then stood.

Then, Sir, as now, the great majority of offences were slight in character, and were not visited with heavy punishment, especially at our Sessions, over which a tone of great humanity always, or at least, during the fourteen years of my practice, uniformly prevailed, a fact which those who remember the three Chairmen before whom I practised will have no difficulty in believing. When I joined the Sessions bar, I found the Court under the presidency of the venerable Wriothesley Digby whose clemency was proverbial. He was soon followed by Sir Grey Skipwith. The urbanity of this gentleman made him a universal favourite, even among those who knew him but slightly, while a more intimate acquaintance disclosed the secret of his winning manners, which had their origin in genuine kindness of heart. (Cheers.) The third, whom, after fourteen years of attendance at the Warwickshire Sessions, I left, still presiding as Chairman was Sir Eardley Wilmot, a very early, zealous, and able supporter of the principles on which you are this day assembled to act—(loud applause);—principles which you, probably, know are inherited by his son, the present Baronet, my excellent friend and neighbour. (Cheers.) The feelings of the Chairman and his brother Magistrates were in unison, and all prisoners—yes, even poachers!—were dealt with in a merciful spirit. The Court, however, strove to make their sentences efficient as well as humane; and if they succeeded but ill in these praiseworthy attempts, the fault was not theirs—it was in the law which they were bound to administer.

Experience came in aid of the promptings of a kindly nature, to disincline them to inflict long imprisonments. They knew but too well that our prisons, as then conducted, were schools—not of reformation, but of crime; and that the longer the prisoner remained under the tuition which he there received from his companions, the more confirmed he was in a guilty career. The expedient to which they had resort was, to lash the culprit—not with rods, but with sharp words; to assume a severe aspect: as if a countenance, which beamed with goodnature the moment before and the moment afterwards, could have its permanent characteristic so obscured by a transitory frown as to impose upon the prisoner! Alas! Sir, he received all this objurgatory eloquence with impatience and inattention. He wanted to know his fate; and when the punishment was announced, it was often so much in contrast with the awful sounds in which it was conveyed, that the effect was almost ludicrous. The lesson was quickly forgotten, as was proved by the speedy reappearance of the prisoner in the dock, perhaps, even at the next Sessions. We, of the bar, recognised our old acquaintances, and if their names were such as to attract attention, as they sometimes did, from their oddity or uncouthness, we knew when we read over the calendar which we found on our arrival whom it was we should have the pleasure of meeting. Even at this distance of time I remember lads with whom I became acquainted by their frequent re-appearance in the court, but, as they may now fill respectable positions in one or other of our colonies, I will not run the risk of hurting their feelings by mentioning their names, some of which however, are too well fixed in my memory ever to be forgotten. (Cheers.)

Sir,—the frequent repetition of scenes like those which I have described, could not fail of driving me to reflect upon the great and humiliating contrast between the means employed and the end attained. Let us for the reasons given by Sterne, take a single case—many such daily passed under my observation. An urchin, with or without a little schooling, but certainly, without religious and moral training, is wandering about the streets of Birmingham. Some article attracts his eye, which a shopkeeper has placed outside his door to draw the attention of customers. He carries it off, escapes detection, and repeats his offence until he is caught at last. Perhaps he knows that he has been doing wrong, perhaps on the contrary, the applause of bad companions and wicked parents who share his plunder, impress him with the belief that he is doing right,—worthily filling his appointed place in society. Again, in the benighted state of his moral perceptions, it may be that he is uncertain as to whether he is doing right or wrong. Goods were in the street, he took them up, and who had taught him to know where finding ends, and stealing begins? What instruction did he ever receive as to the limits which divide trover from larceny? Or, Sir, what is more to the purpose, who had cultivated in his soul those fine and noble instincts, which, without giving him time to reason upon what he was about, would have checked him by the unhesitating conviction that he was doing wrong. He then finds himself after a time of impunity, not unfrequently a long period, grasped by the strong hand of a policeman, conveyed to the station, brought before the presiding constable, thence dispatched to the lock-up-house and in due time he is ushered into the awful presence of the Magistrate. Here, witnesses are examined, their evidence taken down in writing—he is called upon for his defence, which his attorney, if he has one, advises him to reserve for his trial, and he is brought away to Warwick, enjoying perhaps, for the first time the luxury of travelling in a carriage; he is taken to the county gaol, and there introduced to a society, who receive him not as one deserving censure or reproach, but with the feeling of "Hail, fellow, well met!"

Sir, it is quite clear that the resources of private benevolence would be inadequate to the maintenance of the juvenile offenders with whom our gaols are crowded. Nor would it be right to tax the generous with a burden which ought to be borne by the whole community. If these young creatures must be maintained at the public expense, either in our gaols or by their plunder when at large; if they are indeed the children of the State, as they surely are, the cost of their sustenance and training ought to be borne by the State and not by individuals. The Legislature has sanctioned the principle, and it is already carried to some extent by the Government into practical effect. I look forward with confidence to the time when that effect shall cease to be partial and become complete, till when we must not be disheartened however practice may lag behind acknowledged principle; meantime one advantage of no mean importance results from subscribers bearing a portion of the cost. It lets in the operation of the voluntary principle under wholesome checks. Contributors who prove the sincerity of their zeal by giving their money, may be well entrusted with the management of these Institutions, subject of course to Government inspection, which I consider no burden or drawback, but a great benefit.

Digitized by Google

Then, Sir, with regard to the tone which should pervade the discipline of these schools; let it be that of a wise, firm and Christian father. No false indulgence, no present ease or pleasure for the lad at the cost of his future welfare. Let his nerves of body and mind be well braced. Let him be armed within and without for the battle of life. But let all be done in a parental spirit. Let no pain be inflicted but that which is essential to produce the change from evil to good—that mighty and arduous revolution. Such a discipline faithfully wrought out must be followed, in its early stages, at least, by many a severe struggle of the poor outcast with his former habits and desires, and the pain of mind and body that he will have to suffer from restraint and labour, both new to him, will be amply sufficient to prevent the probation of the Reformatory School acting as an incentive to crime because it betters the condition of the criminal; a danger to which some for whose opinions on many subjects I have the highest respect, have feared it liable. Sir, it has been hastily assumed that a benefit must operate as a temptation. But this is not so. The highest conceivable good, immortal happiness, is contemplated by the depraved without more than a vain and idle wish to attain it, while on the other hand the most alluring temptations do not draw us towards real benefits, but decoy us into evils which by and by bring us to sorrow.

The youth who is hovering on the verge of crime is not tempted to plunge into the abyss in the hope of its leading him to the toil, the restraints, and the privations of a Reformatory School. Does he desire to go to a place from which all vicious indulgences are banished, where indolence must become industry, where there can be no debauchery, and where his coarse luxuries must be exchanged for a dietary which, though wholesome, never pampers his appetite; where the vagrant, accustomed to roam wherever his will may prompt, discovers that he is fixed to one spot, and where his days must, to his thinking, be a perpetual round of slavish observances? (Cheers.) But then it is said that all this, though no temptation to him, must be one to his parents. We admit the danger, and we have guarded against it. At our instance the Legislature has adopted the principle of casting the pecuniary burden or a portion of it on the parent. The provisions by which this responsibility is to be enforced are, it is true, very imperfect. Mr. Adderley however has undertaken to bring in a Bill to remedy this defect, and it is impossible that the duty should have been confided to better hands. At the same time I trust this meeting will clearly understand that it is a moral effect which we seek when we fix responsibility upon the parent, and that we are by no means sanguine as to the financial results of this responsibility. Many of the outcasts are orphans. Many the children of persons who from vice or misfortune are themselves destitute. But, in these cases, as the poor child subsisted upon what he could pick up in the streets, or obtain from charity—he was in truth no burthen upon his parents, if he had any, and, consequently, there was no strong motive inciting the parent to place him in a Reformatory School. Again, objectors forget that, before the passing of this Act, if a parent were so abandoned as to plunge his child into crime, so soon as the lad found his way to prison the parent was eased altogether of his maintenance. Now, however, if he have anything wherewith to pay he will be called upon to contribute, and if he have nothing, why, then, you know, it has passed into a proverb, that in such cases even the King must lose his own.

I shall advert to only one principle more, and that is what I would call the Family principle. The abstract which I have laid before you will enable you to form your own judgment of its power even when contending with many difficulties. Its value is highly appreciated in those Reformatories which have been most successful. Mettray, in France, is a collection of small communities, in which the essentials of a family are as far as possible combined. So at the Rauhe Haus, near Hamburgh; so at Red Hill, the Farm School of the Philanthropic Society. By these subdivisions the dangers attendant on the aggregation of large numbers is guarded against, while the advantage of high and skilful superintendence is preserved; Mettray, the most splendid example of reformatory success which the world has yet seen, contains from five to six hundred young offenders; and surely it must be obvious that a Demetz, a Wichern, a Sidney Turner, or last, not least, a Mary Carpenter—these gifted philanthropists—are not found in sufficient numbers to justify us in confining their tutelage to a few. I would speak as I feel with respect and admiration, of the smaller establishments which able and benevolent men, like Mr. Baker, of Hardwicke, have set on foot on their own responsibility. It is for them to regulate the extent of their own labours. I rejoice in every new Institution of a similar kind, but where numbers are to be provided for out of subscriptions which experience tells me are not easy to keep up, I would venture to suggest that the economy which results from uniting them in one establishment, if you provide for the subdivision to which I have adverted, is of itself a strong motive not to depart from the precedents which I have cited—Mettray, the Rauhe Haus, and Redhill; the more especially when such a departure enhances the difficulty already most perplexing, of finding superintendents who have the gifts essential to the performance of their arduous duties.

The Youthful Offender's Act, no doubt, is capable of great improvement, but with all its defects it stands (and, please God, shall ever stand) a noble sea-mark to direct the difficult and intricate course of criminal jurisprudence. For myself, sir, my reward is ample indeed—I have lived to witness this glorious triumph—I am invited to stand this day among the chief men of my native county, themselves ardent and powerful friends of Reformatory enterprise. They call upon me to plead the cause of the young outcast before a tribunal which will cordially recognize his claims. His countenance may be darkened by ignorance—ignorance both of the head and the heart—it may be disfigured by evil passions and unbridled appetites, but you feel and you will not shrink from avowing, that he is still your brother. You are his keeper, and you will not repudiate your charge, but like good and faithful servants, execute your sacred trust.—(Loud and long-continued cheering.)

After a time comes the trial, and what is the result? It is his first offence, that is to say, his first detected offence. That circumstance and his youth enable the Court to indulge their sympathies, and he receives a light sentence, a month or two, or a week or two, no matter which. He is then turned out on the world. If by accident he brought any remnant of religious or moral impressions into gaol, be sure none went forth with him. If he came regretting the loss of his position in the society of the honest and well-disposed, depend upon it the new community of which he has become a member, has reconciled him to his loss. Yet, thus morally frail to the last extremity of weakness, he is turned adrift and called upon to make the choice of Hercules. Honest industry stands on his right, but, alas! she is perched on an inaccessible rock; and, moreover, he feels that she must be a very dull companion, even if he could climb up to her, while the evil genius who personifies a short life and a merry one, beckons him from the bottom of an easy slope, a tankard in his hand and a pipe in his mouth. (Hear, hear.) And this is the object attained by the complicated and expensive machinery of the law. Here is the result of the labours of policemen, attornies, counsel, justices, recorders, judges, and juries, grand and petit—grand and petit indeed—vast in the means, miserable in the end! How we are reminded of the verses of Young—

"An ocean into mountains rais'd
To waft a feather or to drown a fly!"

Nay, it is worse, for the fly is not drowned. He is soon cast upon the shore, dries his wings, buzzes away as troublesome as ever, and what is worse, finds out that he has a sting. His offences become the less tolerable as he grows older, and after many trials and many convictions, a penal colony or the gallows are his destination.

Sir, I am not here to dispute that five-and-thirty years have made many changes in this picture—changes at which no man rejoices more than myself. But as regards even the youngest criminals, until the last Session of Parliament the legal principle of retributive punishment was alone recognised, and hence all your improvements only mitigated, in some slight degree, the evil which I have depicted; it was by no means rooted out. To return, however, to the Magistrates of the Warwickshire Sessions, in whose Court I practised. Their kindness and good sense, let me hasten to say, led them to discard this illusory treatment in the few instances in which opportunity was favourable. Sometimes they ventured when the prosecutor came before them and humanely consented to receive back his dishonest young servant or apprentice, to consign the youth immediately to his care. On these occasions I have narrowly watched the countenances of the prisoner and his friends, including the prosecutor, his best friend, to enable me to form a conjecture as to whether the experiment was likely to be successful, and the conclusions which I drew from the imperfect evidence at my command were favourable to the plan. But it was tried under many disadvantages. It frequently happened that the evidence of the prosecutor not being required, he remained at home. Again, the Magistrates had no means of forming an estimate of the prosecutor's respectability but from his appearance, and if that were against him they felt, and rightly felt, bound not to entrust the prisoner to his care. But the most serious defect of the plan was that they had no sure means of learning the results of their clemency, except that in case of failure, it sometimes happened that the prisoner came again before them, but not always, as he might have chosen a field for the exercise of his calling in a district out of their jurisdiction.

Being, however, much impressed with the value, or, what with all its drawbacks I considered to be the value, of this mode of disposing of juvenile prisoners, I determined, when I was appointed Recorder of Birmingham, to try the experiment myself, under circumstances more favourable than those under which the county Magistrates acted, because at Birmingham the master or the parent was at hand, even if not in Court; because enquiry could readily be made as to their character, and, above all, because by keeping a register, the failure and success of the plan in each instance could be recorded. Aided by the Chief Superintendent of Police, I have had enquiries made, from time to time, as to the conduct of the prisoner, and the result of these enquiries being reduced to writing, I am possessed of all the means necessary for accurately testing the value of such a measure.

Digitized by Google

I hold in my hand an abstract of my register, which dates from the beginning of 1842. The abstract was made after the April Sessions of last year, 1854, and, consequently, extends over the space of twelve years and a quarter. The total number of prisoners during that period consigned to their friends is 417. Of these only 80 are known to have been re-convicted. Of the remainder, 94 bore a respectable character, many of them retaining this character after long years of probation. Of 143, the best we can say is that they were not known to have been in custody since they were so given up to their friends, 68 could not be found. 15 were given up to friends residing at a distance from Birmingham, and, therefore, the periodical enquiries which have been made as to the others do not apply to them. But as they were taken away from the evil associations of a large town, I consider them placed under very advantageous circumstances for redeeming their characters. Seventeen were dead, thus making up the total number of 417 of which I have been speaking. (cheers.) These results, I submit, would, of themselves, prove the fact, which, to be sure, has been abundantly proved by a varied experience, both at home and abroad, that the reformation of youthful offenders is far from being so difficult and hopeless as was formerly the prevalent belief, —a belief still entertained by many, although, as popular opinion is now strongly with us, they are loth to exhibit themselves in the ungracious and invidious light of opposing us. Sir, when considering the hope of Reformation which the plan I have adopted holds out, we must never forget that it is in truth but a rude expedient labouring under one enormous defect. The young person is sent back into the same position exactly as that which he occupied when he fell. He is open to the same temptations,—it is difficult to keep him aloof from the same companions, and thus while he is too often exposed to the scorn and reproach of those whose ill opinion he most dreads, he has the far greater misfortune of being open to the seductions of those whom his former errors have armed with a pernicious influence over his actions. It, however, has one redeeming feature, which is worthy of the most attentive consideration—the young offender is received into the bosom of a family! and the head of that family is moved to this act of Christian benevolence by feelings which give no slight guarantee that he will faithfully execute his trust.

REFORMATORY SCHOOLS IN YORKSHIRE. The movement in favour of Reformatory Schools has extended to Yorkshire. The Magistrates of the West Riding have for some time past had the subject under consideration, and at the last Quarter Sessions, held at Pontefract, they unanimously passed a resolution that it was desirable to establish, as early as possible, a reformatory school for the West Riding, and that the Secretary of State be memorialised, in the name of the bench, relative to the insufficiency of the voluntary principle to supply the requisite funds, and to the absence of any power on the part of the justices to commit juvenile offenders to reformatory institutions until they have suffered some term of imprisonment, which renders their reclamation more difficult. In the North and East Ridings of the county an association has just been organised for the reform of juvenile offenders, under the presidency of his Excellency the Earl of Carlisle, the Lord Lieutenant of the East Riding, and the patronage of many of the most influential noblemen and gentlemen of that part of the county. Nearly 1000*l.* has been already subscribed.

Prison Discipline.

REPORT OF THE INSPECTORS OF PRISONS.—Part III. of the 19th Report of the Inspectors of Prisons includes detailed accounts of the various gaols and houses of correction in the counties of the southern and western districts of England, including Cornwall, Gloucester, Hereford, Leicester, Monmouth, Northampton, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Worcester, and Warwick. In glancing over the pages of this voluminous report a few points strike the reader as especially worthy of notice. One is the necessity of keeping prisoners separate from each other, not only to prevent moral contamination, but also to guard against plots for breaking prison. Another point is the necessity of establishing reformatory schools for the reception of children guilty of infractions of the law. Another is the proved inefficacy of extreme severity in prison punishment in inducing orderly obedience among the prisoners. It is suggested that it is very undesirable to sentence confederates to periods of imprisonment of the same duration, as they are liberated together, meet outside the gates, and very often recommence a career of crime. The deplorable ignorance of criminals in the Northamptonshire district is a painful feature of the Report. Out of 475 criminals committed in the year, of whom 240 had been to a Day and 298 to a Sunday school, 168 were ignorant of the name of the Saviour, 248 of the name of the Queen, and 190 were unable to name the months of the year. The remarks of the chaplain incline to the belief that the common schools throughout the country are not much to be depended on. The frequent occurrence of commitments under the Merchant Seaman's Act in the seaport towns of the district is a very remarkable fact. The seamen are generally committed for refusing to go to sea after signing articles, their reasons being the unseaworthiness of the ships, or the insufficient complement of able seamen among the crew. The inspector seems to consider that the men have right on their side, for their characters are good, and they generally leave behind them property far exceeding in value the advance of wages made to them. These facts may throw some light on the numerous mischances that have lately occurred to merchant vessels, and are worthy of the attention of Government.

EXTRAORDINARY STATE OF THE DEBTOR'S PRISONS IN DUBLIN.—The Lord Mayor has addressed a letter to the Lord Lieutenant soliciting the attention of his excellency to the state of the Four Courts Marshalsea, which would appear to require a radical reform. The Lord Mayor for the time being has the disbursement of certain charitable bequests. He has funds to supply a Christmas and Good Friday dinner to the paupers. His lordship proceeds to say:—

"In the present year, the Lord Mayor, not wishing to administer funds entrusted to him without investigating the wants and merits of the parties who were to be relieved, visited the Marshalsea, and personally examined into the case of each debtor. The state of things he there became cognisant of is so disgraceful that he at once determined upon bringing the matter under the notice of the government. The Four Courts Marshalsea, as it appears, is maintained at the expense of the nation, being charged upon the Consolidated Fund. A list containing some 30 names was furnished to his lordship, for the purpose of being relieved out of the charity funds; but, to his astonishment, he found that many of them had been in prison for years, that some of them occupied high station in society, one being a general in some foreign service, another a lieutenant-colonel in her Majesty's service, and a third a captain in the same. There are several country gentlemen amongst the inmates, some supposed to have concealed property, and a few known to possess landed property. They have been sent to the Marshalsea for various small debts, and there, despite the merciful provisions of the Insolvent Act, they are content to remain, living at the expense of the country, comfortably housed and fed, and attended by medical men of eminence. This appears such a crying case for reform that the Lord Mayor is induced to suggest to her Majesty's government to introduce a clause into the Prisons' Bill (about to be proposed to the House of Commons) making it penal for any debtor to remain in a debtor's prison longer than two months without filing his schedule as an insolvent."

The Under-Secretary in acknowledging this communication, adds—"That the suggestions of the Lord Mayor shall not fail to receive attention."

PRISON DISCIPLINE, HULL.—The Governor of the Hull Gaol, in his quarterly report, says:—"The calendar and prison books furnish, I am happy to say, a more favourable account of the male prisoners, whose great decrease, particularly of those sentenced to hard labour, caused the stoppage of the tread-wheel a third of the working hours from June to the end of December last year, and again from the 14th of February to the 5th ultimo, from which day it has been altogether stopped—the male prisoners being 31 less than last session, and 42 under the average number. The following statement is an extract from the annual labour account to 31st January, audited by the gaol committee on the 19th ultimo:—

	Proceeds.			Earnings.
10 tons of rugs, mats, and matting made	£507	9	1	£205	9	3
153 tons of whiting made	157	7	6	134	0	3
25 tons of oakum and hair teased	100	2	5	100	2	5
Shoes and Clogs Account	61	15	3	27	10	5
Sundry Accounts	12	14	11½	12	11	11½
Total	£839	6	2½	479	14	3½

On comparing this account with that of the preceding year, it shows that the earnings have not been diminished by the reduction of prisoners. Those employed teasing oakum, &c., have earned 2½d. per diem, females included. Those on the treadwheel, 3½d.; and the mat-makers, 8¾d. per diem. The latter average, on 5,625 days' labour—18 men daily, whose earnings exceed the whole of their expenses to the borough, and this being in every respect the most preferable employment, I have increased it nearly 500 per cent. on finding that I had only to compete with the management and labour of other prisons."

PICKPOCKETS.—Serjeant Adams, Assistant Judge of the Middlesex Sessions, has announced from the bench that in future pickpockets convicted before him will be sentenced to nine instead of six months' imprisonment, until the crime decreases.

Digitized by Google

Parliamentary Intelligence.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—MAY 18TH.

EDUCATION OF PAUPER CHILDREN BILL passed through Committee, and

Mr. BAINES gave notice that he should move to add a clause to extend the benefit of the bill to other classes of children than those at present contemplated by the measure.

MONDAY, THE 21ST.

ROMAN CATHOLIC PRISONERS.

Mr. SWIFT asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it was true that Roman Catholic prisoners in the House of Correction, Wandsworth, who declined to attend the Church of England service, were confined to their respective cells in solitude during the entire of the Sunday; whether prisoners registered as Roman Catholics were systematically visited by the Protestant chaplain of the Institution, furnished exclusively with Protestant books of devotion and controversy, and no Catholic clergyman admitted to them unless when the prisoner made a special application to see one; and whether during the last year the number of Catholic prisoners had been sometimes upwards of 80, of whom only a dozen received any sort of religious instruction from clergymen of their creed?

Sir G. GREY said that in the Wandsworth House of Correction the system of separate confinement was strictly carried out, and under that system all the prisoners remained in their cells, except during exercise, school hours, or attendance on Divine worship. If any prisoners declined to attend Divine worship, they were not removed from their cells. With respect to the second part of the question, he had to state that the protestant chaplain had, in conformity with his instructions, to visit all prisoners who did not claim the privilege, in consequence of dissenting from the Established Church, of being attended by a clergyman of their own persuasion. With regard to Roman Catholic prisoners, their cells were not furnished with books of religious controversy, but a Bible and other books were supplied to them. Such were the ordinary rules; and every prisoner, if not a member of the Church of England, might claim the right to be visited by his own clergyman. All the Roman Catholic prisoners had had notice to that effect read them at the request of Dr. Grant, the Roman Catholic bishop. He would take the present opportunity of answering a question of a similar character which the hon. member had put on the paper of a former evening, and which appeared to imply some censure on the authorities of Newgate prison. The question had reference to the criminal who had recently suffered the last sentence of the law. Having investigated the facts of the case, he found that the authorities of Newgate prison were absolved from all degree of censure, having only acted in strict accordance with their duty.

Mr. SWIFT would call the attention of the house to the entire subject at a future period.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—MAY 21ST.

EDUCATION OF PAUPER CHILDREN BILL.

Mr. E. DENISON, in moving that this bill be recommitted, said that the object of the bill was to provide education for the destitute children of paupers who were in the receipt of relief out of the workhouse.

Sir S. NORTHCOTE begged to ask the President of the Poor Law Board if there would be any objection to the insertion in the bill of a clause to enable the guardians of the poor to provide for the education of pauper children in reformatory or industrial schools? He wanted to know whether any provision would be made for providing instruction in these schools for children who, though not actually criminal, were in circumstances which rendered it probable they would become so, if they were not previously properly taken care of.

Mr. BAINES said that the reformatory schools were in almost all cases schools in which criminals were instructed, and there would be great and substantial objection to making them places of education for that portion of the population which was untainted by crime. (Hear, hear.) He should regret to see any idea of that kind sanctioned by the Legislature. (Hear, hear.) The other object to which the hon. gentleman referred —namely, the education of the out-door poor in the workhouse schools—was already provided for under the first clause of the present bill. There was a number of workhouses in this country, with very good schools, and with a comparatively small number of children attending them, and the guardians were extremely anxious to avail themselves of that accommodation for the purpose of educating out-door pauper children, but hitherto had no power to do so. The present bill would make provision for cases of that kind.

Mr. HENLEY thought that nothing would be more cruel than, because a child was unfortunately a pauper, to cause it to associate in any way with criminals. He believed the bill would do a great deal of good, and that the boards of guardians would, to a great degree, avail themselves of its provisions.

Lord J. MANNERS suggested that, in accordance with the rule which had governed Poor Law legislation of late years, the word "pauper" should be struck out of the bill, and "poor person" be inserted instead.

Mr. BAINES said that the word only occurred in the title of the bill, and could of course be altered in committee.

The motion for the recommitment of the bill having been agreed to, the House resolved into committee upon it.

Clause 1 was agreed to, as were also the remaining clauses of the bill.

The following clause was brought up on the motion of Mr. BAINES :—"In the case of any child of such age as aforesaid, relieved out of the workhouse, which child has been deserted by its parents or surviving parent, or both of whose parents are dead, it shall be lawful for such guardians, in like manner, and with the like discretion as aforesaid, to grant relief for the purpose of providing education for such child in any such school as aforesaid."

In reply to a question from Sir S. NORTHCOTE,

Mr. BAINES said, the bill as it now stood provided that children who had not been guilty of crime might be sent to any industrial or reformatory school, with the consent of the parents of such children and the guardians of the poor—the guardians, of course, defraying the expense of their maintenance.

The clause was then agreed to, and the bill, with amendments, was reported.

PAUPERS IN SCOTLAND.—A return, moved for by Mr. E. Ellice, M.P., with reference to the expenditure on paupers in the various parishes of the Scottish counties of Argyll, Ross, Inverness, and Sutherland, was published a few days ago. It shows that in Argyll, the average weekly cost of relief per head varies, in the different parishes, from 10d. to 3s. 2d.; in Inverness, from 11¾d. to 2s. 0½.; in Ross, from 9½d. to 2s. 7½d.; and in Sutherland, from 10½d. to 1s. 10d. It appears, from notes appended to this return, that in many cases the paupers live with relatives, who supply them with clothing, without making any charge on the board, and that many have sheep, free houses, and not unfrequently a stack of peat; besides which they are often able to earn something by agriculture or by fishing. It is therefore to be noted, that, as the poor in the four counties above specified are almost invariably furnished with house accommodation, fuel, and patches of potato ground, by the proprietors or their tenants, the precise value of the relief cannot be ascertained.

Reviews.

Second Report of the United Kingdom Alliance.

The Liquor Traffic Immoral, by the Rev. Dr. A. Pewcy.

What the Alliance is and what it is not, by the Rev. Dawson Burns, &c. Address of the United Kingdom Alliance.

Our readers are very well aware that intemperance is the curse of Britain, and that various efforts, especially of late years, have been put in motion to destroy or diminish the evil. A short time since Great Britain and the United States presented to the world a practical paradox, namely; whilst they were the most intelligent, they were at the same time the most intemperate nations in the world. And it was a curious coincidence that the advancement of intelligence did not arrest drunkenness—the good and the evil increased side by side and respectively gathered power with the increase of years. Things had grown to a really alarming condition. Public virtue and the prosperity and the dignity of England were endangered by the gradually swelling tide of intemperance. The multiplication of books, the spread of the arts and sciences, the influence of the pulpit, were unable singly or in united action to impede the advances of the drinking system. At last the United States sounded the tocsin of alarm. Philanthropists banded themselves into temperance societies for the suppression of intemperance. England soon followed the example set by America, and temperance societies were formed throughout the United Kingdom. But it was soon demonstrated that declaiming against the evils of intemperance and preaching moderation were not sufficient to stem the current of our national vice; and soon total abstinence associations were established in the room of temperance societies. Teetotalism was no sooner proclaimed in England than America seized hold of it, advocated it with uncompromising vigour, and in a very few years the extreme doctrine became quite popular in the "far west." A "mighty blow and great discouragement" was given to the drinking usages, and intemperance sensibly diminished. And sobriety being the soil in which other virtues flourish, it was soon found that in proportion as the people got less intemperate, they grew more virtuous, industrious, and enterprising. A new impulse was communicated to American society, which vibrated from the Northern to the Southern States, and new hopes burst forth from the heart of the great republic.

Digitized by Google

Experience however soon tested that they had scotched the snake but not killed it; that though the learned, the wealthy, and the benevolent generally ceased to drink intoxicating liquors, a large proportion of the people still wallowed in the mire of drunkenness. They found, or they thought they found that it was impossible to annihilate the evil by suasion, while what they called the "liquor traffic" was left unassailed by the legislature. They therefore with true Yankey "go a headaliveness" commenced a crusade against the trading in intoxicating drinks. The agitation grew, and public opinion began to declare itself in favour of annihilating the drinking system by legislative action. The State of Maine was the first to declare itself in favour of the new measure, and experience soon showed that it was not only safe, but proper and useful. The moral feeling of the state endorsed and consecrated the act. The result was that they had less immorality, disease, and poverty, and more private and social worth. Meanwhile the new doctrine advanced rapidly. The influential States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, Michigan, and Connecticut, enforced prohibitory statutes similar to the Maine Law, and in all cases the results have proved beneficial and satisfactory. Crime and social disturbance rapidly diminished. Last and not least we find that the State of New York,—"the Empire State," has passed the Maine Law by a majority of two to one. The surges of agitated opinion are passing over other states. Pennsylvania, Indiana, Ohio, and Illinois, are on the verge of adopting the new doctrine and consolidating it in republican law. In Canada the House of Assembly by a majority of 97 to 5 have recognized the principle of total prohibition; and unmistakable evidences are presenting themselves that the principles of the Maine Law will soon be enforced from "golden California" to "rocky Labrador."

Here we behold not only a new fact in legislation, but a nation rising in almost simultaneous action to subvert an evil which had lived through centuries, entrenched itself behind habit, appetite, and prejudice. And we have men sufficiently hopeful and enterprising to commence an agitation for getting the Maine Law Principle carried into effect by the English Government. We certainly should not put any barrier in the way of "The United Kingdom Alliance." Space on this occasion will not permit us to go more minutely into the question and its respective relations to the United States and England, and, having rapidly sketched the progress of the Temperance Movement, we will content ourselves by adding the following statements of the Council of the United Kingdom Alliance, which we extract from an address recently issued by that body.

The greatest evils under which our nation suffers, including Crime, Pauperism, Ignorance, Insanity, and Diseases, are induced and fostered by the common use of Intoxicating drinks.

The manufacture, sale and consumption of Intoxicating Drinks involve an annual loss to the nation of not less than One Hundred Million Pounds Sterling.

The exciting and corrupting influence of intoxicating liquors at Municipal and Parliamentary Elections is a public evil, of fearful magnitude, which greatly counteracts the benefits of our representative system of government.

A considerable proportion of these evils is directly referable to the legalized "facilities and means of intemperance."

Intoxicating drinks, as articles of beverage, in no way contribute to the health, strength, or well-being of man.

Books, Pamphlets, &c.

RELATING TO PRACTICAL PHILANTHROPY, RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

English Education. By Angus Macpherson.

Speeches delivered at the first Public Meeting of the London Mutual Improvement Society.

The Public Pearl; or, Education the People's Rights and a Nation's Glory. By Celatus.

The Cholera in Berwick Street.

New Movement in Education—What is it? By Nuss Furlong.

Essays on the Characteristics of a Superior Popular Literature. By W. Bathgate. Ward and Co.

Training in Streets and Schools. By W. Knighton.

A History of the English Poor Law, in connexion with the Legislation, and other circumstances affecting the Condition of the People. By Sir George Nichols.

Anti-Slavery Recollections. By Sir George Stephen.

Waifs of Womanhood; a Plea for "Unfortunates." 2nd edition by G. Hume.

Unsoundness of Mind in reference to Criminal Acts. By T. C. Bucknill.

The Sorrows of the Streets. By M. A. S. Barker.

Suggestions for the Establishment of Friendly Societies. By Tidd Pratt.

Instructions in Book-keeping for Friendly Societies, issued from the Official Registrar's Department.

Town Dwellings, an Essay. By A. Ashpital and J. Wichcord.

The Traffic in Intoxicating Drinks. By Samuel Conling.

Observations on the Discipline and Management of Convicts, and on Tickets of Leave. By the Rev. Mr. Field.

A Practical View of the Sanatory Question; being the General Report of a Local Board of Health in St. Pancras.

Suggestions for the Improvement of Municipal Government in populous manufacturing Towns. By J. Robertson.

The Extent, Evils, and Needlessness of Sunday Trading in London, by a Layman.

The Sunday of the People of France by Abbe Multois.

The Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Elevation of Man, by Mr. Hopley.

First Annual Report of the Directors of the Association for Promoting Improvement in the Dwellings and Domestic Condition of Agricultural Labourers in Scotland.

LIST OF BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND REPORTS RECEIVED.

Twenty-seventh Annual Report of the Board of Management of the Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum for the Board, Clothing, and Education of the Children of Merchant Seamen, deceased.

Hotel and Tavern Keepers' Provident Institution for the relief of necessitous and aged members.—List of Members, Hon. Members and Donors, Rules and Regulations.

First Report of the Boy's Refuge, Commercial Street, Whitechapel.

Annual Report of the Surrey Society for the Employment and Reformation of Discharged Criminals, 1855.

Report of the Lock Hospital, Asylum, and Chapel, 1855.

The Life-boat; or, Journal of the National Life-boat Institution—Report of the Annual General Meeting, April 26th, 1855.

Nineteenth Annual Report of St. Mark's Hospital, 1855.

First Annual Report of the Home for Out-cast Boys, Belvedere Crescent, Lambeth, 1855.

The Sixteenth Annual Report of the Committee of the Hotel and Tavern Keepers' Provident Institution, 1855.

"Faith turned to sight." A Sermon occasioned by the sudden death of the Rev. James Ralph, M.A. formerly Chaplain of Pentonville Prison, by the Rev. J. H. Moran, B.A., Chaplain of the Brixton Female Convict Prison.

Address to the Ladies of Great Britain and Ireland from the United Kingdom Alliance, to procure the total and immediate legislative suppression of the Traffic in all Intoxicating liquors as beverages.

Second Report of the Executive Committee of the United Kingdom Alliance.

The Liquor Traffic Immoral, by the Rev. Dr. A. Perrey, Derby.

What the Alliance is, and what it is not, second edition, by the Rev. Dawson Burns, London.

A BISHOP IN PRISON.

OUR gaol, says the Leeds Intelligencer, was, on Tuesday last, the scene of an unusually interesting event. In conformity with a long expressed desire to come and preach in the prison chapel, the Bishop of Ripon, two or three weeks ago, intimated to the chaplain (the Rev. G. B. De Renzi) his intention to visit the prison for this purpose on the day above named. Accordingly the prisoners were assembled in the chapel at half-past two o'clock in the afternoon, when the usual evening service was read by the chaplain, the prisoners chanting the hymns after the first and second lessons, which they did in a highly creditable manner. At the conclusion of the hymn which followed the prayers, the bishop, who had in the meantime ascended the pulpit gave out as his text, Romans viii. verse 32: "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Our space forbids us attempting to give even an outline of his lordship's sermon. We must therefore content ourselves with merely remarking that it was singularly appropriate, and, delivered as it was with a most affectionate earnestness, well calculated to impress his hearers. The effect produced was apparent at the involuntary tears which trickled down many a cheek amongst the male as well as the female part of the congregation. The most striking features of the sermon were its remarkable simplicity, which rendered it intelligible even to the most uneducated, and its tender appeals, which were urged with a force and persuasiveness that could hardly fail to win their way to more hardened hearts. We only hope that the impression which was evidently produced at the time may not be merely transient, and we believe it will not. Every thing conspired to give effect to the interesting occasion. The presence of the magistrates, of whom we were glad to see not a few—the arrangements of the chapel, which were certainly in accordance with the apostolic precept, that "all things should be done decently and in order"—the solemn tone which pervaded the entire service, all tended to induce the feeling that the occasion was one of no ordinary interest and importance. It would be unjust to the prisoners were we to conclude this notice without expressing our unqualified approbation of their demeanour on the occasion. The heartiness with which they seemed to enter into the service, and the unbroken attention with which they listened to every word as it fell from the bishop, were particularly pleasing, and could not fail to strike strangers as very remarkable. For our part we cannot but feel convinced that the system of prison discipline which can produce such results as were apparent in the whole conduct and demeanour of the prisoners on this occasion, must of necessity exercise a most salutary influence on the after lives of a large number of those who are subject to it. We have already mentioned that a considerable number of the magistrates were present. Amongst them we observed Mr. Joseph Richardson (mayor), Mr. Henry Hall, Mr. J. H. Shaw, Mr. Thomas Benyon, Mr. John Cooper, Mr. D. W. Nell, Mr. John Wilkinson, Mr. Thomas Pawson, and the clerk to the magistrates, Mr. R. Barr, The Rev. Dr. Hook, vicar of Leeds, accompanied by Vice-Chancellor Sir Wm. Page Wood, who, we understand, is a guest, at the vicarage, was also present, and the Rev. Geo. Armfield, formerly chaplain of the gaol.

THE MOTHER OF THE LATE LIEUT. WAGHORN.—A letter to the Times states that the mother of this distinguished and enterprising officer (now in her 84th year) is in extreme poverty, the little competency she had having been advanced to her son, and lost in his great undertaking—the overland route to India; and that a subscription has been opened at the Jerusalem Coffee-house, Cornhill, for her relief.

Digitized by Google

BATHS AND WASHHOUSES.—The acts for the better providing of public baths and washhouses, having been adopted by the wealthy parish of St. George, Hanover-square, a very commodious building was erected for this purpose in Lower Belgrave-place, Pimlico, has been thrown open to the public. On the basement story is the plunge bath, 60 feet in length, around are compartments for 46 bathers. There are, then, on the upper story, 47 separate warm and cold baths—22 of the first, and 25 of the second class. Of the 22 first-class baths 16 are devoted to men, and six to women; of the 25 of the second class, 17 are appropriated to men, and eight to women. There are also waiting-rooms for both sexes attached to each class of baths. The charges are as follows:—1st class, cold bath, 3d.; warm bath, 6d. In the second class baths (the entrance to which is in Eccleston-street, East) the charges are—for a cold bath, 1d.; and for a warm bath, 2d.; two children, not above eight years of age, are allowed to go into the same bath-room, and are charged as one person. The charges in the washing and laundry department are, for every hour, 1½d; for any time exceeding one, but not exceeding two hours, 3d.; and for each half-hour in continuation of the second charge, 1d. The commissioners, with the view of promoting the general usefulness of the institution, and of extending its benefits to the very poor, have wisely determined to issue to the ratepayers and the public tickets for voluntary distribution, by which means it is hoped many poor families who would never enter the building until permitted to do so by a gratuitous admission, in the first instance, may be taught the advantages and luxury of cleanliness. For this purpose, for one guinea, 140 tickets will be issued, each entitling the bearer to a second-class warm bath; and, for a similar amount, 95 tickets will be issued, each ticket entitling the bearer to the use of the washhouses for two successive hours.

OPERATION OF THE FORBES MACKENZIE ACT IN SCOTLAND.

The Scottish Press gives some statistical details, from official sources, respecting the operation of the Forbes Mackenzie Act in Scotland. Our northern contemporary, holding the opinion that "no form of social intemperance (employing the word in its widest sense) can be rooted out, or even effectually checked by any remedy save through a change in the moral habits of the people," contends, nevertheless, that the result of its statistics is to show that, "if the measure of Mr. Forbes Mackenzie has by no means succeeded up to the early expectations and present belief of many, neither has it so utterly failed of good as others assert." The act of Mr. Mackenzie came into operation on Whitsunday, 1854, or nearly 11 months ago. It appears that the number of persons found drunk in the streets of Edinburgh, and taken to the police-office for protection, amounted in 1854 to 5.183, against 5,728 in 1853, 6,367 in 1852, 6,525 in 1851, and 6,698 in 1850. The number of persons found drunk and taken to the office both for protection and for offences amounted in 1854 to 8,746, against 9,731 in 1853, 9,767 in 1852, 9,491 in 1851, and 9,880 in 1850. Here, without taking the progress of population into account, we have about an average of 1,000 persons, or a ninth part fewer in 1854 than in almost any of the previous years. "There are two questions," adds the Scottish Press, "which arise here of great importance. On what day or days of the week does the change chiefly exhibit itself? and does it affect equally the whole period which has elapsed since the act was passed; or, in other words, is the law working better or worse as we get used to it? We answer, the amelioration is confined nearly to the Sundays, and, in other respects, we seem gradually to be getting back, if by different avenues, to a state little better, in some respects worse, than before the act existed." The statistical tables show that drunkenness on the Sundays, during the period in which the Mackenzie Act has been in force down to the present time, has diminished about one-half; the aggregate number of cases having amounted during the first three months of 1853, 1854, and 1855 respectively to 1,216, 1,221, and 682; while, according to the Lord Provost's returns, the number of cases from August to February of 1854-55 was only 115, against 528 in the corresponding period of 1851-52. Thus far, as regards Sunday tippling. The general effects of the act on drinking are far less satisfactory, the statistics showing that on the ordinary days of the week drinking has not diminished, but rather increased; and it appears that, if there be added to the aggregate of 1854 the numbers for which the falling off in Sunday drinking must have the whole credit, and allowance being made for the amelioration as in previous years, nothing has really been gained in sobriety on the ordinary days of the week. The practice of selling drink in unlicensed houses is on the increase, and it is remarkable that of 247 of such establishments reported for prosecution 104 were for offences committed on the Sunday. If on these days, therefore, there are fewer cases to deal with, they are of a worse type. The prison statistics, all things considered, give evidence of an ameliorating process already at work, for there is actually a greater disparity between the years 1853 and 1854, before the act was in force, than between years 1854 and 1855, when there was the act to accelerate the process going on.

LIBERALITY OF MISS COUTTS. — Miss Burdett Coutts offers three sets of prizes, which in value will amount to 50*l.*, for the teaching of common things. Miss Coutts proposes to schoolmistresses in schools connected with the church of England who have pupil teachers apprenticed to them, under government inspection, in the county of Middlesex, one prize of the value of 5*l.*; four prizes of the value of 4*l.* each; five prizes of the value of 3*l.* each. To the pupils in the Whitelands training institution who are in their second year, and who have passed a government examination at the end of their first year, ten prizes of the value of 1*l.* each. To female pupil-teachers in schools connected with the church of England who are apprenticed in the county of Middlesex, who have entered their third year, and not completed their fourth year of apprenticeship, eight prizes of the value of 10s. each. The examination of these prizes will be held on a Saturday in June or July, at the Whitelands training institution and the examination will consist of a paper of questions, to be answered in the morning, and an essay to be written in the afternoon. Before the prizes are adjudged to the schoolmistresses, Miss Coutts will endeavour, with the consent and assistance of the managers of the schools, to ascertain whether, in regard to the teaching of common things, the practical efficiency of the schoolmistresses whose papers are most approved corresponds with the amount of attainment exhibited by those papers. The Bishop of London and the committee of council on education sanction the scheme.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE AT CHELSEA.—The pupils in this establishment, originally founded by the Duke of York, assembled, to the number of about 200, in the Royal Panoptican of Science and Art on Monday, the 14th of May. They appeared singularly impressed with the objects exhibited in the large rotunda. Besides the descent of the diver in the crystal cistern, who carried on his manipulations by means of the electric light, there were two lectures delivered—the first on electricity as demonstrated with the large electric machine by Mr. Partington, and the second by Mr. Buckingham, on the war in the Crimea, the latter illustrated by a series of dioramic views, each containing more than a thousand square feet of surface. The lectures appeared to excite much interest in the crowded and fashionable audience, as well as in the boys of the military school.

EDUCATION OF PAUPER CHILDREN.—A bill to provide for the education of pauper children brought in by Mr. Evelyn Denison, Mr. Labouchere, and Mr. J. W. Patten enacts that the guardians of any union or parish wherein the relief to the poor is administered by a board of guardians, may if they deem proper, grant relief for the purpose of enabling any person lawfully relieved out of the workhouse to provide education for any child of such person between the ages of 4 and 16 in any school, to be approved by the said guardians, which shall be open to the inspection of one of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools for such time and under such conditions as the said guardians shall see fit. The Poor Law Board may issue orders at any time to regulate the proceedings of the guardians with reference to the relief to be given or the education received. It is also provided that such education shall not be imposed as a condition of relief. The guardians must not compel any child to attend a school to which its parents may object. The cost of the relief to be given for the education of any child is to be charged to the same account as the other relief granted by the guardians to the same poor person, and may be given by the guardians and recovered by them as a loan under the same circumstance and in like manner as such other relief.

STATISTICS OF PAUPERISM.—From returns which have just been issued, it appears that on the 1st of January, 1852, there were in England 607 unions and 835,360 paupers relieved; in 1853, 608 unions and 799,446 paupers; in 1854, 613 unions and 818,822 paupers; and on the 1st of January, 1855, 620 unions and 840,720 paupers relieved. The proportion of paupers relieved to the population, was, in January, 1852, 1 in 19; in January, 1853, and January, 1854, 1 in 20; and in January, 1855, 1 in 19. The number of adult ablebodied persons in receipt of relief in 620 unions on the 1st of January, 1855, was as follows:—married males, 1,052; married females, 1,286; other males, 5,331; other females, 14,756. These received indoor relief, while the number relieved outdoor were, males, 29,729; and females, 90,502; making a grand total of 142,656. Of this number 106,544 are females, or about 75 per cent. of the whole; the remainder, 36,112, being males, or 25 per cent. of the whole. Of the 106,544 ablebodied women, 49,375 are widows with children dependent on them for support, and 2,150 are wives of men in Her Majesty's service. That crime does not exist to a great extent among paupers is shown by the fact that out of the whole number of the females only 1,967 were receiving relief on account of their husbands being in gaol—a proportion of about 1 in 54, or less than 2 per cent. Of the ablebodied men about 70 per cent. were relieved on account of sickness.

WAREHOUSEMEN'S AND CLERKS' PATRIOTIC FUND.—A deputation from the committee who have had the raising of this fund, consisting of Mr. Edwin Sherriff and the honorary and assistant secretaries, on the 17th of May, waited upon the Lord Mayor at the Mansion-house, for the purpose of handing over a balance of 47*l.* 10s. 6d., which, added to what had previously been paid in, amounts to the important sum of 1,547*l.* 14s. 9d., collected by a committee, the principal part of the sum having been contributed by young men and women employed in the various establishments in the City.

Digitized by Google

EMIGRATION OF PAUPER CHILDREN TO NEW SOUTH WALES.—From copies of communications which have taken place between the President of the Poor Law Board and the Emigration Commissioners it appears that boys and girls above the age of 13 years may, with the consent of their parents, and under certain conditions, be appointed to employers in New South Wales. The conditions appear to have been laid down in an act passed by the Legislature of New South Wales in the year 1853, regulating the indenting of assisted immigrants and others in the united kingdom; which act was submitted to the Poor Law Board, who (in July, 1853) saw no objection to the enactments contained in sections 7 and 8 of the act referred to. By these clauses special provision is made for the emigration of boys and girls above 13 years of age, to be selected from eleemosynary establishments, and to the expenses of whose emigration 8*l*. per head (and no more) will be contributed by the Emigration Commissioners.

The whole cost is estimated at 20*l*. per head and in cases where boards of guardians or the masters and managers of charities will pay the difference—i. e. 12*l*., the commissioners are ready to entertain the applications.

DISCHARGED PRISONERS.—A writer in the Morning Chronicle, a short time since, in his suggestions how to terminate the War rapidly, economically, and with honour and glory, proposed that 100,000 men should be raised from among our criminal population to be styled, FORLORN HOPES, to be composed exclusively of discharged prisoners (of whom we have 500,000 now in the United Kingdom) who were not convicted of brutal offences. These men, if well officered, would be the most useful and effective in the service, as they would have everything to gain by good conduct and valour, and nothing to lose, without success, but a miserable and dishonoured existence.

Appointments and Promotions.

The Rev. J. R. Barber, D.D., Chaplain of the Parish, has been elected Chaplain of the General Lying-in-Hospital, York Road, Lambeth.

Dr. H. G. Wright to be Physician to the St. Pancras Royal Dispensary.

Rev. L. M. Humbert, late Curate of St. Olave's, Southwark, to the Mastership of St. Cross Hospital.

Rev. J. Dunne, to the Union of Dunshaughlin, Diocese of Meath.

The Rev. Mr. Mc. Nair, of Gourock, to be a Chaplain at Scutari.

Rev. W. Hunt, M.A., to be Master and Chaplain of Bancroft's Hospital, Mile-end, London.

Obituary.

Askew, Rev. M.A., aged 49, Master of the Grammar School, and Chaplain to the Union, Northhead, May 3rd.

May 15th, at Lower Brunswick Terrace, Barnsbury Road, Islington, Lieut. T. Agar, of the 4th Royal Veteran Battalion, and formerly Governor of the County Prison, Maidstone, aged 84.

MEETINGS FOR JUNE.

Friday, June 1.—United Association of Schoolmasters, Soirée at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, at Six.

Monday, June 4.—Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital, Moorfields. Special General Meeting of Governors at the Hospital, at Noon, to consider the Building of a Dispensary.

Wednesday, June 6.—Hospital for Women, Soho Square. Annual Meeting at the Hospital, at Three; Sir John Dean Paul, Bart., in the Chair.

Thursday, June 7.—Anniversary Meeting of the Charity Schools in St. Paul's Cathedral, at Twelve. Sermon by the Bishop of Llandaff.

Friday, June 8.—Mesmeric Infirmary, Weymouth Street, Portland Place. Annual Meeting at Willis's Rooms, at Two. The Earl of Dunraven in the Chair.

Monday, June 11.—Asylum for Female Orphans, Westminster Road. Special General Court at the Asylum for the Election of Ten Orphans. Poll closes at Three.

Thursday, June 14.—Goldsmiths' Benevolent Institution. Evening Concert in aid of the Funds, at the Hanover Square Rooms, at Eight.

Wednesday, June 20.—Royal Caledonian Asylum, Holloway, Anniversary Festival; the Duke of Hamilton and Brandon presiding.

Friday, June 22.—Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Anniversary Meeting at Willis's Rooms, at Three.

KENT MUTUAL FIRE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

QUEEN STREET-PLACE, NEW CANNON-STREET.

The Fifth Annual General Meeting of the Kent Mutual Life Assurance Society was held on the 8th inst., at the London Tavern, and was attended by a great number of its most influential members.

The chair was taken by Mr. J. T. King, the chairman of the board, and among the members present were C. B. Mander, Esq., of Wolverhampton; R. H. Haywood, Esq., and F. Bishop, Esq., of Hanley; Dr. Goddard, of Longton; the Rev. A. P. Hughes, of Gornal; R. Davison, Esq.; R. W. Cooke, Esq.; F. Dollman, Esq.; W. J. Carne, Esq.; P. Karslake, Esq.; T. Wilson, Esq.; J. C. Burnett, Esq.; N. Crouch, Esq., T. W. Pike, Esq.; R. Crossley, Esq.; W. Brownfield, Esq.; C. B. Kelham, Esq.; H. Bessemer, Esq.; R. Longsdon, Esq.; J. L. Evans, Esq.; T. Minshall, Esq.; W. Holdich, Esq.; J. C. Hailes, Esq.; B. L. Thompson, Esq.; J. McMullen, Esq.; J. Young, Esq.; S. Rickan, Esq.; W. Anderton, Esq.; G. Fagg, Esq.; J. Burton, Esq.; J. Gould, jun., Esq.; and W. Baker, Esq.

Mr. GEORGE CUMMING, the Manager, read the Directors' Report. It stated that since the last annual meeting, 509 NEW POLICIES had been issued, upon which £6,195 19s. 5d. had been received in premiums. The ASSETS of the society at present amounted to £31,398 8s. 1d., and, under the division of profits, realized on the 24th March, 1854, a cash bonus of one-fifth of the premiums paid was declared upon all policies on which two or more annual premiums had been paid. It further stated that the society's ANNUAL REVENUE now amounted to £18,130 10s. 1d.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the Report—the reading of which elicited the entire approbation of the meeting—congratulated it upon its eminently practical character, as regarded the large amount of success which it had been the good fortune of the Directors to attain during the past year. It would be unnecessary for him to allude to the circumstances of active competition which now existed among the representatives of the several companies; and, having regard to that, he was sure it would be most gratifying to them to find that the assertion made in casual conversation by various managers and secretaries, that the wonderful amount of business transacted by the Kent Mutual Society in its past years was the result of gigantic efforts on the part of the board, and would not be continued in ensuing years, had been disproved. It was most true, that great efforts had been made, but the board never overlooked the importance of getting active and influential agents throughout the country, and the result of the judicious measures which they had taken in that view was seen in the highly satisfactory Report now before them [hear, hear]. He was sure that it was only necessary that the principles of the office should be known, and its advantages fairly laid before the public, to command perfect success; and he begged to move that the Report be now approved and adopted.

The motion having been seconded by Mr. WILSON, of Newport, Monmouthshire, was put and agreed to unanimously.

The directors and auditors retiring by rotation having been re-elected,

The CHAIRMAN then proposed that the thanks of the meeting be voted to the local boards of North and South Staffordshire, including in the resolution the names of Mr. Mander, of Wolverhampton, and Dr. Goddard, of the North Staffordshire board.

The motion was cordially agreed to, and both gentlemen severally returned thanks, declaring their confidence in the soundness of the principles upon which the society was founded, and that with the active exertions which they would not fail to make, it would be sure to make still greater progress in the country.

Mr. BISHOP, as connected with the North Staffordshire Board, moved a Resolution expressive of their entire confidence in the management, and their satisfaction at the prosperity which had hitherto attended their operations, and added that he thought their local society would soon be in a position to double its transactions with them [hear, hear].

Mr. MANDER moved a vote of thanks to the supporters and agents, which was agreed to, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Pike, and Mr. Gosbell returning thanks.

Votes of thanks were then passed to the Medical Referees, the Actuary, and the manager.

Mr. HILMAN, the actuary, in returning thanks, said that he should have been justified in estimating their business at a much higher rate of interest than three per cent., but he preferred being moderate and could assure the meeting that the balance-sheet was a true statement of their affairs.

Mr. CUMMING also returned thanks, and, in doing so, went into a few figures, exhibiting a highly satisfactory state of the affairs of the society as compared with some of the oldest offices in their earlier years.

A vote of thanks having been unanimously passed to the Chairman for his able and courteous conduct in the chair, the meeting terminated.

The anniversary festival was celebrated in the evening by a splendid dinner at the London Tavern, at which Mr. King again presided, supported by a large number of the directors, members, and supporters of the society, among whom we noticed Sir James Duke, Bt., M.P.; Mr. Lee, M.P.; Sir H. Muggeridge, Sheriff; Mr. Alderman Kennedy; Mr. Deputy Dakin; Sir. C. P. Roney; Rev. H. Mackenzie, M.A.; Rev. Mr. Cattley; C. B. Mander, Esq.; James Grant, Esq.; Dr. Goddard; F. Stainer, Esq.; A. Palk, Esq., &c., &c.

The usual loyal toasts having been duly responded to.

THE CHAIRMAN gave the "House of Commons."

Sir JAMES DUKE, M.P., returned thanks—observing that he had not undertaken the responsibility of Trustee of the Kent Mutual Assurance Society, without first ascertaining that he would be justified in so doing, and that he felt the highest confidence in the management.

Mr. LEE, M.P. also returned thanks, and referred in high terms to the distinguished position which the Kent Mutual Assurance Society had obtained for itself among the assurance societies of the metropolis.

The CHAIRMAN gave "the Lord Mayor and Corporation of London," associating with it the names of the Sheriff, Sir H. Muggeridge, and Mr. Alderman Kennedy.

The CHAIRMAN then gave the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Kent Mutual Assurance Society." He was satisfied that there was no occasion for his saying anything to enlist the sympathy of the company on behalf of the interests of the society which they had met to promote [hear, hear]. The question had been frequently put—"How was it that the Kent Mutual Assurance Society had outstripped many other societies of older date?" The answer was to be found in those principles of universal mutuality, which appealed at once to the intelligence of our countrymen, and their desire to have a voice in the direction of their own affairs [hear, hear]. He felt quite sure that the great things they had already accomplished would be still farther exceeded by a continued application of the same principles, and doubted not that the £20,000 per annum of income, which they had realized in five years, might soon be immensely augmented [cheers].

Mr. Alderman KENNEDY proposed the health of the Chairman, which was warmly responded to by the company.

The healths of the trustees, local boards, and manager, having been afterwards drunk and responded to, the party separated, after passing an evening most unanimously in the promotion of the interests of the society.

Digitized by Google

NERVO-ARTERIAL Essence

Discovered and Prepared by Dr. WILLIAM BATCHELOUR, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, 1835, and Member and Licentiate of the Apothecaries' Company, 1834, 12, Finsbury-place South, Finsbury-square, London, for Diseases arising from the Derangement of the Nervo-Arterial System.

The effect of the Nervo-Arterial Essence is to replenish the sources of nervous power, and to promote a normal circulation of the blood by acting upon the muscular coats of the arteries. It does not stimulate, in the popular sense of the word, because there is no reaction. A long course of experience has convinced Dr. Batchelour that most diseases will succumb, if the disturbed equilibrium of the nervous and sanguineous circulations can be re-adjusted.

TESTIMONIAL.

Triangle, Hackney, Dec. 13, 1854.

My Dear Doctor,—When you first attended me I was suffering from general exhaustion to such an extent that, after my Sunday labours in the pulpit, I continued almost prostrated for several days; you said that my symptoms evidenced a deranged and inadequate action of the nervo-arterial system, but that I should and could be cured by your Nervo-Arterial Essence, which attacked the seat of disease by replenishing the sources of nervous power. I am thankful now, that I think it a duty publicly to record that your words have been fully substantiated. By means of the Essence I have, as many of my congregation must have observed, become a renovated man.—I remain, dear Sir, your sincere friend,

WILLIAM WOODHOUSE.

Minister of the Adelphi Chapel, Hackney-road.

Dr. Wm. Batchelour.

The NERVO-ARTERIAL ESSENCE is sold at 1½, West-street, Finsbury-circus, London; and may be had of all Chemists and Druggists, in stamped bottles 4s. 6d. and 11s. each. Each stamp has the name of Dr. WILLIAM BATCHELOUR, M.R.C.S.E., and M.L.A.C., impressed thereon.

Dr. Batchelour may be consulted in the City, as above, and after four by appointment, at 15, Albion-street, Hyde-park-square.

PROFITABLE AGENCY.

AGENTS wanted for the Sale of BAKER AND COMPANY'S long celebrated PACKET TEAS and COFFEES.

For Terms &c., apply to BAKER & Co., 4, Little Tower-street, London.

WORKS PUBLISHED BY PARTRIDGE, OAKEY, AND CO.

LIVES of the Illustrious.

Volume VII. CONTENTS:— Gibbon — Cardinal Richelieu—John Wesley—Louis Philippe—L. and M. Davidson—Mohammed—H. Bell—Warren Hastings—Pope—Cowper—Lamennais—Duke of Marlborough—Miss Mitford—Ignatius Loyola—A. M. Ampère—W. Williams—Mozart—W. Penn—Bernard Palissy—E. A. Poe—Mrs. Sherwood—H. Grattan—Dante — Marshall Lannes—W. Etty—A. Vinet—R. L. Shell—With an Obituary. 8vo. cloth lettered, 4s.; by post, 4s. 6d.

NEW WORK BY THE REV. C. MOLYNEUX.

BROKEN BREAD. By the Rev. C. MOLYNEUX, Author of "Israel's Future," &c. crown 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d.; by post, 5s. [In the Press.

THE Last of the Czars: a Romance founded on Russian History and Traditions. By W. R. BRAME. Fcap. 8vo. paper, 3s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 4s. 6d.; by post, 6d. extra. [In a few days.

NEW WORK BY DR. HARRIS.

PATRIARCHY; or, The Family, its Constitution, and Probation. By the Rev. J. Harris, D.D., &c., Principal of New College, St. John's Wood. Demy 8vo., cloth. [In a few days.

THE Crimea; its Towns, Inhabitants and Social Customs. By a LADY, nine years resident near the Alma. With an engraving of Simpheropol, the Capital. Royal 18mo. cloth, 2s. 6d.; by post, 3s. [Now ready.

"One of the pleasantest little books the war has called forth."—Atlas.

THE Life of Napoleon the THIRD, Emperor of the French, illustrated from his Letters and Speeches. With Portraits. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD. Fcp. 8vo. 1s. 6d.; by post 2s.

"A thoroughly clever and outspeaking book."

Christian Weekly Times.

IMPORTANT TO CONDUCTORS OF PENNY BANKS.

PERPETUAL INVESTMENT,

LAND, AND BUILDING SOCIETY, 22, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars, London.

PROGRESS OF THE SOCIETY.

Shares issued 9,097. Advanced on Mortgage, £92,970.

This Society offers a secure and safe mode for the investment of large or small sums of money, the security for which is unquestionable, the funds being all advanced upon Freehold, Copyhold, or Leasehold Property.

INVESTMENT DEPARTMENT.

INVESTORS are those who use the Society as an investment for their savings; on which they will, on the completion of their shares, receive interest at the rate of 5 per cent., together with a proportion of the Society's profits.

An Investor may at any time withdraw the money which he has paid on his share, with interest thereon; the interest now receivable upon withdrawal is 5 per cent. compound, or a Person may dispose of his share with the accumulations of interest and profit, a fee of 1s. per share being paid on the transfer. Should sickness, want of employment, or other pecuniary emergency arise, an Investor can, upon the security of his shares, borrow a sum not exceeding the amount paid by him to the Society, interest being charged at the rate of 7d. per month for £5, which includes all expenses.

SHARES.—There are five descriptions of shares, namely:—£10 shares; £25 shares; £30 shares; £50 shares; and £100 shares.

A £10 share may be paid by instalments in the same manner as deposits in Savings Banks; the entrance fee is 6d. each share.

A £25 share requires the payment of 5s. per month for 7¼ years, together with an entrance fee of 1s.

A £30 share requires the payment of 4s. per month for 10 years, together with an entrance fee of 1s.

A £50 share requires the payment of 5s. per month for 12½ years, or of 10s. per month for 7¼ years, together with an entrance fee of 1s. 6d.

A £100 share requires the payment of 10s. per month for 12½ years, or of £1 per month for 7¼ years, together with an entrance fee of 2s. 6d.

Any of these shares may be paid up in full, and thus become Realized Shares, or they may be paid by irregular instalments, in which case the money will bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

The Interest upon Realized Shares is 5½ per cent. per annum, which includes the profits belonging to such shares, and is paid half-yearly, on the 30th of April and the 30th of October.

EXAMPLES OF INVESTORS.

A. B. enters for one £100 share, on which he pays an entrance fee of 2s. 6d., and 10s. per month, (or 4d. per day) for 12½ years. 10s. per month, paid for 12½ years, will amount to £75. To this sum will be added £25 for interest at 5 per cent., so that A. B. will receive, at the end of the 12½ years, £100, and his proportion of the profits.

C. D. wishing to have £100 to apprentice his son, or for some other purpose, has to pay 20s. per month for 7 years.

E. F., not being able to spare so much as 10s. per month, enters for a £50 share to be realised in 12½ years, on which he pays an entrance fee of 1s. 6d., and the sum of 5s. monthly, or 2d. per day.

G. H. enters for a £30 share, on which he pays an entrance fee of 1s., and 4s. per month for 10 years, or rather more than 1¼d. per day.

J. K. enters for 10 realised shares of £10 each, and having paid £100 5s. for subscriptions and entrance fees, he receives interest thereon half-yearly at the rate of 5½ per cent. per annum.

L. M. enters for one £1. share, and pays 5s. thereon, as his first instalment, with the entrance fee of 6d.; in three weeks he pays a second 5s.; in two weeks more he pays 7s., and continues making his payments until the whole £10 is paid, when he will receive interest at 4 per cent. for all his back payments, and commence receiving interest at 5½ per cent. per annum.

N. O., desirous of securing to his daughter, now aged 14, the sum of £50 on her attaining the age of 21, has to pay 10s. per month, or £5 18s. per annum, for 7 years.

For Particulars of other Departments see Prospectus.

Ragged School Teachers desirous of promoting provident habits should form Penny Banks in connexion with their Schools, and in order to enable them to make such Banks self supporting, the Directors of the above Society are prepared to receive the deposits weekly and allow interest thereon at the rate of five pounds per cent. per annum.

Shares may be taken, Prospectuses had, and information obtained at the Office of the Society between the hours of nine and five, and on Wednesdays from nine to eight. The Rules are 3d. each, and will be forwarded on receipt of four postage stamps.

Plans of the Society's Estates at Muswell Hill may be had on application at the Office.

A fair remuneration allowed to parties introducing business to the Society.

N.B. Post-office Orders to be made payable to JOHN EDWARD TRESIDDER.

Head Office, 22, New Bridge-Street, Blackfriars.

ELEGANT PERSONAL REQUISITES.

Under the Patronage of the Courts of Europe, and the Aristocracy; and universally preferred and esteemed.

The SUCCESSFUL RESULTS of the last HALF CENTURY have proved beyond question that possesses peculiarly nourishing powers in the growth, restoration, and improvement of the Human Hair. It prevents Hair from falling off or turning grey, strengthens weak HAIR, cleanses it from Scurf and Dandriff, and makes it BEAUTIFULLY SOFT, CURLY, and GLOSSY. In the growth of

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL

THE BEARD, WHISKERS, AND MUSTACHIOS.

it is unfailing in its stimulative operation. For CHILDREN it is especially recommended as forming the basis of A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR. In dressing the Hair nothing can equal its effect, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, and imparting a transcendent lustre. A small Pamphlet accompanies each bottle of ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, wherein important hints and advice will be found on the CULTURE OF THE HAIR OF INFANCY and on its PRESERVATION and BEAUTY through THE SEVERAL STAGES OF HUMAN LIFE.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION!—On the Wrapper of each Bottle are the words, ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, in two lines.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR.

AN ORIENTAL BOTANICAL PREPARATION

FOR

IMPROVING AND BEAUTIFYING THE COMPLEXION,

Eradicates FRECKLES, TAN, PIMPLES, SPOTS, DISCOLORATION, and other CUTANEOUS VISITATIONS, and renders

THE SKIN SOFT, FAIR, AND BLOOMING.

It obviates all effects of Climate on the Skin, whether with reference to cold and inclemency, or intense solar heat, and affords immediate relief in cases of sunburn, stings of insects, or incidental inflammation. Gentlemen after shaving will appreciate its softening and ameliorating properties.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

CAUTION.—The words ROWLAND'S KALYDOR are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and their Signature, A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, in red ink, at foot.

A GOOD SET OF TEETH

Ever insures favourable impressions, while their preservation is of the utmost importance to every individual, both as regards the general health by the proper mastication of food, and the consequent possession of pure and sweet breath. Among the various preparations offered for the purpose,

ROWLANDS' ODONTO,

OR,

PEARL DENTIFRICE,

stands unrivalled. Compounded of the choicest and most recherche ingredients of the ORIENTAL HERBAL, it is of inestimable value in PRESERVING AND BEAUTIFYING THE TEETH, STRENGTHENING THE GUMS,

AND

IN RENDERING THE BREATH SWEET AND PURE.

It eradicates Tartar from the Teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, and polishes and preserves the enamel, to which it imparts a pearl-like whiteness.

Price 2s. 9d. per Box.

CAUTION.—The words "ROWLAND'S ODONTO" are on the Label, and "A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, HATTON GARDEN," engraved on the Government Stamp affixed on each BOX.

SOLD BY THEM, AND BY CHEMISTS AND PERFUMERS.

Beware of Spurious Imitations!!!

Printed by GEORGE WATSON, of No. 4, New River Terrace North, in the Parish of St. Mary, Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at his Office, No. 5, Kirby Street, Hatton Garden, in the Liberty of Saffron Hill, Hatton Garden, and Ely Rents, in the Parish of St. Andrew, Holborn.—FRIDAY, June 1, 1855.

Digitized by Google

BODLEIANA BIBLIOTHECA

The Philanthropist,

AND

PRISON AND REFORMATORY GAZETTE;

A RECORD OF SOCIAL AMELIORATION, AND JOURNAL OF CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

No. 2, New Series.] LONDON, JULY 2, 1855. [Price 5d. Stamped 6d.

GOVERNESSES' Benevolent Institution. Incorporated by Royal Charter.

WITH POWER TO HOLD LAND BY GIFT, PURCHASE OR BEQUEST.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF

Her Most Gracious MAJESTY.
H.R.H. the PRINCE ALBERT.
H.R.H. the DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER.
H.R.H. the DUCHESS OF KENT.
H.R.H. the DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE.
H.R.H. the HEREDITARY GRAND DUCHESS OF MECKLENBURG-STRELITZ.
H.R.H. the PRINCESS MARY ADELAIDE.

PRESIDENT.
The EARL OF HARROWBY.

Board of Management.

The Hon. William Ashley.
B. B. Cabbell, Esq., M.P. F.R.S., F.S.A.
F. Patey Chappel, Esq.
W. Tembrell Elliott, Esq.
Sir J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S.
William Gilpin, Esq.,
John William Hale, Esq.
S. Carter Hall, Esq., F.S.A.
Sir J. P. Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart.
The Rev. Thomas King, M.A.
The Hon. Arth. Kinnaird, M.P.
The Rev. D. Laing, M.A., F.R.S.
The Lord Lilford.
Samuel Long, Esq.
J. Tidd Pratt, Esq.
Robert A. Slaney, Esq.
W. Jesse Street, Esq.
The Earl Talbot.
Edward Thornton, Esq.
T. Parry Woodcock, Esq.

THE OBJECTS OF THE SOCIETY ARE—

Temporary assistance to Governesses in distress, afforded privately and delicately through the Ladies' Committee.

ANNUITY FUND.—Elective Annuities to Aged Governesses, secured on invested capital, and thus independent of the prosperity of the institution.

 The Hon. Mr. Ashley having most kindly opened a Fund to raise all the Society's Annuities to 20*l.* any Donations which may be kindly given, may be addressed "The Hon. Mrs. Ashley, to the care of the Secretary."

PROVIDENT FUND.—Provident Annuities purchased by Ladies in any way connected with education, upon Government security, agreeably to the Act of Parliament. This branch includes a Savings' Bank.

The Government allow Foreign Governesses to contract for these Annuities.

A HOME for Governesses during the intervals between their engagements.

A system of registration, entirely free of expense.

AN ASYLUM for the aged.

CHARLES WILLIAM KLUGH, Secretary.
32, Sackville Street, London.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL, HAVERSTOCK HILL.

PATRON.—THE QUEEN.

For Children of both Sexes of all Denominations, and from any part of the Kingdom.

TWENTY-FIVE Vacancies ARE DECLARED for the NEXT ELECTION, which will take place in NOVEMBER. Candidates must be in good health and between seven and eleven years of age. Forms to fill up and all requisite information may be obtained by applying to the Secretary. All the votes are carried forward from one Election to another, so that with reasonable effort every case will succeed. The greatly increased expenditure arising out of the War might justify the Committee in reducing the number for Election, but they look rather with confidence for support from a Christian public, not doubting that their appeal will meet with a willing and hearty response. The expenses of 1854 were above £1000 more than in 1852, with about the same average number of Children. There are now 269 Orphan Children under the care of the Charity. Contributions will be thankfully received.

Office, 32, Ludgate Hill. JOSEPH SOUL, Secretary.

CHURCH of England Scripture Readers' Association. Instituted 1844.

Hon. Clerical Secretary—REV. DR. SPENCE.
Lay Secretary—JAMES RODDAM TATE, Esq.
Offices—9, Spring-gardens, Charing-Cross.

The Scripture Readers' Association is in urgent need of immediate ASSISTANCE, to prevent any further reduction in its staff of 121 Scripture Readers, now regularly and systematically employed in visiting the poor of this metropolis and its environs from house to house.

To enable the committee to maintain the existing grants, it was estimated by the Finance committee, at the commencement of the year, that it would be necessary to raise (independently of the ordinary sources of revenue) 3,400*l.* by donations, and other fluctuating sources; of this amount 430*l.* only has yet been received, leaving nearly 3,000*l.* still to be raised; and for this sum the committee earnestly appeal to the liberality of the Christian public.

SOLDIERS' Friend and Army SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY. Offices 14 and 15, Exeter Hall.

PATRONS.

His Grace the Duke of Manchester.
The Right Hon. the Earl of Carlisle, K.G.
The Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury.
The Right Hon. the Earl of Radnor.
The Right Hon. the Earl of Rosberry.
The Right Hon. the Earl of Kintore.
The Right Hon. the Earl of Darnley.
The Right Hon. the Lord R. Grosvenor, M.P.
The Lord Henry Cholmondeley, M.P.
The Viscount Ebrington, M.P.
The Lord Benholme.

PRESIDENT.
The Rev. Dr. Marsh.

The Committee desire to return thanks to their numerous friends, for the liberal support they have rendered to the Society up to the close of its financial year, enabling them to commence the present year with a balance in hand. still they feel that the demands upon them are so great, that they would urge upon those who have contributed donations to become Annual Subscribers, as only by this means can they carry out the operations of the Society. The field is truly white unto the harvest, but alas! the labourers are comparatively few; there are now twenty-seven Agents dependent on the funds of the Society, and other openings are presenting themselves which the Committee are anxious should not be neglected. The following Contributions received since last advertisement are thankfully acknowledged:—

	£	s.	d.
Right Hon. the Earl of Darnley	10	0	0
C. A. Rooke, Esq.	3	0	0
Miss E. Marsh	1	0	0
Rev. H. W. Wright	1	0	0
Mrs. Davis	1	0	0
Miss Pasmore	1	1	0
H. K., for Tracts	5	0	0
Mrs. Christy	1	0	0
Isabella	5	0	0
Hon. Mrs. Ramsay	1	0	0
A Lady	2	0	0
Mrs. Sealey	1	0	0

The publications of the Society are most eagerly sought after by the men both at home and abroad.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, G. Burns, Esq., 17, Porteus Road, Paddington; by the Secretary, Mr. Wm. A. Blake, at the Offices, 14 and 15, Exeter Hall; by the Rev. Dr. Marsh, Beckenham; by Messrs. Nisbet, Berners Street, Oxford Street; Messrs. Hatchard, Piccadilly; Lieutenant Blackmore, 6, Seymour Place, New Road; by the Bankers, Royal British Bank, 429, Strand; and at the Offices of the "Record" and "Christian Times."

CAMBRIDGE Asylum for SOLDIERS' WIDOWS, established 1852, Kingston-on-Thames. Under the Patronage of the Queen, the Prince Albert, and other Members of the Royal Family.

Contributions are earnestly solicited for this the only existing home of the widow of the soldier killed in the Russian war, and may be paid to the Committee; to Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; to Mr. Chas. Turner, collector, 3, Chapel Place South, South Audley Street; or to Edward Frederick Leeks, Hon. Sec.

Offices, Palace Chambers, St. James's Street, and 2, Charlotte Row, Mansion House.

ROYAL Asylum of St. Ann's Society for the Children of those once in Prosperity, Orphans or not. By voluntary contributions.

THE HALF-YEARLY ELECTION will take place at the London Tavern on Friday the 10th day of August next. NEW CANDIDATES should be nominated immediately; FORMS may be obtained at the office, or are forwarded by post with a list of Governors, on receipt of 12 postage stamps. E. F. LEEKS, Secretary.
2, Charlotte Row, Mansion House.

RAGGED CHURCH AND CHAPEL UNION.
Patron.—The Right Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY.
President.—Lord ROBERT GROSVENOR, M.P.
Chairman of Committee.—J. I. BRISCOE, Esq.

THE Object of this Society is to assist in providing places of worship for the sole and exclusive use of the destitute poor in London. There are upwards of 30 preaching stations connected with the Society, the number of which might be very greatly increased if adequate funds were placed at the disposal of the Committee.

The following contributions are thankfully acknowledged:—

	£	s.	d.
His Grace the Duke of Grafton	£20	0	0
The Dowager Countess of Shaftesbury	20	0	0
The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury	5	0	0
Ditto ditto annual	2	0	0
J. I. Briscoe, Esq.	45	0	0
Ditto annual	5	0	0
John Sperling, Esq.	5	0	0
W. Millar, Esq., annual	5	0	0

Contributions are earnestly solicited, and will be received by Mr. W. A. Blake, at the Office of the Society, 15, Exeter Hall; Messrs. Hatchard, Piccadilly; Nisbet, Berners-street; Seeley, Fleet-street and Hanover-street; and by the Bankers, Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Co., 1, Lombard-street; and at the Office of the "Record."

CRIMINAL REFORM.

PREVENTIVE and Reformatory INSTITUTION, 19, New Road, near Gower Street North, under Government Inspection. President, The EARL OF SHAFTESBURY. This Institution, one of the earliest established for the Industrial training and placing out of criminals and outcasts, which has already provided for 35, and has accommodation for upwards of 40, is languishing for want of funds; an opportunity is presented to the Committee of doubling their operations, but they are compelled to pause before filling up even their present number. Having exhausted all their efforts in bringing the Institution to its present state they are driven to make this appeal to the public, and earnestly hope it will not be made in vain, as applicants are numerous, and those who are rejected are left without hope and almost inevitably relapse into crime. Donations thankfully received by Prescott and Co., 62, Threadneedle-street; Williams and Co., Birchin Lane; S. Cave, Esq., 23, Wilton Place; and G. J. Bowyer, Esq., 43 Ampthill Square.

Digitized by Google

READY, JUNE 1855.

THE Irish Quarterly Review, No. XVIII. Vol. V. price 2s. 6d., post 3s.

CONTENTS.

I. The Poets of America, First Paper—Longfellow. Bryant, Mrs. Sigourney, Holmes.
II. Biography of John Banim. Part V.
III. Mechanics' Institutes and Free Libraries.
IV. Odd Books.
V. The Romance of Life—The Count of Monte Cristo.
VI. Fitzpatrick's Life of Lord Cloncurry.
VII. The Militia and the Line.
VIII. Shell's Life, and "Sketches of the Irish Bar."
IX. Reformatory Schools for Ireland—Reports, for 1854, on County and Convict Prisons in Ireland.
X. Paris Correspondence. No. II.
XI. Quarterly Record of the Progress of Reformatory and Ragged Schools, and of Prison Discipline, with Mr. Recorder Hall's Notes of his Second Visit to Continental Reformatories.

Dublin: W. B. KELLY, 8, Grafton Street.
London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co., and all Booksellers.

BOOK POST.

Any Book, from any Catalogue, sent post free, to any part of the United Kingdom, at the published price.

PERIODICALS.

THE Eclectic Review, for July (commencing a new volume) may be had, monthly, direct from the Publisher, post free, for 1s. 6d.

"The Articles (January) show how judicious is the Editor in the selection of topics, and how vigorous is still the spirit which first made the 'Eclectic' a power and a praise in the Dissenting world."—Nonconformist.

THE HOMILIST, post free, 1s.
THE EVANGELICAL MAGAZINE, post free, 7d.
THE MOTHER'S FRIEND, Six Copies, post free, 6d.
THE TEACHER'S OFFERING, Six Copies, post free, 6d.
London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster Row.

THE Penny Pulpit.—Accurately reported Sermons, issued Weekly, Monthly, and in Vols. bound in cloth, 10s. 6d. each. No. 2,319, Rev. S. Bridge, "The Expectation of the Creature"—2,316, Dr. Guthrie, "The Power of Love"—2,334, Rev. R. Shulte, "Pardoning Mercy"—Rev. J. J. West, "My Doves"—2,338, Rev. H. Melvill, "The Borrower Servant to the Lender."

Selections of the following, bound in cloth.

	s.	d.
120 by Clergymen of the Church of England	12	0
70 by Rev. H. Allen, A.M.	7	0
19 by Rev. J. Sanderson Robins, A.M.	4	0
48 by Rev. J. Cumming, D. D.	5	0
36 by Rev. T. Binney	4	0
31 by Rev. J. C. Philpot	4	0
15 by Rev. J. H. Evans and Rev. B. W. Noel	2	6
96 by Congregational Ministers	10	6
48 at Exeter Hall, during Exhibition, 1851	6	0
14 on the Proverbs, by Rev. T. Binney	1	6
6 on Formation of Character, by ditto	1	6
History of Joseph, by W. Mason	1	0
Peace among Christians, by Rev. M. H. Seymour	1	0
Goodrich's Lecture to Children.	1	0

THE GOLDEN LECTURES, delivered at St. Margaret's, Lothbury, by the Rev. HENRY MELVILL, A.M. during the years 1850 to 1854, Five Vols. 6s. each.

COUNSEL and COMPLIMENT; or, the Old Year's, Exhortation and the New Year's Compliment. By Rev. J. CUMMING, D.D. Cloth, 8d.

BUNHILL MEMORIALS. Authentic Records of 300 Ministers and others, buried in Bunhill-fields. Cloth, 5s.

THE DREAM of Heaven; or, the Sister's Tale, A Fact and not a Fiction. By. Rev. T. SHARPE. Cloth, 6d.

THE SHEPHERD KING; an Exposition of the XXIII. Psalm. By Rev. THOMAS BINNEY. Price 6d. cloth.

London: James Paul, 1, Chapter House-court, North Side of St. Paul's.

Now ready, in foolscap 8vo. price 3s. cloth,

ANTI-MYSTICISM; or, Man in his Relation to the Holy Spirit, Revealed Truth, and Divine Grace. By W. R. BAKER, Author of "Our State Church," "Intemperance the Curse of Britain," &c.

Also Fourth Edition, price 3s. cloth,

THE CURSE of BRITAIN: an Essay on the Evils, Cause and Cure of Intemperance. With an Introductory Chapter on the Maine Law. By W. R. BAKER.

Also, price 2s. cloth,

OUR STATE CHURCH: Her Structure, Doctrines, Forms, and Character.

Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster-row.

Now ready, price 1s.

REFORMATORY Schools in France and England. By PATRICK JOSEPH MURRAY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Dedicated to M. D. HILL, Esq., Q.C., Recorder of Birmingham.

London: W. & F. G. CASH, 5, Bishopsgate Without.
Dublin: JAMES McGLASHAN.

BOOKS, CARRIAGE FREE.

W. TWEEDIE, Bookseller and Publisher, 337, Strand, has made arrangements to supply on receipt of Postage Stamps to the amount of One Shilling and upwards, all the Books, Pamphlets, and Magazines, post free throughout the kingdom on the day of publication at the published price.

J. B. GOUGH.

THE Autobiography and Orations of John B. Gough, bound in one handsome volume gilt edges, with portrait, 5s.; post free.
Just published, cloth, gilt edges, price 3s. 6d., a new and handsome edition.

THE Autobiography of John B. Gough, with a Continuation of his Life to the Present Time, with the splendid new Steel Engraving of the Great Orator.

GOUGH'S Orations.—1. On Habit.—2. The Importance of the Temperance Movement.—3. An Address to Children.—4. An Address to the Working Classes.—5. The Dangerous Drinking Customs.—6. The Evil of Drunkenness.—7. Importance of Female Influence.—8. An Address to Young Men.—9. Our Duty to the Intemperate.—10. Are they all Fools who become Drunkards;—11. Who is my Neighbour?—12. Prevention better than Cure.—13. The Power of Example.—14. The Liquor Traffic.

The above may be had singly, No. 4, twopence, all the others one penny each; or, in one volume, in stiff covers, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.; gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

A Copyright Steel Engraving

FROM Mayall's Photograph of John B. Gough, a striking likeness, may now be had. Price, Artist's Proofs, 2s. 6d.; plain copies, 1s.

Also, price 4d.

THE Supplement to the Autobiography. A Sketch of Mr. Gough's Labours during the last Ten Years.

The Autobiography may also be had at 2d., 6., and 1s. each.

THE Lithographic Portrait of John B. Gough, lately published at 5s., reduced to 2s. 6d., and the small copy published at 2s. 6d., reduced to 1s.

THE Traffic in Intoxicating Drinks, its Evils and its Remedies. By Samuel Couling. People's Edition, price 1s.

IPSWICH Temperance Tracts in Volumes or Packets always in stock.

Price Twopence.

TOUCHING Incidents and Tuneful Melodies. By Kate Pyer.

A PLEA for Teetotalism and the Maine Law. By James Haughton. Price 1s. 6d., handsomely bound in cloth.

THE Public-House Trade as it is: or an Epitome of the Evidence taken before the Committee of the House of Commons on Public-Houses. By. J. E. Ritchie. Price 3d.

"The title of this compilation recommends itself, and to those who cannot consult the Blue-Book it will be interesting. And even to those who can, the condensation and arrangement made by Mr. Ritchie will be of service, inasmuch as it sets forth in a small compass the leading points of the whole. Some of the witnesses make strange revelations, and the enquiry only shows the more fully the necessity of closing these houses altogether."—British Temperance Advocate.

FACTS and Phases of the Temperance Enterprise. Price 1s.

"This beautiful volume before us constitutes a valuable compendium of temperance truth. The volume is externally elegant and inwardly excellent, and in these respects does credit to the cause. It is suitable as a present to individuals or to school libraries, and cannot fail to do good in proportion as it is read."—British Temperance Advocate.

REASONS for Advocating Total Abstinence from Intoxicating Drinks. Second Edition. Price 6d.

TOTAL Abstinence Examined by the Light of Science. By John Dyer. Price 6d.

LIVESEY'S Letter to J. W. Patten, Esq., M.P.
Price One Penny.

94 pp., price 6d.

UNCLE Sam's Farm Fence; a thrilling Tale of the Working of the Maine Law.

Price One Penny,

A HISTORY of Banbury, before and after a Maine Liquor Law. By James Cadbury.

London: W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

LONDON Poor. A History of the People, from their own Lips, giving a Literal Description of their Labour, Earnings, Trials, and Sufferings in their own "unvarnished" language, and pourtraying the Condition of their Homes and Families, from Personal Communication with the Individuals at their Dwellings. Edited by HENRY MAYHEW. With Illustrations of the Scenes and People described, from Special Daguerreotypes, by "Beard." 2 vols., 16s.

Or with Section relating to "Those who will not work;" similarly Illustrated. 2 vols. 21s.

Geo. Newbold, 310, Strand, & 8, Regent-St. Westminster.

With a Life-like Portrait drawn on stone, Price 2d.

PICTURES of Life, and Birthday Reflections, by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, Minister of New Park Street Chapel, Southwark.

London: James Paul, 1, Chapter House Court. Paternoster Row.

By a Physician.

THE HEALTH Resorts and Bathing Places of Britain; Scarborough, Buxton, Isle of Man, Hastings, and St. Leonard's-on-the-Sea; their climate and suitability as Resorts for various classes of Invalids. Many Illustrations. In the Family Economist, New Series, 3 vols., 1s. 6d. each.

Monthly, price 2d. July commences a new Volume.

THE French Exposition and How to go to it. By one who knows the Ins and Outs of Paris, has been there many times, seen the sights, and stayed a month for less than 10*l.* In the Family Economist, New Series, 3 vols. 1s. 6d. each.

Monthly, price 2d. July commences a New Volume.

By MARTIN DOYLE and others.

TOWN and Cottage Gardening, Poultry Management, Rural Hints. In the Family Economist, New Series, 3 Vols., 1s. 6d. each.

Monthly, price 2d. July commences a New Volume.

WHERE to Live with a Small Income in Health and Comfort, on Incomes from 40*l.* to 100*l.* a year. In the Family Economist, New Series, 3 vols., 1s. 6d. each.

Monthly, price 2d. July commences a New Volume.

Hints for Hard Times.

HOW Mrs. Simmonds made A Little go a Long Way. In the Family Economist, New Series, 3 vols., 1s. 6d. each. Sold by all Booksellers.

Monthly, price 2d. July commences a New Volume.

First Number of a New Volume.

BRITISH Birds of Song. By WILLIAM KIDD. In the "Family Economist" for July; to be continued Monthly. Price 2d.

 Order the "Family Economist and Entertaining Companion for Town and Country." 3 vols. Published 1s. 6d. each. 2d. Monthly.

Office, 32, Paternoster-row. Sold by every Bookseller in the Kingdom.

THE Crimea; its Towns, Inhabitants and Social Customs. By a LADY, nine years resident near the Alma. With an engraving of Simpheropol, the Capital. Royal 18mo. cloth, 2s. 6d.; by post, 3s. [Now ready.

"One of the pleasantest little books the war has called forth."—Atlas.

THE Life of Napoleon the THIRD, Emperor of the French, Illustrated from his Letters and Speeches. With Portraits. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD. Fcp. 8vo. 1s. 6d.; by post 2s.

"A thoroughly clever and outspeaking book."
Christian Weekly Times.

Partridge, Oakey, & Co., 34, Paternoster Row.

Digitized by Google

Index.

	Page
Appointments and Promotions	46
Benevolent Institutions	29
Correspondence	39
Education in England	45
Hospitals	32
Jews' Free School, Bell Lane, Spitalfields	46
List of Books, &c.	45
Meetings for July	36
Miss Nightingale	33
New Orphan House	35
New Gaol at Liverpool	40
Notices to Correspondents	36
Obituary	47
Orphan Working School, Haverstock Hill	45
Parliamentary Intelligence	41
Patent Inventions	38
Patriotic Fund	33
Prison Discipline	39
Reformatories	32
Religious Societies	30
Reviews	43, 43, 44
Schools	31
——— Ragged	31
Separate Service for Children	37
The Mass in Government Prisons	46
The Maine Liquor Law	34
The Ticket-of-Leave System	34
Youthful Offenders Acts	27

Answers to Correspondents.

L. M. Stafford—Is thanked for his suggestion, and will perceive that it has been already anticipated.

J. J.—Hardly consistent with the respect for the feelings of others, which we desire should characterize "The Philanthropist. B * * * * * * t is still living. On the same grounds we have always considered that the introduction of Mr. Cobbold's "Margaret Catchpole" was highly objectionable.

Mary, Islington.—The society is only intended for the employment and reformation of discharged prisoners in the county of Surrey, but an application to W. Cooper, Esq. 11, Poultry, would probably effect what you desire. The report of the "Surrey Society" has been forwarded as requested.

If Hic et Ubique—will send us his address we will communicate fully with him on the subject.

Youthful Offenders Acts.

Mr. Adderley's Bill to amend the Youthful Offenders Act has been read a second time, but before the House of Commons has expressed any opinion as to the details of the measure another has been introduced by the Hon. W. Cowper and Sir George Grey, entitled "No. 2. A Bill to amend the Act for the better Care and Reformation of Youthful Offenders." We give both of these bills at full length below, and it is hoped that when the subject comes on to be discussed there will be at least some progress made this session in giving further encouragement than exists at present to the private reformatory institutions throughout Britain. Before the introduction of the Government bill the sub-committee appointed at the Conference on Reformatories, lately held at Mr. R. Hanbury's house, had considered attentively the bill brought forward by Mr. Adderley, and the following letter was addressed to that gentleman on the subject.

London, June 15, 1855.

Sir,—We beg leave as members of the Committee appointed at the Conference on Reformatories, held March 2nd, to make some observations on the "Bill to amend the Youthful Offenders Act," introduced by yourself, Mr. Robert Palmer, and Sir Stafford Northcote.

We believe that the managers of reformatories generally desire that greater facilities should be given for magistrates sending children to their institutions; and that all who are interested in suppressing and preventing Juvenile crime wish to see neglectful parents forced to pay for the support of their children. The bill in question is directed to both these objects, and with reference to them, perhaps, the following remarks may suggest alterations to be made when the bill is discussed in committee.

1. By clause 2 it is provided that the child "should be detained" during his sentence, but no provision is made for his recapture if he abscond, nor for his remand to prison, or close confinement, if he become utterly incorrigible or otherwise unfit for the institution. We fear that the managers of reformatories will be indisposed to undertake the responsibility of keeping children without power given for apprehending them when they run away, or of removing them if they turn out unmanageable.

2. By clause 3 the sum of 2s. is to be paid to the reformatory, but, as appears to us, only if it be received from the parent.

We believe that the managers of reformatories who are invited to receive children for long periods ought to have guaranteed to them a sufficient and regular payment, and these questions immediately occur to us: "Is the sum of 2s. to be the highest amount payable for each child? Does the Government undertake to pay the 3s. still wanting to make up the 5s. received under the Act at present in force? Is any provision made for the payment to the managers, if the sum due from the parent be not paid, or to make up that sum to 2s.? Is it not, in fact, possible, under this bill, that 20 children may be sent to a reformatory to be detained until the end of their sentences, (that is, for years,) without any payment guaranteed at all? We consider that every inducement which can be reasonably offered ought to be held out to managers of reformatories, that they may have the institutions certified, and admit children at once; and we hope that arrangements will be made for securing a proper payment regularly for each child. If this is effected we do not feel called upon as managers of reformatories to interfere as to the details of the bill, the machinery for collecting money, or the amount to be received from the parents; but we agree in recommending that the collection of the money ought to be the business of the officers of justice or the police, and not in anywise made the duty of voluntary managers of reformatories, many of whom will neglect or refuse to undertake such a work, while they most heartily co-operate with the State in the education of the children.

3. But without referring to the numerous objections raised against the employment of Poor-law officers in the collection of forced payments, (and recollecting that by our desire to throw the collection of such payments altogether off the managers of reformatories we are in fact destroying our ground for advising in the matter,) we venture to suggest that experience has shewn the advantage of employing intelligent police officers whenever a constant succession of duties of this kind have to be attended to, involving much magisterial interference, and closely connected with the administration of the criminal law. The success of the police officers appointed to carry into effect the Common Lodging House Act, and to assist the Mendicity Institution, &c., leads us to believe, that at least in large towns a well qualified officer of this description, with proper assistants, ought to be the person to inquire into the children's circumstances, to find their parents, enforce payments, and attend to the prosecution or other law process involved by the parents' inability or refusal to pay.

4. As a summary of the foregoing remarks we recommend that the sum of 5s. per week should be paid for each child's maintenance by the Government to the managers of the reformatory, whether the parents pay or not.

That the enforcements of payments from parents should be effected without calling on the managers to assist.

That the best officer for carrying out this object, in towns, would be a police officer, specially selected and set apart for the purpose, and that the bill ought to give power to apprehend absconding children, as well as to send incorrigible children to closer confinement.

The return obtained by Mr. Miles, M.P. shews how small is the number of reformatories already certified under the "Youthful Offenders Act." We believe that if proper inducement were offered and facilities extended to those anxious to have their reformatories certified, many more of the 60 institutions of the kind would be open for the reception of magistrates' cases, but that without some such alterations as those pointed out above, the bill now proposed will be comparatively ineffectual.

We remain, Sir,
Your obedient servants,

Henry F. Bouker,
Hon. Secretary of the Metropolitan Industrial Reformatory, Brixton.

G. J. Bowyer,
Hon. Governor of the Preventive and Reformatory Institution, New Road.

Robert Hanbury, jun.,
Treasurer of the Boys' Refuge, Whitechapel, (Convener.)

John Mac Gregor,
Member of Committee of the Field Lane Refuge.

W. J. Maxwell,
Hon. Sec. of the Girls' Refuge, Sussex Street.

G. H. H. Oliphant
Member of the Committee of the Carlisle Reformatory

4 June, 1855. 18 Vict.

A BILL TO AMEND THE YOUTHFUL OFFENDERS ACT.

(The Words printed in Italics are proposed to be inserted in Committee.)

Whereas it is expedient to amend the Act Seventeenth and Eighteenth of Victoria, Chapter Eighty-six, for the better Care and Reformation of Youthful Offenders in Great Britain: Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, as follows:

I. So much of the said recited Act as is contained in the Second, Fifth, and Sixth Sections thereof shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

II. Whenever any Child shall be convicted of any Offence punishable by Law either upon an indictment, or on a Summary Conviction before a Police Magistrate of the Metropolis or other Stipendiary Magistrate, or before Two or more Justices of the Peace, or before a Sheriff or Magistrate of Scotland, then and in every such Case it shall be lawful for any Court, Judge, Police Magistrate, Stipendiary Magistrate, or any Two or more Justices of the Peace, or in Scotland for any Sheriff or Magistrate of a Burgh or Police Magistrate, before whom or by whom such Child shall be so convicted, if he shall see fit, to annex to any Sentence of Imprisonment which may be then and there passed as a Punishment for his Offence a Proviso that if the Directors or Managers of any certified Reformatory School shall within Fourteen Days of the passing of such Sentence offer to take Charge of such Child, he shall forthwith be delivered over by the Person in whose Custody he shall have been placed to such Directors or Managers for a Period not less than One Year nor more than Five Years, and a Receipt of the Secretary or other Officer of any such Reformatory School, in the Form A. to this Act annexed, shall be a sufficient Discharge from such Custody; and the Child so delivered over as aforesaid shall be detained in such Reformatory School for the Period named in the Sentence: Provided always, that the Secretary of State for the Home Department may at any time order any such Child to be discharged from any such Reformatory School.

Digitized by Google

III. The Secretary or other Officer of any such Reformatory School shall, immediately upon the Admission of any such Child as aforesaid, give Notice in the Words or to the Effect of Form B. to this Act annexed, to the Overseer, or in Scotland to the Inspector of the Poor of the Parish in which he has Reason to believe that the Parent or Step-Parent of the Child dwells; and upon the Receipt of such Notice the said Overseer or Inspector shall forthwith make Inquiry after such Parent, and if he can find him shall cause him to be brought before the nearest Justice of the Peace, who, if satisfied that such Parent is of sufficient ability to contribute towards the Maintenance of such Child in the Reformatory School, shall make an Order upon him to pay weekly to such Overseer any Sum not exceeding Three Shillings; and such Justice of the Peace shall thereupon also sign a Certificate of his Adjudication according to or to the Effect of Form C. to this Act annexed; and the said Overseer or Inspector shall receive as a Remuneration for the Services required of him by this Act One Third Part of all such Sums of Money as shall be received by him towards the Maintenance of such Child, and shall pay over the other Two Thirds thereof at least once in every Three Months to the Secretary or other Officer of the Reformatory School taking charge of such Child.

IV. If such Justice of the Peace shall be of opinion that the Parent of the Child is not of sufficient Ability to contribute to the Cost of such Child's Maintenance in the Reformatory School, he shall sign a Certificate of such apparent Inability according to or to the Effect of Form D. to this Act annexed; and if such Overseer or Inspector shall be unable to find such Parent within Fourteen Days of the Receipt of the Notice from the Secretary or other Officer of the Reformatory School, he shall appear before the said Justice of the Peace, who, if satisfied that due Inquiry has been made after such Parent, and that the same cannot be found, shall sign a Certificate thereof according to or to the Effect of Form E. to this Act annexed; and the said Overseer or Inspector shall forthwith send to the Secretary or other Officer of the said Reformatory School a Copy of such One of the aforesaid Three Certificates as such Magistrate may have granted; and if at any Time after a Certificate in the Form D. or E. has been given the Overseer of any Parish shall appear before a Justice of the Peace, and satisfy him that such Parent or Step-Parent has been found, or that he is then of sufficient Ability to contribute towards the Maintenance of such Child as aforesaid, such Magistrate shall make the Order referred to in Section Three of this Act, and sign another Certificate in the Form C. to this Act annexed, which shall in like Manner as aforesaid be sent to the Secretary or other Officer of the Reformatory School taking charge of such Child.

V. If any Parent so adjudged to pay as aforesaid shall fail to make any payment to the said Overseer or Inspector during Four successive Weeks, it shall be the Duty of such Overseer or Inspector to make Application to a Justice of the Peace, who shall cause such Defaulter to be brought before him, and shall make further Investigation of his Circumstances, and shall either remit the Charge altogether, or order the Arrears, together with the Costs of such Proceedings, to be levied by Distress, or shall commit him to the House of Correction for any Term not exceeding One Month, with or without Hard Labour.

VI. If any Overseer or Inspector shall neglect to perform the Services required of him by this Act, or any or either of them, he shall be liable to a Penalty not exceeding Ten Shillings in each Case; which Penalty shall be imposed by any Magistrate before whom Complaints shall be made by the Secretary or other Officer of the Reformatory School taking charge of any such Child as aforesaid, and the same shall be recovered by Distress.

VII. The Costs of such Proceedings under this Act as are not herein provided for shall be defrayed out of the Rates of the County or Borough respectively in which such Proceedings take place, and in Scotland out of the Rogue Money of the County or the Police Rates of the Burgh.

VIII. The following Words and Expressions in this Act shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something in the Subject or Context repugnant to such Construction; that is to say, the Word "Child" shall mean and include any Boy or Girl apparently between the Ages of Seven and Fourteen Years who shall be convicted of any Offence:

The Word "Parent" shall include "Father," "Step-Father," and "Mother," being a Widow, or any other Person legally liable under the Laws relating to the Poor to maintain such Child:

The Word "Magistrate," in so far as regards Scotland in this or the said recited Act, shall be construed to include Justice of the Peace.

18 June, 1855. 18 Vict.

A BILL TO AMEND THE ACT FOR THE BETTER CARE AND REFORMATION OF YOUTHFUL OFFENDERS.

(The words printed in italics are proposed to be inserted in Committee.)

Whereas it is expedient to amend the Act of the last Session of Parliament, Chapter Eighty-Six, "for the better Care and Reformation of Youthful Offenders in Great Britain," so far as respects the Provision thereby made for charging the Parent or Step Parent of an Offender in certain Cases with Payments towards his Maintenance or Support: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, as follows:

I. Sections Five and Six of the said Act shall be repealed.

II. In every Case in which any Juvenile Offender shall be detained in a Reformatory School under the said Act, the Parent or Step Parent, if of sufficient Ability, shall be liable to contribute to his Support and Maintenance a Sum not exceeding Five Shillings a Week; and it shall be lawful in England and Wales for any Two Justices of the Peace, upon the Complaint of any Person authorized by One of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to take Proceedings in that Behalf, to summon the Parent or Step Parent, as the Case may be, and examine into his Ability, and (if on Consideration of all the Circumstances of the Case they think fit) to make an Order upon Him for such weekly Payment not exceeding Five Shillings per Week as they shall think reasonable, during the whole or any Part of the Detention of such Juvenile Offender in such Reformatory School, such Payment to be made at such Times as by such Order may be directed to the Person so authorized to take Proceedings as aforesaid, or to such Person as the Secretary of State may from Time to Time appoint to receive the same, and by him to be accounted for and paid as the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may direct.

III. In case Default be made for the Space of Fourteen Days in Payment of any Sum of Money which may have become payable by such Parent or Step Parent under such Order, which Sum of Money shall in every such Case be levied upon the Goods and Chattels of the Defendant by Distress and Sale thereof; and if it shall be returned to the Warrant of Distress in any such Case that no sufficient Goods of the Party against whom such Warrant shall have been issued can be found, it shall be lawful for the Justice to whom such Return is made, or for any other Justice of the Peace for the same County, Riding, Division, Liberty, City, Borough, or Place, by his Warrant as aforesaid, to commit the Defendant to the House of Correction or Common Gaol for any Term not exceeding Ten Days, unless the Sum to be paid, and all Costs and Charges of the Distress, and of the Commitment and conveying of the Defendant to Prison, (the Amount thereof being ascertained and stated in such Commitment,) shall be sooner paid.

IV. In Scotland an Action for Payment of Sums for the Support and Maintenance of a Juvenile Offender under the said Act shall and may be raised at the Instance of the Procurator Fiscal of the Court by which Sentence was passed on such Offender, and of no other Person; and it shall be lawful for the Sheriff before whom such Action is brought to inquire into the Circumstances of the Party sued, and to decern for Payment of such weekly Sum not exceeding Five Shillings per Week during the Period of Detention of such Offender as he shall think fit, or, in his Discretion, to dismiss the Action; and such Decree for Payment of a weekly Sum shall be held to be and have all the Effect of a Decree in each Week for Payment of the Sum ordered to be paid for such Week; and the Sums recovered shall be accounted for and paid as the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may direct.

V. It shall be lawful for One of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, or in Scotland for the Lord Advocate, from Time to Time, where such Secretary of State or Lord Advocate shall in his Discretion think fit, to remit all or any Part of any weekly Payment which may have been made payable by any Order under this Act.

Release from Prison of the Rev. J. A. Giles, D.C.L.—On the 4th of June, Dr. Giles (who, it will be remembered, was convicted at the last Oxford Assizes of making a false entry in the marriage register book at Bampton) was discharged from Oxford Castle, under the authority of the Queen's warrant. It is understood that in consequence of the persevering efforts of the Bishop of Oxford, aided by memorials from large numbers of clergymen and gentlemen, her Majesty was graciously pleased to extend her royal mercy and pardon to Dr. Giles, at the expiration of three months from the period of his conviction.

Transportation of Felons, &c.—By an order in Council, dated June 6, 1855, it is directed that from and after the 9th of June instant, her Majesty's settlements in Western Australia shall be places to which felons and other offenders sentenced to transportation under the provisions of the 13 of Victoria shall be conveyed.

Mr. Cope, the Governor of Newgate, has resigned his post, and retires on an allowance of 500*l.* per annum for life.

Digitized by Google

Benevolent Institutions.

FESTIVAL OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY.

The two hundred and first anniversary of this corporation was celebrated on the 23rd of May by the usual religious ceremonial at St. Paul's cathedral. The Rev. C. A. Thurlow, rector of Malpas and Chancellor of the diocese of Chester, preached, taking for his text the 14th verse of the 14th chapter of St. Luke, "Thou shalt be blessed, for they cannot recompense thee." The service was attended by the Archbishop of Canterbury; the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Mr. Alderman Farebrother; the Bishops of St. David's, St. Asaph's, Winchester, &c.

In the evening the friends of the institution assembled in Merchant's Hall.

After the usual loyal toasts,

The Right Hon. the LORD MAYOR, who presided, gave "The Sons of the Clergy, and the President of the Society, the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury."

His GRACE returned thanks, by saying that it was especially the duty of those who attained the highest position in the church to watch over and take care of the interests of those who were less fortunately circumstanced, though perhaps not less deserving of fortune than themselves. He regretted to say that the means of providing for the spiritual wants of the population had not increased in the same ratio as the population itself, and that the clergy, when called on to meet these wants, were in too many instances left with an inadequate provision for their families. It was the object of this society to provide the means of education or the placing in the world the sons of those clergymen who were unable to provide for the wants of their families. The smallness of the salary of the clergy proved the necessity of the society, and he trusted that it would be liberally supported. After alluding to the loss which the society sustained in the person of their late Vice-President (Lord Chief Justice Denman), the right reverend prelate concluded by proposing the health of the Lord Chancellor, who kindly accepted the office of the new vice-president.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, in acknowledging the toast, said that, as a son of the church and the son of a clergyman of the church, his advice and assistance should be ever at the disposal of the society. His lordship concluded by proposing the health of the Lord Mayor.

The LORD MAYOR returned thanks, and proposed the health of the stewards, coupling therewith the name of the Bishop of Oxford.

The Bishop of OXFORD returned thanks, and said it was hardly possible to overrate the amount of distress which this society met. There was no distress like that of distressed gentlemen, and that was the species of distress which the society was called on to relieve. He therefore hoped that every friend of the institution would bring two friends like himself to the anniversary festival of next year.

The LORD MAYOR then proposed "the health of the Bishop of London and of the other prelate who honoured the society with their attendance."

The Bishop of WINCHESTER, in the absence of the Bishop of London, who was prevented through indisposition from being present, returned thanks. He observed that none knew better, and none regretted so much as the prelates of the church, the severity and the extent of the destitution which it was the object of this society to alleviate. It would, however, be impossible for them to meet the evil in its entire extent, unless the friends of the church rallied round them, and that he trusted they would do on the present occasion.

A subscription in behalf of the charity was made. The amount raised by the sermon, subscriptions, legacies, &c., during the year, was upwards of 3,000*l.*, which was the largest amount ever contributed, with the exception of the year 1853.

THE LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY.—The 48th annual meeting of the friends of this valuable charity, was held on the 25th of May, in the board room of the institution, Pentonville, for the purpose of receiving the report. A. PELLATT, Esq., M. P., presided.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the proceedings drew attention to the increased usefulness of the institution during the past year, and also to its claims for public support—this charity being one of the oldest in the metropolis, having been founded at a time when no similar one existed. One of its principal features was, that in addition to the sound Christian advice imparted to its inmates, they were also taught to help themselves; and he was exceedingly glad to perceive that during the past year nearly 1000*l* had been received for work actually performed by them in the shape of washing and needlework. He was sorry to perceive that although the charity had been more useful and received more inmates, the funds had not increased; but he called upon them not to despair, nor to look with despondency at the state of the funds, but to persevere in their good work, and he felt confident that they would meet with renewed support.

The Rev. A. LEFROY COURTENAY, D.D. read the report, which stated that through a year of unparalleled difficulty the institution had been kept up to the full extent of its capacity, and that consequently the expenditure had far exceeded the annual income. To meet this deficiency a portion of the funded stock had been sold out. The following shows the state of the Penitentiary. In the house at the date of the last report, 82; admitted in the course of the past year, 101; total, 183. Of this number there had been placed out at service last year 40; reconciled and restored to their friends, 11; withdrawn, at their own request, 9; dismissed for improper behaviour, 13; left because of ill health, 4; ditto because of pregnancy, 5; and under the care of the institution on 1st April, 101. The balance sheet showed the amount received to be 2,647*l.* 4s. 1d., and after all the expenses had been defrayed there was left the small balance of 1*l* 2s. 4d. in hand to meet liabilities; amounting in the whole to 500.

The Rev. J. Spence, the Rev. W. Powell, the Rev. Mr. Weare, Rev. Mr. Blackburn, Mr. Cowan, M.P., and other gentlemen, having addressed the meeting, the proceedings terminated.

THE BRITISH BENEFICENT INSTITUTION.—The anniversary festival of the British Beneficent Society, the object of which is to provide permanent incomes for aged ladies who have been reduced and are in distress, was celebrated on the 30th of May, at the London Tavern by a banquet, which was graced by the presence of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge and a large party of elegantly dressed ladies. His Royal Highness was supported by the Marquis of Clanricarde, General Sir James M'Donnell, Sir Felix Agar, Sir R. P. Jodrell, Mr. Hubert de Burgh, Mr. Matthew Gaunt, and other gentlemen connected with the society. The toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the British Beneficent Society," was proposed from the chair in a feeling and most effective speech. His Royal Highness expressed the great pleasure he felt, in presiding at the festival of an institution the purpose of which he so highly approved, and entered into details which sufficiently prove its claim to the support of all who would fulfil the precept of the Apostle, to "Visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction." His Royal Highness, after acknowledging the liberal support of the members of the Stock-Exchange, observed that, unless the subscriptions were much increased, but few of the candidates would this year receive the aid which all would desire to see bestowed upon them, but he would not do the public the injustice to doubt that they would come forward most liberally in support of this most deserving institution. This appeal was at once responded to by an announcement of 100*l.* from "a citizen of London," in honour of the presence of the Duke of Cambridge that day as President of the institution. The general subscriptions amounted to 800*l.*, including a donation of 20*l.* from the Duke of Cambridge.

THE BUILDERS' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—A special general meeting of the friends and supporters of this valuable institution, founded in 1847, for allowing pensions to decayed master builders, including all engaged in that profession, and their widows, as well as to give temporary relief to deserving workmen in cases of accident, was held on the 31st of May, at the London Tavern, for the election of four pensioners; the president, W. Lee, Esq., M.P., in the chair. The chairman in opening the proceedings, congratulated the meeting upon the state of the institution, and remarked that, notwithstanding the war and its depressing tendencies, this charity had continued its onward progress towards success. The funded stock now amounted to 4,750*l.*; divided as follows:—Relief fund, 3,250*l.*; and the building fund, 1,500*l.* There were at the present time 14 males and 11 females receiving the benefits of the institution, and they had met there that day for the purpose of electing two males and two females, from a list of 14 candidates, all of them, he had no doubt, very distressing cases, but which from the want of necessary funds could not then be taken in. In conclusion, the chairman called upon the friends of the institution never to cease their exertions on behalf of this society—a society which he trusted ere long to see take its stand in the foremost rank with those noble charities of which England and Englishmen were justly proud. The meeting then proceeded to the election; after which votes of thanks were passed to Mr. Lee, to Mr. George Bird (the treasurer), who afterwards took the chair, and to the scrutineers.

SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—The 36th anniversary of this humane society was held on the 1st of June, at the Hanover Square Rooms. The chair was occupied by the Marquis of WESTMINSTER, who delivered an address in which he enlarged upon the usefulness of the society, and detailed numerous cases of cruelty which had been punished by means of its agents. A report was subsequently read by the Secretary, which congratulated the subscribers on a more widely extended recognition of the principles of the society both abroad and at home. It announced the establishment of a similar society in Upper Austria, that others were in course of formation in Canada and the Mauritius, and that the committee were actively engaged in promoting the establishment of branch societies in various parts of the United Kingdom. The society in Paris continues its useful operations, and the generally improved condition of the animals employed is a satisfactory proof of the influence it has obtained. The usefulness of the society in its more coercive character has been shown in the prosecution to conviction of no less then 464 offenders during the past year. Ten of these individuals have been sent to the House of Correction for various terms without the option of paying a pecuniary fine. The total amount of fines and costs levied on defendants in the prosecutions alluded to has amounted to no less a sum than 574*l.* 16s. 3d. The moiety of these fines accruing to the prosecution, in conformity with the practice of the society, has been invariably paid over to the funds of the most deserving charity in the district where the offence has occurred. Officers of the society have been employed for upwards of four months in travelling on foot the districts of the country where dogs were formerly used in the greatest numbers, and not one has been found at work. The removal of Smithfield Market gives occasion for a hope that with that over-crowded locality, and its antiquated abuses, the abominable cruelties which through so many centuries have disgraced it, will disappear. Resolutions were passed in favour of the institution, and a collection was made in aid of its funds.

Digitized by Google

HOME AND SCHOOL FOR THE SONS OF MISSIONARIES.—(From a Correspondent)—On Thursday, June 21st, the annual distribution of prizes took place at the Institution, Mornington Crescent, Hampstead Road, in the presence of the committee and subscribers. The chair was taken by T. Spalding, Esq., the Treasurer, who briefly stated the object of the meeting, and read the reports of the examinations of the pupils, which were highly creditable to them.

The prizes which had been provided by the liberality of the Treasurer, Geo. Tyler, Esq., and other friends, and consisted chiefly of books, were then distributed. Short addresses were delivered to the scholars by the Rev. Mr. Williams, John Merrington, Esq., and the Chairman, after which the meeting concluded by singing and prayer, and the pupils were dismissed for their holidays.

There are now in the institution 48 boys, 2 of those recently arrived by the "John Williams," are among the number, and others are waiting admission as soon as vacancies occur. At present the Home is overcrowded, and the committee are anxiously seeking an eligible site on which to erect a building suitable for all the purposes required. The importance of such an institution must be manifest to the friends of Missions throughout the United Kingdom, but the exertions of the committee are crippled for want of funds, and it must be recollected that their difficulties are greatly increased by the present high prices. The Christian duty of sustaining this institution will not be neglected by the friends who so nobly support the several missionary societies whose missionaries have sent their sons to this Home, to remove them from the contaminating influences of the Heathen by whom they are surrounded.

The grateful letters which are constantly being received from the parents and friends of the children are a strong evidence of the felt necessity for such an institution, as well as of the high estimation in which it is held by them, and the pleasure expressed by all who were present on the occasion of the distribution of prizes, encourages the committee and friends to hope that the statement of the fact that the present subscriptions fall considerably short of the current expenditure, will induce many to aid them in carrying on so important an institution.

REFUGE FOR HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.—A three days' Bazaar for the sale of fancy work, in aid of the funds of this institution, was recently held at the Hanover-square Rooms. The numerous stalls were decorated with flowers and coloured drapery; and upon several were displayed articles worked by the children of the Refuge. Among the ladies who presided at the stalls, and attended to patronise the sale, were the Duchess of Argyll, the Marchioness of Westminster, the Countess of Clarendon, Lady J. Lewis, Lady Radstock, the Hon. Mrs. M. Villiers, &c., &c.

This Refuge was established in July, 1852, for the reception, training, and instruction of homeless and destitute children from all parts of the kingdom. The premises, situate in Broad-street, St. Giles's, will accommodate upwards of 30 boys and 30 girls, and the total number admitted up to the end of last year was 210; of these 60 applied for admission of their own accord, 38 were received from other Ragged Schools, 45 admitted on the application of their friends, 33 brought by missionaries and scripture readers, 19 found in the streets in a state of destitution, 9 sent by magistrates from the police courts, and 6 sent by chaplains of prisons on their discharge. The total number which had left the Refuge from its opening till 31st December, 1854, was 147; of whom a large number had emigrated, many had been restored to their friends, several sent to service, and some of the boys had entered her Majesty's navy and the merchant service. The expenses of the past year were about 700*l.*, but the receipts had been at least 300*l.* less, and to make good this, and liquidate the 1,000*l.* due on the building, great exertions were required on the part of the friends of the institution, and it was hoped that the receipts of this bazaar would be mainly instrumental in effecting that desirable object.

Religious Societies.

THE SCOTCH GENERAL ASSEMBLIES.

The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland concluded its ten-days' annual sittings at Edinburgh, on Monday, the 4th of June.

The chief public question that came before the Assembly was the question of education in connection with the bill of the Lord Advocate, to establish a national system of education in Scotland, and the bill of Mr. Stirling, to augment the salaries of the parish teachers and improve the parish schools.

The Rev. Dr. Cook (Haddington) read the report of the Education Committee, giving the statistics of the schools upheld by the General Assembly, and which, in addition to the parish schools, are connected with the church of Scotland. It stated that in addition to the normal institutions of Edinburgh and Glasgow, the Assembly schools (which are chiefly in the Highlands and islands) were 181 in number, that the salaries paid to the teachers by the committee amounted to 3,498*l.*, and that their whole emoluments were 8,246*l.*, the average income of the male teachers (158 in number) being about 50*l.* 18s.; and of female teachers (13 in number) 27*l.* 12s. Fifty-nine of the teachers held Government certificates. About 1,060*l.* had been paid towards the scheme in the form of Privy Council grants. There were about 14,000 children attending the Assembly Schools, being 400 more than were reported last year, while there were 2,000 separate Sabbath scholars attending them. Dr. Cook stated that the Presbyteries of the church had last year examined 2,599 schools in Scotland, a work which would have occupied 17 inspectors, and under the Lord Advocate's scheme cost the country about 17,000*l.* for salaries and travelling expenses.

The Rev. Dr. Cock (St. Andrews) read the report of the committee appointed to watch over the education bills before Parliament. It stated that they had taken measures by deputation, by petition, and otherwise, to oppose the Lord Advocate's bill, and to promote the measure of Mr. Stirling. The Rev. Doctor addressed the assembly on the subject, urging that any national system of education to be tried should be on a religious basis, that the eminent and unexampled success of the parish school system entitled it to consideration in framing a national measure, and that education ought to be extended on the principles of that system. He cited a Treasury minute of 1838, establishing schools in the Highlands, to show how the Government then recognized the value and merits of the parish schools:—"In applying this principle it does not become necessary to establish any new system of education, but to extend the principle of the Scottish parochial schools, which have already not only been the source of good in that part of the united kingdom, but have laid down a mode of education worthy of imitation elsewhere." He maintained that the system that would be established under the Lord Advocate's bill would not provide any security for religious teaching, and cited testimony from America as to the baneful effects said to be produced there on large classes of society by the extrusion of religious teaching from the schools. He denied that there was such a flood of ignorance and crime in Scotland as the Lord Advocate in promoting his bill, had indicated, and adduced statistics to show that the number at present receiving education in Scotland was in the proportion of 1 in nearly 6½, while in England it was 1 in 8; and that Scotland was freer of crime than England in the proportion of about 7 to 6.

The Rev. Dr. Grant, ex-Moderator, moved the following resolution, in reference to the bill of the Lord Advocate:—

"The General Assembly find that, while the bill violates the securities provided by statutes and solemn national compacts, for maintaining the connection of the church of Scotland with, and her superintendence over, the national schools, and which has resulted in the education of youth in the principles of religion as contained in the recognised standards of the church, it substitutes no definite or efficient security for the preservation of the religious character of the schools, and is otherwise wholly objectionable; and they, therefore, resolve to petition in the strongest terms against the same."

The Rev. Doctor also proposed that the Assembly should petition in favour of Mr. Stirling's bill.

The Rev. Professor Robertson, in a lengthened speech, expressed his agreement with the Assembly in opposing the bill, as violating subsisting compacts with the church, and as affording no security for religious education, but stated that this was a subject on which the public voice demanded legislation, and on which he wished to see some measure passed by which religion, as consonant to the wishes of the people, should be taught, and the rights of conscience, at the same time, respected. The Rev. Doctor also set forth the grounds on which he wished to see education extended, on a denominational basis, as preferable to any other, and on something like the principles of Sir John Pakington's bill.

The resolutions proposed by Dr. Grant were unanimously agreed to.

The Free Church Assembly, which separated on Tuesday, had the education bills under discussion on Monday.

The Rev. Dr. Candlish moved that the Assembly should petition against Mr. Stirling's bill, in regard to which he supposed they would be quite unanimous. (Cries of "Agreed.") He also moved that they should petition in favour of the bill of the Lord Advocate, declaring that they approved generally of the measure, but that they were desirous that such additional security for the religious instruction to be given in the schools, as well as for the religious and moral characters of the teachers, should be introduced into it as might be consistent with the principles on which it was based. The Rev. Doctor expressed his preference for a national system, from the inadequacy of denominational efforts, and from the belief that the body of the Scottish people were substantially agreed on religious matters. He would like to see some additional guarantees for religious teaching under the bill, but would not, for want of these, oppose it; for he, for one, would hold it to be a blessed day for Scotland when the Lord Advocate's bill should pass into law. The Government and the Lord Advocate had a very difficult part to play, an exceedingly difficult problem to solve, and he must say that, after the most careful study he had been able to give, both last year and this, to the measure introduced by the Lord Advocate, he must say that it appeared to him to be on the whole, and in the circumstances, one of the most skilful, and one of the wisest, and one of the most beneficial measures ever brought into the British House of Commons. (Cheers.)

Digitized by Google

Dr. HANNA seconded the adoption of the petitions.

The Rev. Mr. WILSON, Dundee, and others, dissented from the motion to approve of the Lord Advocate's bill, chiefly on the ground that it did not provide sufficient religious security. But no counter motion was made, and that of Dr. Candlish was therefore carried.

On Monday Evening, Dr. CANDLISH gave in the report of the Free Church education scheme.

The report stated that there were this year 439 congregational schools, compared with 430 last year; 142 side or district schools, as compared with 168 last year; 17 missionary schools, as against 15 last year; 5 grammar schools, and 2 normal schools—total, 605; in addition to which there were 30 industrial schools. The number of teachers was 642; the number of scholars attending the ordinary day-schools was 56,840; and taking into account the normal schools, and a proportionate estimate of scholars not returned, they had this year 75,904 attending all their schools, as compared with 71,190 last year. As to the funds, it was stated that the sum contributed last year was 12,672*l.*, and that the amount available this year was 13,400*l.*, an increase attributable to larger Government grants.

The Rev. Doctor remarked that he had no sympathy whatever with those who spoke of any coming national system as a relief to the Free Church. He did not think that they could lay their hand on the fund and say that it was available for any other purpose, when it was set free from the education scheme; and, more than this, he thought that the Free Church was the only church in the country that had anything whatever to lose by the passing of the Lord Advocate's bill, or of any bill with a similar tendency. He believed that if he had a few more years to work their education scheme on its present footing, he would place the Free Church at the very head of the educationists of Scotland, if, indeed, it was not in that place already. He could not, therefore, endure the notion of their hailing the passing of the Lord Advocate's bill, or any other bill of the sort, as a relief to the Free Church. He held that they were now in a position to lay on the altar of patriotism, and on the altar of the thorough training of the young in Scotland, a far greater offering than the established church, or any other party of men, could lay down. He believed that even alongside a national system, the Free Church would still find work to do, in the extension and improvement of education, that would sufficiently engross their educational resources, and enable them still to be pioneers in the cause of education.

On the motion of Mr. WILSON (Dundee), the report was unanimously approved.

Schools.

SCHOOLMASTERS' ASSOCIATION.

A large meeting of schoolmasters and schoolmistresses took place at the Sanctuary, on the 2nd of June, to hear an address from Mr. J. C. Buckmaster, on the importance of elementary science as a branch of national education. He commenced his address by shewing that the kind of education generally given to the children of the middle and working classes was in no way adapted to the practical requirements of life. In our ordinary schools boys were taught a little arithmetic, a little geography and history, and perhaps a little grammar. In what were called the better class of schools, boys were kept thumbing Latin and Greek grammars to the exclusion of almost every other kind of knowledge; and at the age of 14 or 15 they went into the world without a particle of useful available information. What was the result? Disappointment and discontent; labour was tedious and irksome, because they were unable to interpret its laws, and strikes, lock-outs, combinations, and improvident habits were the natural consequences of this ignorance. The common phenomena around them was a blank. The book of nature was open, but its pages were without consolation or instruction. After pointing out the advantages of general acquaintance with science, especially those sciences which bear directly upon industrial pursuits, he sketched out a plan by which regular instruction in science might be given in elementary schools. When persons talked of teaching common things, they often forgot that a considerable acquaintance with science was necessary for the successful teaching of common things. A subject which is only imperfectly understood by the master cannot be properly taught, he therefore suggested that there should be separate masters to teach science, as it was unreasonable to expect one man to teach every thing efficiently, except in very rare cases. He then alluded to the great want of suitable mechanical apparatus and text books. Every school ought to have good models of machines in common use, not for ornament, but for the purpose of instruction. A good working model of a steam engine, so that it could be attached to other models such as a common pump, a crane, a system of pulleys, a paddle-wheel, &c., all this might be done with great practical benefit. Chemistry he regarded as the most important of the sciences, and one which could be easily taught in most schools. Metallurgical operations, the manufacture of gas, dyeing, bleaching, printing, brewing, cooking, the Davy lamp, respiration, and combustion, were all intimately connected with chemical science. The experiments gave the subject additional interest and fixed the facts permanently on the mind. In a short time the boys obtain a great amount of useful information; their ingenuity will be exercised; they will begin to construct apparatus and perform experiments. I am not speaking, said he, imaginatively, I am telling you what actually takes place at a school in Wandsworth, which has recently been established with great liberality, for the express purpose of teaching the applications of science to the industrial purposes of life. This school has been most successful; it is well attended by the children of artisans and tradesmen. In teaching science the master should strive to teach a little thoroughly, rather than a great deal superficially. He then referred to what he described as the sciences of observation—natural history, botany, and geology. The last two sciences, he thought, might be developed to a very considerable extent, especially in the country. Boys should be encouraged to make collections of the characteristic natural productions of the neighbourhood—a small collection of plants, stones, insects, &c. Prizes should be awarded to the boys who made the best classification. By these means you would be laying the foundation for those habits of thoughtfulness and observation which would be a never-failing source of happiness and delight. To teach a boy that which will be useful to him as a man—to give him that knowledge which will enable him to adapt himself with little inconvenience to the varied circumstances of life—to inculcate habits of self-reliance and self-respect—to provide a support for his weakness and imperfection—to raise and refine his thoughts by the contemplation of nature and the progress of human knowledge, is, in my opinion, the highest and holiest mission in which man can be engaged.

The address occupied upwards of an hour, and was listened to with great attention.

THE UNITED ASSOCIATION OF THE SCHOOLMASTERS OF GREAT BRITAIN.—This association, which on the 1st of June held the annual meeting of its members and friends at St. Martin's-hall, Long Acre, was instituted at the close of 1853, the discussions and correspondence which had appeared in the various educational periodicals during the year, having shown that there existed among the elementary schoolmasters of Great Britain a widely-spread desire for a general union of the members of their profession. By its constitution, the United Association embraces all teachers, both of public and private schools, who acknowledge "the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity," and "the sufficiency of Holy Scripture as the rule of faith and practice," and who regard the Bible as "the only secure basis of true education." The general object of the association is "to advance and systematize the profession of teaching, and thereby to improve and extend elementary education," and for the attainment of this object the association seeks to establish a connexion among the various local associations of schoolmasters in Great Britain, and to give them unity of action. The association also proposes to concentrate the talent and experience of the whole body of elementary instructors on the improvement of professional knowledge and the advancement of educational literature by means of reading papers on subjects connected with education, and by discussions at general meetings; the information thus elicited being afterwards disseminated among the members generally. With a view to the attainment of the same end, a permanent exhibition of specimens of educational books, maps, diagrams, models, and apparatus is now in course of formation. This exhibition will be open to the inspection of members of the association at certain times, and will obviously afford them valuable aid in the pursuit of their profession.

Ragged Schools.

ST. PANCRAS RAGGED SCHOOL.—The annual meeting on behalf of these schools was held on the 14th of June, at the Free Church, Burton-street, Burton-crescent, the Rev. Canon Dale, M.A., in the chair.

The report stated that the committee had not only carried on the operations of former years, but had extended them considerably. A free infant-school had been opened during the year, under a trained mistress, for children under eight years of age. The number on the books was 105; average attendance, 50. The evening school for girls was opened five evenings in the week, for general education, needlework, and scriptural instruction; average attendance, 36. One girl had obtained a prize from the Ragged School Union, and three had emigrated. A mothers' class was held once a week, at which the attendance was about 40. There was also an adult class for teaching reading, &c. The boys' day school had been attended by an average of 50. The boys had made great progress in useful learning. The provident fund had increased during the year, £13 16s. 10d. having been deposited. The Sunday-school was attended by about 85 boys and girls. The girls were employed in industrial occupations during the week. The most destitute of the boys are sent to the industrial school in Britannia-court. They are supplied with food, and are employed in chopping firewood, &c. The Shoe-black Society had employed eight of the boys during the year. The subscriptions amounted to £40 18s.; donations, £12. The total expenditure amounted to £271 7s. 8d., leaving a balance due to the treasurer. The report was adopted.

Digitized by Google

DOLPHIN-COURT RAGGED SCHOOL AND GIRL'S REFUGE, 2 AND 3, GUN-STREET, SPITALFIELDS.—A Ladies' Bazaar of useful and ornamental work was held on the 20th of June, and two following days, in the institution, under the immediate patronage of the Countess of Shaftesbury and other Ladies of distinction, for the purpose of raising a fund for liquidating the debts incurred by the recent enlargement of the premises. The school-room was tastefully decorated on the occasion, and well provided with a profusion of elegant articles of needlework. This institution was one of the first established in London, and is certainly an effectual medium for ameliorating the condition of the poor; by its instrumentality, free instruction is given to about three hundred lads, girls, and infants, three times daily, and on Sundays twice, and a home is provided for girls under 16, in which they are trained for situations.

Reformatories.

METROPOLITAN INDUSTRIAL REFORMATORY.—The second annual meeting of this Reformatory was held on Thursday, June the 21st, in the School-room of the Institution, Grove House, Brixton Rise. His Grace the Duke of Argyll took the chair at seven o'clock. The room was crowded to excess, and on the platform we observed The Right Hon. Mr. Baron Parke, C. Cowan, Esq., M.P., for Edinburgh; Hon. Charles Howard; Revs. W. Raven, M'Connell Hussey, H. J. Ash, J. Cohen, J. H. Moran, R. F. Spencer, G. Eastman; Mr. Thomas Wright, the prisoners' friend, and others interested in this important movement.

The chairman expressed the great pleasure he felt in taking part in this great contest, as it might be called. There was not a movement of more importance than the Reformatory movement, yet he had been informed that all the institutions of this class were very much in want of support. There was no subject more pleasing to the benevolent mind than a retrospect of the penal enactments of the last half-century; and it cannot be said that they err on the side of severity. There were a vast number of writers who had maintained that every kind of punishment should be reformatory; and there was no doubt that the reformation of the criminal ought to be the one main object of punishment. The report just read very properly alluded to a subject which had naturally attracted a very great deal of public attention, the cessation of the system of transportation. That system, as formerly carried out, offered a facility for getting rid of the criminal, and took away the trouble of reforming him. Reformation in prisons alone must be defective. In all the cases in this institution, the young men came voluntarily, with the hope that, by obeying the rules of the place and good behaviour, they would be emigrated to a new country, with a clear character to begin the world anew; but under the prison system, the only hope a prisoner could have, was that of getting out—to get in again. After a few remarks on the ticket-of-leave system, he went on to say, that it was a mistake to suppose that criminals were a class by themselves; for if the barriers were removed which surrounded our own conduct, none of us would be sure of our actions. A very distinguished judge had corroborated the idea that a large proportion of the criminal population depended on the circumstances under which they were brought up, and the connexions among whom they were thrown; there were hundreds now leading a life of vice and crime who were willing and anxious to reform, but had hitherto been unable to find an asylum; they could now come to a reformatory institution, and receive food, clothes, and lodging for their labour; and for their good conduct a prospect of emigrating free from all old associations and connections. His Grace would therefore look with hope for a liberal support for all institutions of this class; to assist them was a sacred obligation, and within easy reach of all; and reclamation was the whole object of the Christian religion; the Scriptures point to reformation in numerous instances; several passages had been referred to in the report; he would venture to name one more, which would probably never be fully understood until the last great day; "There is joy in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance."

The Hon. Charles Howard proposed the first resolution—"That the Report just read be adopted, printed, and circulated."

The Right Hon. Mr. Baron Parke, who then took the chair, (his Grace being compelled to attend to other engagements) said, the noble duke had entirely exhausted the subject of moral reformation; but he was anxious to assist, in any manner in his power the founder of this institution, Mr. Geo. Moore, and to manifest his conviction of the importance of reformatory institutions. The grand object of punishment was repressing crime: criminals, after being years in prison, are only turned out again loose upon society, to continue their depredations; but by the aid of this and similar institutions all this could be prevented. He hoped they would speedily be enabled to carry out to the fullest extent a maxim of Lord Bacon of putting good intention into good effect.

S. Caverley, in proposing the second resolution, which was seconded by the Rev. M'Connell Hussey, M.A., said it was impossible to look at the present state of the criminal population without deep anguish, and feeling great interest in this vast moral ruin. The state of the outcast, their bringing up, and mental culture, ought to be seriously looked into, and we were bound to ameliorate their condition to the uttermost; then might we hear them sing praises and songs of thankfulness to their Creator. Some cases were next instanced, to show the great success which had attended the endeavours of this and other committees, and our path clearly pointed out that we should proceed with earnestness and zeal. We have the authority of Christ in the case of the thief on the cross, who desperate as he was, was accepted by the Lord. We have the assurance that if we pursue the right path God will surely aid us. Let us reform the thief; it is Christianity alone which raises him up; let us draw the thief to that state in which he shall ask, What is this Christianity, which brings about such changes? let us compel them to come in, for so shall we be able to know we have plucked a brand from the furnace.

Mr. Thomas Wright said, Reformatory institutions are a great blessing to society, and the means of saving many poor creatures from utter destruction. He knew that many who had broken the laws of God and man were born of dishonest parents, and bred in dishonest ways; many who are in prison ask for employment when they go out, but there is none to give; and they are obliged to turn again to the same dishonest ways of living. These institutions were happily the means of saving many, and the success which had hitherto attended them was a great encouragement to go on. The present state of prisons, and the treatment of prisoners was then contrasted with the system as carried on in reformatories, where kindness and sympathy took the place of harshness and severity; some statistics were also gone into, shewing that in 18 cases out of 20 prisoners, the bad examples of their parents had brought them to their present low state. The speaker then made reference to the object of his present visit to London, and earnestly hoped that all connected with these institutions might be blessed by God both in this world and in the next, where there is no pain, no temptation, and sin is done away with.

Charles Cowan, Esq., M.P., next addressed the meeting, referring to Dr. Thomas Guthrie's Ragged School and Refuge, and making some remarks on sanitary reform. He then moved the next resolution, "Adherence to present plan."

The Rev. J. H. Hatch, Chaplain of the Wandsworth House of Correction then spoke.

The meeting was afterwards addressed by Rev. J. Cohen, M.A., and Geo. Moore, Esq., and several resolutions were carried, proposing to continue and increase the working of this institution; and after a vote of thanks to the Chairmen of the evening, the Doxology was sung, and the meeting broke up.

The sum collected was, we believe, about £70.

Hospitals.

HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION, BROMPTON.—The annual general meeting of the governors of the above valuable charity was held on the 1st of June, at the institution, Brompton; the Earl Manvers occupying the chair. The report read by the secretary stated that the progress of the hospital continued exceedingly satisfactory. During the year, 416 patients had been admitted into the wards, of whom 281 had been discharged more or less relieved, 45 died, and 90 remained in the hospital. The number of new out-patients during the same period was 3,641. The daily attendance of out-patients averaged 101. The newly-erected eastern wing had been furnished and opened, by which the beds had been increased from 90 to 220. This would increase the expenditure of the charity from £4,500 to about £8000 per annum. When the number of recipients was taken into consideration, it would be found that the average cost of each bed would be £37 a year, instead of £50, which was the average cost of each bed with a smaller number of patients.

The report, after announcing several legacies, proceeded to state, that the Committee had purchased the estate on the west side of the hospital, which would afford the means of recreation to the patients, while it placed the erection of buildings in that direction entirely under the control of the Committee. The report having been adopted, a request was made that Lord Manvers would allow one of the wards to be named after him, in acknowledgment of his warm support of the charity, after which the meeting broke up.

Digitized by Google

SAMARITAN FREE HOSPITAL.—The second anniversary festival of the Samaritan Free Hospital for Women and Children, situate at 27, Orchard-street, Portman-square, was given on the 15th of June, at the London Tavern, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, who was supported by Sheriff Sir Charles D. Crosley, Mr. E. Ball, M.P., Mr. H. Brown, Mr. Barnard, and other gentlemen. The Samaritan Free Hospital was established in 1847, for the treatment of the diseases of women and children, and for the reception, as in patients, of poor and destitute females suffering from diseases peculiar to their sex. They are admitted without letter, the only passport being sickness and poverty. Upwards of 62,000 have been thus relieved; and last year more than 7,000 patients were attended at the hospital. To embrace all that is required by the particular objects of the institution, it is divided into several departments;—1. An hospital for the reception of poor women afflicted with diseases incidental to their sex. 2. An out-door department, for the medical and surgical attendance of women and children in all cases of disease. 3. A maternity department, for the attendance, at their own homes, of poor married women during their confinement. 4. A samaritan fund, from which loans of baby-linen, bandages, &c., are granted, and arrowroot, cocoa, and other comforts supplied to the truly necessitous. The Lord Mayor, after disposing of the usual loyal and patriotic toasts, proposed the "Society," and made a forcible appeal on behalf of its objects, which was responded to by a subscription of £250.

MISS NIGHTINGALE AND THE SCUTARI HOSPITALS.*

Miss Nightingale, in appearance, is just what you would expect in any other well-bred woman who may have seen perhaps rather more than thirty years of life; her manner and countenance are prepossessing, and this without the possession of positive beauty; it is a face not easily forgotten, pleasing in its smile, with an eye betokening great self-possession, and giving when she wishes a quiet look of firm determination to every feature. Her general demeanour is quiet, and rather reserved; still I am much mistaken if she is not gifted with a very lively sense of the ridiculous. In conversation she speaks on matters of business with a grave earnestness one would not expect from her appearance. She has evidently a mind disciplined to restrain, under the principles of the action of the moment, every feeling which would interfere with it. She has trained herself to command, and learnt the value of conciliation towards others and constraint over herself. I can conceive her to be a strict disciplinarian; she throws herself into a work as its head;—as such she knows well how much success must depend upon literal obedience to her every order. She seems to understand business thoroughly, though to me she had the failure common to many 'Heads'—a too great love of management in the small details, which had better, perhaps, have been left to others. Her nerve is wonderful; I have been with her at very severe operations, she was more than equal to the trial. She has an utter disregard of contagion; I have known her spend hours over men dying of cholera or fever. The more awful to every sense any particular case, especially if it was that of a dying man, her slight form would be seen bending over him, administering to his ease in every way in her power, and seldom quitting his side till death released him.

I have heard and read with indignation the remarks hazarded upon her religious character. I found her myself to be in her every word and action a Christian; I thought this quite enough. It would have been, in my opinion, the most cruel impertinence to scrutinize her words and acts, to discover to which of the many bodies of true Christians she belonged. I have conversed with her several times on the deaths of those whom I had visited ministerially in the hospitals, with whom she had been when she died. I never heard one word from her lips that would not have been just what I should have expected from the lips of those whom I have known to be the most experienced and devout of our common faith. Her work ought to answer for her faith; at least none should dare to call that faith in question, in opposition to such work, on grounds so weak and trivial as those I have seen urged. That she has been equally kind and attentive to men of every creed; that she would smooth the pillow and give water to a dying fellow-creature who might own no creed, I have no doubt; all honour to her that she does feel that hers is the Samaritan's—not the Pharisee's work. If there is blame in looking for a Roman Catholic priest to attend a dying Romanist, let me share it with her—I did it again and again.

Those who walked that field of suffering had too many pressing calls on every energy which could be enlisted, to save pain to the body, to stop to question the faith of the sufferers. It was not the least frightful of the many features of that awful scene that the demand for active physical help did sadly interfere with the aid which would have been cheerfully given in higher matters. We all did what we could in both. But this was a hospital, Miss Nightingale and her staff were nurses, cooks, purveyors; they were not, they could not be, but in a very minor degree, missionaries. Although to the last I myself gladly seized every opportunity of praying with, or reading to, any dying man, I was soon obliged to give up devoting myself to that work, for I felt that this could be done by others; there was a daily increasing demand upon me in some other important matters, which few beside myself, from circumstances, could have undertaken.

I do not think it is possible to measure the real difficulties of the work Miss Nightingale has done, and is doing, by the mere magnitude of the field and its peculiarly horrible nature. Every day brought some new complication of misery, to be somehow unravelled by the power ruling in the Sisters' tower. Each day had its peculiar trial to one who had taken such a load of responsibility, in an untried field, and with a staff of her own sex, all new to it. Hers was a post requiring the courage of a Cardigan, the tact and diplomacy of a Palmerston, the endurance of a Howard, the cheerful philanthropy of a Mrs. Fry or a Miss Neave; Miss Nightingale yet fills that post, and, in my opinion, is the one individual who in this whole unhappy war has shown more than any other what real energy, guided by good sense, can do to meet the calls of sudden emergency.

* Vide Scutari and its Hospitals, (from which the above sketch of Miss Nightingale is extracted) by the Hon. and Rev. Sidney Godolphin Osborne, published by Messrs. Dickinson, Bond-street.

VICTORIA COLLEGE, JERSEY.—The Queen has been pleased to grant the sum of 50*l.* annually, for the purpose of being given in rewards for the encouragement and promotion of education in Victoria College, Jersey.

THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

The following is the report of the Patriotic Fund Commissioners:—

WHITEHALL, JUNE 13.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

We, your Majesty's Commissioners for the formation and application of a Patriotic Fund, for the relief of the widows and orphans of the soldiers, sailors, or marines who may be killed, or may die on active service during the present war, now humbly beg to present to your Majesty a first report of our proceedings, and of the arrangements which we have deemed it expedient to make for giving an early effect to your Majesty's gracious intentions.

[Paragraph 2, under this head, mentions the plan adopted for the formation of local committees, and refers to appendix A.]

The unprecedented amount which, in the short space of six months, has been contributed in answer to that appeal is a most satisfactory proof of the eagerness with which your Majesty's subjects have embraced an occasion of testifying at once their loyal support of the great contest in which our country is engaged, and their recognition of the claims of those gallant men who may, unhappily, fall in it. A sum exceeding 1,000,000*l.* sterling has now been paid into the Bank of England to our account. Every class of the community has contributed liberally to the fund. On the one hand the nobility, the gentry, the great corporate mercantile bodies of the kingdom have proportioned their donations to the greatness of the occasion, and to their large share of the blessings bestowed by Providence upon this favoured land. On the other, we have found that the brilliant deeds of our countrymen in arms have awakened equal sympathy in every class of humble life, even among those whose generous impulses can be gratified only at the cost of privation and self-denial. Contributions of large amount have been received from agricultural districts and rural parishes, swelled by the spontaneous bounty of the peasantry. Artisans, domestic servants, workpeople, labourers, individually and in associations, have felt a patriotic pride, and a generous satisfaction in answering their Sovereign's appeal. In one striking instance, the inmates of the Reformatory Asylum, Smith-street, Westminster, having literally nothing of their own to give, denied themselves a meal, that its value might be offered as their gift. We deem it a fact deserving your Majesty's notice, that even the children of the poorer classes have very generally contributed their "mite" to enlarge the amount of the nation's bounty.

Your Majesty will be gratified to hear that the contributions have not been confined to Great Britain, or even to your Majesty's subjects. Very large sums have been received from British residents abroad. Among other contributions may be mentioned that of the Six Nation Indians, who have subscribed the sum of 100*l.* We have peculiar pleasure in reporting to your Majesty that the natives of many foreign countries also have spontaneously and largely contributed, and have accompanied their donations with kind expressions of sympathy for the sufferers, and testimony to their sense of the justice of the war in which your Majesty and allies are engaged.

We beg to submit, in Appendix B, a detailed account of the sums received in each month since the opening of the subscription, and a statement of the mode in which they have been invested.

The distribution of relief was commenced by the honorary secretaries in the month of November, 1854, under a sanction provisionally given to them for that purpose by one of your Majesty's Secretaries of State. Under this arrangement about 75 widows and 114 orphan children were actually receiving assistance at the period when we first entered upon the active discharge of the duties which your Majesty had been pleased to impose upon us.

Digitized by Google

[Paragraph 7 refers to the appointment of a finance committee.]

Upon a careful consideration of our powers, we are led to the conclusion that, while they do not exclude the widows and orphans of commissioned officers of the army, navy, and marines, yet, inasmuch as a provision has been made by your Majesty's pension warrant and compassionate allowances for the relief of claimants of that class, they cannot in general be considered as primary objects of the Royal Commission; consequently, we have deferred for the most part the claims of this class till the number and urgency of those of the primary classes—viz., those of widows and orphans of non-commissioned and petty officers, private soldiers, seamen, and marines, for whom no such provision exists, should be known and provided for. We are happy, however, to be able to report, that through the instrumentality of the Committee of Amateur Artists several sums of money have already been placed at our disposal for immediate distribution among the widows and orphans of all classes of officers. We have already offered our warm acknowledgments to the committee, and we have to report to your Majesty that the money has been applied in the relief of several pressing claims, and has elicited very grateful acknowledgments from the recipients.

[Paragraphs 9 and 10 refer to the cases in which applications were made for assistance, and allude to the estimate made of the probable number of widows and orphans who would require relief.]

The total number of widows of the primary class, who have actually applied for and received relief up to the 10th of May, 1855, falls considerably short of the number we estimated for above; it is 1,487; and, in connection with them are 1,802 children, exclusive of 33 children who have lost both parents.

[Resolutions follow, signed by the commissioners, in which allusion is made to the importance of educating orphan children, and the arrangements made with that view are described.]

APPENDIX A.

[This appendix describes the course adopted with respect to donations, which are to be sent to the office, No. 16 A, Great George-street, Westminster.]

APPENDIX B.

ACCOUNT OF SUMS RECEIVED SINCE THE OPENING OF THE SUBSCRIPTION, AND THE MODE IN WHICH THEY HAVE BEEN INVESTED.

	£.	s.	d.
RECEIPTS.—Amount of contributions brought to account at the Bank of England	989.921	1	2
Bills not yet due	61,524	5	6
Gross amount of the fund	£1,051,445	6	8

Among the receipts is the sum of 2,200*l.*, Patriotic Art Exhibition, special fund for widows of officers.

INVESTMENTS.

Total invested	£969,577	4	0

[Under this head are loans to various railway companies, &c.]

PAYMENTS.

Among the items under this head are the following:—

	£	s.	d.
Portion of collection at Van Diemen's Land, awarded for wives and families of soldiers	503	6	2
Portion of contributions from Victoria, New South Wales, awarded for wives and families of soldiers	500	0	0
Association for relief of Wives, &c., of Seamen and Marines, portion of collection at Van Diemen's Land	503	6	2
Allowances to widows of officers from fund arising from exhibition and sale of works of amateur artists at Burlington House	2,055	0	0

THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW.

A meeting of the members of the United Kingdom Alliance was held on May 30th in the large room of Exeter-hall, which was crowded to excess, there being between 4,000 and 5,000 persons present. On the platform were the Earl of Harrington, Alderman Sir R. W. Carden, Alderman Harrison, of Wakefield; Mr. Samuel Bowly, of Gloucester; Mr. Richard Hilditch, Mr. Samuel Pope, honorary secretary, and a number of highly respectable supporters of the movement.

Sir W. C. TREVELYAN, who occupied the chair, having briefly stated the object of the Alliance, which was for the total and immediate legislative suppression of the traffic in all intoxicating beverages :—

The Earl of HARRINGTON moved—

"That it is neither right nor politic for the State to afford legal protection and sanction to any traffic or system which tends to increase crime, to waste the national resources, to corrupt the social habits, and to destroy the health and lives of the people. That the traffic in intoxicating liquors, as common beverages, is inimical to the true interests of individuals, and destructive of the order and welfare of society, and ought therefore to be prohibited."

The noble Earl said that the present movement, which had originated in the State of Maine, formed an epoch in our history; it was the most important law ever passed at any time, or in any country. He would not except Magna Charta, the law which put a stop to African slavery, or the law which gave freedom of the press to 100,000,000 British subjects. He contended that the Maine Law contained the elements of all that was good. Eleven of the American States, occupying an area of 442,000 square miles, and containing a population of 8,000,000, were actually under that law; and there could be no doubt that very shortly the whole American empire would adopt it also. The object of the law was to prevent the sale of alcoholic liquors; it did not prohibit the use of them. He (the Earl of Harrington) was for preventing the distillation of spirituous liquors, except for medical, chemical, and certain manufacturing purposes. The sale of beer in public-houses he would prohibit, but he said this with no feeling of hostility to the publicans, who were as good as other people. He wished them to prosper, but he wished them to prosper for the advantage of the people, without selling poison.

Alderman HARRISON, of Wakefield, seconded the resolution.

Sir R. W. CARDEN moved—

"That the history and results of all past legislation, in regard to the liquor-traffic, abundantly prove that it is impossible satisfactorily to limit or regulate a system so essentially mischievous in its tendencies, while no consideration of private gain or public revenue can justify the upholding a system so utterly wrong in principle, suicidal in policy, and disastrous in result."

Sir R. W. CARDEN said, he did not attend as the champion of teetotalism, but for the purpose of supporting the Alliance. The Alliance reverenced the teetotallers, and he believed them to be a good and great ally to the cause; but the Alliance and the teetotallers were two separate bodies. In Scotland, experience proved that the closing of the public-houses on Sunday had operated most beneficially as respected the working classes, and materially added to the comforts of themselves and their families. Another speaker (Mr. Nicholson) had said that the public-house was the poor man's hotel. He (Sir R. W. Carden) denied this, and asserted that the gin palaces were made as attractive as possible for the purpose of seducing the poor man from his home, and spending in them the money which ought to be given to his family to provide them with the comforts and necessaries of life. Nearly all the poverty in the country arose from drink. Public-houses were formerly intended as resting-places for the weary traveller, but they had now become temples of iniquity and intemperance.

Mr. S. POPE seconded the resolution, which was spoken to by Mr. G. CRUIKSHANK, and carried unanimously amid much applause.

Mr. HOLDITCH moved, and Mr. BOWLY seconded the following resolution—

"That the legislative prohibition of the liquor traffic is perfectly compatible with rational liberty, and with all the claims of justice and legitimate commerce; and that, therefore, rising above class, sectarian, or party considerations, all good citizens should combine to procure an enactment prohibiting the sale of intoxicating beverages as affording most efficient aid in removing the appalling evil of intemperance."

A vote of thanks to the Chairman terminated the proceedings.

THE TICKET-OF-LEAVE SYSTEM.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS, Tuesday, June 5. (Before Mr. Serjeant Adams, Assistant Judge, and a Bench of Magistrates, at Clerkenwell.

As the learned Serjeant was about to leave the bench, on Monday evening, a man entered the court, and stated that he had been unable to obtain admission to Nash's Reformatory Institution for Adult Criminals at Westminster, to which he had been recommended by his lordship.

It transpired that, some short time ago, the learned Assistant-Judge was accosted in the street at Brighton by the prisoner, who solicited alms, not knowing the person whom he addressed. There was something in the man's demeanour which induced the learned Serjeant to question him, and he at once frankly admitted that he was a thief, and was then at liberty on a ticket of leave, adding, that he had no hope of ever gaining a livelihood by honest labour, because his former character was so well known that, wherever he was, he was hunted about as a convicted thief, and thus deprived of an opportunity of redeeming himself. The Assistant-Judge, upon this, desired him to call at a certain hour at the hotel he was staying at, and the man punctually attended. The Assistant-Judge then told him that with a view of putting his sincerity to the test, he would pay his fare to London, and give him a recommendation to Nash's Institution, where, if admitted he would have to undergo a probationary treatment on bread and water; to which he replied, that that would be no hardship; but what, he asked, was he to do with his wife? As he had made no previous mention of his being married, the Assistant-Judge was surprised at the avowal, and asked where the wife was. The man replied by introducing her, and she had the appearance of a decent, respectable woman. Satisfied by the production of the marriage certificate, that they were husband and wife, the Assistant-Judge said he would pay the fare of both of them to town, which he did, and furnished the man with the promised recommendation. The man presented himself at the institution, but was there informed, that according to the rules, no married man could be admitted; and having ascertained who his benefactor was, he appeared to inform his lordship of the result of his application.

Digitized by Google

The Assistant-Judge expressed his deep regret that such a case could not be admitted into the institution, and desired the man to attend this (Tuesday) morning.

At the opening of the court the man made his appearance.

The Assistant-Judge mentioned the circumstances to Mr. Payne, the barrister, and inquired of him, as one of the committee of Nash's Institution, whether he knew of any, or could suggest any other place where the man could be received or assisted, as he considered it a deserving case.

Mr. Payne said he was not aware at that moment, that he knew of any such place; but before the next session he would make inquiry and report the result to his lordship.

The man was then directed to attend at the next session, and he went his way.

Saturday, June 9.

The Assistant Judge in reference to the case of the ticket-of-leave convict who accosted him at Brighton, and who was refused admission to the reformatory at Westminster, because he was a married man, said that in consequence of the publicity which had been given to the circumstances, he had received a letter from a gentleman in the country, from which he had reason to hope that something would be done for the man's benefit.

Mr. Payne as one of the committee of the reformatory, said he regretted that the case did not come within the rules of the institution, as the man appeared to be deserving, and he was very glad that there was a prospect of something being done for him. The object of the reformatory was ultimate emigration, and if they were to undertake to send out married men, with their wives and families, their means would soon be exhausted, and their exertions crippled, whereas at present they successfully reclaimed and sent out unmarried men who had committed crime. As to the ticket-of-leave system, he begged permission to say, the public appeared to be now becoming aware of the serious evils connected with it, and public attention could not be called too much to the subject. It was very gratifying that Lord Lyndhurst and other high authorities had expressed their opinion against the system in the House of Lords, and it was to be hoped, for the sake of society, that some remedy would soon be applied.

The Assistant-Judge said he was one of the first to denounce this ticket-of-leave system when it was proposed, and he in turn was attacked and denounced for doing so, but the results proved that he was right in the view he took. No system could be devised more calculated to demoralize the whole kingdom, and it was really fearful to contemplate what the consequences of its operation would be even five years hence. When these men were discharged from gaol they had money given to them, and had the fare paid to convey them back to their old haunts and their old associates, with a post-office order for a further sum on their arrival. One of the first that came before him, after the system was in practice, received eight or ten pounds on being discharged, he was sent back to whose he had been a notorious thief, the worst part of St. Giles, and two days after his arrival he was detected picking pockets himself, and teaching a boy how to do the same thing. The evil consequences of the measure were becoming more apparent every day. A session or two back he tried a case of a very serious and brutal assault, committed by a gang of these liberated convicts and prostitutes, for the purpose of robbery. If the system was to continue it was much to be lamented, that instead of giving these men large sums on their discharge, and sending them back to the scene of their former career of crime, the money was not set aside for some institution where the truly penitent and deserving could be admitted, reformed, and ultimately sent out to some foreign settlement where they might become good and useful men, the want of some such institution being exemplified in a remarkable manner in the case under notice.

The man, whose case elicited these observations, was in court. He was directed to leave his address, and before quitting, he received a further proof, in shape pecuniary, of the learned serjeant's interest on his behalf.

NEW ORPHAN HOUSE, ON ASHLEY DOWN, NEAR BRISTOL.

Some time ago we quoted from the Athenæum a statement of so extraordinary a nature that, had not its accuracy been amply attested, it could not have been believed, relative to the way in which, without solicitation or effort of any kind, but simply by prayer and faith, a Mr. Müller, a poor, simple-minded man, living in Bristol, had raised upwards of £20,000 for the erection of an asylum in that place for orphans deprived of both their parents. Our Bristol Correspondent sends us the following account of the proceedings at a meeting held in that city on Friday, June the 8th, in the course of which Mr. Müller himself gave a narrative of the marvellous circumstances connected with the raising of the funds for the erection and support of this excellent institution;—

A series of three religious meetings, of an extraordinary and deeply-interesting character, were held at Bristol, on the evenings of Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday last, for the purpose of hearing from the Rev. G. Müller, the pastor of a sect meeting at Bethesda Chapel, Great George-street, a narrative of the Lord's dealings with him, in answer to faith and prayer, and especially with reference to the New Orphan House, on Ashley Down, near that city. No traveller into Bristol by the main turnpike road from Gloucester can fail to have been struck with an extensive pile of buildings, which stand, at once an ornament and a marvel, on the northern extremity of the borough. In answer to inquiry, he will find that in that institution 300 children, from early infancy up to seventeen and eighteen years old, are maintained, clothed, and educated, and that "solely through the efficacy of faith and prayer." When the Rev. G. Müller commenced the work, some ten or twelve years ago, he made no appeal to man, issued no prospectus, held no public meeting, made known no subscription list. He simply—according to his own statement—waited on the Lord in prayer, and having ascertained that His mind was favourable, he prayed for means, and waited for them to come to him, in the fullest faith that they would be vouchsafed to him. Marvellous as, in a worldly point of view, it may seem, the means did come in voluntarily, anonymously, and from all parts of the empire. Considerably more than £20,000 was amassed, the structure was raised, the children—all orphans, bereft of both parents—received into it, matron, nurses, and officers, schoolmasters and mistresses were appointed, and the work of maintenance, of education commenced, and that without a shilling of endowment, or a single patron, trustee, or annual subscriber. The work has since been carried on in the same way, support being derived from such casual funds as have been volunteered—almost always anonymously, and invariably without solicitation. The immediate object of the present meetings was to receive from Mr. Müller a statement of the Lord's dealings with him in relation to his intention to commence immediately the first of two other houses for the support of 700 orphans more. In communicating his intention, the rev. gentleman said:—Not only had he been already sustained in supporting 300 children bereft of both parents, in extending missionary objects, and distributing gospel tracts, but the Lord led him to contemplate the building of another Orphan Asylum, at an expense of £35,000, for 700 orphans more. For six months after the idea was presented to his mind, he never prayed to the Lord for means at all, but simply to ascertain what was the mind and will of the Lord. Thousands of prayers were brought before God, but not one for means. He prayed to find that it was not a snare for his own heart, and that he was not deluded by the devil, and graciously did the Lord answer him. Once resolved in his mind that he must build, he began to pray for means, and means came in. First he got a half-sovereign, and then up to a pound—the thirty-five thousandth part of what he needed was gained, and his heart was filled with gratitude. By-and-by he got up to £35, the thousandth part; and by and by again to the hundredth part—great was his cause for thanksgiving. Then larger contributions came in, and he got to the tenth part, the eighth, the sixth, the fourth. There was cause for more abundant thanksgiving, and for further waiting on the Lord. By-and-by he came to the third, the half, and now he had got more than that, for on the 26th of May his fund amounted to £23,059 17s. 8½d. Mr. Müller read his diary, which showed how the funds had come in cash and kind, and in sums varying in amount from 2½d. up to £5,700. All the contributions were anonymous, and some of them consisted of articles for sale, such as gold-dust, jewellery, trinkets, &c. One contribution was from California, another from Toronto, and there were others from Liverpool, Brighton, &c., but the great bulk was supplied from residents in Bristol. Never, from the first, had he been permitted to doubt the accomplishment of the work. More than once, had his faith and patience been severely tried, but graciously had they been sustained. Whenever disappointment seemed to cross him he remembered that his Father was in the work, and that God cared for poor orphans infinitely more than he did or could care, and that if the Most High did not see the time for the completion of the work, His servant might well afford to wait. Having now enough in hand to warrant him in proceeding, he had engaged architects, and should immediately commence the new asylum for 400 orphan girls. The work would be begun early in July; indeed, he might say, that it had been begun already, for on the 29th of May, they commenced the sinking of four wells. With regard to the time at which he would commence that for the remaining 300 he could state nothing definite now; but let no one suppose that it would not be commenced. By God's help the work would be accomplished. So unostentatiously and so quietly had Mr. Müller carried on his operations, that beyond a vague idea that he intended at some time, to enlarge his asylum, nothing was known of his intentions. How he has contrived to reach the hearts and minds of his donors is his mystery.—The Morning Advertiser.

HOSPITAL FOR JEWS AT JERUSALEM.—Sir Moses Montefiore is on his way to Jerusalem, where he intends founding a large hospital for his co-religionists.

Digitized by Google

Meetings, etc. for July.

Sunday, July 1.—A Sermon by the Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, in the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum Chapel, in aid of the Chapel endowment fund.

Tuesday, July 3.—The opening of the Asylum for Idiots' Earlswood, Red-Hill, Surrey, by H.R.H. Prince Albert.

Notices to Correspondents.

The present NEW SERIES of THE PHILANTHROPIST, is published by Messrs. Partridge, Oakey, and Co., Paternoster Row; and, owing to the suggestions made to us of the inconvenience attending fortnightly publications, will, in future, be issued on the first of every month.

Communications, books, reports, &c. for notice or review, to be addressed, free, to the EDITORS, care of Messrs. Partridge, Oakey, and Co.

Orders for the paper, or for advertisements, to be addressed to the Publishers.

Attention is called to the following scale of charges for advertisements:—

SCALE OF CHARGES.

	£	s.	d.
Five lines and under		2	6
Every additional line			4
A column	1	15	0
Half-page	2	5	0
A page	4	0	0

Blocks received. For any amount under £1, postage stamps received as cash.

The Philanthropist,

AND

PRISON & REFORMATORY GAZETTE.

JULY 1st, 1855.

If we had not been informed on the highest authority that "the poor shall never cease out of the land," it would still have been impossible to contemplate the natural constitution and fabric of society, without admitting, that there must of necessity be found in all nations, two classes—the rich and the poor; that is, those who have an ample sufficiency not only for the necessaries but also for the conveniencies of life—and those who, humanly speaking, are completely dependent on their physical and mental capacities, their health and reason; the failure of either reducing them at once to comparative, if not absolute want. In our own, as in many other countries, these two classes must be considerably amplified; and, while there will be found a third, or middle class, poor when compared with the rich, and rich when compared with the poor, it will also be perceived that the greatest extreme of contrast exists, and in the closest contiguity; for, while a large portion have a superabundance of riches, even more than can be of real benefit to themselves or their families, living in gorgeous palaces, "clothed in purple, and faring sumptuously every day," we have multitudes of others, like Lazarus absolutely destitute of the common necessaries of life, "desiring to eat of the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table." We are not now concerned with the various sources of prosperity, or the causes from which poverty may be said to arise—though we shall have somewhat to say to our readers about these on a future occasion; it is enough for our present purpose to assert, that while the natural constitution of Society remains as it is, the distinction of rich and poor will always exist in strong contrast. Individually speaking, such are the perpetual fluctuations of property that neither affluence nor poverty can be looked upon as of necessity permanent, and hence arises on the one hand the necessity for prudence and forethought, and on the other for diligence and industry. At present we have to deal with the broad fact that there will always be some to assist, and some to be assisted, rich and poor; and this distinction is, from its very nature, suggestive of those kind and sympathetic principles, which we are mainly to advocate, and productive of an ample field for that judicious exercise of them, which we shall endeavour to aid and cherish. The question then becomes of some importance, whether the numerical proportion of the destitute may not be considerably lessened, by a judicious exercise of the faculty of alleviating distress; and whether it is not on the other hand greatly augmented by indiscriminate alms-giving, uncontrolled by judgment or discretion. We are far too sensible of the solid and lasting pleasure which is to be derived from benevolent actions, to wish to obstruct the stream of charity in any way whatever; we desire rather to encourage it to the utmost, and yet to direct it in a right course, and to prevent as far as possible benevolence and good nature, from being imposed upon by the artful and designing, who abound in the metropolis, adepts in every species of hypocrisy, and existing solely upon their fraudulent exactions from the charity of the benevolent public. The valuable labours of the Mendicity Society in preventing and detecting impostures, will be gratefully acknowledged by all who are acquainted with their operations; and we are of opinion, that no ladies or gentlemen who are deceived either by beggars or begging letter-writers could fairly be entitled to pity, while the able services of Mr. Horsford, and his band, are within their reach, and at their service. But there is yet another difficulty of considerable magnitude and importance, in connection with benevolence, which we shall do our utmost to remove. We allude to the want of some proper and ready means of ascertaining what institutions or asylums may exist for the relief of specific and peculiar cases which may suddenly come before the notice of the benevolent. Thus, for example, at least six out of every ten, even of the inhabitants of London, would be completely ignorant of how to set about procuring a home for the homeless wanderer found in the streets; or to assist to any lasting purpose a weaker vessel fallen into sin and ruin, but anxious to escape. Many in such a case would be unwilling to mock wretchedness by saying, "Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled," without giving the things needful for the body; and; unable to see suffering without an effort to relieve it, or to ascertain the proper quarter for application, they are induced to give of their silver and gold, which too frequently is misused, and only adds to, or at best, but postpones for a short period, the misery it is intended to alleviate.

We hope ere long to be able to supply this deficiency by furnishing our readers with a complete and accurate account of the locality, object, character, and staff, of every benevolent or charitable Institution in the country; and in the meanwhile we shall gladly aid our correspondents in their search after information of this description. We look upon these institutions as constituting one of the principal elements of our country's glory; which, though often silently and unobtrusively working out their varied objects, are as a whole so far commensurate with the requirements of the people, as to impress us with the conviction that there is no phase of want or affliction, which would not plead successfully to the British public, and find a home provided for it by its philanthropy. Individually, however, they are far too isolated, too little acquainted with the existence, much more the doings of their fellow institutions; this ought not to be; they have one and all the same object in view, in some form or other to ameliorate the condition of mankind, and there should be union and close fellowship amongst them. It is scarcely possible to calculate the amount of good which would spring from any plan which shall be the means of bringing the secretaries or managers into occasional friendly contact with each other; the interchange of thoughts and ideas would go far to perfect the condition and operations of each. This has already been done to some little extent among the reformatories by the recent conference at the house of Robert Hanbury, Esq., jun., the contingent benefits of which, now that the subject is before Parliament we venture to say can scarcely be overrated. We desire to see a similar effort put in force in behalf of benevolent institutions of all kinds; thus while mutually assisting each other, they would give the public additional grounds for confidence in their contributions being properly expended, and we think the institutions themselves would become thence more known, and as a natural consequence, better appreciated and supported.

Digitized by Google

A SEPARATE SERVICE FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL CHILDREN.

THE advantages of Sunday-Schools are vast and varied. It would be difficult to enumerate, and impossible to imagine the social and religious benefits which our age and country have realized from Sabbath School instruction.

After a careful examination of the census returns, comparing the number of Sunday Scholars with the whole population, and especially with that portion of it which is within the few years of life usually called the "School Age," Mr. Edward Baines, of Leeds, arrives at the following conclusion: "These circumstances, some on one side, and some on the other, prevent us from forming an exact estimate; but the great and important fact is this, that the 2,407,409 children in Sunday-Schools, give an average of more than eight years of Sunday School instruction for the whole of the working class children; and though some stay more than eight years, some less, and a few never come at all, yet such is the average, and that average proves to us that at one time or another nearly all the working class children in our schools." It may be that Mr. Baines has over-estimated the number of children who frequent Sunday Schools, and the amount of time they spend in them; still the great and imposing fact remains, that an overwhelming majority of the children of the working class receive the benefit of Sunday School instruction for a considerable portion of their lives. Here then is a great moral achievement. The Sunday School has conquered the great difficulties which at first stood in its way. School accommodation generally exists in ample abundance; there are upwards of two hundred thousand teachers constant in attendance, and devoted in spirit to the work they willingly perform; these schools are sheltered by congregations of christians of all denominations; they are recognised by society as institutions of vast social and religious importance; their nature, claims and utility are commented on in the pulpit and by the press. Wind and tide are in their favour. "We have the children," says Mr. Baines, "just at the age when they are most susceptible of kindness, and most amenable to authority. We have the children before they become Sabbath breakers. We have them before they become drunkards. We have them, under our hands, within our walls, in presence of our Bibles, hearing our ministers. We have them on the right day in the right place, and under every good influence. We have them and yet we lose them." Here is a fact as astounding as it is humiliating. What is the cause of this failure? Here is a subject worthy of the strictest investigation, and which might with propriety occupy the thoughts of the most distinguished philanthropists and philosophers of the age. How different the state of things from the time when Robert Raikes commenced the new movement by establishing the first Sunday School. Then and for many years after, the great difficulty was to get the children, schools to accommodate them, and teachers to instruct them. Sixty years of zealous Christian labour have conquered these obstacles, and now the great difficulty is not how to get the scholars, but how to keep them.

The subject is too wide and deep to be disposed of in one article, and we will for the present only look at one of its features. There was doubtless much truth in what our correspondent "J. P. E." indicated in our last impression. There is evidently a deficiency in our educational institutions. The country is in want of places where young men and women may go and find recreation blended with improvement. But it is not our design now to investigate that phase of the subject, but to suggest an improved mode of interesting and instructing Sunday School scholars.

No doubt the means of education generally resorted to at Sunday Schools are too mechanical for the warm and volatile nature of children. Too much attention is bestowed in communicating facts and creeds, and not sufficient attention devoted to arresting the voluntary attention, and adapting the instruction to the peculiar constitution of young people. The primary object of the teacher should be to develope and strengthen a good character in the child, and to do this he must study child-life, and make himself familiar with the best and speediest modes of getting at the understanding and heart. True education consists as much in unfolding the child's nature as supplying it with moral and spiritual intelligence.

One great fault in Sunday School education is, that of compelling the scholars to attend divine service immediately after they have been to school. The general rule, we believe is for the school to open about an hour and a half before the hour of service, and when the usual routine of Sunday School teaching has been performed, the scholars are removed to Church or Chapel, where they have to listen to singing, praying, and preaching not designed for, or adapted to their understandings and feelings. This we consider a vital mistake.

In the first place, it is tedious for children after they have been to school to attend service. It would be tedious for adult people to do so. Suppose, for instance, that it were compulsory that all who attended service on Sunday mornings, should attend another immediately after. How very few would like such restraint. But what if after attending one service they were obliged to attend another less interesting and not adapted to their capacities and sympathies—a service designed for minds differently constituted, and moved by different impulses? Why, nine out of every ten would protest against it, and they would either not go at all, or go with minds and dispositions soured with a sense of restraint. But this very thing is done every Sunday and frequently twice a day, in thousands of instances. If such compulsory instruction would be tedious to adults, how much more must it be to young people whose natures incline them to change, and dispose them to thirst after variety. The service being designed for men and women, is, of necessity, unadapted to children, and is consequently uninteresting and unprofitable. "How can a sermon," asks a reverend gentleman, "intended for grown people and advanced christians be otherwise than wearisome and useless to children? How can they join with heart and soul in the prayers and praises of the sanctuary when both the words and the thoughts lie altogether beyond the horizon of their mental and spiritual vision? Is it fair to expect any very great results from means so little agreeing with the end? that minds will be opened, or hearts won by threatening looks and words; or that souls will be saved by sitting in vacant stillness? Have we not in our treatment of children, and especially of the little ones, been trying too much of the dame-school style? Have we not been trying to make them passive and quiet, when we might have known that children will be active and volatile? If we have repressed their busy little minds, instead of turning their thoughts and feelings into the right channel,—have made it a great virtue to keep them silent and almost motionless for an hour or two together, when they ought to have been hearing us or asking us questions,—what wonder if under such discipline, they have taken an early dislike to religion, instead of associating it with all that is lovely, gladsome, and joyous?" Let any one who is in the habit of going to church or chapel where the school connected with it is imprisoned during divine service, examine into this matter and judge for himself, and he will find that this plan of Sunday school education is positively injurious. It is a reproach to Sunday schools that so many of their scholars should in after years become Sabbath-breakers, drunkards, and criminals. Such unfortunately is the fact, and it behoves all who are interested in these beneficent institutions and who are labouring for their success, to ascertain the causes of their failure, to look the facts full in the face, and deal with them with calm judgments and vigorous intentions.

"What," some people may ask, "would you do with the scholars during the hours of divine service? Would you protract the hours of education, or would you let them loose into the streets, the lanes, and the fields?" We would do neither the one nor the other; but we would have a separate divine service for the children, where they might sing, pray, and praise in a manner conformable to their youthful natures; where they might be addressed or preached to in a language they can understand, and in a style which should command their attention while it pleased and instructed them. The minds of children are always accessible to those who understand the way of addressing them; and such a teacher or preacher will use pictures, anecdotes, and familiar illustrations as mediums to convey his thoughts and sentiments to the minds and hearts of his youthful auditory. The devotional engagements should be simple; the hymns such as young souls can chime in with, and the addresses of a kind that will bring into full play a child's whole mind, imagination, heart, memory, and conscience. This is not a difficult thing to do; in fact, it is comparatively easy. In all Sunday schools, and connected with all congregations, are teachers who have an especial aptitude for addressing children; and were there a greater and constant requisition for them, the demand would, no doubt, create the supply.

Digitized by Google

If these special services became a distinctive feature in Sunday school education we have no doubt that Sunday schools would materially increase their influence for good, enhance their moral character, and afford an additional guarantee that so many children did not retrograde into ignorance and crime. It is of vital importance that Sunday schools, now they have grown so numerous and are so closely associated with the social and religious welfare of our people should be rendered as efficient as possible, and we feel a pleasure while we perform our duty in calling the attention of teachers and philanthropists to this feature in Sunday school instruction.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF PATENTS FOR INVENTIONS.

As the noblest aim of Philanthropy is the prevention of crime and its consequences, every effort to divert the minds of our fellow creatures from the various incentives to crime, the blandishments of vice, or whatsoever tends to the moral degradation and ruin of man—and to put forth allurements tending to an opposite result, should receive the most prompt and cheerful support. Organizations for the reformation of criminals, the restoration of the fallen, and the alleviation of human suffering, are in the highest degree valuable, as they interpose between man and utter ruin and despair; and they will be indispensable so long as "the thoughts of man" shall continue to be "only evil continually;" in short, while human frailty obtains. But these organizations are after all but secondary, and in so far as they are so, come short of the value of any preventive measures, however feeble. It is easier to give a direction to a tender twig, than to divert it from its bent after it has assumed the strength and vigour of maturity—it is easier to keep a child from evil habits, than to eradicate them when formed—in short, prevention is at all times better, and we would add, easier than cure. Medicines may be very valuable in curing or in checking diseases, but he is unquestionably best off who requires no medicine at all. Hence we hail with gladness and gratitude any movement in the direction of providing the classes most susceptible of improvement, with interesting and useful instruction. It should not be forgotten that the rich and the poor are in mutual dependence on each other; and if the poor labour to obtain a living, the rich live by the labours of the poor—and further, that mere unassisted strength in the poor, would not supply the rich with the luxuries they require. A man's arm may be strong, even to the breaking of a bow of steel, but it would be as valueless as the power of the wild elephant, undirected by knowledge. Both the bodily powers, and the mental faculties, are undoubtedly the gifts of the wise ruler of the universe: but while the former remain for the most part as are bestowed, simply growing with the stature of the man, and may be said to come directly and immediately from on High—we find that with respect to the latter, the mediate influence of man has been permitted in all ages, and save in some remarkable instances, one man has ever been made the instrument of training the mind of another, either by literal or oral teaching, and it seems agreeable to the nature of things that it should be so. When therefore this training is neglected, and we find the mental faculties kept in darkness, or allowed to run wild under evil influences, a palpable duty seems to have been neglected by those upon whom that duty should fall. The feeling of responsibility on the part of the upper classes of society, towards their less fortunate fellow-men, has been largely developed of late years. Libraries, mechanics' institutions, lectures, &c., established for the improvement of the working classes, and in which noblemen themselves have not scrupled to take prominent parts, bear testimony to the growth of a better feeling; nor have these efforts failed to secure gratitude, or to be appreciated by those whom they are intended to benefit; and if doubt remained, as to the desire of these classes to advance in knowledge, the eager flocking of the people to the more improving parts of the Great Exhibition of 1851 would be sufficient to remove it. Bearing then these things in mind, we think the liberal provisions of the Patent Law Amendment Act, hold forth great encouragement, and should be received with grateful satisfaction, as being adapted if rightly managed, to become a powerful auxiliary to industrial education, and to this extent at least, to the advancement of popular morality.

By the Act in question it was provided that all Specifications (or Descriptions) of Patented and other legally-protected Inventions, with full Indexes, should be printed and published within a short period of their deposit in the Great Seal Office. A clause was also inserted empowering the Commissioners of Patents, to make donations of all their printed works, either to free libraries already formed, or to various local authorities, with a view to the formation of free libraries where none already existed.

Under this clause, most of the large towns in the empire have already experienced the advantage of possessing these invaluable stores of inventive literature.

It may be stated that they comprise between 6,000 and 7,000 Specifications of Modern Inventions, filed under the Act of 1852, and a considerable portion of the 14,359 Patent Specifications enrolled since the 14th year of James I. (1617), forming altogether about 400 volumes of Specifications, Indexes, and Illustrative Drawings.

While these records were imprisoned in the Enrolment Offices of Chancery, the working man was prevented from consulting that class of writings which more than any other concerned him in his daily work; for in these volumes he will find not only inventions marking the progress of scientific discovery during the past few centuries, but every improvement of value in manufactures and domestic arts; in the chemical processes of one class of operations and in the manipulatory processes peculiar to each branch of mechanical industry. From one end of the kingdom to the other, all these valuable records are now placed, within the reach of the humblest workman, free of all charge.

We record these facts as exhibiting a gratifying proof, not only of increased sensitiveness on the part of the Legislature, to matters affecting the interests of working-men, but of praiseworthy zeal on the part of the Commissioners of Patents in carrying out with so much promptitude the liberal policy thereby suggested.

OPENING FOR THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.—Two gentlemen—one a Spaniard by birth, the other an English merchant in Spain—called a few days ago upon a gentleman connected with a large mercantile house in London. They said that in Spain there is now more liberty than there is in France—they may circulate what books they please on religious matters (not English books, or works printed in England, but works published in Spain). These gentlemen are providing themselves with printing presses, and all the materiel of the power of the press, which they take with them on their return to Spain, and from which they intend to issue copies of the Bible and New Testament throughout the whole kingdom.

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

EDUCATION FOR ADULTS.

To the Editor of The Philanthropist.

Sir,—In your last number, a correspondent drew the attention of your readers to a deficiency in our educational institutions, under the head of "A Link wanted." I hope his suggestions will receive from teachers and philanthropists the attention they deserve. Your correspondent said that a goodly proportion of the grown-up population of the country enjoyed the privileges of a scanty Sunday or day-school education when they were young, but who, from want of opportunity or encouragement in after-life, when the cares and necessities of existence made their daily demands on them, frequently lost the love of knowledge or education which had been awakened in them at school. No doubt the statements of your correspondent were correct, and probably every one could confirm them by his own experience.

I think, Mr. Editor, there is another link wanting, and which might easily be supplied. We hear a great deal about the absolute necessity of educating the young; the nation is daily becoming more alive to this great work; hence we see rival plans advocated in pamphlets and from the platform; and our principal statesmen are competing with each other in their attempts to introduce something like a comprehensive scheme of education which shall answer some of the urgent wants of the age.

But in this storm of words and conflict of ambition to do something for the rising generation, we hear little or nothing of any plans to educate the uneducated adult population of the kingdom. Millions of our people were never privileged with any kind of education when they were young. They can neither read a text in the New Testament, nor write their own names. But any one extensively acquainted with these uneducated men and women know that a large proportion of them desire to be educated. How frequently do we hear a poor man or woman who can neither write nor read, say, "O, Mr. So-and-so, how I wish I knew as much as you do. O, how glad I should be if I could read books, or the newspaper, and write as well as you can." Exclamations of this sort are frequent, and they are as genuine as they are frequent. Now, Mr. Editor, from my knowledge of the working classes, I am perfectly satisfied that were schools established, in which they could be taught,—schools adapted to their dispositions and capacities,—many would gladly avail themselves of the proffered opportunity, and commence with ardour and earnestness to make up for lost time, and devote their unwearying attention to their self-improvement. It is an old saying and a true one "that we are never too old to learn;" and it is a great pity that any one should wish to be instructed without having the opportunity and the encouragement of instruction. In our great anxiety to educate the young, we have to some extent forgotten the claims of the old. By no means let us for a moment diminish the interest we feel towards the young; but do not let them absorb the whole of our attention. Education, to become national and universal, must permeate all ranks, ages, and localities.

Look, for instance, at the metropolis, or at our large cities and towns, where so many institutions and agencies are kept in motion for the education and elevation of the people, and we should seek in vain for any school where uneducated adults might go, without being ashamed to confess their ignorance, and where they might find means and instructors suitable to their peculiar condition. Speaking from my own experience, I cannot but think that thousands would cheerfully avail themselves of fit opportunities and appliances for emancipating themselves from the thraldom of ignorance. Like your correspondent J. P. E., who indicated a want in our educational institutions in your last number, I also call attention to a fact, with the hope that the practical philanthropy of the age will be sufficiently fertile to suggest means for supplying the deficiency.

Should this be done, I have no doubt that the public-house and the gin-palace would lose many of their frequent attendants, and the mechanics' institution, the Sabbath services, and the cottage fireside would be corresponding gainers. Besides, educating the adult population would of necessity be the best guarantee and stimulus for educating the rising generation.

Hoping that you will find room for this letter in your very useful columns,

I am, Mr. Editor,

A Friend to Universal Education.

Prison Discipline.

THE HISTORY OF PRISON DISCIPLINE IN ENGLAND.*—The chief of the earlier statutes against vagrancy were:—

The 7th Richard II. c. 5, passed in 1383.
The 11th Henry VII. c. 2, passed in 1496.
The 19th Henry VII. c. 2, passed in 1504.

By the first, justices and sheriffs, and the mayors, bailiffs, constables, and other governors of towns, are required to examine diligently all faitors (i.e. idlers) and vagabonds, and compel them to find surety for their good behaviour. If they commit a second offence, or cannot find surety, they are to be sent to the next gaol, to remain there until the coming of the justices assigned for the delivery of the gaols, who "shall have power to do upon such that which thereof to them best shall seem to be done by law."

By the second, which was passed for the purpose of mitigating the severity of the former, the power to commit to the gaol is taken away, and vagabonds and beggars are directed, for a first offence, to be kept in the stocks three days and three nights, on bread and water, and then sent out of the town. For a second offence, they are to be kept six days and six nights in the stocks, on like fare.

By the last of these statutes, such offenders are to be placed in the stocks for only one day and one night for a first offence, and three days and three nights for a second; and impotent or aged offenders are not to be placed in the stocks at all.

Such was the moderation of the law for the suppression of vagrancy when Henry VIII. commenced his reign. Shortly afterwards, however, it was considered necessary to provide other means for "the punishment of sturdy vagrants and beggars." The statute passed for this purpose was the 22nd Hen. VIII. c. 12, by which justices are required to cause all persons, "whole and mighty in body," who shall beg, or be vagrants, and not able to account how they get their living, to be whipped, and sworn to return to the place where they were born, or where they last dwelt three years, and there put themselves to labour.

The severity of this statute is greatly increased by the 27th Hen. VIII. c. 25, by which it is enacted that, "a valiant beggar, or sturdy vagabond," shall at the first time be whipped and sent to the place where he was born, or last dwelt three years; and that if he continue his roguish life, he shall have the upper part of the gristle of his right ear cut off; and if, after that, he be taken wandering in idleness, or doth not apply to his labour, or is not in the service of a master, he shall be adjudged and executed as a felon.

By the 1st Edw. VI. c. 3, all former statutes on this subject are repealed; and it is enacted, that every person, not impotent, aged, or sick, found loitering or wandering, and not seeking work, or leaving it when engaged, shall be a vagabond; and every such, on being apprehended by his master, and convicted before two justices, shall be marked, by means of a hot iron, with the letter V, and be compelled to serve his master two years. If he leave before the expiration of such service, he shall be again marked in like manner, with the letter S, and be his master's slave for ever. A third offence to be punished with death.

This statute is repealed by the 3rd and 4th Edw. VI. c. 16, by which the 22nd Hen. VIII. c. 12, is revived.

In the 14th Eliz. c. 5, which is little less severe than the 27th Hen. VIII. above recited, we find a long list of persons declared to be "rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars." Justices are required to commit them to the common gaol, or such other place as by the justices, or three of them, at any of their general sessions shall be appointed. This is the first recognition of any place of confinement apart from the common gaol, and the reason given for it is, that "the common gaols, in every "shire within this realm, are like to be greatly pestered with a more number of prisoners than heretofore,"—summary jurisdiction by this statute being abolished.

By the 18th Eliz. c. 3, passed to amend the last recited Act, one, two, or more abiding houses or places, convenient in some market or corporate town, or other place or places, are directed to be provided by the justices of every county, and to be called Houses of Correction, which is the first appearance of this title.

For this purpose, the justices are directed to tax the districts under their respective jurisdictions, and to appoint collectors of such taxes. They are also required to appoint governors of these Houses of Correction, which are to be erected or provided in one year, or before the end of the second year, "or else the money levied to be repaid."

By the same statute, amended by the 39th Eliz., c. 5, every person, may, during 20 years, by deed enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, erect, found, and establish any Hospitals, Maisons Dieu, Abiding Places, or Houses of Correction, as well for the finding, sustentation, and relief of the maimed, poor, needy, or impotent people, as to set the poor to work; such hospitals or houses to be incorporated, and have power to hold freeholds, not exceeding the annual value of £200; but no such hospital is to be founded without being endowed to the extent of £10 per annum.

In the year 1597 two statutes were passed, the 39th Eliz., chapters 3 and 4, the former entitled "An Act for the Relief of the Poor;" the latter, "An Act for the Punishment of Rogues, Vagabonds, and Sturdy Beggars." Until this period, provision was made for both these clauses by the same statutes; but they now became, and have ever since been, the subjects of separate legislation. By the latter of these Acts it was lawful (not compulsory) for the Justices to erect one or more Houses of Correction within their several counties, and to appoint a governor and provide all things necessary for governing the same, and for the punishment of offenders. Herein summary jurisdiction is not only revived, but for the punishment of first offences in vagrancy, by whipping "until his or her body be bloody," it

* Extracted from the Final Report of the Committee of Justices appointed to Superintend the Erection of a New House of Correction for the County of Surrey.

Digitized by Google

is extended to constables, headboroughs, and tithingmen, as well as to Justices of the Peace. Headboroughs and tithingmen are, however, "to be assisted by the advice of the minister and one other of the parish."

By the 7th James I., c. 4, passed in 1609, it is declared that the laws for the erection of Houses of Correction, and for the suppressing and punishing rogues, vagabonds, &c., "have not wrought so good effect as was expected, as well for that the said Houses of Correction have not been built as was intended, as also for that the said statutes have not been duly and severely put in execution;" — and it is enacted, that before Michaelmas-day, 1611, there shall be erected, or provided, by the justices in every county where there is not already a House of Correction, one or more House or Houses of Correction, together with mills, turns, cards, and such like necessary implements, to set the said rogues to work; and if a House of Correction be not provided in any county by Michaelmas day, 1611, "then every Justice within such county shall forfeit for his neglect, £5, one moiety thereof to be unto him or them that shall sue for the same." A governor is also to be appointed, who is to employ the rogues, vagabonds, &c., committed to the House of Correction, and to punish them by putting fetters upon them and moderately whipping them. The prisoners to be in no sort chargeable to the county, but to have such allowance as they shall deserve by their labour.

This statute was continued by two others in the reign of Charles I., after which the times became unfavourable for the amelioration of the prisoners' condition. During the period of considerably more than a century, little was done in this respect beyond the passing of a few statutes, having for their object the repairing, enlarging, erecting, and providing Houses of Correction, and rendering somewhat less severe the punishment of vagrants. The effective superintendence and discipline of all prisons appear to have been greatly neglected. Some attempts were made, in the year 1701, by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, to obtain the Introduction of a System of discipline in the prisons of London, but their efforts do not appear to have been successful; neither can it be ascertained that any benefit resulted from the 32nd Geo. II., c. 28, by which Justices are required to prepare rules for the good government of all prisons, which rules, after being approved by the Judges, are to have the full force of law.

Howard speaks of our prisons, both Gaols and Houses of Correction, or Bridewells, as he calls them, as being at the time of his first inspection, the scenes of filth and contagion, of idleness and intemperance, of extortion and cruelty, of debauchery and immorality, of profaneness and blasphemy; as being places in which all sorts of prisoners, debtors and felons, men and women, the young beginner and the old offender were confined together. His attention was directed to the state of our prisons in the spring of 1773, when he became sheriff for the county of Bedford, and we find that during this very year the statute the 13th Geo. III., c. 58, providing clergymen to officiate in every gaol in England was passed. In the following year he obtained the passing of the 14th Geo. III., c. 20, "relieving acquitted prisoners from the payment of fees to gaolers," and the 14th Geo. III., c. 59, "for the preservation of the health "of prisoners in gaols," requiring that gaols should be kept clean and well ventilated, that infirmaries and baths therein should be provided, that an experienced surgeon or apothecary should be appointed, that the prisoners should be furnished with needful clothing, and that they should be prevented being kept under ground, when it could be done conveniently.

Howard intended this statute to have effect in all prisons, but on remonstrating with the governor of a House of Correction into which its provisions had not been introduced, he was surprised to learn that it was applicable only to County Gaols, and did not in any respect affect Houses of Correction. This circumstance led to the passing of the 22nd Geo. III., c. 64, explained and amended by the 24th Geo. III., c. 55, by which Justices of the Peace are required to cause all Houses of Correction to be inspected, with a view to their being made "more convenient and useful, having regard to the classes of the several persons who shall be kept there, according to the nature of their crimes and punishments;" "and to the keeping every part of such prison clean and wholesome:" and they are required to provide separate apartments for all persons committed upon charges of felony, or convicted of any theft or larceny, and committed for punishment by hard labour, in order to prevent any communication between them and the other prisoners. They are also to provide separate apartments for the women, who shall be committed thither. By this statute various rules, orders, and regulations given for the better government of prisoners are to be duly observed and enforced, and power is given to the justices to appoint, if they see fit, a minister of the Church of England to perform divine service every Sunday.

These statutes may be considered as the commencement of a new era in the management of Houses of Correction. Ever since they were passed, legislators and magistrates have been alike anxious that prisons of this kind should be, as far as possible, effective in the suppression of crime, and new laws have been from time to time made, and new regulations adopted for the accomplishment of this great object. Treadwheel labour was introduced into most of the Houses of Correction in the kingdom, prisoners were subdivided into more numerous classes, and the silent system was enforced; but the result of these several changes was not satisfactory.

In 1842 the Model Prison, at Pentonville, was opened, for the trial of the individual separation of prisoners, and this system, commonly called the separate system, with various modifications, has since been adopted in numerous prisons under the provisions of the 2nd and 3rd Vic., cap. 56.

THE NEW GAOL AT WALTON, LIVERPOOL.

The new borough gaol at Walton is nearly completed. It comprises all the modern improvements, and no expense has been spared to render it complete in all its departments. "Viewed from Walton," says the local Times, in describing its general appearance, "the gaol has the appearance of a strong and powerful fortress, begirt with lofty walls, loopholed towers, and commanding turrets, surmounted by a flagstaff." Approaching by the new street, on the east and west sides of the entrance are two mansions, the governor's and the chaplain's, each approached by a flight of steps, with ornamental gardens around; the boundary-wall being depressed, so as to place the houses on the exterior of the prison. This arrangement gives an improved aspect to the entrance. Between these houses is the central entrance, in the Norman style of architecture.—Here is lodged the deputy-governor, whose residence is built of red brick and Bath stone, and flanked with massive castellated towers. The Bath stone, however, according to the paper just quoted, does not give good promise of a lasting reputation in these northern climes. The base is of red sandstone, from Runcorn, which material is also used in the main structure. The entrance is spanned by a Norman archway, leading to a court-yard and groined vestibule. The corridors of the prison are commanded from central halls in four directions. These corridors diverge from one another at right angles, are open from the floor to the roof, lighted by skylights, and bay windows terminate the extremities of the corridors. The junction corridor runs the entire length of the building, from east to west, and from it branch off nine wings, as well as the debtors' two divisions: in the centre, however, are doors to separate the males from the females. Flights of stairs at the ends, of iron and slate, and circular stairs of the same material, in the central halls, communicate with three tiers of galleries running round the interior, and communicating with the cells; a fourth gallery, reaching the cisterns and other appliances for sanitary purposes, above. The central halls are two in number—the east and the west: they are covered with lantern-lights of iron and rough plate glass. A balustrade of iron encircles the galleries on either side of the corridors, along which food for the prisoners is conveyed to the respective cells, having previously been hoisted on trays from the kitchen in the basement. Each gallery possesses a traversing railway, working on the balustrades, and, in addition, is furnished with bell and tube for instantly communicating with the kitchen. At the angles of the central halls are the officers' day-rooms, where, by stepping outside of the door, they can command the whole of their department, almost at a glance. The corridors are lighted at night by gas sunlights placed in the ceiling, one in each corridor. The flooring is laid with blue Caithness flags, and the ceiling, where skylights do not intervene, is varnished, and the woodwork displayed. Binding arches, placed in the roof at intervals, add strength to the building, and support the extraction shafts for carrying off foul air. The margins of the doors are of a deep red; the floors laid with slates; the arched brick ceiling whitewashed; the walls of stone-colour. The dimensions of the cells are 13 feet 7 inches by 10 feet high. The cells with their gong-wires and indicators and their various conveniences, are more like studios than felons' prisons. The cells in the debtors' wings are dismal and cheerless in comparison, these being, it seems, an afterthought. The visiting stalls for felons are strongly-barred cages, friends and relatives communicating across a passage three or four feet wide, which an officer meantime perambulates. The separate system prevails throughout the whole establishment. The chapel is in the centre of the main building, and at the back of the grand entrance. The Norman style has been carried out in the decoration, which is very plain. The four angles of the prison are flanked by towers, tenanted by warders, and the whole is encircled by two walls, the inner, eighteen feet high, and the outer seven feet. Ventilation is effected by immense air shafts, which surmount the summit of the building, and communicate with the flues. The cells are warmed and made comfortable in winter by hot air. The locks, gates, hinges, and other appliances of that class, have been furnished by Mr. C. Smith, jun., of Birmingham; the brickwork, masonry, and joinery, by Messrs. Furniss and Kilpin; the plumbing by Messrs. Knight and Son; the carpenters' work by Mr. Burroughs; ironwork by Messrs. Pearson and Co.; gas, by the United Gas Company; and some of the lamp-posts by Mr. Rankin; the clockwork by Mr. Condliff; and the cooking and heating apparatus by Mr. Haden, of Trowbridge.—The Builder.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARIES' (IRELAND) BILL was read a third time in the house of Commons, on the 14th of June, and passed.

Digitized by Google

Parliamentary Intelligence.

THE NEEDLEWOMEN'S (LIMITATION OF HOURS OF LABOUR) BILL.

The Earl of SHAFTESBURY, in moving that this bill be referred to a select committee, said he should take that opportunity of calling their lordships' attention to the case of what he considered to be the most hopeless and oppressed class of people in the kingdom. He was aware that, in so doing, he might expose himself to some ridicule; but, as some of the greatest statesmen of our time had received great praise for advocating the cause of black men abroad, he did not see why he should not undertake the cause of white women at home; and he was perfectly willing to accept all the ridicule he might have to encounter, provided he only received in exchange some remedy for the evils which he was about to lay before them. The condition of the milliners and dressmakers in this metropolis, and the other great towns of this country, had been frequently discussed and agitated, but nothing was done until 1842, when a Royal Commission was appointed, for the purpose of making inquiries into the trades and employments in which children were engaged; but though the Commissioners made a report, no legislative result followed. The latest evidence was contained in a report of the Royal Commission in 1843, and subsequent to that time some abatement of the hours of labour took place; but during the last year and a half there were strong indications of a return to the old system, and the revival of the ancient long hours. He therefore contended that on that ground there was an absolute necessity for immediate legislation. Now what was the evidence? There were two distinct classes employed in the business of millinery and dressmaking, namely, the indoor and out-door workwomen. The evil pressed mainly on the first. To a great extent, the system was prevalent in all the large towns, Liverpool, Birmingham, Manchester, Nottingham, Bath, Norwich, &c.; but it most extensively prevailed in London, to which his bill exclusively applied. The statement made by the report of the Commission in 1843 was, that the number of employers in London, at that time—now probably largely increased—was 1,500. The number of workwomen they employed varied from two or three, up to 30, 40, and 60: but taking the average at 10, that would make a total of 15,000. These young women generally entered the business about 14 years of age in the country, and came up to London to complete their education, at from 16 to 17 years of age. Now that was a period of life when the greatest care required to be taken with their health and constitution, and yet that was the period at which they were to be exposed to excessive toil and insufficient food, and in an impure atmosphere, with an amount of work and labour scarcely endured by our soldiers in the trenches of Sebastopol, in what were considered "well-regulated establishments," from 15 to 18 hours a day. "In many," say the commissioners, "the hours of work during the season are unlimited, the young women never getting more than six, often not more than four, sometimes only three, and occasionally two for rest and sleep; frequently they work all night." The work, also, was often carried on until ten or eleven o'clock on Sunday morning, and frequently over the whole of Sunday. One witness stated that she had worked, without going to bed, from four on Thursday morning, to half-past ten on Sunday morning. Their meal-hours were stated and irregular. Food was taken as quickly as possible. Perhaps a quarter of an hour was allowed for dinner, and frequently they had not half an hour allowed for the whole of their meals; and often they did not cease working even during that time. To that there were some, but not many exceptions. The result of such a system, according to the evidence of medical men, was, that consumption carried off many of these workwomen, or their health was utterly ruined, loss of sight was very prevalent, and also distortion of limbs to a great extent. The first medical witness was Sir James Clark, physician to the Queen, and he said, "The mode of life of these poor girls is such, that no constitution could long bear it. A mode of life more completely calculated for destroying human health, could scarcely be conceived. I have long been most anxious to relieve these unfortunate girls from the slavery to which they are subjected." Dr. Hamilton Roe and Dr. Hodgkinson gave many distressing details. John Dalrymple, Esq., the well-known surgeon of the London Ophthalmic Hospital, showed how all forms of ocular disease were induced, from simple irritation to complete blindness. Here was a case of singular cruelty. Frederick Tyrrell, also surgeon to the Ophthalmic Hospital, after giving a sad account to the same effect, added this illustration:—A delicate girl, of 17 years of age, was brought to him in consequence of total loss of vision. She had been an apprentice to a dressmaker, and her health, before her vision was affected, had been deranged by excessive work. The immediate cause of disease in her eyes continued, and excessive application to work in making mourning at last produced total blindness. She stated that she had been compelled to remain, without changing her dress, for nine days and nights consecutively during that period, and had only been permitted to rest occasionally on a mattress, and that her meals were placed at her side cut up, so that as little time as possible should be lost in their consumption. Dr. Devonald said, "their health and strength are gone. Many are reduced to permanent debility, many die, especially from consumption." Dr. Shaw and Dr. Johnson stated, that these women becoming unhealthy themselves, when married conveyed disease to their offspring. A medical practitioner, well acquainted with the system, said, "No men work so long; it would be impossible for any animal to work so continuously, with so little rest." They had similar evidence from all the large towns; and, in fact, the system prevailed wherever there was wealth enough to sustain a regular trade. The Commission report said, that with the exception of needle grinding, and one or two others, there was no trade in which so much disease prevailed as in dressmaking, and yet, it concluded, "notwithstanding the unfavourable character of this report, it is proper to state, I have reason to fear it in some respects falls short of the truth. In the course of the inquiries I repeatedly noticed a great dissimulation on the part of young persons to state what they knew, and this was owing to a feeling of intimidation which was very prevalent." Nor was this dissimulation to be wondered at, for many of these poor girls were the daughters of poor clergymen, half-pay officers, and others in reduced circumstances, unable to help them, their friends were at a distance in the country, or they were wholly friendless; they were completely at the mercy of their employers, and, if they offended them, what would be their condition if they were turned out into the streets destitute? The consequence of the disclosure of these evils, however, was, that in 1844 a society of ladies and gentlemen was formed for the aid and protection of needlewomen, and, for a long time, their exertions were very successful. They prevailed on the employers to shorten the hours of labour, and Sunday-work was entirely given up. Fifty-three of the principal firms in the millinery and dressmaking businesses adopted a resolution that they would conform to the rules which had been laid down by the society, namely, that they would provide suitable accommodation, that they would require no Sunday-work or working all night, and that they would provide good food and in sufficient quantity. For some time that improved state of things had continued, but he was sorry to say there were now indications that the former evils were returning, and that the worst features of the old system were being revived. He had therefore proposed this short bill, in the hope of at least mitigating these evils, for though he admitted the difficulty of legislation in such a matter, he thought it was important that if such practices could not be wholly checked, yet, at least, that they should stamp them with the brand of illegality. He proposed that between the 1st of March and the 1st of August, comprising what was called "the London season," the hours of rest and relaxation should be from ten at night to eight o'clock in the morning, and in the other months from eight at night to eight o'clock in the morning. The time to be allowed for meals was an hour and a half out of the working hours. Employing work-people within the prohibited hours was to be an offence punishable with a penalty, and jurisdiction over all cases was given to the police magistrates. The bill did not extend to non-resident work-women. These were the propositions he submitted to their lordships, and as he did not anticipate opposition or even objection to such a measure, he would conclude by moving that it be referred to a select committee, in conformity with the standing order No. 175, relative to bills for regulating trade.

Earl GRANVILLE did not mean to oppose the motion, but he hoped the select committee would seriously consider whether they were justified in interfering between the employer and the employed in this manner, and whether, if this bill were passed, it would be possible to enforce its provisions. It appeared to him that if they adopted this principle there would be no limit to their interference with the employment of labour, and if they were to claim to limit the hours of labour in a dressmaking establishment employing two or three workwomen, they might with equal justice take up the case of servants of all work, whose toil was often as hard and her hours as long as the dressmaker's. He hoped they would proceed with caution in legislating on such a subject.

The Earl of MALMESBURY admitted the general impolicy of interfering between the employers and the employed; but this was not the first time the Legislature had stepped in to protect the poor workman from being overworked, either through the necessities of trade or the avarice of his employer. Therefore, exceptions having once been admitted to the general rule, he thought no class more required the protection of the legislature, than that whose claims were now advocated by his noble friend. The bill would be, as far as it went, a great protection to these poor persons.

Lord CAMPBELL said that he did not deny the power of the State to interfere, but what he questioned was, the power of the State to interfere in this instance, beneficially. He objected to a bill which must be a dead letter. With regard to the Factory Act, there was a machinery by which it was enforced, but this bill had no such machinery. The noble earl did not propose any means by which they could see whether the law was carried into effect or not, and it was quite clear that unless they had such a machinery, it would be enacting a law only to be broken. Was it likely that these poor persons would lay informations under it? Certainly not. Well, then, it would be only enacting a law to be a dead letter.

Digitized by Google

Lord STANLEY of Alderley said that the principle hitherto adopted by Parliament, in analogous cases, was not to legislate for grown persons, but only for children. The amount of labour was not prescribed in any case, but merely the hours of labour. He feared that the provisions of this bill might be employed to interfere even with the menial occupations of domestic life, and that it would be impracticable.

The Earl of SHAFTESBURY said that the noble Lord was in error when he stated that the principle of the legislative protection was not extended so as to include grown people. Three measures had already passed the legislature in which adult women had protection, both in factories and in mines, and why should not these poor persons have protection? A great proportion of them was of tender years—mostly under twenty years of age. The noble Lord President had fallen into some confusion, when he talked of needlewomen, and dressmakers and milliners, being the same class. Needlewomen were a different class, mostly employed at slop-work, at the east end of London. The class of persons defined by this act was milliners and dressmakers, living in the houses of their employers—a totally different class from needlewomen. There had been a constant pressure upon this helpless and friendless class, and when he heard two Cabinet Ministers admit the evils, yet to be willing to allow them to go on, without making an attempt to redress them, was really to abdicate the functions of Government. The evils he had described were admitted. They were disgraceful to the country, and if the Government would allow them to go on without any attempt to meet them, he must say, it would reflect upon them the greatest discredit.

Lord OVERSTONE thought that the ardour of the noble earl's feelings had carried him a little too far. As he understood the noble earl, the head of the Government in that house, he had said nothing more than this—that in consenting to the bill going into committee, it was with a caution, that in this effort of doing good, they should be careful not to inflict, indirectly, greater evils than those they would remedy. All these measures required the greatest caution. In interfering with the freedom of labour, he (Lord Overstone) thought it would be very easy to impose restrictions, which though appearing to produce considerable benefit, would in reality be highly mischievous. This was an exceedingly difficult and delicate subject to deal with, and he thought that it would be impossible to attend carefully to the admonition of the noble earl the President of the Council.

The Duke of ARGYLL thought that the censure passed upon his noble friend the President of the Council, rested entirely upon a misconception of what he had said. Not a word had fallen from him against the abstract principle of the analogous measures that had already received the sanction of the legislature; but he had only referred to the difficulty of the subject and the practical difficulty of enforcing such a law. He thought that, considering the nature of the employment of these poor persons, there would be the greatest practical difficulty in enforcing such an act. He understood his noble friend not to object to the desirableness of remedying the evils pointed out, but only to the practical difficulty of enforcing the provisions of this bill if it became law.

Earl TALBOT said he was prepared to assent to the principle of the bill; he hoped, therefore, that it would, as amended by the committee, have a trial.

The motion was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY, JUNE 7.

TICKET-OF-LEAVE SYSTEM.

Lord LYNDHURST called attention to the case of a convict, out upon ticket-of-leave, who had been brought before Mr. Jardine upon the charge of having used indecent language to a police constable. Referring to the case, Mr. Jardine said: "The language must have been bad indeed to shock a policeman. It formed a striking contrast, no doubt, to the sentiments expressed by the prisoner in his interviews with the chaplain of the prison from which he had obtained his ticket-of-leave. On these occasions, it appeared, the adoption of a hypocritical tone and a canting expression of the countenance (which the worst of them were capable of assuming best when it served their purpose to do so) sufficed to obtain their discharge before the expiration of half the term of the original sentence, with the further advantage of a written character, enabling them to impose upon the public. Why, he had not presided there any day for some time past without having to dispose of some charge against a "ticket-of-leave" man. The neighbourhood is infested with them. They stand at the corners of streets at midnight, and pouncing suddenly upon the lonely passenger, half strangle and rob him before even an alarm can be given." This was a magistrate's statement of what had come within his own knowledge. Upon this, police-inspector Makenzie said:—"There were forty ticket-of-leave men in the immediate neighbourhood of the court, who had returned to their old haunts and to their former course of life. In order, however, to avoid the personal consequences they usually employed boys and women to assist them, and these were constantly apprehended while the principal delinquents escaped altogether." The magistrate then said:—"He had a very strong feeling on the subject. Society was not safe with the present system in operation. It might be a desirable thing to clear the gaols of these men, but it was a bad thing for the public when they returned to a life of crime, having escaped more than half the punishment which it had been thought proper to award them for previous offences. The expense even of re-prosecuting these men, when they are detected, must amount to a formidable sum." He (Lord Lyndhurst) would urge her Majesty's Government to reconsider the subject, and he was certainly of opinion that the sooner they did so the better it would be for the public. He trusted that amidst the din of arms which was occurring every night at a place not far distant, a question of so much social importance as this to which he had called attention would not be quite lost sight of.

The LORD CHANCELLOR could only say that if his noble friend would either give notice of a motion, or of his intention to put a question upon the subject, it should have the most serious attention of the Government. He could not then go into the matter, for the statement was quite new to him, as he had not seen the newspaper to which reference had been made. He would only say this, that his right hon. friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department had the matter constantly under his attention.

Lord CAMPBELL said that every apprehension which he had entertained on the subject had been more than realised by the facts which had occurred since the passing of the Ticket-of-leave Bill. He had always looked with the greatest alarm at the abolition of transportation as a means of punishment, and he feared that still worse consequences than those already adverted to might arise from it.

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

The LORD CHANCELLOR assured his noble friend that this subject was not lost sight of. Only that morning he had received a long report embodying a scheme. That scheme, however, did not quite tally with the plan of the bill which he had prepared, and some alterations would, in consequence, have to be made in it. He hoped that those alterations would be completed in a day or two, when he would place the bill upon the table.

Lord CAMPBELL suggested that his noble and learned friends in that house would obtain the best possible information as to the working of our system of criminal jurisprudence if they would go upon one of the circuits. They were already named in the commission for the Central Criminal, and there would be no difficulty in their going upon circuit. He would especially suggest to his noble and learned friend opposite (Lord Brougham) that he should go upon the Northern Circuit in the December assizes.

Lord BROUGHAM said that he should be most happy to concur in the suggestion but for two reasons. In the first place, he should not like to interfere with what was now so admirably done by his noble and learned friend and the reverend bench of judges over whom he presided; in the next place he felt himself too feeble in health and strength to enter upon the labours which had been proposed to him. Short of this, however, he would do anything to put an end to a system under which men were left in prison for 60 or 70 days before they were brought to trial.

Reviews.

SOUGHT AND SAVED. A Prize Essay on Ragged Schools and Kindred Institutions, by G. J. Hall, M.A. London: Partridge, Oakey, and Co.

IN 1853 the Committee of the Ragged School Union offered a prize for the best essay on ragged schools and kindred institutions. The advertisement brought nine competitors into the field; and the essay entitled "Sought and saved," written by Rev. G. J. Hall, of Linton in Cambridgeshire, was deemed by the appointed adjudicators, to be the best.

Ragged schools are solely the growth of very recent times. Only a few years since, what are called the "lower orders," were permitted to remain in ignorance and vice, with very inadequate attempts to rescue them from their miserable condition. Thus lived and died generation after generation of our fellow-creatures—beings who though they were clothed in rags and steeped in wretchedness, were God's immortal children, and born like ourselves with capabilities to fulfil a high and unending destiny. But few friendly hands were stretched out to save them; but few friendly voices were heard whispering to them the hopes and the promises of the gospel. Society treated them as outcasts for whom there was little or no hope of social redemption, and permitted them to live and die in their native haunts of ignorance and crime. The most criminal portion of them were sentenced to imprisonment, transportation, or the gallows. We rejoice to know that these days of darkness and apathy are passed away, and we hope for ever. The leaders of society, including statesmen, ministers of religion and philanthropists, are now asking whether something cannot be done to seek and save the lost, whether ignorance and vice spring from the constitution of human nature, civilization and the necessity of things, and whether agencies may not be successfully used for their diminution or destruction.

Digitized by Google

One of the most cheering signs of the times is the rapid multiplication of ragged schools. Within a very few years they have sprung up in the metropolis and the great cities of the kingdom with considerable rapidity, and in every instance have vindicated their necessity and usefulness. Desirous of bringing the subject in all its bearings before the reading public the committee of the Ragged School Union considered it advisable to provoke competition by offering a prize. No doubt their expectations have been amply realized by the publication of Mr. Hall's book; and we have great pleasure in calling the attention of the public to it as deserving the most thoughtful consideration. It has been the aim of the writer to include either in the essay itself, or in the notes accompanying it, every important feature of the ragged school movement. The subject is more extensive than many might at first suppose, for it not only, in the light in which the author considers it, includes educational topics generally, but also touches on some of the most difficult questions of political philosophy and social economy. The reader will find that the style is mainly practical, though here and there interspersed with an argument or philosophical paragraph. The various chapters have been thought out, not compiled; hence, there is, perhaps, a greater scarcity of fact and incident than there ought to have been. This deficiency, however, is in part supplied by the notes. Controverted topics have not been altogether avoided; nor indeed could they well have been in an essay comprehending an important social movement in its varied relationships to government and religion. These the author has endeavoured to discuss honestly, boldly, and calmly. The book is marred by no spirit of sectarian or party bitterness. It discusses the subject in its universal aspects with the charity of a christian and a philosopher.

The condition of a large proportion of the population of our large cities is thus described by Mr. Hall:—

> We may well be humbled and shocked to find that there are lower regions of society, even in christian England, where men, women, and children herd together, amid filth and vermin, in damp cellars, up filthy courts, or in close unventilated garrets, where most of the money, indolently obtained and recklessly spent, is the wages of sin,—where dishonesty and unchastity are almost universal,—where the name of God is heard only in oaths and curses,—where even children are trained in all villany by their parents, or by practised thieves; and sent forth to prowl about the streets, not for their own daily sustenance, but to furnish others with the means of self-indulgence,—where girls are taught early to receive without a blush the wages of shame, and even infant lips are compelled to take the name of God in vain. The actual existence of all these things is attested by witnesses of unimpeachable integrity. Yea, we have not far to go that we may see with our own eyes those thickly planted preserves of sin and Satan, where pestilent drains and stagnant pools are ever exhaling fever, cholera, and death; that we may hear with our own ears their profane language, their obscene epithets, their coarse jests and hideous laughter. In the midst of all these terrible foes to cleanliness, health, and godliness, there are tens of thousands, yea, even hundreds of thousands of our countrymen and countrywomen, whose dwellings are scarcely cheered by a single ray of sunshine, or cleansed by a single pitcher of water. Accents of kindness seldom fall on their ears. They are strangers to decency and self-respect, to the joys of home, the comforts as well as the restraints of religion, and to the house of God. There they are in one confused and dreadful medley,—hoary, hardened transgressors, and children just taking their first lessons in crime; natives of these regions in all their abandoned wickedness, and new comers battling hard for respectability and virtue against fearful odds; parents without natural affection, and children without filial respect; women without virtue, often without shame; and men as brutal as drunkenness and crime can make them. There they have been for years, and there they are still—a mass of English heathenism that the Christian Church has not yet conquered—a mass of crime that English law has not yet destroyed—a mass of vice and intemperance that great social reformations have failed to reach.

Our author does not shrink from a consideration of the causes of this desperate state of things, and while he traces them principally to the evil dispositions rooted in human nature, he is of opinion that our much vaunted civilization with its commercial triumphs and feverish competitive spirit assist to ripen some of the moral maladies which fester in our midst. "It seems," says he, "as though the commercial and social activity of the present day, like a great seething cauldron, full of merchants and manufacturers, artizans and operatives, buyers and sellers, has a tendency, while it refines the main body of its contents, to produce and throw off some as the scum of its heated workings." We wish that Mr. Hall had treated this part of the subject with less reserve. He appears to think that our material civilization in its march must crush many of the weak and helpless. We see no necessity for this. Political economy, philosophically considered, and in its legitimate workings does not necessarily involve the evils complained of. It is the reckless pursuit of wealth, careless of those higher considerations to which political economy should be subordinate, which produces the mischief. It is the quenchless thirst of gain, with an oblivion of the claims of society, which renders competition occasionally injurious. Capitalists and manufacturers too frequently forget that capital in its use and reproduction has duties to perform as well as claims to exact.

We are glad to see that the essayist in advocating the cause of the down-trodden, and in appealing to the sympathy of the benevolent public, inculcates caution and prudence in the manner of rendering assistance. He says truly, "there is imminent danger of pulling down with our left hand what we have set up with our right: of fostering indirectly the very things we are seeking to destroy." This, no doubt, is frequently done in promiscuous almsgiving. The benevolent public should beware of creating pauperism while it relieves the poor, of putting a premium on ignorance while it communicates knowledge, of increasing the amount of raggedness while it clothes the naked; of discouraging self-respect and a laudable independence in some, while teaching these very virtues in others. "If we are wise," says Mr. Hall, "we shall never forget, even for a moment, that it will demand unusual prudence, a most judicious arrangement of all our plans, and a most careful selection of all our agents, if we would avoid doing as much indirect and impalpable harm, as we do direct and palpable good." Benevolence, like every other good thing, may be abused, and only when rightly applied does it answer its intended purposes.

The essayist entertains a correct conception of the importance of the Ragged School Teacher's Mission, his moral influence on his pupils, and through them on society. "A good teacher will not want for scholars, a bad teacher will ruin any school." However severe we may be in our dealings with parents who are profligate and without even natural affection, with the children we must ever be gentle and kind. Their little hearts must be wooed and won. Let us never forget that the treasures which we wish to lay up in their mental storehouse, are of no rude, material kind; that the power and influence which we hope to obtain is not the influence of fear, but the gentler sway of holy love. Our method then must be in accordance with our object. Fear may make slaves and criminals; only love and kindness can change them into citizens and christians. If we wish to make the school-room full, and the attendance regular, we must make the place and its occupations agreeable. Herein we see the true missionary spirit indicated, and we are happy to know that so intelligent a man as our author has such an unfaltering faith in the all-subduing power of kindness in its application to children. He would treat adults very differently. With them he would use the stick, and bring upon them the powers of the law. He would use one instrumentality for the young, and another for the old; moral force for the one and physical force for the other. We do not mean to say that Mr. Hall recommends violence, but he appeals for the interposition of law in relation to adults; and what they would not do voluntarily, he would compel them to do by magisterial assistance. In pleading the cause of the young, he says, "One great reason why so many fall into the ranks of poverty and crime, is that it is impossible for them to do otherwise. They have no alternative. Any other course is a moral impossibility." Have we not been told and taught that "the child is the father to the man?"—This is one of the most suggestive lines ever penned by the poet Wordsworth. If the child becomes poor or degraded from necessity, or because he has not sufficient will and moral purpose to resist the influence of external circumstance, how can we expect anything better when the child grows into a man in the presence of the same unholy influences, and when the seeds of evil within him are ripened and strengthened.

Mr. Hall is also sensibly alive to the most efficient and expeditious mediums of communicating knowledge to poor children and developing their moral nature. He would not only surround them with kindness, but render the schools so agreeable that the pupils should love to be present and strive to be regular in their attendance. He would attract them by the magnetic law of love, and arrest and rivet their attention with a variety of modes of pleasing instruction. "In ragged schools," says he, "the system of pictorial teaching would have a special efficacy, and might be carried out with good results in a variety of departments. We might have pictures of beasts, birds, and fishes; of trees, plants, and flowers; of scenes in other lands; mountains, waterfalls, and beautiful landscapes; of nature in all her moods; of the placid lake, the stormy ocean and the wild tornado. Art and science, too, might be thus illustrated and explained. What a source of interesting instruction might be found in a large drawing of a locomotive engine! Yea, even morality might be communicated pictorially." One great and prominent object of Ragged Schools, and of any other extensive reformatory movement, should be to root out the evils that have been engendered by evil influences, and to prevent the future growth amongst us of a class so useless and dangerous to society. Hence the great necessity of prompting and preparing scholars to obtain an honest livelihood for themselves. "It is not too much to say that the formation of industrious habits is even of greater importance than book-learning both to the scholars themselves and to the well-being of the country * * * It is one essential part of the education of every girl and boy to acquire some degree of fitness for the actual life's work which the future will probably unfold." With language and arguments of this nature, Mr. Hall advocates the necessity of industrial training as the object to be aimed at by ragged and industrial schools. He complains that this branch of the subject has hitherto been too much neglected, and calls on philanthropists to bestow on it the attention it merits. "It is here," says he, "that both boys and girls are taught to mend their own clothes; that chopping wood, mat-making, carpentering, tailoring, and shoe-making have all been tried, and each with a measure of success. But some more comprehensive plan needs to be brought out and carried into vigorous execution." Mr. Hall is also of opinion that the pupils of ragged and industrial schools have not been sufficiently stimulated by rewards. Society is more inclined to punish the vicious than to reward the virtuous. A similar inclination has made itself manifest in the regulation of our educational institutions, and has no doubt proved injurious to them.

Digitized by Google

In speaking of contemporaneous action for the diminution of ignorance and crime, Mr. Hall has only alluded, and that in the most tender and gingerly manner, to the great "Temperance Reform." Like many other good men, he appears afraid to approach the subject. But this is not the most effectual way to promote the prosperity of educational and industrial reform. It cannot be denied that drunkenness is not only a great national evil, but that it is the mother of many other vices; that it is the chief creator of crime, the primary perpetuator of ignorance, and the prolific cause of pauperism. If this be the fact it is folly to shrink from it as Mr. Hall has done. It is much better to look the evil full in the face; and, though it is involved in controversial difficulties, to consider it in all its bearings and ramifications. The time is come when the causes of things must be proved to their foundation, and we cannot legitimately expect to purify society from the master evils which corrupt and threaten it without attempting to check them in the bud. The almost universal testimony of magistrates, judges, and poor-law commissioners is that the drinking usages of society are productive of the major portion of our country's social sufferings. The force of facts is deepening this conviction daily, and it is a little surprising that Mr. Hall, who has paid so much attention to the education and improvement of our pauper and criminal population, and also is so deeply interested in the matter, should have said so little, only a few words altogether, on the causes, consequences, and curse of intemperance, and the vast advantages that would flow from its destruction.

There is one principle running through this prize essay, which in our opinion materially mars its utility. Its author would extend the Ragged School enterprise by the aid of law. He asks for Governmental assistance to build schools and refuges, and to compel parents to send their children to them. Mr. Hall has evidently not committed himself to this principle and policy rashly. He has thought much about it, and he sends forth his recommendations stamped with his sincere convictions. We are, however, bound to say, after mature reflection on all the bearings of the subject, that the author has failed to convince us. Instead of thinking with him that Government aid, in paying teachers and enforcing inspection, would be promotive of the prosperity of the Ragged School Movement, we are convinced that it would tend to its ultimate injury.

We are sorry to see so strong a disposition manifested by so many benevolent men to solicit the aid of Government for the furtherance of philanthropic objects. We know several who feel an interest in early closing, and who think that the end aimed at might be accomplished by Act of Parliament. There are others who would extinguish the drinking system by annihilating the "liquor traffic" by magisterial force. And here is an intelligent and successful Essayist, who appeals to executive authority to prop up and push on the Ragged School movement. We do not say that Government aid may not occasionally be legitimately solicited. But in the instance of Ragged Schools, and Ragged Churches and Refuges, we do not see any necessity for it. Are not Ragged Schools the offspring of philanthropy? Have they not multiplied with amazing rapidity without state interference? Would it not be exceedingly dangerous to call in a completely foreign element to mingle with an enterprize which is the pure and spontaneous result of voluntaryism? Mr. Hall says there are upwards of 1700 voluntary Ragged School teachers in London alone. He admits that "Ragged Schools have hitherto been the offspring of pure Christian love and of an earnest sense of individual duty. The work has been devised and executed by kind hearts and tender consciences. Law has not in any way interfered with or aided their working; as an agency so limited in its origin, and so limited in its resources, it has been crowned with great success. But compared with the whole work to be done, the schools have been few, and the results but small." He then proceeds to show the propriety and necessity of the interference and assistance of the state, not thinking that by so doing he might jeopardise the utility of the movement: he says, "two general laws come into collision; which shall be sacrificed? The law of voluntaryism, or the law of mercy, justice, compassion, and love? Who is there that does not promptly reply, Voluntaryism must give way for once. It may be God's law, as surely as gravitation; but just as, notwithstanding this law of nature, trees grow, the blood circulates and birds fly—as life thus triumphs over mere material influence, so love shall triumph over denominational principles." It is by such illogical reasoning as this that Mr. Hall asks for parliamentary grants, inspection, and responsibility. He admits the antagonism of "two great general laws," and "for once" he would sacrifice the one to the other. He asks which shall give way, "the law of voluntaryism, or the law of mercy, justice, compassion and love," implying thereby, though he could never have meant it, that the law of voluntaryism is not that of mercy, compassion, and love; and that the law of the state is. This is not only contrary to the fact but to universal experience. Voluntary action springs from benevolence, Governmental action springs from necessity. He admits that voluntaryism may be God's law as surely as that of gravitation, but argues that trees grow, the blood circulates, and birds fly in opposition to the law of gravitation. He is incorrect in his facts, and inconclusive in his reasoning. Birds do not fly in antagonism to the law of gravitation, but in co-operation with it. The blood in circulating, or trees in growing, do not violate the laws of nature, but obey them. We certainly never saw lamer logic, and we are only surprised to see an author who appears in many respects to be enlightened and reasonable, so easily persuaded to commit a beneficent enterprise to the chilling care of Government. We cannot think that those who have originated the enterprise, and who have cheerfully contributed to its sustenance will be influenced by such insufficient data and such inconsistent reasonings. If ragged schools are to be multiplied, and their moral conquests to be extended, it is better that they should continue as they have begun, and rely with increasing faith on the generous emotions and the voluntary offerings of the philanthropic and christian public.

REPORT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM TEMPERANCE AND GENERAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

THIS Institution has attained the fourteenth year of its existence, and the report of its progress is highly satisfactory. The number of policies issued during the first seven years was on the average 375 per year; and the amount assured, in round numbers, £37,000. In 1851, 731 Policies were issued, assuring £130,000. In 1852, 1177 Policies were granted, covering risks to the amount of £186,000. In 1853, the number of Policies issued was 1315, assuring £198,000; and in 1854, 1336 Policies were completed, assuring no less than £227,000. These figures apply exclusively to the Temperance and General Sections; but in 1853 the Working Man's Section was opened; 88 Policies were granted in this Section for various sums, amounting to £1,677 18s 8d. During the past year 324 Policies have been granted in the Working Man's Section, covering assurances to the amount of £5,835, making a total of 1,649 Policies, covering assurances to the amount of £233,000. These figures attest the confidence of the public in the security and able management of the Institution, and must afford its directors and supporters well-grounded hope of increasing prosperity.

Digitized by Google

LIST OF BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND REPORTS RECEIVED.

Reformatory Schools in France and England, by Patrick Joseph Murray, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.
The Irish Quarterly Review.—No. 18, June, 1855.
The Abstainer's Journal.—No. 30, June, 1855.
Fourteenth Report of the Directors of the United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution, 1855.
Report to the Committee of the Philanthropic Farm School, 1855.
Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows, the Fourth Annual Report of the Committee, 1855.
Report of Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Royal Benevolent Society. 1855.

EDUCATION IN ENGLAND.

The first of the two books which have recently been published on the subject of education contains copies of all minutes of the Privy Council on Education, arranged in chronological order, extending from the 3rd of June, 1839, to the 19th of January, 1855. The second, a thick volume of 765 pages, contains minutes of the Committee of Council on Education, correspondence, financial statements, examination papers, and reports by her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools for the year 1854-55. The reports are too diffuse, and enter too much into matters of detail to allow of any systematic reference. The two most remarkable of these reports, perhaps, are those of the Rev. H. Moseley, and the Rev. W. H. Brookfield. Mr. Moseley does not consider that the present subjects of elementary instruction are the best, inasmuch as religious knowledge, reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammar, history, and geography, under the form in which they are usually taught in schools, tend but little to the development of the reasoning powers, or the exercise of the intelligence of children, and are but poor expedients of general education. He urges, and has urged for many years, the teaching of that kind of knowledge dignified by the name of the "science of common things," so powerfully advocated by the Lord Ashburton, but does not disguise the great difficulty of introducing this as a branch of elementary instruction, doubting, as he does, whether the whole of the training-schools could furnish one master possessing enough for the purpose of that kind of scientific knowledge which must lie at the basis of it. Mr. Moseley thinks the science of chemistry the best adapted to this end; one great characteristic of which is that, with whatever is to be reasoned on and understood, there is always associated something to be done. Mr. Brookfield (who so ably presided, last February, at the annual festival of the Church Schoolmasters' Association) equally urges the importance of the study of "common things," and humorously reminds his professional friends of the south-eastern districts, in reference to some examination papers in history which he lately reviewed, that Alfred the Great would have been the last man, notwithstanding his neglect of "those unlucky cakes," in the Isle of Athelney, to advocate a disconnection between uncommon lore and "common things," a mistake peculiar to the ignorant and the pedantic. Mr. Brookfield expresses his conviction that the cause of elementary instruction has made steady and very satisfactory progress in the south-eastern district. He has in no department observed a greater improvement than in geography, and in three subjects only does not see much advance, viz., English grammar, English history, and the Church Catechism. With reference to the study of grammar, the Rev. Inspector strongly recommends the two little volumes on "Words," and "English, past and present," by the Rev. Professor Trench, of King's College, London; and as regards English history, he traces the deficiency of knowledge to the want of good books, brief and inexpensive, on the subject. The Church Catechism is taught too much by rote, and its repetition with verbal accuracy appears to be the sole result of the instruction under this head. The question given for the examination for the Ashburton prizes, in 1854, appear, on the whole, sufficiently practical to elicit a candidate's knowledge of "common things," although it is certainly rather amusing to find the schoolmistresses asked to state "the advantages of cleaning the teeth daily, and the disadvantages of losing them (to ladies especially) in early life."

QUALIFICATION OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.—A bill prepared and brought in by Mr. Colville, Viscount Emlyn, and Mr. Ker Seymour, amends the laws relating to the qualification of justices of the peace. It repeals the whole of the acts of 13th Richard II., statute 1, chap. 7; the 18th of Henry VI., chap. 11; the 5th of George II., chap. 20; clause 33 of the 6th and 7th of Victoria, chap. 73; and clause 21 of the 9th and 10th of Victoria, chap. 95. No person shall be capable of being a justice of the peace unless he be qualified—1, by possessing an estate in land within England or Wales, for his own use and benefit, of the clear yearly value of 100*l.*; or, 2, by possessing a personal estate of 300*l.*; or, 3, by possessing a clear yearly income of at least 300*l.* derived from a Government office or pension; or, 4, by possessing more than one of the several kinds of property hereinbefore mentioned, all amounting in the aggregate to the clear yearly value of 300*l.* A declaration of their qualification must be made by justices of the peace, and any person guilty of making a false declaration will be held to have committed a misdemeanour. Persons acting without having declared their qualifications will be fined 50*l.* recoverable in a county court. Where property designated in a declaration is chargeable with an encumbrance, jointly with other property belonging to the same person, such property shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to be deteriorated in value by the existence of such encumbrance only to the extent to which the other property jointly charged therewith is insufficient to satisfy the same. No qualification by estate shall be required of peers of Parliament, privy-councillors, justices of either bench, or barons of the Exchequer, eldest sons of peers, or eldest sons of persons capable of being elected county members. The following persons will be qualified by office, viz., officers of the Board of Green Cloth, heads of colleges, vice-chancellors and mayors at Oxford and Cambridge, judges of county courts, commissioners of the Navy, under-secretaries of State, and the secretary of Chelsea College, &c. Attorneys, solicitors and proctors are especially disqualified. This act will not extend to particular jurisdictions. It is to take effect on the 1st of January, 1856, and to be limited to England and Wales.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL, HAVERSTOCK HILL.

On Sunday, June 10th, two sermons were preached on behalf of the above charity by the Rev. Thomas Binney of the Weigh House. The preacher chose as his text, John xiv. 18, "I will NOT leave you COMFORTLESS, but I will come to you," and proceeded to give the various renderings of this passage by well-known translators. A large portion render it, "I will not leave you orphans;" some, "I will not leave you fatherless," and referred to James i. 27, where the same word is rendered "Fatherless." The beautiful rendering of Luther, "To visit the motherless and fatherless children and widows," he referred to with much felicity. The next step in progress was to refer to the patriarchal ages. "Violence covered the land." It must have been that of blood, and as a consequence, there was the weeping and lamentation of orphans and widows. Several passages in the book of Job were referred to as shewing that the care of orphans and widows was considered to be a part of religious duty. Job's friend, Eliphaz, charged it upon him as a grave offence, "Thou hast sent widows away empty, and the arms of the fatherless have been broken, therefore snares are round about thee," &c., &c. But he replied, "I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him, the blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. And if I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless when I saw my help in the gate, THEN, let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone! The preacher proceeded to show from numerous passages in Deuteronomy, how the Jews, then but semi-civilized, just emerging from the position and duties of slaves, adhered to the principle of caring for the widow, the orphan and the stranger. The fields teeming with fruitfulness, were to bear a portion for them. The gatherers were to leave the gleanings for them. If the owners of the fields saw a stray sheaf, or that the gatherers had not done their work efficiently, they were not to be blamed, and they were not to regather; that which was left was for the widow, the orphan, and the stranger. If an orphan was defrauded by the removal of the land-mark, or in any way besides, it was said that God, the father of the fatherless, so cared for their interests, that the fraudulent person, if he suffered not in person, would in his posterity. God cares for orphans! After an appeal on behalf of the charity, the preacher concluded the morning's discourse.

In the evening, Mr. Binney took the same text, and recapitulated in clear outline the substance of the morning's discourse. He then proceeded to show that the same beautiful and loving sympathy ran through all the prophets, from the first whose utterances were put forth to the last in the series. A glance at the passages on the same subject in the New Testament, concluded a discourse full of the deepest interest to the christian and the philanthropist, and to those who heard it, it will be subject for thought for years to come. In the course of his remarks, the preacher referred to the fact, that there is nothing in all History to prove that Heathen nations ever cared for widows or orphans, and that there has never yet been discovered the the ruins of an orphan asylum in all the classic remains of antiquity.

In referring to the Orphan Working School, Mr. Binney stated his regret that, although he had for many years been a Governor of the Charity, he had not visited the Asylum at Haverstock Hill until the previous Friday, when he desired to inform himself before preaching in its behalf. He spoke in terms of admiration of the state and condition of the children, of the charming position, cleanliness, and healthiness of the house, and of the care and attention of the teachers, as evidenced in the manners and intelligence of their pupils. The school was established in 1758—now nearly a century ago — at Hoxton, then a suburb of London, for 20 boys only. Removed to the City Road in 1771, shortly after that was formed, and it was then open country, there was accommodation provided for 35 boys and 35 girls. In 1847, the School was again removed out of town, and there are now 269 children in the Asylum. In 10 years only 3 deaths have occurred among these children, or an average of 1 in 650 children of tender age. The building stands well, and is thoroughly drained, and ventilated. These statements were made and enlarged upon, and eloquently enforced by the preacher, and the result was collections amounting to 39*l.* 19s. 2d. and of Life and Annual Contributions in addition, 14*l.* 14s. 6d., making altogether, 54*l.* 13s. 8d.—a liberal contribution truly, but when it is considered that the extra expenses of the charity, arising out of the high price of provisions and clothing, have been 1,000*l.* in two years; or that the expenses of 1854 have been more by 1,000*l.* than they were in 1852 with the same number of children, not too liberal for the important object in view.

Digitized by Google

THE MASS IN GOVERNMENT PRISONS.

The following petition from members of the Committee of the Protestant Alliance has been presented to Parliament:—

That your petitioners have learned with deep regret that permission has been granted by her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, to the Roman Catholic priesthood to celebrate Mass in the Government prison at Brixton.

That your petitioners are aware that such permission has been yielded, not to the request of the prisoners, but to the demands of the priests.

That, in the conviction of your petitioners, such permission is beyond the letter and spirit of the law, which only provides that every prisoner should see any minister in private whom he desires.

That such permission directly identifies the Government of England with the celebration of a service which our fathers abolished in connection with every national institution, and which this nation holds to be idolatrous, and, therefore offensive to Almighty God; that it is, therefore, in direct antagonism to the principles of the Reformation, under which this country has, by God's blessing, arrived at its present condition of liberty and prosperity.

That such permission would afford encouragement for still further aggression on the part of a power whose insolent usurpation of the prerogatives of the crown has already lately required repression by Parliamentary enactment.

That such permission is opposed to the principles of toleration which forbid that any one of non-conforming bodies, especially one which owes a foreign allegiance, should be selected as the object of Government patronage, favour, and support.

Your petitioners, therefore, pray your honourable house to take such measures as may effectually secure the withdrawal of the permission granted, without the authority of the Legislature, and prevent any concessions for the future, except such as may be enacted by the Crown, Lords, and Commons of England in Parliament assembled.

The Roman Catholic Charities Bill was read a third time in the House of Lords on the 12th of June.

The Youthful offenders' bill has been postponed until July 11.

THE PRINTERS' PENSION SOCIETY.

The annual dinner of the friends of the Printers' Pension Society took place on the 27th of April, at the London Tavern. The Lord Mayor took the chair, supported by Mr. Sheriff Crosley, Dr. Spurgin, and other gentlemen.

The Chairman having given, and the company responded to the several loyal toasts, his lordship gave the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Printers' Pension Society." They were all well aware of the good the society had already effected in relieving decayed compositors and pressmen, and stepping in to the assistance of the bereaved and widowed. This was one reason why it was entitled to their support, because it had by its career of usefulness earned it. The necessity which existed for it was another strong inducement to the vigorous maintenance; for he found that there were few tradesmen more liable to be afflicted with blindness: and a printer when blind might be considered as helpless. He found that it had already pensioned 193 persons, and that it was at the present moment paying pensions to 56. There were also three other pensioners on private foundations. He found, however, that at the last election they had been able to elect only four candidates out of a list of 24; and it was difficult to conceive the pain and the disappointment of the unsuccessful. Increased revenue would enable the society to diminish that amount of suffering, and he hoped that a large subscription would be the response to the toast.

Several other toasts followed, and the secretary (Mr. J. S. Hodson) having announced that the subscriptions of the evening amounted to about 350*l.*, the company separated.

Appointments and Promotions.

Aldham.—The Rev. Harcourt Aldham, M.A., Vicar of Stoke Priors, to be Chaplain of the Brooms Grove Union.

Fraser.—Colonel Fraser to be Governor of the House of Correction at Westminster.

Leonard, Dr. Peter, to be Deputy-Inspector of Hospitals, and is appointed to Haslar Hospital.

Lindsay, Dr. William, to be Inspector of Hospitals, and is appointed to Haslar Hospital.

Obituary.

Emmens.—On the 18th of May, Mr. W. B. Emmens, in his 55th year, for 24 years the much respected collector of the Labourers' Friend Society, and the Society for Improving the Condition of the Labouring Classes, 21, Exeter-hall.

Carew.—On the 21st of May, Thomas George Warrington Carew, Esq., of Crowcombe Court, Somerset, Carew Castle, Pembroke, and Pentrepant Hall, Salop, a Magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for the County of Somerset, aged 58.

Burridge.—On the 24th of May, in the 57th year of his age, Mr. William Burridge, Master of St. Margaret's and St. John's Workhouse, Kensington.

Schoolbridge.—On the 24th of May, at Craythorne House, Tenterden, T. B. Schoolbridge, aged 65, Mayor and Justice of the Peace for the Borough of Tenterden.

Holderness.—On the 25th of May, aged seven months, Howard the Son of the Rev. William Holderness, Chaplain of the Convict Establishment, Portland.

Stewart.—On the 28th of May, at Portsmouth, Dr. James Stewart, Surgeon, Royal Navy, Justice of the Peace for the County of Hampshire, in the 65th year of his age.

Rodick.—On the 7th of June, at Beachwood, Westmoreland, in the 67th year of his age, Thomas Rodick, Esq., of Gateacre, Justice of the Peace, and Deputy Lieutenant for the County of Lancaster.

French Sœur de Charité.—A Letter from Beyrout mentions the death of one of the French sœurs de charite, who had fallen a victim to her zeal and devotedness in the discharge of her duties. A number of persons attended her funeral, and for the first time in Syria the cross which was carried before the clergy was seen escorted by Turkish soldiers, with their arms reversed.

KENT MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Queen Street-place, New Cannon-street.

The Fifth Annual General Meeting of the Kent Mutual Life Assurance Society was held on May 8th, at the London Tavern, and was attended by a great number of its most influential members.

The chair was taken by Mr. J. T. King, the chairman of the board, and among the members present were C. B. Mander, Esq., of Wolverhampton; R. H. Haywood, Esq., and F. Bishop, Esq., of Hanley; Dr. Goddard, of Longton; the Rev. A. P. Hughes, of Gornal; R. Davison, Esq.; R. W. Cooke, Esq.; F. Dollman, Esq.; W. J. Carne, Esq.; P. Karslake, Esq.; T. Wilson, Esq.; J. C. Burnett, Esq.; N. Crouch, Esq., T. W. Pike, Esq.; R. Crossley, Esq.; W. Brownfield, Esq.; C. B. Kelham, Esq.; H. Bessemer, Esq.; R. Longsdon, Esq.; J. L. Evans, Esq.; T. Minshall, Esq.; W. Holdich, Esq.; J. C. Hailes, Esq.; B. L. Thompson, Esq.; J. McMullen, Esq.; J. Young, Esq.; S. Rickan, Esq.; W. Anderton, Esq.; G. Fagg, Esq.; J. Burton, Esq.; J. Gould, jun., Esq.; and W. Baker, Esq.

Mr. George Cumming, the Manager, read the Directors' Report. It stated that since the last annual meeting, 509 new policies had been issued, upon which £6,195 19s. 5d. had been received in premiums. The assets of the society at present amounted to £31,396 8s. 1d., and, under the division of profits, realized on the 24th March, 1854, a cash bonus of one-fifth of the premiums paid was declared upon all policies on which two or more annual premiums had been paid. It further stated that the society's annual revenue now amounted to £18,130 10s. 1d.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the Report—the reading of which elicited the entire approbation of the meeting—congratulated it upon its eminently practical character, as regarded the large amount of success which it had been the good fortune of the Directors to attain during the past year. It would be unnecessary for him to allude to the circumstances of active competition which now existed among the representatives of the several companies; and, having regard to that, he was sure it would be most gratifying to them to find that the assertion made in casual conversation by various managers and secretaries, that the wonderful amount of business transacted by the Kent Mutual Society in its past years was the result of gigantic efforts on the part of the board, and would not be continued in ensuing years, had been disproved. It was most true, that great efforts had been made, but the board never overlooked the importance of getting active and influential agents throughout the country, and the result of the judicious measures which they had taken in that view was seen in the highly satisfactory Report now before them [hear, hear]. He was sure that it was only necessary that the principles of the office should be known, and its advantages fairly laid before the public, to command perfect success; and he begged to move that the Report be now approved and adopted.

The motion having been seconded by Mr. Wilson, of Newport, Monmouthshire, was put and agreed to unanimously.

The directors and auditors retiring by rotation having been re-elected,

The Chairman then proposed that the thanks of the meeting be voted to the local boards of North and South Staffordshire, including in the resolution the names of Mr. Mander, of Wolverhampton, and Dr. Goddard, of the North Staffordshire board.

The motion was cordially agreed to, and both gentlemen severally returned thanks, declaring their confidence in the soundness of the principles upon which the society was founded, and that with the active exertions which they would not fail to make, it would be sure to make still greater progress in the country.

Mr. Bishop, as connected with the North

Digitized by Google

Staffordshire Board, moved a Resolution expressive of their entire confidence in the management, and their satisfaction at the prosperity which had hitherto attended their operations, and added that he thought their local society would soon be in a position to double its transactions with them [hear, hear].

Mr. Mander moved a vote of thanks to the supporters and agents, which was agreed to, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Pike, and Mr. Gosbell returning thanks.

Votes of thanks were then passed to the Medical Referees, the Actuary, and the manager.

Mr. Hilman, the actuary, in returning thanks, said that he should have been justified in estimating their business at a much higher rate of interest than three per cent., but he preferred being moderate and could assure the meeting that the balance-sheet was a true statement of their affairs.

Mr. Cumming also returned thanks, and, in doing so, went into a few figures, exhibiting a highly satisfactory state of the affairs of the society as compared with some of the oldest offices in their earlier years.

A vote of thanks having been unanimously passed to the Chairman for his able and courteous conduct in the chair, the meeting terminated.

The anniversary festival was celebrated in the evening by a splendid dinner at the London Tavern, at which Mr. King again presided, supported by a large number of the directors, members, and supporters of the society, among whom we noticed Sir James Duke, Bt., M.P.; Mr. Lee, M.P.; Sir H. Muggeridge, Sheriff; Mr. Alderman Kennedy; Mr. Deputy Dakin; Sir. C. P. Roney; Rev. H. Mackenzie, M.A.; Rev. Mr. Cattley; C. B. Mander, Esq.; James Grant, Esq.; Dr. Goddard; F. Stainer, Esq.; A. Palk, Esq., &c., &c.

The usual loyal toasts having been duly responded to.

The Chairman gave the "House of Commons."

Sir James Duke, M.P., returned thanks—observing that he had not undertaken the responsibility of Trustee of the Kent Mutual Assurance Society, without first ascertaining that he would be justified in so doing, and that he felt the highest confidence in the management.

Mr. Lee, M.P. also returned thanks, and referred in high terms to the distinguished position which the Kent Mutual Assurance Society had obtained for itself among the assurance societies of the metropolis.

The Chairman gave "the Lord Mayor and Corporation of London," associating with it the names of the Sheriff, Sir H. Muggeridge, and Mr. Alderman Kennedy.

The Chairman then gave the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Kent Mutual Assurance Society." He was satisfied that there was no occasion for his saying anything to enlist the sympathy of the company on behalf of the interests of the society which they had met to promote [hear, hear]. The question had been frequently put—"How was it that the Kent Mutual Assurance Society had outstripped many other societies of older date?" The answer was to be found in those principles of universal mutuality, which appealed at once to the intelligence of our countrymen, and their desire to have a voice in the direction of their own affairs [hear, hear]. He felt quite sure that the great things they had already accomplished would be still farther exceeded by a continued application of the same principles, and doubted not that the £20,000 per annum of income, which they had realized in five years, might soon be immensely augmented [cheers].

Mr. Alderman Kennedy proposed the health of the Chairman, which was warmly responded to by the company.

The healths of the trustees, local boards, and manager, having been afterwards drunk and responded to, the party separated, after passing an evening most unanimously in the promotion of the interests of the society.

WORKS PUBLISHED BY PARTRIDGE, OAKEY, AND CO.

LIVES of the Illustrious. Volume VII. Contents:—Gibbon — Cardinal Richelieu—John Wesley—Louis Philippe—L. and M. Davidson—Mohammed—H. Bell—Warren Hastings—Pope—Cowper—Lamennais—Duke of Marlborough—Miss Mitford—Ignatius Loyola—A. M. Ampère—W. Williams—Mozart—W. Penn—Bernard Palissy—E. A. Poe—Mrs. Sherwood—H. Grattan—Dante—Marshall Lannes—W. Etty—A. Vinet—R. L. Shell—With an Obituary. 8vo. cloth lettered, 4s.; by post, 4s. 6d.

NEW WORK BY THE REV. C. MOLYNEUX.

BROKEN BREAD. By the Rev. C. Molyneux, Author of "Israel's Future," &c. crown 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d.; by post, 5s. [In the Press.

THE Last of the Czars: a Romance founded on Russian History and Traditions. By W. R. Brame. Fcap. 8vo. paper, 3s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 4s. 6d.; by post, 6d. extra. [In a few days.

NEW WORK BY DR. HARRIS.

PATRIARCHY; or, The Family, its Constitution, and Probation. By the Rev. J. Harris, D.D., &c., Principal of New College, St. John's Wood. Demy 8vo., cloth. [In a few days.

RAGGED SCHOOLS.

Now ready.

THE Prize Essay on these Institutions, By G. J. HALL, M.A. Cloth, elegant, Two Shillings.

Partridge and Oakey, and Exeter Hall, London.

And all Booksellers.

FORESHADOWINGS; or, A Beacon for the Million. 8vo. Sixpence free by post. [This day.

THE Present Crisis, in connection with Christian Union and Missionary Labours. By the Rev. T. R. BIRKS, M.A., Rector of Kelshall. Royal 18mo., paper, 6d.; cloth gilt, 1s. 6d.; free by post. [Now ready.

GUNN'S Scriptural Lessons. Three Scriptural Lessons taught in a Sunday School, introductory to a more detailed examination of the Gospel by John; with observations as to the mode of teaching adopted by the late Rev. D. GUNN, Christchurch, and specimens of his lessons. Fcap. 8vo. limp cloth, 1s. Free by post. [This day.

"Admirable, exceedingly."—Christian Weekly News.

THOUGHTS on Life, and other Poems, by J. PRIEST. (Sabbath Observances Discussed, the Rights of the Poor Vindicated.) Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, Four Shillings; free by post [This day.

PLAIN Papers on Prophetic and other Subjects, 12mo. cloth, 3s. Free by post.

THE Evangelization of Italy. A Sermon by GAVAZZI. Sixpence. Free by post. [Now ready.

GOD and His Works; or, the Existence of God in Harmony with Human Consciousness. By the Rev. T. ROBERTS. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s.; free by post.

THE Mormon's own Book; or, Mormonism tried by its own standards—Reason and Scripture. By T. W. P. TAYLDER. Dedicated to the London City Mission. Crown 8vo., cloth, 3s 6d. Free by post.

THE Conflict and the Triumph; or, the Things that are coming upon the Earth. By the Rev. N. S. Godfrey, Wortley, near Leeds. Crown 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.; free by post.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL LIFE ASSURANCE AND GENERAL DEPOSIT AND ADVANCE COMPANY. 22, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars, London.

Directors.

Chairman—THOMAS MIERS, Esq., Upper Clapton.

Vice-Chairman.—F. CUTHBERTSON, Esq., Aldersgate Street.

BURGESS, JOSEPH, Esq. | LINDSEY, MARK, Esq.
GARDINER, B. W. Esq. | MANN, JOHN, Esq.
GOVER, JOHN, Esq. | PRATT, DANIEL, Esq.
GROSER, WM., Esq. | SILVESTER, H. R., Esq.

TOWNSEND, H. M., Esq.

Auditors.

MILLAR, ROBERT JAMES, Esq., North Brixton.
WILLS, JOHN, Esq., Doctor's-Commons, and Chatham-Place, Walworth.

Bankers.

The UNION BANK of LONDON.

Solicitors.

Messrs. WATSON & SONS, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street.

Secretary—SAMUEL GREEN, Esq.

CAPITAL, ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUNDS.

POLICIES ISSUED from FIVE POUNDS and upwards.

PREMIUMS PAYABLE WEEKLY, MONTHLY, or QUARTERLY.

SPECIMEN.

Age.	Payment per Month. s. d.	Amount Assured. £ s. d.
14	0 4	11 17 8
21	0 8	20 5 6
30	1 0	24 12 3

MONEY ADVANCED ON SECURITY repayable by Instalments MONTHLY or QUARTERLY.

ADVANCES OF MONEY are made by this Company on the deposit of Deeds and in the discounting of Bills.

THE LEGAL EXPENCES are paid by the Company.

BORROWERS not subject to fines.

DEPOSITS RECEIVED of any amount, secured by agreement under the Company's seal, and for which a liberal interest is paid.

IMMEDIATE ADVANCES from 100*l.* to 10,000*l.*

SHAREHOLDERS will find in this company an eligible means of investment.

For Shares and further particulars, apply to the Secretary, SAMUEL GREEN.

Office hours, from Ten to Five.

PROFITABLE AGENCY.

AGENTS wanted for the Sale of BAKER and Company's long celebrated PACKET TEAS and COFFEES.

For Terms &c., apply to Baker & Co., 4, Little Tower-street, London.

NERVO-ARTERIAL Essence Discovered and Prepared by Dr. William Batchelour, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, 1835, and Member and Licentiate of the Apothecaries' Company, 1834, 12, Finsbury-place South, Finsbury-square, London, for Diseases arising from the Derangement of the Nervo-Arterial System.

The effect of the Nervo-Arterial Essence is to replenish the sources of nervous power, and to promote a normal circulation of the blood by acting upon the muscular coats of the arteries. It does not stimulate, in the popular sense of the word, because there is no reaction. A long course of experience has convinced Dr. Batchelour that most diseases will succumb, if the disturbed equilibrium of the nervous and sanguineous circulations can be re-adjusted.

TESTIMONIAL.

Triangle, Hackney, Dec. 13, 1854.

My Dear Doctor,—When you first attended me I was suffering from general exhaustion to such an extent that, after my Sunday labours in the pulpit, I continued almost prostrated for several days; you said that my symptoms evidenced a deranged and inadequate action of the nervo-arterial system, but that I should and could be cured by your Nervo-Arterial Essence, which attacked the seat of disease by replenishing the sources of nervous power. I am thankful now, that I think it a duty publicly to record that your words have been fully substantiated. By means of the Essence I have, as many of my congregation must have observed, become a renovated man.—I remain, dear Sir, your sincere friend,

William Woodhouse.

Minister of the Adelphi Chapel, Hackney-road.

Dr. Wm. Batchelour.

The Nervo-Arterial Essence is sold at 1½, West-street, Finsbury-circus, London; and may be had of all Chemists and Druggists, in stamped bottles 4s. 6d. and 11s. each. Each stamp has the name of Dr. William Batchelour, M.R.C.S.E., and M.L.A.C., impressed thereon.

Dr. Batchelour may be consulted in the City, as above, and after four by appointment, at 15, Albion-street, Hyde-park-square.

Digitized by Google

IMPORTANT TO CONDUCTORS OF PENNY BANKS.

PERPETUAL INVESTMENT, LAND, AND BUILDING SOCIETY, 22, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars, London.

PROGRESS OF THE SOCIETY.

Shares issued 9,565. Money advanced on Mortgage, £100,295.

This Society offers a secure and safe mode for the investment of large or small sums of money, the security for which is unquestionable, the funds being all advanced upon Freehold, Copyhold, or Leasehold Property.

INVESTMENT DEPARTMENT.

INVESTORS are those who use the Society as an investment for their savings; on which they will, on the completion of their shares, receive interest at the rate of 5 per cent., together with a proportion of the Society's profits.

An Investor may at any time withdraw the money which he has paid on his share, with interest thereon; the interest now receivable upon withdrawal is 5 per cent. compound, or a Person may dispose of his share with the accumulations of interest and profit, a fee of 1s. per share being paid on the transfer. Should sickness, want of employment, or other pecuniary emergency arise, an Investor can, upon the security of his shares, borrow a sum not exceeding the amount paid by him to the Society, interest being charged at the rate of 7d. per month for £5, which includes all expenses.

SHARES.—There are five descriptions of shares, namely:—£10 shares; £25 shares; £30 shares; £50 shares; and £100 shares.

A £10 share may be paid by instalments in the same manner as deposits in Savings Banks; the entrance fee is 6d. each share.

A £25 share requires the payment of 5s. per month for 7½ years, together with an entrance fee of 1s.

A £30 share requires the payment of 4s. per month for 10 years, together with an entrance fee of 1s.

A £50 share requires the payment of 5s. per month for 12½ years, or of 10s. per month for 7½ years, together with an entrance fee of 1s. 6d.

A £100 share requires the payment of 10s. per month for 12½ years, or of £1 per month for 7½ years, together with an entrance fee of 2s. 6d.

Any of these shares may be paid up in full, and thus become Realized Shares, or they may be paid by irregular instalments, in which case the money will bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

The Interest upon Realized Shares is 5½ per cent. per annum, which includes the profits belonging to such shares, and is paid half-yearly, on the 30th of April and the 30th of October.

EXAMPLES OF INVESTORS.

A. B. enters for one £100 share, on which he pays an entrance fee of 2s. 6d., and 10s. per month, (or 4d. per day) for 12½ years. 10s. per month, paid for 12½ years, will amount to £75. To this sum will be added £25 for interest at 5 per cent., so that A. B. will receive, at the end of the 12½ years, £100, and his proportion of the profits.

C. D. wishing to have £100 to apprentice his son, or for some other purpose, has to pay 20s. per month for 7 years.

E. F., not being able to spare so much as 10s. per month, enters for a £50 share to be realised in 12½ years, on which he pays an entrance fee of 1s. 6d., and the sum of 5s. monthly, or 2d. per day.

G. H. enters for a £30 share, on which he pays an entrance fee of 1s., and 4s. per month for 10 years, or rather more than 1½d. per day.

J. K. enters for 10 realised shares of £10 each, and having paid £100 5s. for subscriptions and entrance fees, he receives interest thereon half-yearly at the rate of 5½ per cent. per annum.

L. M. enters for one £1. share, and pays 5s. thereon, as his first instalment, with the entrance fee of 6d.; in three weeks he pays a second 5s.; in two weeks more he pays 7s., and continues making his payments until the whole £10 is paid, when he will receive interest at 4 per cent. for all his back payments, and commence receiving interest at 5½ per cent. per annum.

N. O., desirous of securing to his daughter, now aged 14, the sum of £50 on her attaining the age of 21, has to pay 10s. per month, or £5 18s. per annum, for 7 years.

For Particulars of other Departments see Prospectus.

Ragged School Teachers desirous of promoting provident habits should form Penny Banks in connexion with their Schools, and in order to enable them to make such Banks self supporting, the Directors of the above Society are prepared to receive the deposits weekly and allow interest thereon at the rate of five pounds per cent. per annum.

Shares may be taken, Prospectuses had, and information obtained at the Office of the Society between the hours of nine and five, and on Wednesdays from nine to eight. The Rules are 3d. each, and will be forwarded on receipt of four postage stamps.

Plans of the Society's Estates at Muswell Hill may be had on application at the Office.

A fair remuneration allowed to parties introducing business to the Society.

N.B. Post-office Orders to be made payable to JOHN EDWARD TRESIDDER.

Head Office, 22, New Bridge-Street, Blackfriars.

ALL persons insuring during this year will share in the next division of profits

BRITISH EMPIRE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

37, NEW BRIDGE-STREET, BLACKFRIARS LONDON.

DIRECTORS.

JOHN GOVER, Esq., CHAIRMAN, New Kent-road.
BENNETT, C. Esq., 32, Royal Exchange.
BUNNELL, P. Esq., Edmonton.
BURTON, J. R., Esq., 189, Great Dover Street.
CARTWRIGHT, R., Esq., 57, Chancery-lane.
CUTHBERTSON, F., Esq., 123, Aldersgate-street.
GARDINER, B. W., Esq., 20, Princes-street, Cavendish-square.
GROSER, W. Esq., 35, Hemingford Villas, Barnsbury park.
LEWIS, G. C., Esq., 1, Lowndes-terrace, Knightsbridge.
MILLAR, R, J., Esq., 1, Holland-grove, North Brixton.
PRATT, D., Esq., 3, Bolt-court, Fleet-street.
SANDERS, J., Esq., 5, Sutherland-square, Walworth.

AUDITORS.

BURGE, G. W., Esq., 10, Clarence Villas, Hackney.
PORTER, JOSEPH, L., Esq., 43, Sloane-street.

BANKERS.

LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK.

SOLICITORS.

Messrs. WATSON and SONS, 12, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street.

SURVEYOR.

THOMAS TURNER, Esq., 24, Bucklersbury.

SURGEON.

JOHN MANN, Esq., 4 Charter-house-square.

SECRETARY.

JAMES INGLIS, Esq.

The Proposals for Life Assurance received during the year 1854 amounted to 1034 for £243,968; out of which 876 Policies have been issued, assuring £195,759; 158 for £48,209 being in progress, or declined.

The number of Policies now in force is 5,069, assuring £988,050.

The present Annual Income is £36,568 18s. 1d.

The Company has an Accumulated Fund of £70,000.

The period having arrived for the Second Division of Profits to the Assured, a complete and detailed valuation of the assets and liabilities of the Company has been made by the Actuary, F. G. P. Nelson, Esq., by which it appeared, that of the realised profits during the three years that have elapsed since the first division, there is a disposable balance of £20,000; and, after deducting 10 per cent. for the purposes of the Reserved Fund, there remains £18,000 to appropriate as bonus to the members, which will be found to be in the ratio of about 27½ per cent. of the amount of premiums paid by them.

JAMES INGLIS, Secretary.

FIRE COMPANY.—Subscribed Guarantee Fund, £200,000; Pure Mutuality; Policy-holders not liable for Losses; ENTIRE PROFITS Divided Triennially; Policies issued, 13,438 for £6,019,185; 12½ per Cent. per Annum has been returned at each triennial division on the entire premiums paid.

FRANCIS CLOWES, Secretary.

LIFE ASSURANCE.

UNITED Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution.

1, ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON-BRIDGE, LONDON.
Established, 1840, for the Mutual Assurance of Lives, Endowments, Annuities, etc.

ACCUMULATED CAPITAL, £131,000.
ANNUAL INCOME, £45,000.

Since the commencement of this Institution it has issued Ten Thousand Policies. In the year 1852, it issued 1,177; in the year 1853, 1,318; and in 1854, 1,331.

This is the only Life Assurance Office in which abstainers from Distilled and Fermented Liquors, can secure the full benefit of their Temperance.

The Temperance and Public Sections are kept in separate classes, and will each receive their own profits.

Policies are indisputable, except for palpable fraud.

Entire profits belong to the assured.

Edinburgh Office, 17, George-street; Manchester, 41, John Dalton-street; Liverpool, 48, Castle-street; Glasgow, 106, Hope-street.

Prospectuses, &c., may be obtained at the Branch Offices, or of any of the agents.

WILLIAM RICHARD BAKER, Resident Director.

CITY of London Life Assurance Society, for general accumulative and self-protecting assurance. Head offices, 2, Royal Exchange-buildings, London.—Capital a Quarter of a Million.

TRUSTEES.

The Rt. Hon. the Ld. Mayor. | The Hon. W. F. Campbell.
The Hon. Com. West. | John Thomas, Esq.

This society guaranteed by a capital fully adequate to every contingency and not injuriously large, offers the advantages of the Mutual system, without the liabilities of co-partnership.

EDWD. FRED. LEEKS, Secretary.

ELEGANT PERSONAL REQUISITES.

Under the Patronage of Royalty and the Aristocracy throughout Europe, and universally preferred and esteemed.

Ladies Travelling, or enjoying the Aquatic Excursion, the Fashionable Promenade, the Ride, and Drive; in all cases, Fervid Heat, and its concomitant, Dust, materially injure the Skin, producing SUNBURN, TAN, FRECKLES, and DISCOLORATIONS, of an almost indelible character. To obviate and eradicate these baneful results, recourse may with confidence be had to

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR,

AN ORIENTAL BOTANICAL PREPARATION

Whether resorted to in its specific character as a thorough purifier of existing defects of an eruptive nature, and discolorations of the Skin, or as a benign PRESERVER and PROMOTER of its already bright and glowing tints, this

ELEGANT TOILET REQUISITE

Has, in every instance maintained its claim to the title of "THE UNFAILING AUXILIARY OF FEMALE GRACE."

During SUMMER and AUTUMN, which are peculiarly the seasons of FASHIONABLE MOVEMENTS, the invigorating and refreshing properties of ROWLANDS' KALYDOR will be found singularly agreeable.

TO LADIES TRAVELLING,

The effects produced by temporary EXPOSURE TO SOLAR HEAT, upon the FACE, NECK, ARMS, and HANDS, being neutralized, and the cloud induced by relaxation and languor dispelled by its power of sustaining a perfect elasticity of the skin; without which, certain deterioration takes place.—THUS, IN THE USUAL PERIODICAL VISITS MADE TO THE COAST, ROWLANDS' KALYDOR is indispensable as a preservative after

SEA BATHING,

From the irritation caused by the chemical action of saline vapour.

As a perfect illustration of the unquestionable safety attending the application of ROWLANDS' KALYDOR, and of the wide range of its utility, its introduction to the nursery, with the advantage which ensues in that interesting department of maternal solicitude, is most convincing;—here it soothes every species of incidental inflammation, and fosters all those infantine graces upon which the parental eye dwells with delight.

From the sultry climes of India, to the frozen realms of the North, this exotic preparation is perfectly innocious, acting in all cases by promoting a healthy tone of the minute vessels, and is the most elegant as well as effective Toilet appendage hitherto submitted to universal patronage.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per Bottle.

CAUTION.—The words "ROWLANDS' KALYDOR" are on the Wrapper, and "A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON," in red ink at foot.

The heat of Summer also frequently communicates a dryness to the hair, and a tendency to fall off, which may be completely obviated by the use of

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL,

A delightful, fragrant and transparent preparation, and as an invigorator and purifier beyont all precedent. In dressing the hair, nothing can equal the effects of ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, producing beautifully flowing curls, and imparting a transcendent lustre.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; or family bottles (equal to four small) at 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

Nor at this season can we be too careful to preserve the Teeth from the deleterious effects of Vegetable Acids, (the immediate cause of Tooth-ache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of

ROWLANDS' ODONTO,

OR,

PEARL DENTIFRICE,

a White Powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant exotics. It bestows on the Teeth a Pearl-like Whiteness, frees them from Tartar, and imparts to the Gums a healthy firmness, and to the Breath a grateful sweetness and purity.—Price 2s. 9d. per Box.

The patronage of Royalty throughout Europe, their general use by the Aristocracy, and the dictate of Fashion, and the well-known infallible efficacy of these articles, have given them a celebrity unparalleled.

Beware of Spurious Imitations!!!

The only GENUINE of each bears the Name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article on the Wrapper or Label.

SOLD BY A. ROWLAND & SONS,
20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, AND BY CHEMISTS AND PERFUMERS.

Printed by GEORGE WATSON, of No. 4, New River Terrace North, in the Parish of St. Mary, Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at his Office, No. 5, Kirby Street, Hatton Garden, in the Liberty of Saffron Hill, Hatton Garden, and Ely Rents, in the Parish of St. Andrew, Holborn; and Published by Partridge, Oakey, & Co. of 34, Paternoster Row, in the City of London.—MON., July 2, 1855.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

PRISON AND REFORMATORY GAZETTE;

A RECORD OF SOCIAL AMELIORATION, AND JOURNAL OF CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

No. 10, New Series.] LONDON, MARCH 1, 1856. Price 6*d.*

METROPOLITAN Industrial Reformatory for Young Men.
Grove House, Brixton Hill.

President.

The Right Hon. The Earl of Shaftesbury.

Trustees.

George Moore, Esq., Samuel Gurney, Jun., Esq., and Henry Cunliffe, Esq.

Treasurer.

John Cunliffe, Esq., 24, Lombard Street.

Bankers.

Messrs. Cunliffe and Co., 24, Lombard Street.

Urgent Appeal for pecuniary assistance.

This Institution which was established for the purpose of rescuing from a life of crime and degradation such Young Men and Boys as are sincerely desirous of retracing their steps, and leading for the future an honest life, has now been in operation nearly three years, and during that period 99 of the inmates have been permanently benefited in the following way:

23 have been placed in Situations in England.
24 have been sent as Emigrants to the United States.
19 have enlisted in the Army.
9 have been placed in the Navy or Merchant Service.
6 have been restored to their Friends.
4 have been removed to Hospitals.
14 have been placed in other Reformatories more adapted to their wants.

99 total.

The Governor has been able to watch over those that are in situations in England, and the result has been thus far satisfactory, that while some have left their past employment and sought fresh masters, not one has returned to a dishonest mode of life. From the emigrants, and those who have become soldiers and sailors, he has received very many letters of an interesting and encouraging character. Those from the emigrants record the manner in which the settlers are engaged in different industrial occupations, to enable them to fill which they were trained in this Institution; they all speak in the most grateful terms of the advantages received by them during their residence here, and the lasting benefit they hope to derive from the instruction and advice imparted to them. These letters may be seen at the Institution. The Committee feel encouraged from these results to persevere in their self-denying and arduous work, attended though it be with many discouragements and much anxiety, the more especially, as at the present time the debts of the Institution amount to nearly £500.

Donations and Subscriptions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, and Honorary Secretaries, H. F. Bowker, Esq., 11, John Street, Bedford Row; C. T. Jenkinson, Esq., Liverpool Lodge, Brixton Hill; or the Governor, Mr. C. W. Metcalfe, at the Institution.

THE Asylum Life Assurance Office, 72, Cornhill, London; established 1824.

Policies on healthy and diseased lives, at home and abroad, for civil, military, and naval employments.

The office being on purely proprietary principles, no partnership among policyholders is involved.

For prospectuses, proposal papers &c. apply to MANLEY HOPKINS, Resident Director.

ROYAL Asylum of St. Ann's Society, for Children of those once in prosperity, orphans or not—By voluntary contributions. The next Election will take place on Friday, February the 10th, 1856. New Candidates should be immediately nominated. Donations and Subscriptions gratefully received by the Committee, Messrs. Spooner, Atwood, and Co., 27, Gracechurch Street; and E. F. Leeks, Sec., 2, Charlotte Row, Mansion House.

WHO will Rescue a Child? "Dear Sir," writes a London City Missionary, "can the Rescue Society save a poor child from inevitable ruin, whom I have met with in my district? Her name is Elizabeth ——, 10 years of age. Mother and Father dead, and her three Sisters, aged 17, 19, and 21, are living by prostitution. She is maintained by two of them, and thus subjected to the most demoralizing influences. Her Father was an infidel. The Mother went mad, and died in a lunatic asylum. Soon afterwards, two of the daughters were led on to the streets, and then the unhappy father committed suicide. Pray let me know whether your Society can save her.

Yours truly, H. S. SIMMONDS."

We have now Received this girl into one of the Family Homes and thank those very sincerely who have sent assistance to encourage us to admit her—but the responsibility is great, the girl being so young, and we earnestly ask for further aid.

Daniel Cooper.

Society for Rescue of Young Women and Children.
President, the Earl of Shaftesbury.
Office: 11, Poultry, London.

ANNUITIES granted on liberal terms by the Falcon Life Assurance Society, dependent on the age and constitution of the life.

Trustees:—Sir Henry Muggeridge, Alderman and Sheriff of London; Thomas Cardus, Esq., Northam, Southampton, and Barwell Court, Kingston, Surrey.

Particulars post free, on application—11, Moorgate-street, London. THOMAS WALKER, Actuary.

CAMBRIAN and Universal Insurance Company, 27, Gresham Street, London. Life and Fire Insurance at moderate rates.

Good Agents required.

H. FELTON, Secretary.

CORPORATION of the Refuge for the Destitute, Manor House, Dalston, Middlesex, founded 1805. Incorperated by Act of Parliament.

Patron—THE QUEEN.

President—THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE.

Treasurer—JOHN GURNEY HOARE, Esq.

This old established Institution for the Reformation of penitent Criminal Females, chiefly on their discharge from prisons urgently appeals to the public for support.

The expenditure at the present time much exceeds its annual income. The great extent of good effected by this Society is well known, and the Committee would deeply regret if from deficiency of means they were compelled to diminish the number of inmates.

From the formation of the Institution, upwards of six thousand seven hundred have been admitted.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, John Gurney Hoare, Esq., 62, Lombard-street, London; by the Chaplain and Secretary, the Rev. Wm. Stone: by the Matron, at the Institution, and by the Collector, Mr. C. Buck, 32, Paternoster-row, London.

LONDON Society for Teaching THE BLIND TO READ.
Avenue Road, Regent's Park.

Patroness.—Her Most Gracious Majesty, the QUEEN.

A Ladies' Sale, in aid of the funds of the above Society is proposed to be held at the Institution, on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 15th, and 16th.

Under the patronage of the following Ladies:—

The Countess of Bandon.	Lady Frederick Watson.
The Countess of Shaftesbury.	Mrs. Colonel Wolrige.
	Mrs. Edwin Parker.
The Lady Elizabeth Boyle.	Mrs. Percival Johnson.

Contributions of work, drawings, &c. are earnestly requested, and will be thankfully received by Mrs. G. Blair, Honorary Ladies' Secretary, and any member of Committee.

CITY OF LONDON Life ASSURANCE SOCIETY, for General, Accumulative, and Self-Protecting Assurances. Head Offices, 2, Royal Exchange Buildings, London.

CAPITAL A QUARTER OF A MILLION.

TRUSTEES.

The Right Honorable The LORD MAYOR.
The Honorable Com. West.
The Honorable W. F. Campbell.
John Thomas, Esq.

DIRECTORS.

Richard Corrie Bache, Esq.	Stephen H. Lee, Esq.
William Betts, Esq.	Rev. Charles Mackenzie, A.M. (Prebendary of St. Paul's, &c.)
John Blakeway, Esq.	Colonel Rowland, Royal Artillery.
Major C. L. Boileau.	William Simpson, Esq.
Charles Collick, Esq.	William Thacker, Esq.
George M. Dowdeswell, Esq.	William A. Thomas, Esq.
Frederick A. Durnford, Esq.	George Watson Wood, Esq.
Robert Keate, Esq. Serjeant-Surgeon to the Queen.

SECRETARY—Edward Frederick Leeks, Esq.
BANKERS—Messrs. Hankey.
ACTUARY—G. J. Farrance, Esq., F.R.S.
PHYSICIAN—James Risdon Bennett, Esq., M.D.
SURGEON—G. W. Mackmurdo, Esq., F.R.S.

The City of London Life Assurance Society, guaranteed by a Capital fully adequate to every contingency, and not injuriously large, offers all the advantages of the mutual system, without any of the risks or liabilities of co-partnership.

PREMIUMS.—The rates of Premium are calculated expressly for this Society, based upon actual experience and thus accurately graduated to the several ages, and may be paid Annually, Half-yearly, Quarterly, or in any manner as arranged to suit the convenience of the Assured.

POLICIES.—Granted for the Whole of Life, or for a specified term, for Two or more Lives, or Survivorships, or on any Life Contingency, and Indisputable.

CLAIMS.—Promptitude and liberality in the settlement of claims are features in this Society.

BONUS.—Announced at an extraordinary General Meeting, held 16th June, 1852; viz., a sum equivalent to a cash bonus of 20 per cent.—on the premiums paid on policies of five years standing and upwards, to be appropriated, at option, either in diminution of premiums, until the next division of profits, or as a permanent addition to the Policies.

STAMPS.—No charge is made for Stamps on Policies effected in this Office, except in cases of Loans.

INCOME TAX.—Payments for Life Assurance are free from this Tax—and to Landowners and persons whose children, or relatives, or reversioners, who will be liable to the new Succession Duty, Life Assurance, which is free from that Duty as well as from Income Tax, presents great advantages of meeting that payment.

FEMALE Servants' Home Society, for the Encouragement of Faithful Female Servants. Established, 1836.

Homes,—21, Nutford Place, and 110, Hatton Garden.

The Widows and Orphan Daughters of our brave Soldiers and Sailors are (many of them) now obliged to go into service, and thus, when out of place, have no home to which they can go. The Homes are open to them, throwing a shield around them in their helpless condition. The Committee earnestly APPEAL for help to enable them to carry on their Christian work. 6000 servants out of place have been shielded by this Society, and upwards of 32,000 registered free of expense.

Subscriptions will be gratefully received by R. C. L. Bevan, Esq., Treasurer, 54, Lombard Street; Rev. Joseph Brown, M.A., Chairman of Committee, and Rector of Christ Church, Blackfriars Road; Rev. J. H. Simpson, M.A., Hon. Secretary, No. 74, Virginia Terrace, Dover Road; and the Matrons, at the Homes.

The Report for 1855 may be had as above.

Digitized by Google

ANGLO-AUSTRALIAN
AND
UNIVERSAL FAMILY LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

CHIEF OFFICE—5, CANNON STREET WEST, CITY.

CAPITAL FUND, £150,000.

IN 15,000 SHARES OF £10 EACH.

INCORPORATED UNDER ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 7 AND 8 VICT. CAP. 110.

FOR

Granting Every Description of Assurances, Annuities, and Endowments, especially Infantile, Adult, and Matrimonial Assurances.

PREMIUMS NOT FORFEITED THROUGH INABILITY TO CONTINUE THEM.

NO CHARGE FOR POLICY STAMPS, MEDICAL FEES, NOR ENTRANCE MONEY.—AN INVALID FUND FOR GRANTING FREE ANNUITIES TO AFFLICTED MEMBERS.—PREMIUMS HELD ON CREDIT IN CASE OF NEED, WITHOUT FORFEITING THE POLICY.

TRUSTEES.

EDWARD LACEY, Esq., Gravesend, Kent, Magistrate. | FRANCIS PIGOTT, Esq., M.P., Reform Club.
THOMAS WINKWORTH, Esq., Director of the Commercial Bank of London.

DIRECTORS.

HENRY HORN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Recorder of Hereford, and Magistrate for Herefordshire, 51, Upper Bedford Place.
Brig.-Gen. FREDERICK HORN, H.M. 20th Regiment.
EDWARD LACEY, Esq., Gravesend, Kent, Magistrate.
FRANCIS PIGOTT, Esq., M.P., Gloucester-place, Portman Square; and Heckfield Heath, Hants.
JOHN J. RIDGE, Esq., M.D., Gravesend, Kent, Magistrate.
GRIFFITH TAYLOR, Esq., Cumberland House, Milton-on-Thame.
WILLIAM WEBSTER, Esq., Waltham Abbey, Essex.

MANAGING DIRECTOR—TOBIAH PEPPER, Esq., 5, Cannon Street West, City.

PHYSICIANS.
RICHARD PAYNE COTTON, M.D., F.R.C.P., 46, Clarges Street, Piccadilly, (Physician to the Hospital for Consumption, &c. Brompton.)
CHARLES COWAN, M.D., Reading, Berks (Senior Physician to the Royal Berkshire Hospital.)
HENRY HARDINGE, M.D., 24, Sackville Street, Piccadilly. (Assistant-Physician to the Samaritan Free Hospital for Women and Children.)
JOHN JAMES RIDGE, M.D., Gravesend, Kent.

BANKERS.
The COMMERCIAL BANK OF LONDON, Lothbury, and Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.
The LONDON AND COUNTY BANK, Lombard Street.

STANDING COUNSEL—H. HORN, Esq., 2, Hare Ct., Temple. | SOLICITORS—Messrs. BEDDOME & WEIR, 27, Nicholas Lane, City.

AUDITORS.

SAMUEL KING BLAND, Esq., Somerset House. | J. PALMER, Esq., Sup. of Banking Deptt. Bank of England.
JOHN VAUGHAN, Esq., 14, Lloyd Square, Pentonville.

ACTUARY—TOBIAH PEPPER, Esq. | SECRETARY—JOHN NEWTON, Esq.

This Company was established for the purpose of supplying an extensive vacancy in the application and practice of Life Assurance, by the introduction of new and highly important features of great practical utility. Its principal departments are the following:—

1.—INFANT ASSURANCE.
2.—MATRIMONIAL ASSURANCE. (Both Infant and Adult.)
3.—GENERAL ASSURANCE.
4.—EMIGRATION ASSURANCE.
5.—AUSTRALIAN ASSURANCE.

The popular advantageous features of the Company will be more clearly seen in the Prospectus.

INFANT ASSURANCES AND ANNUITIES.

Assurances and Annuities are granted on INFANT LIVES from the age of 3 months to 14 years, by which Parents or Guardians can ensure, at a trifling cost, the Education, Endowment, Marriage Settlement, and placing out in Life of Children, with a return of all premiums paid, on death before a given age. Infant Assurances effected under 10 years of age secure Universal (or whole World) Policies.

Annual Premium, returnable in case of death before 14, for £100 on death at any time after 14.									Annual Premium returnable on death before 8, for an Educational Annuity of £10 from 8 to 14.
Age.	£	s.	d.	Age.	£	s.	d.	Age.	£	s.	d.	Age	£	s.	d.	Age.	£ s. d.
3 Months	1	4	9	5	1	7	6	10	1	10	9	6 Months.	5	4	4	3	7 17 0
1 Year	1	5	3	7	1	8	8	12	1	12	4	1 Year.	5	13	8	4	9 11 10
3 "	1	6	4	8	1	9	4	14	1	13	8	2 "	6	12	2	5	12 4 2

Age	£	s.	d.	Age.	£	s.	d.	Age.	£ s. d.
6 Months.	5	4	4	3	7	17	0	6	16 11 8
1 Year.	5	13	8	4	9	11	10	7	25 8 8
2 "	6	12	2	5	12	4	2

MATRIMONIAL ASSURANCES AND ANNUITIES.

Any sum can be assured to daughters or sons, either in one payment or as an annuity, on marriage, at any time after the ages of 20 and 21 respectively when the Premiums will cease; but if they remain unmarried till 35, the policy will then be paid. Should death, however, occur before marriage, at any time prior to 35, the Premiums will be returned in full.

Annual Premium, returnable on death before marriage prior to 35, to secure £50. on marriage after 20 or 21, or at 35 if then unmarried.

Age.	£	s.	d.	Age.	£	s.	d.	Age.	£	s.	d.	Age.	£	s.	d.	Age.	£	s.	d.	Age.	£	s.	d.	Age.	£	s.	d.
3 Months.	1	1	3	2	1	7	8	5	1	18	2	8	2	11	8	11	3	12	6	14	5	12	4	17	0	13	2
6 "	1	3	0	3	1	10	11	6	2	2	1	9	2	16	5	12	4	2	10	15	6	15	3	18	4	12	9
1 Year	1	4	8	4	1	14	5	7	2	6	5	10	3	4	6	13	4	16	4	16	8	5	8	19	2	7	9

Shareholders receive a Dividend of not less than 5 nor more than 10 per cent. per annum, and 25 per cent. of the Profits. A few Shares, first call £1 per Share (payable on allotment), may be obtained by respectable parties.

To extend its Loan and Reversionary department, the Company will receive from Shareholders, Policy-holders, or others, deposits of large or small amount (which may at any time be varied by increase or diminution), returnable at any agreed date, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. Stamped Certificates of the amount of such deposit will be issued under the hands of the Directors.

Prospectuses, Proposals, Share Forms, and every information can be obtained from JOHN NEWTON, Secretary.

Digitized by Google

LIFE ASSURANCE TREASURY.

(Incorporated under Act 7 & 8 Vict. cap. 110.)

AFFORDING A

NEW AND POPULAR PRINCIPLE OF BANKING FOR ALL CLASSES;

IN WHICH THE

BENEFITS OF LIFE ASSURANCE

ARE SECURED TO EVERY CUSTOMER IN PROPORTION TO HIS DAILY BALANCE, BESIDES A RATE OF INTEREST EQUAL TO THAT OF FUNDED PROPERTY.

Capital, First Issue, £500,000; in 500,000 Shares of £1 Each.

First and only Call contemplated, 2s. per Share. With power to create successively Three similar Issues of £500,000 each, until the Subscribed Capital shall amount to

TWO MILLIONS STERLING.

Dividends will be declared to the Shareholders upon the paid-up Capital, of not less than £4 nor more than £12 per cent. per annum; and the annual surplus profits will be carried to a "Profit Fund," from which will be created a "Call Fund," and upon this Fund future Calls will be made, and their amounts paid to and consolidated with the "Capital Fund."

PARENT OFFICE: 6, CANNON STREET WEST, CITY, LONDON.

The great object in the establishment of this Company was to introduce to the Public a Novel Principle of Banking, by combining the advantages of Life Assurance with the Moneys deposited; and further, to supply the middle and working classes with a system of Banking Accommodation suitable to their requirements.

The Treasury, combines an improved system of Savings' Banks, with the Current System of Life Assurance, in such way that all classes of society may avail themselves of their various benefits. That while the industrial and middle classes notify point to their Savings' Banks investments to the extent of Thirty Millions of pounds sterling, they may, at the same time, be able to show, by legal documents, that this Thirty Millions, when invested in the Treasury, represents an amount of Assurance of about FIFTY MILLIONS OF MONEY! the use of the £50,000,000 being, at any time, within their own command—and that, too, if they wish, by loans, without diminishing their proprietorship in the £50,000,000 of Assurance; and, also, that the Six Millions of Deposits, annually placed in the Savings' Banks, may be increased nearly 70 per cent. in the event of death.

Abstract of Regulations.

1. District Branches will be established in various parts of the kingdom, each Branch being represented by a Board of Directors, two Auditors, a Medical Examiner, and a Secretary. A General Meeting of such Branches shall be held annually in the respective Districts.

2. That sums of money, from 1s. upwards to any extent be received as Single Premiums on deposit, either at the Parent Office, or at any of the District Branches, at any time during Office hours.

3. That the Deposit of every sum shall be applied as a single premium for an Assurance upon the life of the Depositor, according to age and state of health, as recommended by the Medical Officers, and accepted by the Court of Directors; such Assurance to be payable on the death of the Depositor, should that happen during the continuance of the Deposit.

4. That Depositors be allowed to increase at pleasure the amount of their Deposit Premiums, within defined limits and periods, according to their state of health, without further Medical Examination.

5. That Depositors be allowed to withdraw on demand to the extent of THREE-FOURTHS the amount of their Deposit Premiums; and any portion, or the whole of the remaining fourth, on giving fourteen days' notice: or according to special arrangement.

6. That Interest payable half-yearly be allowed to Depositors at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum upon all Deposits of not less than one month's standing, and at an increased rate upon all Deposits for stated periods beyond three months.

7. That the Funds shall be employed, as much as possible, in granting Loans for short periods to Depositors and Shareholders, upon the security of approved bills of exchange, promissory notes, &c., and at a rate of discount to be fixed by the Parent Office.

It will thus be seen that the beneficial operations of the Treasury are not limited to the circumstances of any particular class of society, so that persons in the humblest sphere of life may invest therein their small savings, with the same proportionate advantage as those of a higher class.

Full Prospectuses, Forms of Application for opening accounts, and every information, can be obtained by application to

CHIEF OFFICES, 6, CANNON STREET WEST, CITY. TOBIAH PEPPER, Managing Director.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

CHARLES BURTON, Inventor and Sole Patentee of Perambulators for Children and Invalids, has much pleasure in announcing his newly Registered Nursery Swing, which may be had at the Repository of the London Patent Perambulator Company, 162, Regent Street. The Patent Opera Sedan, a beautiful Close Carriage is confidently recommended. Illustrated Circulars.

N.B. A large stock of Perambulators for Country and Shipping Orders.

BRITISH PROVIDENT
LIFE AND FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY,
6, CHATHAM PLACE, BLACKFRIARS, LONDON.

Established 1850.

Incorporated by Act of Parliament 7th and 8th Vict., Cap. 110.

Capital £100,000, with power to increase to £1,000,000.

Trustees.

Sir Edward Bindloss Perrott, Bart., Plumstead, Kent.
The Rev. John Wood, Addington-place, Camberwell.

Directors.

Captain Thomas Malkin, Sandhurst Lodge, Queen's Road, Gloucester-gate, Regent's-park, Chairman.
John Britten, Esq., 21, Basinghall-street, and Collingtree, Northamptonshire.
G. Lane, Esq., Finchley-road, St. John's Wood.
William Burchett, Esq., Cheapside and Hammersmith.
Joseph Gimson, Esq., 1, Harewood-place, Harewood-square.
John Sheridan, Esq., (Managing) Laburnum House, Brompton.
James Goad, Esq., Islington.

Auditors.

H. Brinsley Sheridan, Esq., (Manager of the "Times Life and Guarantee Company,") 32, Ludgate-hill, and Belfield House, Parson's-green, Fulham.
T. Wilson, Esq., 103, 104, and 105, Cheapside, and 7, York-terrace, Peckham.
Alexander Webber, Esq., Davies-street, Berkeley-square, and 47, Upper Baker-street, (Director of the "Times Life and Fire Assurance Company.")
J. Britten, Jun., Esq., 21, Basinghall-street, City.

Bankers.—Royal British Bank, Strand Branch.
Physician.—William Grove Grady, M.D., F.R.C.S.E., M.R.C.S.I.
Surgeon.—William Harding, Esq., 4, Percy-street, Bedford-square.
Standing Counsel.—Henry P. Hinde, Esq., Hall Staircase, Inner-temple.
Solicitor.—Henry Empson, Esq., 61, Moorgate-street.
Manager.—J. Sheridan, Esq.

LIFE Policies indisputable, and not liable to forfeiture through inability to keep up the payments. Assurances on single, joint, and survivorship lives. Annuities—immediate, deferred, or survivorship. Endowments for Children. Assurances against Accidents. Saving Fund Policies. Profits divided. Yearly, half-yearly, and quarterly payments taken.

EXAMPLE,

Single Life, with Profits, for 100l. at Death.

Age.	Yearly.	Half-yearly.	Quarterly.
30	2l. 5s. 3d.	1l. 2s. 8d.	11s. 4d.

RANSOMES and SIMS, Iron-founders, Engineers, and Manufacturers of Agricultural Implements, respectfully announce that a new edition of their Illustrated Catalogue is in the press, and will be ready for free delivery in a few days, on application by post.

Ipswich, Feb. 11th, 1856.

MARKING LINEN.

MARK YOUR LINEN. The PEN SUPERSEDED.—The most easy, permanent, and best method of MARKING LINEN, Silk, Cotton, Coarse Towels, Stockings, Books, or anything else, is with the PATENT ELECTRO-SILVER PLATES. By means of this novel invention a thousand articles can be marked in ten minutes. Any person can easily use them. Initial Plate, 1s.; Name Plate, 2s.; Set of Numbers, 2s.; Crest Plate, 5s. Sent free to any part of the kingdom, (on receipt of stamps,) by the inventor and sole patentee, T. CULLETON, Heraldic Engraver to the Queen and Royal Family, 2, Long Acre, one door from St. Martin's Lane. Caution—Copy the address.

SCARLETT'S Portable Mock-Turtle.—Scarlett and Son respectfully inform the public in general that the Mock-Turtle made by them, of acknowledged delicious quality and flavour, is by many pronounced equal to the real. Forwarded to all parts of the country, free of package, on receipt of a post-office order or stamps, 3s. 6d. per quart.
26, King William-street, London-bridge.

THE Autobiography of a Beg-gar Boy, in which will be found related the numerous trials, hard struggles, and vicissitudes of a strangely chequered life, with glimpses of social and political history over a period of 50 years. Wm. Tweedie, 337, Strand.

Digitized by Google

The Sixty-fourth Thousand, Price One Shilling.

A CHURCH PSALM AND HYMN BOOK,

Compiled by the Rev. CHARLES KEMBLE,

And printed as originally written by their respective Authors,

ARRANGED FOR THE COURSE OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL YEAR,

For every Service for which a Collect is provided in the Prayer Book, and for all special occasions, &c.

IT CONTAINS EIGHT HUNDRED PSALMS AND HYMNS,

AND IS ALREADY USED IN SIXTY-ONE CHURCHES.

Price to Clergymen, 9d. each, or 72s. per hundred, or the three sizes, in equal numbers, £5 per hundred.
A specimen copy, and testimonials, forwarded on receipt of eighteen stamps.

DAVID BATTEN, Printer and Publisher, Clapham, London.

"We know of no collection more adapted to public or private use. For the closet it is about the best book of devotional Psalmody which has ever come under our notice."

Journal of Sacred Literature, and Biblical Record. No. 3, Oct. 1855.

Freetown, Sierra Leone, January 18*th*, 1856.

MY DEAR SIR,—I am anxiously waiting for the 1000 of No. 1—(which I ordered in November last)—the demand is so very great.

Will you send me by the next Mail:—No. 1 ..... 1000.
" 9 ..... 200.
" 16 ..... 200.
" 23 ..... 300.
1700.

You will perceive that we have made a beginning, and only a beginning; but should all the Congregations adopt this truly valuable Hymn Book, we shall require a very large supply.

My health has suffered much since my arrival from repeated attacks of fever. I am now, thank our heavenly Father, regaining my strength; and hope, through God's mercy, soon to be actively engaged in visiting all the Churches.

I remain, yours faithfully,
JOHN W., SIERRA LEONE.

To Mr. D. BATTEN, Clapham Common.

HOME in the East, Old Ford, Bow, near London. Established for the Reformation of Juvenile Male Criminals under 16 years of age.

This Institution was formed in August, 1852, for the above object, and has since that time been occupied in reclaiming youths of the worst description in the metropolis, who have been received either on their personal application, or have been sent by the chaplains of the various metropolitan prisons, or by police magistrates. Accommodation is provided for 50 boys, and at the present time and for some period this number has been provided for. The present outlay is £850 per annum, of this sum about £280 only can be in any way considered as permanent income, being derived from annual subscriptions and payments made for the board of some of the youths. For the balance the Committee are dependent upon the generous sympathy of the friends of such institutions. The great and increasing interest in favour of Juvenile Reformatories is a powerful stimulus to the committee to persevere in this undertaking, but unless the necessary funds are provided the present effort must be very seriously diminished.

The Committee trust this appeal will not be made in vain.

Contributions thankfully received by Messrs. Hankey and Co., Bankers, 7, Fenchurch Street; Joseph Crane, Esq., Treasurer, Commercial Road East; or the Governor, at the Home.

CHURCH Penitentiary Association, for Promoting and Aiding the Establishment and Maintenance of Penitentiaries and Houses of Refuge for Fallen Women throughout the country.

Trustees.—The Lord Bishop of Lichfield, Lord Lyttelton, and the Hon. Mr. Justice Coleridge.

Grants to the extent of £1,600 have been made during the past year to penitentiaries and houses of refuge in connexion with this Association, two of which have been lately established.

Donations and subscriptions are earnestly solicited in order to meet the increased demands received for help, and may be paid to the Clerical Honorary Secretary, the Rev. Thomas Huntley Greene, at the office, 35, Lincoln's Inn Fields; or to Messrs. Herries and Co., 16, St. James's Street; Messrs. Barnetts, Hoare, and Co., 62, Lombard Street; and Messrs. Twining, 215, Strand.

Now ready,

CHURCH of England Sunday School Quarterly Magazine, No. XXXII. price 1s. Volume for 1855, 5s.

Also,

The Sunday Scholar's Companion, No. XIV. price 1d.

Volume for 1855, 1s. 6d.

All the back numbers can be had.

Church of England Sunday School Institute,
169, Fleet Street.

LONDON Reformatory for ADULT CRIMINALS.

9, Great Smith Street, Westminster.

PRESIDENT.
The Right Hon. The EARL of SHAFTESBURY.

VICE-PRESIDENT.
The Right Hon. Lord HENRY CHOLMONDELEY, M.P.

TREASURER.—John Carter Wood, Esq.

HON. SECRETARIES.
Ernest Bunsen, Esq. | John M. Clabon, Esq.

COMMITTEE.

Rev. Henry Alford, B.D.	Rev. Charles Hume, B.A.
Frank Crossley, Esq., M.P.	Rev. Samuel Martin.
Lieut. Goode, R.N.	Rev. Richard Malone, M.A.
George Dundas, Esq., M.P.	Capt. D. O'Brien.
Joseph Ferguson, Esq., M.P.	Joseph Payne, Esq.
J. F. Fortescue, Esq.	Sir Samuel Morton Peto, Bart.
Sir Adam Hay, Bart.	Lord Viscount Raynham.
Charles Hindley, Esq., M.P.	W. F. S. Sheppard, Esq.
Rev. G. H. Hine, M.A.	G. F. White, Esq.

This, the ORIGINAL REFORMATORY for ADULT MALE CRIMINALS, will RE-OPEN on MONDAY, the 11th of February, 1856, for 80 inmates.

The public are invited to inspect the new buildings, which will show the efforts made by the Committee during the recess to render the Institution efficient for its all important objects.

The Committee earnestly trust that, under really efficient superintendence, a large number of Criminals will be reformed by undergoing the system of probation and training peculiar to this institution.

The inmates are boarded, lodged, and taught a trade for 12 months, and then emigrated. The annual expenses are £3,000, the annual subscriptions £700.

Subscriptions and donations received by Mr. Thomas Deane, the Deputy Governor, at the Institution; by Mr. Thomas Pepperall, No. 27, Union Road, Clapham Rise, the Collector; by J. Carter Wood, Esq., Victoria Street; and J. M. Clabon, Esq., 21, Great George Street.

By order, ERNEST BUNSEN, JOHN M. CLABON, } Hon. Secs.

Coats, Shoes, Caps, and other garments will be thankfully received.

THE CLAIMS OF THE ROMAN CHURCH.

Just Published, in 8vo., price 10s. 6d.

THE Whole Evidence Against the Claims of the Roman Church. By the Rev. SANDERSON ROBINS, M.A., Rector of St. James's, Dover.

Contents: Chapter I. Evidence of Scripture.—II. Testimony of the Primitive Church.—III. Origin and Progress of the Usurpation.—IV. Forgeries and Corruption of Documents.—V. Failure of the Succession.—VI. Want of Unity in Doctrine,—VII. The Council of Trent.—VIII. The Claim of Infallibility.

London: LONGMAN and Co.

LOANS GRANTED.

THE Cavendish Advance Fund and General Guarantee Society.

Chief Offices, 1a, Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, London.

OBJECTS: Loan Department: the granting of Loans of £10 to £10,000 upon personal security, mortgages, bills of sales, dock warrants, railway and other shares, bonds, annuities, &c. N.B.—A peculiar feature in this department is, that interest is only charged upon the amount of cash actually advanced, i. e., upon loans of £10 or £10,000 the full sums are handed over, and the interest added to the amounts acknowledged.

Guarantee Department: To furnish guarantees, at moderate premiums, to parties desirous of opening accounts with the manufacturing and mercantile houses in Great Britain and Ireland; also to parties paying only part of purchase-money for businesses, houses, land, estates, &c., in whose behalf this Society furnishes guarantees to owners and vendors as surety for the due payment of balances upon terms mutually arranged.

Detailed prospectuses, forms of application, &c., forwarded on receipt of six stamps.

STEPHEN GURNEY, Manager.

Just published. 6d.

POSITION and Prospects of the Metropolitan Reformatories; with Preface on the Conditions of Self-Support. A Sermon by the Rev. H. WHITEHEAD, M.A., Curate of St. Luke's, Berwick-street.

T. HATCHARD, 187, Piccadilly.

Now ready, Price One Shilling,

AN Account of the Reformatory Institution for Juvenile Offenders at METTRAY, in France, from the pamphlet of M. AUGUSTIN COCHIN, LL.D., (with two Illustrations,) and an Introduction by the Rev. GEORGE HANS HAMILTON, M.A., formerly Chaplain to the Durham County Gaol and House of Correction.

"It is not the will of your Father which is in Heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."—St. Matt. xvii. 14.

 Any profits derived from the sale of this Publication will be appropriated in aid of the Funds of the Newcastle, Northumberland, and Durham Society, for the Repression of Juvenile Crime, and Reformation of Youthful Delinquents.

London: WHITTAKER and Co., Ave-Maria Lane.
ANDREWS, Durham.

Just published, price 1s.

REPORT on Reformatory FARM INSTITUTIONS.

Read before the International Charitable Conference, at Paris, by M. DEMETZ, late Conseiller a la Cour Imperiale de Paris, Founder and Director of Mettray. Translated with the Author's permission, by E. B. WHEATLEY, Esq., M.A.

London: HAMILTON, ADAMS, and Co.: the Philanthropist Office, 289, Strand.

York: ROBERT SUNTER, and by order of all booksellers in town and country.

Post 8vo., cloth, price 6s.

JUVENILE Delinquents; their Condition and Treatment. By MARY CARPENTER, Author of the "Reformatory Schools."

"We heartily commend Miss Carpenter's performance, which will doubtless receive the earnest attention of all philanthropic and reflective persons who take an interest in the subject of which she is an apostle."—Bristol Mercury.

Post 8vo., cloth, price 5s.

Crime in England, its Relation, Character, and Extent, as Developed from 1801 to 1848. By THOMAS PLINT.

"Mr. Plint shows the discrimination, accuracy, and candour of a true statist."—Leeds Mercury.

"A work which we esteem the most able, dispassionate, and conclusive, yet written on those momentous questions."—Nonconformist.

Post 8vo., cloth, price 5s.

Juvenile Depravity. The Prize Essay on Juvenile Depravity. By the Rev. H. WORSLEY, A.M., Eastern Rectory Suffolk.

"The author admirably uses his statistics, and shows an intimate knowledge of human nature in its multifarious circumstances."—Christian Examiner, April, 1849.

London: W. & F. G. CASH, 5, Bishopsgate St. Within.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,
AND
PRISON & REFORMATORY GAZETTE.

March 1st, 1856.

Index.

Benevolent Institutions: Page
Refuge for destitute Children Association in aid of the Deaf and Dumb 237
The Adult Orphan Institution 237
The London Orphan Asylum 238
Correspondence:
Ragged Schools 243
The Society for the Rescue of Young Women and Children, Schools for Girls 252
Abuses connected with Imprisonment and Debt, Miss Nightingale and the German Protestant Deaconesses 256
Editorial Articles 244
Hospitals 240
Prisons 238
Reviews 248
Reformatories 241

Benevolent Institutions.

REFUGE FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN.—On the evening of the 20th of February, the eighth public meeting of the subscribers to and Friends of the Ragged Schools, St. Giles's, and St. George's, Bloomsbury, took place at the Music-hall, Store-street, the Hon. and Rev. H. M. Villiers, the new Bishop of Carlisle, in the chair. After an address in advocacy of the institutions from the chairman the report was read. It detailed the working of the several branches of the institution, including the separate refuges for boys and girls, the day and evening schools for both sexes, the Sabbath schools, and the mothers' class. From these details it appeared that during the past year 27 boys had been received into the male refuge, which, with 40 remaining there from the previous year, made the total number of those sheltered by that department 67, of whom 26 were at present on the books, the others having either entered the navy or the merchant service, emigrated, returned to their friends, or obtained respectable employment. In the female refuge there were at present 30 inmates, and 37 left during the course of the past year, either for service, of their own accord, or to return to their friends; one emigrated. On the roll of the girls' schools there were the names of 114 children, of whom there were 80 in regular attendance. The night school was attended by about 40 children. The admissions to the boys' schools during the year numbered 175, there were at present 120 on the books, of whom 90 were regular in their attendance. On the proposition of the Rev. R. Bickersteth, seconded by Mr. Paterson, the report was adopted, and the proceedings were closed by a vote of thanks to the chairman.

ASSOCIATION IN AID OF THE DEAF AND DUMB.—A numerous gathering of deaf and dumb inhabitants of the metropolis, and of persons who are actively engaged in promoting their welfare, took place on Wednesday evening, Feb. 13th, at Fitzroy Hall, Little Portland-street, Marylebone, having been convened by the Association in Aid of the Deaf and Dumb, the committee of which assemble at 15, Bedford-row.

In a circular recently issued by the association, it is observed that from the last census returns there appear to be above 12,553 deaf and dumb persons in Great Britain, of which number 1,325 are in the metropolitan districts; and the interest felt in the proceedings of the association by the deaf and dumb themselves may be judged fact the first that about 200 of them, or nearly one-sixth of the entire number inhabiting the metropolis, were present on the occasion including persons in almost all the middle and lower walks of life. The objects of the association are stated in the following terms:—"1st. The employment of qualified agents to impart religious and moral instruction to the deaf and dumb at their homes. 2nd. The establishment of religious services for the deaf and dumb throughout the metropolis. 3rd. The encouragement of the early training and promotion of piety among deaf and dumb children, preparatory to their admission into educational institutions. 4th. Advice and friendly aid, when required by the deaf and dumb suffering from oppression or any other cause." The institution does not appear to compete, or in the least degree interfere with that for the education and training of the deaf and dumb in the Kent-road, its aim being to seek out the young of that class before they are ready for, or received into, that or similar asylums, and to aid the adult deaf and dumb in struggling with the disadvantages to which they are manifestly subjected by the want of speech and of the power of hearing. In the course of the inquiries of the association, many deaf and dumb persons have been discovered who require such aid, and among them are several artists, sculptors, and engravers. In furtherance of the general object, the building in which the meeting of last night was held has lately been opened as a church; two services being attended every Sunday, in which portions of the liturgy are used, and a comment on a chapter of the Bible is substituted for a formal sermon. Under the same roof, lectures on subjects of general interest are delivered gratis every week, and both the religious services and the lectures are well attended. A magazine also for the deaf and dumb is published occasionally, and used as a means of communication between such persons and their friends both at home and in connexion with foreign countries.

After the assembly of last night had partaken of tea, Mr. SHIRLEY WOOLMER was appointed to the office of chairman, in which capacity he delivered an articulate address, which was interpreted to the deaf and dumb portion of the assembly, who constituted a decided majority, by Mr. Smith, the society's visiting missionary and agent. In his remarks, the chairman gave an outline of the objects of the association; and the chief points embraced were received with marked interest, as they were successively conveyed by the interpreter. Indeed, it was impossible to avoid being struck with the intelligent sympathy expressed on the face of the silent throng assembled, and the almost Gallic vivacity of their gestures and action. The meeting was further addressed digitally by several deaf and dumb gentlemen, including Mr. Barry, a City merchant; Mr. Bather, a clerk in the Admiralty, who, in the course of a debate in the House of Commons on the subject of administrative reform, was described by the head of the department as one of the most efficient persons in the establishment; and Mr. Hazard, a clerk in Somerset House. After the delivery of these addresses, a handsome quarto copy of the Bible, designed to be used in the Sunday services, was exhibited by the chairman, who announced that it was the result of a subscription among some of those who were in the habit of attending there on Sunday. After some discussion as to the desirableness of such a step, Mr. Bather and five other gentlemen were appointed by the meeting to represent the deaf and dumb in communications with the committee. A lecture was then delivered by Mr. E. Harle audibly, and interpreted to the meeting, the subject of which was Sir Thomas More; and this was followed by an entertainment with the magic lantern.

THE ADULT ORPHAN INSTITUTION. AT a time when public benevolence is so strongly manifested on behalf of the families of those in the military or naval service of this country, it is only right to direct attention to the claims of an institution which, owing to a variety of circumstances, has attracted less notice and support than it deserves. Next to the Colosseum stands a fine large house, enclosed within its own grounds, which was founded more than 30 years ago, for the relief and education as governesses of the orphan daughters of officers in the army and navy and of clergymen. It owes its origin to the exertions of Mrs. Sophia Williams, who, besides being a liberal subscriber, obtained the site in Regent's Park, for which a ground rent of 100*l.* a-year is paid. The object of the institution, as described by the foundress, was "not to educate children, but to finish the education of young women, and to forward them in their way through life." In that object it has been very successful, having for a number of years supplied accomplished governesses to many of the highest families in the land. No difficulty is experienced in providing the best class of situations for the young ladies as their education is completed, and a convincing proof of the efficiency with which the institution is managed is to be found in the fact that in after life, when comfortably provided for, they have so frequently become subscribers to its funds. There is accommodation for 36 "wards," who are received between the ages of 14 and 20, and who each pay a small stipend of 13*l.* 6*s.* towards the expenses of their maintenance. This sum is usually derived from the Compassionate Fund or from contributions from the corporation of the Sons of the Clergy, eked out by the assistance of friends. Of course, the income derived from such a source is totally inadequate to meet the expenses of an institution which is conducted on a proper scale of liberality, especially in the important matter of education. The receipts from benevolent subscribers appear of late years not to have been enough to make up the deficiency, and it has therefore been found necessary to draw heavily upon the vested capital. No pecuniary aid appears to have been derived either from the Patriotic Fund, collected during the last war; or from the Wellington Testimonial Fund, upon which an educational institution of this kind would appear to have some claims; or from the new Patriotic Fund, which has accumulated so gigantic a sum from the benevolence of the public. This seems very hard usage for the destitute daughters of our officers, who would certainly appear entitled to even more consideration than their sons, who are, of course, much better able to make their own way in the world. What renders the hardship greater is that excusable motives of delicacy prevent the managers of the institution from advertising its title to benevolent support so extensively as is the custom with the general run of charities. The limited number of girls it can accommodate, and the necessity there is for receiving only such as are qualified by their natural abilities to become first-class governesses, is also against it in the run for public patronage. In a country like ours, where the "Upper Ten Thousand" are so wealthy and powerful, it is scarcely creditable that the only institution which makes a special provision for educating as governesses the orphan daughters of officers in the army and navy should be obliged to draw for its maintenance upon its own small vested capital. That it does its work well may be safely concluded from the fact that the lady to whom the Queen has intrusted the education of the Princess Royal was trained within its walls; and that the casualties of the present war are presenting most suitable objects for its care we can gather from knowing that the daughter of the lamented Colonel Shadforth has recently become an inmate.—From the Times.

Digitized by Google

THE LONDON ORPHAN ASYLUM.—The 41st anniversary festival of the London Orphan Asylum at Lower Clapton, was celebrated on Tuesday evening, the 19th of February, by a grand banquet at the London Tavern. The chair was taken by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. His Royal Highness was supported by the Rev. Dr. Croly and a large number of influential gentlemen. The London Orphan Asylum is well known as one of the most useful and respectable institutions around the metropolis. From the report lately printed, it appears that since the general meeting of 1855, 60 children have left the institution, 3 have died, and 77 have been admitted—viz., 8 by purchase, 3 by free presentations through the Commander-in Chief, as orphans of non-commissioned officers, whose fathers have fallen in war, and 66 by election. At the present time, with the 30 children elected on the 28th ult., there will be 426 orphans (137 girls and 289 boys) under the protection of the charity, making the total number benefited by it, 2,258. In addition to this, arrangements are pending with the authorities of the Horse Guards for the free admission of the three other children of non-commissioned officers as sanctioned by the subscribers. While the legacies are fewer than in 1854, the annual subscriptions are slightly in excess, a proof of the undiminished attachment and confidence of the public; "although it must be borne in mind," proceeds the report, "as an incentive to renewed exertions, that the housekeeping expenses are now unusually large, the cost of bread and meat being 1000*l.* more than in the year 1853, and nearly 400*l.* in excess of the amount paid for the same articles in 1854; and, but for special efforts last year, the expenditure would have exceeded the receipts by 1,250*l.* Even in ordinary seasons, the income arising from voluntary subscriptions and interest on funded property is wholly inadequate to the necessary outlay; it is therefore the duty of the managers to make the most unremitting exertions to place the receipts more on a par with the expenditure. With this end in view, the committee earnestly recommend the adoption of reduced terms of membership, which, from their adaptation to the circumstances of the younger and less affluent members of the community, will, it is hoped, materially enlarge the circle of subscribers to the institution." On the text of this and other statistical evidence of the merits of the asylum the Royal Duke delivered an earnest and forcible speech in its support, and the result of his Royal Highness's eloquent appeal was the collection of subscriptions amounting to 2,000*l.* The arrangements of the entertainment, under the direction of Messrs. Bathe, Funge, and Palmer, gave general satisfaction. The musical department was intrusted to Mr. Jolley, and Mr. Harker officiated as toastmaster.

Prisons.

THE INFLUENCE OF SEPARATE CONFINEMENT ON THE HEALTH, MIND, AND MORALS OF PRISONERS. — The Rev. J. Kingsmill having had considerable experience, as Chaplain of the Pentonville Prison, of the influence of separate confinement on prisoners, and having paid studious attention to the subject, anything which he presents to the public as the result of his ripened judgment, is well worthy of attention. We therefore feel pleasure in giving the following summary of his experience and his convictions, which we have taken from the parliamentary papers on prisons.

I. Effect of Separate Confinement on the Bodily Health.

There is a great waste of animal spirits during separate confinement.

In healthy subjects nature makes an effort to compensate for this loss by an increased appetite. If this be not met by sufficient diet, bodily or mental health suffers.

Generous living used to be much relied on in the first years of this prison, and not without reason, to counteract depression of spirits or the breaking down of the mental powers.

The pressure of perpetual thought seems to exhaust the strength as much as labour.

The absence of excitement in separate confinement, however, combined with the regularity of prison arrangements proves beneficial to some.

Hard drinkers go through a fearful struggle; many droop and die; some recover the tone of their stomach, and digest, at length, solid food.

Toward the end of the long imprisonment of eighteen months, the appetite of the prisoner in general began to flag, the countenance exhibited a state of delicacy, and the whole frame became nervous. The sudden opening of the cell door caused in many evident agitation and hesitancy. This I often observed, and it was often complained of to me by prisoners.

That separate confinement acts injuriously in some way peculiar to itself, and perhaps inexplicable, upon the bodily frame, at least when long under its influence, was very plainly exhibited in the convulsive fits (epileptic or hysterical) with which the prisoners first removed from this prison were seized on board ship. Fully one-eighth of the prisoners were so affected on board the Sir George Seymour and the Stratheden.

In the last named ship there were convicts from other prisons, not conducted on the separate system. They were not in the slightest degree similarly affected. I reported this circumstance at the time.

That the length of the separation had something to do with this result became more evident to me, when I observed that there occurred no instance of the kind amongst our prisoners after an average confinement of twelve months, removed on board the Ascendant convict ship direct from Pentonville, although these convicts were physically and otherwise inferior to the first draft.

The relaxation of the discipline of separation by the attendance of kind men as nurses, in the infirmary, in the earlier years, and subsequently by the sick being placed together in one room, seemed to revive, at least for a time, in almost all cases, the sinking frames

The association of invalids in the garden class, during the same period, was followed by the like result.

The experience so far of the change last year in the mode of giving exercise to the prisoner in an open space, separated from his fellows only by distance, instead of, as before, singly in a little high walled yard, leads to the same conclusion.

The whole appearance of the men is changed for the better.

Cases of nervousness now are rare in comparison with the first period.

II. Effect of Separate Confinement on the Mind.

Separate confinement is a punishment of great severity. Its severity consists in its opposition to the laws and impulses of our social nature.

Its operation is on the mind and conscience. Hence its highest recommendations and its greatest dangers. Mental suffering cannot be measured nor adjusted.

The worse a man's crimes and character are, the greater the necessity for the infliction in order to bring him to reflection, and to protect others from contamination, but the greater certainly is the risk also.

The mind naturally loses strength as it succumbs to the domination of lust, covetousness, or any of the darker passions of our fallen nature.

Under the influence of separate confinement the torpor of conscience is roused in most cases, although in very different degrees, and few escape the corrodings of remorse.

Persons of more than ordinary buoyancy of spirits continue to dream on in thoughtless recklessness, and others "sorrowing after a godly sort," find peace of mind and conscience in the promises of the Gospel. Those are exceptional classes. The mass are continually suffering, whether they look upon the past or future.

Hope is a grand element of support to the isolated prisoner. Therefore the more cheerless or distant the expectation of deliverance the greater the danger. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." This is most emphatic as regards the prisoner in solitude.

Thus, a difference either in the moral character of the subject of separate confinement —the length of his sentence—the nature of the prospects held out to him on liberation—the time of his natural life, and the degree of his physical strength, may be expected to produce, when viewed in large numbers, a corresponding difference in effects upon the mind.

When these considerations are taken into account, there is no room for surprise, that the latter years of the experiment of this prison should exhibit somewhat worse mental results, if indeed this be so, than the earlier. The subjects of the discipline in the latter, being more depraved in their habits, farther advanced in age, condemned to a longer sentence, and having held out to them much worse prospects upon liberation.

To me it appears a palpable absurdity to suppose that it was not this original difference in the prisoners' condition in those several particulars which constituted the unfavourable difference in the results of the later years, but the actual modifications which have taken place in the length and severity of the punishment.

Those who lost their reason during a twelve-month's confinement would assuredly not have retained it from the contemplation of the prospect before them of six months more isolation from the world and from hope.

Beyond the abridgement in time, there has been no material alteration in the discipline up to the last twelve or fifteen months, since which period the new mode of exercise already referred to has been adopted. But this humane relaxation of the rigour of separation, this slight approximation towards a return to the social state, has been, as one might naturally suppose, so far demonstrative of what appears to me to be a self-evident truth, that the less violence done to nature in the imprisonment the less the risk of mental injury.

There is, then, an obvious fallacy in any comparison between the two periods, instituted in order to show the unfavourable results of abridging the length and modifying the severity of separation in this prison. The main circumstances of difference are left out of the comparison.

Another point has become the subject of revived discussion, namely, the period of danger in a lengthened imprisonment in separation.

If the number of cases be sufficient to justify a general conclusion, it would appear that a greater amount of actual insanity in a given number of prisoners in separation may be expected to occur in the earlier part of the punishment than in the later.

Longer experience may, indeed, establish as an indisputable fact, that active disease is to be apprehended in the earlier part of a long imprisonment; I think it will; and yet irreparable and much more extensive mischief on the mind, not amounting to actual derangement, may be as certainly the consequence of a protracted continuance of the separation. This was the fact with regard to many prisoners subjected to eighteen months imprisonment, and the mental health of the generality was so far affected as to require a process of gradual adaptation again to the activities of life, to fit them for ordinary labour.

Digitized by Google

This sort of effect I am persuaded would have increased in proportion as the separation became protracted. I think it important to state the influence of religion in preserving the mental health of the prisoners in separation. Decidedly fewer mental casualties in proportion have occurred amongst that portion of the prisoners which may be termed religious.

With respect to the cases of mental disease, it may also be observed, that the character of the malady seems to indicate the peculiarity of their isolated condition as among the probable causes of derangement, the delusions beginning most commonly in suspicion of poison—the apprehension of some one or something in or outside the cell—and such like impressions. I do not, however, lay much stress upon this remark, but I throw out the idea for the investigation of others more competent to form a right judgment upon the matter, and who may be led to look into it as a question of much interest and importance.

III. Effect of Separate Confinement on the Moral Condition of the Prisoner.

The effect upon the whole is satisfactory. The isolation of his circumstances brings the prisoner to reflection. It awakens the dormant power of conscience, and gives opportunity of access to his mind on the part of the minister of religion and schoolmaster.

It procures for the prisoner a kindlier treatment from the officers of discipline, than seems possible under any other system. An individual only is to be dealt with, harshness of voice and manner so galling to the mind being thus in a great degree removed, the antagonism of the prisoner to his punishment is sensibly diminished, and he is led the more easily to acknowledge its necessity.

Separate confinement is more favourable to the cultivation of habits of truth. A bad man feels it to be more difficult to tell a lie in the presence of a person of character than in kindred society.

It subdues the spirits of the man like sickness, or some natural calamity, and this, as an affliction, disposes him to look for comfort, at least, beyond himself. All communication with evil companions being removed, there is then hope that he may be led to seek true peace where alone it can be found.

The merits of separate confinement, however, in its effects upon the moral condition of the prisoner, have been unduly and extravagantly extolled. It is merely subsidiary to the direct and positive means which God has appointed for restoration of the sinner; and it is not without its drawbacks even in this respect, for the ordinary temptations of life being out of the way, a profession of religion is exhibited without the best evidence of its reality, and the individual is in consequence too often deceived as well as his minister.

Under wise teachers, I think, there is much less hypocrisy, but much more self-deception in matters of religion, than is generally thought. Remorse for the consequences of transgression too frequently is taken for contrition; knowledge in the head, for grace in the heart; and mere impression on the feelings, for conversion.

When religion even is real, its growth may be too long cherished by artificial means, to promise permanence; and in separation there is no exercise of the active duties which religion enjoins.

The religion which does not fit a man for the active duties of life, nor enable him to resist its temptations, and take up his cross and follow Christ, is valueless, and is disowned by its Divine Author.

When I make these remarks, I am very well aware of the temptations to which men are exposed who pass from separate confinement to the public works, but in those establishments which have been instituted or reconstructed in connection with separate confinement as a part of convict discipline, I am satisfied that the temptations to vice are much less, and the helps to virtue and godliness greater, than would ordinarily fall to their lot in the world.

Indeed, I do not hesitate to affirm this even of the congregated system pursued still in the hulks at Woolwich, although I long to see all those makeshift prisons utterly abolished at home and abroad.

It has been supposed that a falling off in moral improvement has taken place in this prison, when compared with the earlier years. The impression is a very natural one for superficial observers to entertain, but the incorrectness of the comparison will appear from the following considerations:—

1st. Instead of a quiet, orderly, and hopeful set of men, such as were selected at the first by most experienced persons, who had every opportunity of observing their personal conduct, we have had of late years the ordinary sort of convicts sent to us.

2nd. During the first period, such criminals as proved to be incorrigible were promptly removed from Pentonville; during the latter, men of this very description have been, in considerable numbers, sent to us from the public works for further probation every year.

3rd. Moreover, amongst the first convicts, with a great amount of profession, there was, for a considerable time, scarcely the possibility of detecting the failures. With our increased experience, religious profession, I suppose, is more cautiously received, and since the establishment of the public works at home the cases of failure soon come to light.

I do not think there has been any falling off in reformation in Pentonville Prison, if these things be considered.

If I felt satisfied that such was the fact, I should fear that the cause was to be looked for more in the degree of efficiency of our own ministrations (for I am sure the ministry committed to us must be the chief cause of all real change of men's character) than in such disciplinary arrangements as have of late years taken place. Those who entertain the opinion of a decline in success in this respect attribute it chiefly to the shortening the period of imprisonment, by which the most hopeful period was, as they think, cut off.

This is wholly contrary to my experience. I knew intimately all the eighteen months' men, and not long after their removal I remarked in one of my reports that I remembered only one case of real change taking place after twelve months. I grieve now to say, that subsequent knowledge convinces me that the case was unreal altogether.

If the value of separate confinement, in its effect upon the moral condition of prisoners, has been over-rated, I think its use as a penal agency has been as unduly undervalued.

No species of imprisonment so thoroughly punishes the bad, and at the same time so effectually protects the less criminal from contamination and instruction in villany. My objections, on the ground of severe pressure on the bodily and mental functions, I should add, apply only to its excess of extension and indiscriminate application, especially in the case of men under such a heavy sentence as transportation.

In countries which would adopt the system but not the enlightened humanity of our institutions, separate confinement would become an engine of fearful torture.

I have now given you, on the several points to which your letter referred me, my views as summarily as well I could consistently with the importance of the subject. I have no system to support. I have always felt it my duty to state, without reserve, my opinions to those under whom I had the honour to act, whether those opinions might be agreeable to them or otherwise.

My experience now ought to be worth more than, I fear, it really is. I have now, during the last ten years, paid more than one hundred thousand visits for conversation with prisoners in separation. I have also observed the characters and condition of all prisoners on board almost every convict ship which sailed from England during that period, and for nearly five years have had the same opportunity of observation on all the public works of England.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. Kingsmill.

MILITARY PRISONS.—The same military prisons were in operation in 1854 as in the previous year, but in April 1855, the Military Prisons at Montreal and Kingston, Canada, were discontinued, in consequence of the withdrawal of a large military force from that country.

The military prisons in operation in 1854 were as follows:—

England...Chatham, Gosport, Weedon, Devonport.
Scotland...Greenlaw (near Edinburgh).
Ireland ...Dublin, Cork, Limerick, Athlone.
Abroad ...Gibraltar, Montreal, Quebec, Kingston (Canada West), Halifax (Nova Scotia), Bermuda, Vido (Ionian Islands), St. Elmo (Malta), Mauritius, and Barbadoes.

Making a total of 19 Military Prisons, of which 9 are in the United Kingdom, and 10 at different foreign stations, the whole capable of accommodating about 1,400 prisoners.—Report of Military Prisons.

THE PRISONS OF ENGLAND.

The 20th report of the Inspectors of Prisons in England, which has been just published, includes the gaols of the southern and western district, and refers almost exclusively to matters of local details, some of which may be noticed in their place. The report states that the act for the better care and reformation of juvenile offenders has already led to the foundation of several reformatory schools in the district, six of which are in active operation. Any detailed account of their operation is deferred till the next report. At Brecon one of the prisoners was so depressed in spirits from long confinement that he was excused from hard labour at the request of the inspector. The conduct of the authorities of this (Brecon) county gaol is severely reprobated, on the ground that no steps whatever have been taken to remedy the demoralizing evils occurring in this prison from the very inadequate cell accommodation, and this, too, in defiance of repeated remonstrances from the Home-office. Aberystwith gaol has been very improperly used by the borough authorities as a lunatic asylum. At Carnarvon, the numerous evils formerly complained of remain in full force, and the state of the cells would seem to be most disgraceful. In the Cardiff county gaol the accommodation is most inadequate, and the prisoners are all associated together, without any work, in the most demoralizing manner, in utter disregard of the law. The prisoners regretted their compulsory idleness, but nothing was given them to do. The "religious instruction" afforded by the chaplain is quite insufficient. The governor is excused, however, owing to his ignorance of the acts of Parliament in force, to supply which no provision is made. The debtors' prison at Swansea is a wretched specimen of irregularity; among other instances, one of the debtors was allowed to accommodate a friend from the town with half his bed whenever he was not absent from Swansea. At Montgomery prison (the largest in Wales) the want of a schoolmaster is urgently felt. At Haverford-west gaol the greater humanity of the French law of imprisonment for debt is forcibly called to mind, when it is found that an old man of 70 years of age is incarcerated in a noisome prison for a debt of 124*l.* and interest. The gaol of New Radnor is a disgrace to the nation, and, although it ought only to be used as a house of temporary detention, prisoners have been kept there a whole fortnight. The "airing-yard" was found to be occupied by two donkeys and a large hog, it being too, evidently their ordinary abode. At the new prison of Wells there is no convenience for prisoners seeing their legal advisers in private,--"a defect" (remarks the report) "of very serious magnitude." At the Exeter county prison the barbarous practice of cutting the prisoners' hair too short is condemned by the inspector. At the Exeter city gaol the system is abominably defective, and rather adapted "to foster than to repress the growth of crime." At Plymouth the large accession of prisoners for refusing to go to sea after signing articles is noticed, and at this prison a prisoner contrived to escape through a hole 12 inches long by 6½ broad. At Tiverton a debtor complained of the chaplain for refusing him the privilege of having one of his own books to read. This work so dangerous in the eyes of the worthy chaplain, turned out to be Milton's great epic, whereupon the inspector reversed the rev. gentleman's decision. Bradninch gaol is condemned, except as a very temporary lock-up; the absurd punishment of the stocks is retained at this place. Dartmouth gaol is once more condemned, but it appears that special representations to the Home-office have been hitherto fruitless. The discontinuance of grinding corn by the treadmill at Northleach prison suggests the question whether productive is not more profitable than merely punitive labour.

Digitized by Google

Hospitals.

HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN, 49, GREAT ORMOND STREET.—On the 14th of February, J. Labouchere, Esq., the Treasurer, presided at the annual meeting held at the Hospital, when a report was read by the Secretary, by which it appeared that, though the high price of provisions, &c., during the past year, had considerably augmented the expenditure, the hospital has found additional support to meet the expenditure in a great measure. There was, however, still a deficiency to the amount of about 436*l.*, which necessitated the selling out of 300*l.* India Bonds. The total receipts for the past year were announced to have been 1,974*l.* 18s. 10d., and the expenditure 2,411*l.* 5s. 10d. The number of in-patients was 275; but the out-patients had amounted to 8,289, being 1,568 in excess of those in the previous year. This had necessitated an increase of the staff of medical officers. Two legacies had been bequeathed to the institution; one from Mrs. Best of 100*l.*, and one from Miss Ann Thompson, amounting to 400*l.* We trust the appeal of the Committee for increased aid from the public, will not be unavailing, so that a reduction of funded property may not again be rendered necessary to meet the current demand, upon this valuable institution.

THE ROYAL HOSPITAL FOR THE PERMANENT CARE OF THOSE WHO ARE HOPELESSLY DISQUALIFIED FOR THE DUTIES OF LIFE.—Until within the last eighteen months London contained no Hospital to relieve and shelter those who, by disease, accident, or deformity, were rendered incurable. It is rather a remarkable fact that the teeming benevolence of England, which has built up in every populous part of the country, institutions for the cure or temporary ailment of the victims of human suffering, should not have provided a comfortable resting place for those whose condition was irremediable and hopeless. This obvious deficiency is now supplied, and we are glad to find from the first annual report of the Board of Management, which has just been published, that the bold effort made in 1854, has met with deserved success.

Human suffering, at all times and under all circumstances, pleads for sympathy and assistance. But how much more eloquently and earnestly does that suffering plead which is beyond the reach of skill to cure, and can terminate only with the life of the sufferer? Sufferers are frequently consigned to the care of our hospitals, with the hope of a speedy restoration to health and their accustomed occupations; whose hope utterly fails them. The best medical skill is found to be unavailing, and they are dismissed as incurable. We can conceive no condition of our mortal state more affecting or oppressive. But unhappily in thousands of instances it exists.

Before the Royal Hospital was instituted, a writer in Dickens's Household Words, said, "It is indeed a marvellous oversight of benevolence that sympathy should have been so long withheld from precisely the sufferers who most need it. Hopeless pain allied to hopeless poverty, is a condition of existence not to be thought of without a shudder. It is a slow journey through the Valley of the Shadow of Death, from which we save even the greatest criminals."

These eloquent words, though very applicable then, have lost much of their point since the existence of the Royal Hospital, which "may now be regarded as a thing accomplished. It lives, and it will continue to live. It was wanted, and the people will appreciate a real want." To let the public know what was accomplished during the first twelve months of its existence, we cannot do better than give the following extracts from its first report:—

"The Board appointed to take charge of this infant Charity, on the day of its institution, have now to render their account. They, of course, cannot have much to report. Nevertheless, they think it may inspire gratitude, and awaken expectation for the future.

"One of the first duties devolving on them was to secure a suitable dwelling for the Home Patients. A house of sufficient capacity for temporary occupation was secured in the pleasant and retired village of Carshalton, ten miles from town. It has been occupied from Christmas last, it is now put into good order, and the friends of the charity are invited to pay it a visit.

"The Board are not allowed to speak of cure, but they may, in almost every case speak of visible amendment. Care and kindness have produced contentment; contentment has awakened hope; and hope is to many the best medicine of life. It would certainly be difficult to find a family, so afflicted, so happy.

"The various methods of relief which have been adopted, are found to work admirably. They adapt the benefits to the recipients. Where a patient has survived his connexions, and is without a home, a home is provided; and where a case may still nestle among its friends, it is greatly assisted, without destroying those most natural sources of comfort. The readiness with which both methods of relief are sought is, indeed, the best testimony to the wisdom of the arrangement.

"It will be seen from the Balance Sheet which will be presented, that, although the time has been forbidding, our resources have been encouraging. A roomy dwelling has been obtained; it has been suitably furnished; a considerable family has been sustained; every extra expense, arising on a first attempt, has been met, and a small balance remains in our favour.

"In fact, The Royal Hospital may be now regarded as a thing accomplished. It lives, and it will continue to live. It was wanted, and the people will appreciate a real want. It has not been forced on attention, but has been left to the spontaneous convictions of the people. It is a natural production, which is both of vigorous and of permanent growth.

"The wonder, indeed, is, that nothing of the kind has existed before. The question has been, now that attention is awakened, How is it that we have so many Hospitals for temporary affliction, and accident, and not one for cases which are judged incurable? The answer is, that the difference between affliction for a few weeks, and affliction for life, is almost infinite. In both cases, the truly benevolent have wished to act; but they have thought, they could not bear the heavy claims of hopeless and incurable affliction. It has not been that they wanted charity, but that they wanted courage. The responsibility seemed fearful, and they stood away from it; and hence the afflicted with hope on their side had a thousand comforters; while the afflicted with despair at his elbow was left alone to pine away in his misery.

"Of course, in such an undertaking, great prudence is of the first necessity. Care must be taken at every step that the progress may be safe. But the Board have looked the difficulty in the face, and they do not mean to be appalled by it. They will endeavour to make caution and confidence their companions, and will then wait and work calmly for a joyful issue.

"In the same spirit of confidence they ask for support—for support equal to the difficulty and responsibility of the engagement. It is an effort which is greatly wanted. Thousands have perished, and are perishing, for the want of it. It is the first considerable effort of its kind. It is acknowledged to be one of deep, yea, fearful responsibility. It can become successful only by a grand concurrence of opinion, of sympathy, and of beneficent action."

Sir James Clark, Sir James Anderson, and several other eminent physicians have publicly testified to the special utility of this beneficent institution.

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL.—The annual general Court of Governors of St. Luke's Hospital for lunatics was held on the 20th ult., afternoon at the London Tavern; Mr. S. F. Shaw Lefevre, the treasurer, presided. From the report of the General Committee, which was read to the meeting, it appears that alterations and improvements of considerable importance were made during the past year, including—first, the conversion of three of the central dormitories of each gallery into open and well-lighted recesses, for the occupation of the patients by day, for purposes of amusement; secondly, the division of the galleries into wards so as to facilitate a classification of patients; and thirdly, the purchase of an additional supply of furniture, and the fitting up of bookcases, closets, and wardrobes for the use of the patients. These improvements, contracted for by Mr. Cubitt, have been carried out without the least inconvenience to the unfortunate inmates of the asylum. Provision has also been made to increase the comfort of the attendants. It appears, further, that 177 patients, deemed curable, were received last year, of whom 102 were discharged cured; and that since the opening of the hospital in July, 1751, 19,018 have been admitted, of whom 8,386—a very respectable percentage—have been restored to the use of their reason. On the 31st of December last 181 patients remained in hospital, including 92 deemed curable and 89 "boarders." The receipts of 1855 amounted to 10,394*l.*, 6s. 3d., and the disbursements to 9,990*l.* 9s. 5d., leaving a balance of 403*l.*, 16s. 10d.; but it was found necessary, in order to keep the balance on the right side of the sheet, to sell out a large quantity of stock. The report proceeds to show that new regulations, already adopted by the General Committee, have been submitted to the Commissioners in Lunacy for approval, and will be eventually presented for confirmation to the Board of Governors. The committee are at issue with the Commissioners in Lunacy on one important point—they decline to accede to a suggestion of the Commissioners for the removal of the hospital, on the ground of the central position of the present buildings, the facilities for visitation thereby afforded to the medical profession and to the friends of patients, the inadequacy of the funds of the institution to meet the expense of reconstructing the hospital elsewhere, and certain peculiarities in the existing lease. For these reasons, and others equally cogent, the Committee of Governors of St. Luke's Hospital, respectfully decline to adopt the suggestions of the Commissioners in Lunacy, "which suggestions," they remark, "if carried into effect, would close at once and for ever, an institution which enjoys the confidence of the public, and which has for years succeeded in restoring to mental health more than two-thirds of the lunatic patients who have been placed under its care." The report was unanimously adopted, and the various officers of the hospital were then re-elected for the year, including Lord Overstone, as President, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, as Treasurer, and Dr. Sutherland, Dr. Munro, Mr. Luke, and Mr. Stevens, as the medical officers of the hospital. After some other routine business the meeting formally adjourned.

Digitized by Google

Reformatories.

SCHOOLS AND REFORMATORIES FOR WILTSHIRE.

A GENTLEMAN who writes under the signature of "S." has written a long and able letter to the Salisbury and Manchester Journal on the subject of public education, and the propriety of establishing additional reformatory institutions in that part of the country. Though we do not agree with all the writer says, and particularly with that part of his letter which intimates that reformatories are a premium to crime, we consider his facts and his views of sufficient importance to have a place in our pages. After some introductory matter, he says:—

In the present state of our county I cannot but look upon the establishment of the proposed reformatory school as a direct inducement to and premium upon crime, for I will ask any practical man, if every ploughboy in the county would not benefit his condition by getting into this establishment, where he would be provided with every comfort and advantage, and, after a certain period, returned back again into society in a better and higher position? And as there will be but one road by which he can arrive at these advantages, if he fail to discover it for himself, his friends and relatives will soon point it out to him.

Would it not be a work much more acceptable to God, and much more beneficial to man, to endeavour to direct all this zeal and liberality to "the more noble and necessary duty of endeavouring to prevent crime?" For look over the length and breadth of this great county, and, I declare, I do not know a single rural parish where the social condition of the labourers is satisfactory, or the means for education anything approaching to efficiency. There may be such—but I do not know them. I know many where there is no day-school of any description, and one instance where in five parishes the schools are only kept in existence in their present wretched and almost useless condition by the liberality of one single individual. And I could name one parish, and that too belonging almost entirely to one of the most active promoters of this reformatory movement, where the social condition is such that the cottages are an outrage upon common decency, where no attempt has ever been made to teach a single ploughboy in the parish to write his name, and where they would have been equally unable even to read if it had not been for the little that has been done for that purpose by the dissenters.

Would it not then be much better to make the improvement of this wretched and deplorable state of things the subject of a county movement? Let every gentleman who has taken part in this reformatory movement, exert himself to the utmost, by his own liberality, and by his influence over others, to establish really useful and efficient schools on his own property and in his own locality. An example would thus be set, and a spirit stirred up that, I do not doubt, would rapidly spread through the whole county. Nothing is wanted for this noble work but the means, and if it is to be done efficiently they must be given with no niggard hand. Really good education, like all other valuable things, can only be had at a costly price. But it is worse than folly in the professing friends of education, if they are really sincere in their professions, to hesitate for one moment about the cost. For while you remunerate your teachers at a rate below the wages of common labourers, and even then neglect to provide them with the necessary books and other requisites, you cannot expect to obtain it. In your paper of the 15th inst., there was an advertisement for a schoolmistress for a country parish, and offering a salary of eight pounds a year. This, I fear, is too just an example of the liberality of other country parishes. And what must be the result of such a system as this? You must of necessity get a person who is unable to teach properly the most common rudiments, and to such a person you entrust the entire control and management of the education of a whole parish. You are then surprised at the results, and pretend to regret that reformatory schools have become necessary.

It is a common thing to hear the professing friends of education ask with exultation, "Have you read such or such a pamphlet on education?" But it is a very rare thing to hear any one speak with commendation of the only efficient step that has, as yet, been taken in this county in the cause of education—the establishment of the training school at Salisbury, for mistresses, by the late Bishop, and its sincere and zealous support by the present Bishop, both before and since he was raised to the bench; and I believe it has only been by great exertions, on the part of a few individuals, that this excellent establishment has been kept in existence. These controversial writings, instead of promoting, only retard and mystify the great question of general education; and I believe that too many of them are put forth only to divert attention from the really important point, how the means are to be provided for a really efficient system of parochial education. To say that the difficulty is a religious one, I do not believe it to be true. I have never known an instance in all my experience, and it has been considerable, where the parents of children, for whose benefit our national schools are intended, ever refused to send their children from religious scruples, when the school was conducted in any degree approaching to usefulness and efficiency. And I know an instance at this moment, where an improvement having been made in the management of a school, all the dissenters in the parish immediately sent their children with alacrity and gratitude. When these objections are made, it is by a different and higher class of persons, and I do verily believe that in most cases they are put forth to keep alive a spirit of controversy, and to divert public attention from those heavy pecuniary sacrifices that must be made, either by voluntary contributions or general assessment, if we are ever to have a really useful and efficient system of parochial education.

But how proud and happy would it make me, if this county would really take up this great question with sincerity and zeal. I believe that a reformatory school would then be unnecessary. And that the few cases of depravity which would even then occur in the present corrupt state of human nature, would be better met by an improved system of prison discipline, and by a legal power being given to the constituted authorities to commit for a longer period those criminals, under a certain age, whom they should consider it advisable to subject to a full course of such discipline.

REFORMATION OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS—Mr. E. Denison, M.P., has given notice of his intention to apply for leave to deposit in the House of Commons a petition for a bill to provide more effectually for the care and reformation of juvenile offenders, in the west riding of the county of York. It is intended by this bill to empower justices or other persons who may be named for the purpose, and subject to certain restrictions, to determine upon the building, management, and maintenance of a reformatory institution or institutions; to levy rates on the owners and occupiers of land and property in the riding for the purposes of such institutions; to associate with themselves, partially or absolutely, in the establishment and maintenance of such institutions, any neighbouring riding, county, or borough; and to agree with individuals or with existing institutions for a participation in the establishment, maintenance, and management of the institutions to be created under this bill, or for acquiring a share in such existing institutions for the purposes of the bill. The bill will repeal, alter, and amend any local acts which may be inconsistent, or which may interfere with the objects before mentioned.

RE-OPENING OF THE LONDON REFORMATORY, 9, Great Smith Street, Westminster.—This institution was re-opened on the 11th of February last, for the reception of adult criminals, and it is gratifying to find that the benevolent noblemen and gentlemen who from the first interested themselves in its welfare, are not deterred by the injury it has suffered, but have added fresh strength to their efforts, and adopted rules which are calculated to prevent similar mishaps in future.

The Committee state with much thankfulness, that, in despite of the evil influences occasioned by the conduct of Mr. Nash—both as affecting its Funds, and the internal management of the Institution, nothing has occurred to militate against the principles and system on which the Reformatory was originally founded. There was still a large amount of good done; and sufficient evidence exists to prove how considerable was the number of Adult Criminals who really derived the benefits intended for them.

Digitized by Google

This Reformatory was the first established in England for the Adult Male Criminal—the only place where he could be maintained, instructed, religiously, and industrially, and having learned how to live, be assisted to emigrate.

On its model others have been formed in all parts of England; it has given the tone and direction to public benevolence towards these objects, and the Juvenile Reformatories now happily rising around us in great degree owe their origin to it.

Such influence had the patronage and approbation of the Public of all classes, conferred on the efforts of Mr. NASH (which, had they been really what they appeared to be would have been above all praise), that the Committee can hardly be blamed for giving him that unlimited regard and confidence, which he so sadly abused.

In reference, therefore, to his conduct, and in that alone, the Institution failed—not in the principle on which it is established; that, if anything, is strengthened and confirmed in the minds of the Committee, as to its effects, and as to its usefulness.

Many months have expired since the close of the Institution, but no time has been lost; the whole of the former inmates admitted by Mr. Nash have been emigrated, or otherwise disposed of. Mr. Nash has left the country for Australia. Every other officer, with one exception, has been dismissed. The premises have been rebuilt, and adapted expressly for a "PROBATIONARY REFORMATORY" for adult criminals. New officers have been appointed such as to satisfy the committee, reassure the Public, and promote efficient government and teaching in every department.

The labour and anxiety have been great, but faith and hope animate the breasts of the committee: let public charity complete their efforts, and enable them to continue an institution replete with benefit to our afflicted fellow men, who have fallen into crime, and need a "place of repentance."

Subscriptions and Donations received by Mr. Thomas Deane, Deputy Governor, at the Reformatory; by Mr. T. Pepperall, 27, Union Road, Clapham Rise, the Collector; by J. C. Wood, Esq., Victoria Street; and by J. M. Clabon, Esq., 21, Great George Street.

ERNEST BUNSEN, JOHN M. CLABON, } Hon. Secs.

THE LINEN DRAPERS', SILK MERCERS', LACE MEN'S, HABERDASHERS', AND HOSIERS' INSTITUTION.—On Tuesday evening, February 12, the anniversary festival of this association, took place at the London Tavern under the presidentship of the Lord Mayor, who was supported by the Sheriffs, and by such a gathering of the members of the principal and retail houses in the Metropolis, as has rarely been assembled on similar occasions.

We observed present, members of the following firms; Messrs. Fisher and Co.; Dent, Alcroft, and Co.; Bradbury and Gretorex; Messrs. Cook, Howes, and Co.; J. and R. Crocker and Co.; Ellis, Everrington, and Co.; Morley and Co.; Halling, Pearce, and Stone; Swan and Edgar; Lewis and Allenby; Lewis, Tavener, and Co., and others, amounting to nearly 200.

The Lord Mayor descanted upon a report of pecuniary relief afforded during the past year to 100 recipients, and the fact of about 400 individuals having had their means of living assisted, if not wholly provided, by the agency of the Institution, still his Lordship said that notwithstanding the great amount of benefit conferred, he could not but consider that the society might be made more popular than it at present appeared to be, as the number of annual subscribers was not commensurate with the thousands of persons engaged in the trades in the Metropolis, nor with the magnitude of the capital invested.

The administration of the affairs, was confided to a body of officers, elected by the members generally, and by ballot, when demanded, and it certainly required no great sacrifices on the part of the young engaged in business, to be enabled to appropriate a very small part of their earnings towards an annual subscription which would secure to them a provision in old age and misfortunes.

Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Kennedy addressed the company in a very humorous speech, which he concluded with an urgent appeal to those who were not already members to come in and enroll themselves in the books of the Institution.

Mr. Lawler and Mr. King, Miss Pool and other vocalists contributed to the amusements of the evening. About £300 were announced as having been collected in the room.

24, Surrey Street, Strand.

FEMALE REFUGE FOR THE DESTITUTE, DALSTON.

THIS Refuge is under the patronage of her Majesty; the Marquis of Lansdowne is vice-president; and the two archbishops and several of the bishops and nobility are among the vice-presidents. It was incorporated by charter in 1839, and a small Government grant, in consideration of 25 free cases under conditional pardons from prison, is annually received. The time they are expected to stay before they can be recommended to situations, is from fifteen to eighteen months. They are employed in learning to read and write, in household and needle-work; but the chief industrial occupation is laundry-work, by the profits of which the establishment is mainly supported. Thirty-four young women were placed out last year in domestic service in the neighbourhood, the greater part of whom had retained their places, and were giving much satisfaction. The ages at which they are admissible are from 15 to 25; some few are private cases, which are paid for at the rate of 5*s.* per week; but the greater part come free from prisons, at the recommendation of the chaplains, or by a small payment from a magistrate's fund raised for such benevolent purposes. The chief societies which provide payments for this object are the Surrey Society (for Wandsworth Gaol), the Warwick Society, and the Liverpool Borough Magistrates' Fund. Seventy-two females are now in the Institution.

The Annual General Court of the Corporation of this Institution (Established in the year 1805, and Incorporated 1838) was held at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate Street, on Monday the 11th inst., at which Lord Radstock, one of the Vice-Presidents, J. Gurney Hoare, Esq., Treasurer, and a large number of the Committee were present. The Report which was read by the Chaplain and Secretary, Rev. W. Stone, M.A., referred, among other matters, to the applications constantly received from Governors and Chaplains of prisons as well as from private individuals in behalf of young females who had lost their characters, and been imprisoned for slight offences, and for whom no prospect of obtaining situations remained without passing through some Reformatory like the Refuge, where they were taught and trained in honest and industrious habits, and subjected to good moral and religious discipline. The number received from all sources, during the year, including some cases of Conditional Pardon through the Secretary of State, was 58. The total number in the Institution during the year was 131, of whom 54 had left for various situations, or had been restored to their friends; one only had absconded, and one had been dismissed for misconduct. The balance-sheet showed a deficit of 221*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, chiefly arising from the high price of provisions and the necessity of great repairs in the buildings. The income for the whole year was 2803*l.* 18s. 8d., and the expenditure, 2,582*l.* 11s. 10d. The sum carried to the expenses of the Refuge from the laundry work performed by the young women, was 722*l.* 7*s.* 6d. The whole proceeds from the washing trade being 1,391*l.* 3s. 6d., while the outlay was 568*l.* 16s. This item shows an increase upon the preceding year of 154*l.*

The Report having been agreed to, the Vice-Presidents, Treasurer, Committee and Auditors were re-elected for the ensuing year. A special vote was proposed by Lord Radstock, and seconded by the Rev. T. O. Goodchild, Rector of Hackney, and unanimously agreed to, that the best thanks of the Court of Governors be given to those ladies who devote much of their time and attention to visiting the institutions and manifest a lively interest in the instruction and welfare of the young women. The other routine business having been transacted the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

A strong desire was expressed at the meeting that some fresh effort should be made, now that the public mind seemed alive to the great advantage of Reformatories for the young, to make the existence of this useful institution more known, and to raise new contributions for extending its operations. Probably no better indication of the success of this valuable institution could be produced than the fact that on New Year's Eve last, a number of servants, amounting as we believe to thirty, from various places, who had been inmates and obtained their situations through this institution, assembled together to meet the inmates in the schoolroom, where a modest entertainment was provided for them by the Committee; each expressing thanks for what had been done for them, and testifying by their presence that they were not ashamed of the Home wherein they had been recalled to a sense of their duty, and by their happy appearance, that the work of the institution had been effectually done. It is fair to presume that many more may have been prevented by circumstances, distance, &c. from being present on the occasion. We have no hesitation in saying, that as a home for erring but repentant girls, the Refuge at Dalston stands pre-eminent, and richly and well deserves the inspection and the pecuniary support of the Philanthropic; and we may add, that we speak from personal observation, and trust their appeal will be liberally responded to.

BENEFIT SOCIETIES FOR RAILWAY WORKMEN.

ON the 5th of February there was a numerous meeting of the workmen employed on the South-Eastern Railway at the school-room at the Ashford-works, to hear an address from Mr. Smiles, the secretary of the company, on the advantages to be derived from the cultivation of provident and economical habits. Mr. Smiles said that every man ought to feel it a duty to cultivate his self-dependence, and by due economy of his means, often hardly enough earned, to endeavour to secure himself against the casualties of sickness, accidents, or loss of employment. Prudence, forethought, and self-denial formed the basis of manly character and respectability. A man who laboured was worthy of all respect--it was the idler who was undignified and useless. The pay of engine drivers was equal to that of lieutenants and assistant-surgeons in the army, and the remuneration paid to railway guards and stokers was equal to that of merchants' clerks and many Dissenting minsters. How to account for the present disparity in the social position of the one class as compared with the other ? It was in a great measure to be accounted for by the difference in their education—though the improved institutions for the instruction of the people at large were tending gradually to diminish the cause of inequality, and to bridge over the gulf which divided them. But it was mainly caused by the want of respect and proper ambition, which every working man ought to cherish. Mr. Smiles proceeded to enforce upon working men the duty of economy for the sake of the comfort of their households and the education of their children, and urged their resort to benefit societies as a most praiseworthy combination for purposes of mutual help. Railway men ought most especially to employ forethought in order to be efficient for their work. The best proof of their possessing such forethought would be that they should exercise forethought in matters relating to their own lives and circumstances. Railway work, by its very necessity, called fer the exercise of the highest qualities in a man—sobriety, punctuality, precision, watchfulness, prudence, collectedness of mind, forethought. The railway worker in all ranks—platelayers, pointsmen, signalmen, guards, drivers and stokers, station-masters, and their staffs—must always be on the "look out." Unremitting vigilance on duty was as necessary to be observed by them as by the soldier in front of the enemy. In fact, the railway workmen, of all workmen, required to be the most complete at all points—the most thoughtful and readyminded. When it was considered that not less than 90,000, men were now directly employed in the working of railways in this country, scattered abroad in stations and workshops at all points of the kingdom, the influence of their example upon the surrounding population must eventually be a matter of no slight importance to society at large. Such being the position of railway workmen, he entertained the expectation that in matters concerning their own social condition they would also exhibit a proper example of their wise and thoughtful arrangements.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Smiles concluded by inviting the assembled workmen to unite in the formation of themselves into a benefit society, a measure which the directors of the company were most anxious to promote and encourage, provided it was based on sound principles, believing that it would promote the wellbeing of the workmen themselves, and secure the more efficient service of the railway. But, while the directors were willing to give their liberal assistance, they desired that the men should make the institution their own, as they were the parties mainly interested in its prosperity. Mr. Alcock, the vicar of Ashford, expressed his approval of the views propounded by Mr. Smiles, after which, on the proposition of Mr. Betson, a Workman, a resolution was agreed to in favour of the formation of a benefit society in connexion with the South-Eastern Company, and the appointment of a committee to frame rules and regulations, subject to the approval of a competent actuary.

Perverseness.—One perverse disposition destroys the peace of a family, as one jarring instrument spoils a whole concert.

RAGGED SCHOOLS.

To the Editor of The Philanthropist.

Sir,—I have been for some years upon the committee, and thus actively interested in the management of a Ragged School situated in one of our chief towns, where, from peculiar, in addition to general causes, the ignorant and destitute form a very large class.

The instruction given at our school is both mental and industrial, and the ages of our pupils (male and female) range from two years to upwards of twenty. The elder ones attend chiefly in the evening, being most of them engaged in daily labour; it is, however, to be remarked, that the wildest and most uncared for of the class for whom our school is intended, are among those who come in the evening.

The mass of misery which is revealed by the histories of our scholars is so appalling, and the difficulties which obstruct all attempts to diminish it so great, that numerous as institutions similar to that to which I refer, have now, happily, become, it is vain to depend on their unaided efforts to subdue the evil. We can scarcely hope that it will be successfully met by any curative short of an effective system of education for all classes of the people, but many minor and more immediately attainable remedies may be applied if the nature of the disease be clearly understood.

I have thought that by simply relating the cases of some of our pupils the facts I shall thus have occasion to mention, will illustrate the habits of their class, and, by indicating not only their vices and their sufferings, but also their many virtues, may suggest various means for assisting them to raise themselves out of their present position.

If then, sir, you will kindly concede to me a little space in your excellent periodical, I propose from time to time, to narrate in the form of letters to yourself, such instances among those daily coming to our knowledge in our school, as will best attain my purpose, without too far trespassing on your valuable space.

The absolute necessity of such homes for destitute girls, as the school mistress proposes, none will, I believe, deny who are acquainted with the dangers and misery to which such girls are exposed, and their friendless condition.

I am, sir, &c., &c.,
D. E. L.

L. Y. was an orphan, who was taken by her aunt, who keeps a house of ill fame; she lived with the aunt some months, and was sent at all hours of the night upon errands of vice, too sad to mention. A friend thought to take her from this place and train her for service, but the experiment failed in a small family. She often said, "Oh, that I could forget the wicked things I have seen." She was taken into a house of industry where she has been two years and is doing well, and will be a useful servant; she is saved from the fate she must otherwise have fallen into.

Y. R. was an orphan left with a little brother to the guardianship of an aunt, who was receiving £25 a year for the especial clothing and education of both; they were sent out occasionally to pick up their own living. The girl worked for some of the lowest and dirtiest people, the aunt receiving the wages, the children being clothed in rags. The girl found her way to the evening school, her case was looked into, and means tried to save her; and when the case of both children was fully investigated, it was found that not only means existed for their present support, but that there was a large sum of money to apprentice them at the age of fourteen, when the other allowance would cease. They are now both at an industrial school where every means is used for their improvement; they are very happy and doing well, and have been in the school twelve months.

A. D. was an orphan, who lived with her grandmother, and went about picking up rags and bones; she was brought to attend school, and after a time sent out to Australia, where she is getting good wages under the kind care of Mrs. Chisholm; had she remained in her then position she would most likely have been ruined.

The school mistress writes in plain unvarnished language; I feel quite sure in most cases, the girls would be glad to be where they could learn to work, and where the managers would feel an interest in teaching; but not many of the mistresses know how to treat them, and it only makes many dislike service. From sixpence to one shilling a week is given, and the girl is expected to do everything, even to cooking for the family. Often complaints are made, "The girl you sent is so rough, she does not speak properly; she requires so much looking after, I might as well do the work myself." It is almost impossible to make employers take an interest in teaching these poor girls; Oh, that all employers would be more humble and more self-denying! Oh, that they would follow Christ not only in word, but in deed! How much good they might do in their households by striving to lead those who are under their care in a right way of getting their living, and instead of making the poor girl hate her place she would love both mistress and work.

The plan I wish to propose is that more industrial houses or families should be formed, where a few of these poor girls in every town could be taught habits of industry, economy, and above all a higher training of the mind to virtue and the love to God. In a few years we should have less crime, better mothers, and of course better sons and daughters. More money is spent in reforming the criminal than would be necessary to prevent crime. Four shillings a week or perhaps less would support each girl on plain but sufficient diet, and I think if plenty of washing, mangling, sewing, &c., were sent to those houses of industry, these poor girls would get a living and be made good servants and good wives, and learn to wash their own clothes. I think if the more refined would patronise these houses of industry, they would soon be made self-supporting. At such houses in the country cows might be kept. If in towns bread, home made, pure bread, might be made, and I have no doubt there would be plenty to buy it. The difficulty now rises who will do the work, persons must be found to manage the house. I think persons could be found. I should prefer country persons; they generally have an economical way of managing; they must also be persons who would not be afraid to soil their hands, they must work with the girls, in order to teach them, and also treat them as their own children, not as something of a different nature. Oh, that many would rise up to this work, who have both means and influence; there are some who have the will but perhaps not the means or the strength. Let us work while it is called to day, the night cometh when no man can work. If many of the refined part of society saw the sin and misery and drunkenness which prevail among this class, I feel sure they would do what they could to stay the torrent; the harvest is great, but the labourers are few. I pray that the Lord of the harvest may send forth more labourers into His harvest.

Digitized by Google

Notices to Correspondents.

The Philanthropist is published on the first of every month, and edited by the two Chaplains of an important prison, which, it is hoped, will be a sufficient guarantee to the public that no effort will be spared, to render the publication a truthful and valuable handbook for the Christian philanthropist.

The paper will be forwarded for six months on the receipt of 36 stamps; for three months for 18 stamps; annual subscription if paid in advance, five shillings.

Office:—289, STRAND, to which address communications for the Editors, books, reports, &c., for notice or review should be sent post-free.

May be had of Partridge, Oakey, and Co. 34, Paternoster Row; The Book Society, 19, Paternoster Row, and of the following agents:

Ashford	J. Elliott & Son.
Bath	J. Noyes & Son.
Birmingham	Mr. T. Ragg.
Bridport	Mr. J. Prince.
Camberwell	Mrs. Medes.
Cambridge	Mr. Charles Naylor.
Cheltenham	Messrs. Wight & Bally.
Chichester	Mr. G. Pullinger.
Clapham	Mr. D. Batten.
"	Mr. T. Edmonds.
Derby	W. Bemrose & Son.
Devizes	Mr. C. Gillman.
Dublin	P. Dixon. Hardy & Son.
Eton	Mr. Ingalton.
Exmouth	Mr. W. Bounsall.
Frome	Mr. Penny.
Lymington	Mr. W. L. Galpine.
Newport, Isle of Wight	Messrs. J. & W. Gubbins.
Oxford	Mr. J. Vincent.
Peckham	Mr. Weatherly.
Romsey	Mr. W. Chignell.
Southampton	Mr. James C. Cox.
Stroud	Mr. S. G. Bucknall.
Sudbury	Mr. G. W. Fulcher.
Tavistock	Messrs. Feaston & Co.
Tewkesbury	Mr. J. Lawler.
Tonbridge	Messrs. Bridger & Son.
Wakefield	Mr. Stanfield.
Weymouth	Mr. J. Sheeren.
Windsor	Mr. J. B. Brown.
Wandsworth	Mrs. Nugent.

The Philanthropist,

AND

PRISON & REFORMATORY GAZETTE.

MARCH 1st, 1856.

JUVENILE CRIME.

A Lecture on "The Influence of Prisons and Reformatories respectively on Juvenile Crime," will be delivered on Thursday evening, March 27th, at the Assembly Rooms, Spread Eagle, Wandsworth, by the Rev. Henry J. Hatch, M.A., Magdalen College, Cambridge, Chaplain to the House of Correction, Wandsworth. To be followed by a discussion as to how far Prisons or Reformatories may be looked upon as premiums to crime.

Speakers will be expected to confine their remarks, as far as possible, to the subject under discussion, and to abide by the decision of the Chairman on points of order.

The chair will be taken at half-past seven o'clock, p.m., precisely.

Trains leave the Waterloo Station, for the Clapham Station, at 7; for the Wandsworth Station at 7.15; both stations being within a short distance. Admission by tickets. Apply to the Secretary, Wandsworth Literary Institution; or the Rev. H. J. Hatch, Wandsworth Common.

It will be recollected that since we commenced The Philanthropist we have repeatedly and strongly urged upon our readers the necessity of some combination amongst the friends of the Reformatory Movement, which should form a centre for information, and mutual suggestions in a work completely in its infancy—but should extend its ramifications throughout the United Kingdom, and bear with all the force of concentration and unity upon any legislative action connected with this important subject. We hailed with gratification the steps taken in this direction by the conference which met at Mr. Hanbury's, in the spring of last year, when a committee was formed which, amongst other duties, watched carefully, as we believe, the enactments passed in the last session of Parliament on Juvenile Offenders. No advancement, as far as we can learn, was made towards the formation of any society —and in the meanwhile an assembly took place at Hardwicke Court, Gloucester, the residence of J. B. Ll. Baker, Esq., where a large number of country gentlemen, connected with existing or contemplated Reformatories in their several counties, met, with a view to inspect the arrangements of the school at Hardwicke. These Gentlemen had been summoned with the further laudable intention on the part of Mr. Baker, that those who, in distant places, were engaged in a similar object—the Reformation of Juvenile Criminals — should meet and become personally acquainted with each other. Much interesting conversation on the subject took place, and before they separated, it was suggested, and finally resolved that a society should be formed, to be called "The Reformatory Union." Meanwhile it appears that the Conference Committee had not been idle, and the time was at length considered ripe to call a larger meeting, and carry out the original intention of establishing a permanent organization or society—and with this view the friends of the movement were invited from all parts to a meeting at the Caledonian Hotel, Adelphi, on the 8th of February last. Our readers are already acquainted with the liberal and comprehensive principles upon which the Reformatory Union, formed at Mr. Baker's, was constituted, and as a rumour prevailed amongst them that certain resolutions were to be proposed at the Caledonian meeting of a very exclusive nature, it was deemed advisable for the members of the Reformatory Union to meet on the previous day to consult upon the course they should adopt; and we are free to confess that we entertained strong hopes that the little force engaged in battling with the great social disease of our times, juvenile crime, would have been brought to act harmoniously; and that one grand and effective society would have been the result. This, however, was not to be. The meeting was decidedly the largest and most influential, in point of representation of Reformatory Institutions, which has yet been held on the subject. The members of the Reformatory Union of Hardwicke, and of the London Conference, met together, in large numbers, and notwithstanding much discussion, it was most gratifying to observe that all the observations on both sides were received with courtesy and attention, though they failed to bring about that which yet seemed the desire of all, "One Society." It transpired that there had been several Roman Catholic Reformatories set on foot, and the discussion turned upon the question, whether the proposed association should be framed on comprehensive principles, such as had been adopted by the Reformatory Union, enabling Christians of all denominations to join it without scruple, or as was desired by the London Conference, or at least the majority of that party, upon the basis of common Protestantism, to the complete exclusion of Romanism. Various modes were proposed by way of a solution to the difficulty, but without effect; and though principally owing to the conciliatory and liberal conduct of Earl Shaftesbury, who presided, no degree of hostility escaped on either side, it was found impossible for the two parties to unite into one; and on the retirement of those gentlemen who objected to their exclusiveness, the following resolutions were passed:—

"I.—That an Association be now formed, to be called the 'Reformatory and Refuge Union,' as a centre of information and encouragement for Reformatories, Refuges, Industrial Schools, and other similar Institutions for the prevention of juvenile crime or the reformation of criminals in Great Britain and Ireland.

"II.—That the object of this Association shall be,

"1. To collect and diffuse information as to the operations and results of all such Institutions; to afford a means of communication between their promoters, and of concerted action with reference to the Government, the Legislature, and public bodies in general.

"2. To facilitate the establishment of new Institutions, the selection and training of efficient masters, matrons, and assistants, the procurement of books and school materials for educational or industrial work, and the ultimate provision for inmates by emigration or situations of permanent employment.

"3. To promote the religious, intellectual, and industrial education of the inmates of such Institutions; and, without interfering in their management, to encourage those who conduct them in every effort to elevate and reclaim the neglected and criminal class, by educating them in the fear of God and the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

"III.—That Members of the Association shall contribute an annual subscription of

Digitized by Google

10s. 6d., Life Members, 10*l.*; and that the management of the Association be confided to a General Committee and officers, as follo s with power to fill up vacancies and to elect a Managing Committee out of their number."

The following officers promised their adhesion:—President, the Earl of Shaftesbury; Vice-Presidents, The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Panmure, the Archbishop of Dublin, Sir S. Morton Peto, Bart., C. B. Adderley, Esq., M.P., the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord Henry Cholmondeley, M.P., Hon. A. Kinnaird, M.P., Sir J. Pakington, Bart., M.P., Hon. Secretary, R. Hanbury, Esq., jun."

The attempt at unity having failed, the original Reformatory Union remained as before, but at a meeting of its members on the following Monday, February 11th, 1856, at which were also present a large number of other well known promoters of the Reformatory movement, it was decided that the Reformatory Union should be constituted "The National Reformatory Union," on its original principles, and for the following (nearly its original) purposes:—

To collect and diffuse information bearing on the Reformation of youthful offenders.

To promote the formation of Reformatory Institutions where needed, and generally to advance the further practicable development of the reformatory system.

To consider and promote such legislative measures as are still required for the better care and reformation of youthful offenders.

To assist in the placing out and subsequent guardianship, and protection of young persons leaving Reformatory Institutions.

The subscription of 10s. 6d., or donation of £5, as before, to constitute membership.

The association is not confined to this country, but may include persons in all countries who can contribute to the furtherance of its objects.

So that at this time there are two distinct unions, so to speak:—

"The National Reformatory Union," Hon. Sec. G. H. Bengough, Esq., Downend, Bristol; Office, 3, Waterloo Place, Pall Mall;

"The Reformatory and Refuge Union," Hon. Sec. R. Hanbury, junr., Esq., 3, Sussex Square, Hyde Park, and J. W. Nutt, Esq., 9, John Street, Adelphi.

We have from the first repudiated all religious controversy; we desire, like our great Master, if the priest and the Levite fail to do their duty, not to withhold the meed of praise from the Samaritan who does—but we should be false to ourselves if we withheld our distinct opinion upon a matter which bears so strongly upon the principal subject which we have taken up in our pages, "Criminal Reformation." Whatever may be said in favour of the exclusion of the Holy Scriptures from our National Schools, founded on the supposed power of parents or pastors to teach religious knowledge elsewhere, we hold that "reformation," not grounded on the "fear and love of God, and the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures" is almost a moral impossibility. We are persuaded that no one, not even the Roman Catholics themselves, would for a moment argue that the reformation of a sinner, in its completeness, which must involve his return to his God, could be effected in any other way than through a knowledge of Him, which is conveyed to us alone in the Holy Scriptures. We are certain that there was but one feeling in this respect pervading the great meeting at the Caledonian Hotel. For ourselves, most gladly would we see, if in the present state of things it were possible, all our criminals brought under the beautiful teaching of our Protestant Church; but in as much as to our sorrow we know that a large portion are of the Romish persuasion, we confess we should feel very grieved if those repentant criminals, whom conscience or their spiritual advisers might deter from entering a Protestant Reformatory, should be excluded from all hope, and left to go on in their course of crime to their own utter ruin, and the great injury of our country, for want of a helping hand from any followers of One who healed every one who came to Him.

Both the "National Reformatory Union," and the "Reformatory and Refuge Union," have a great and noble work before them, a work of love and mercy, a work eminently of charity, which "is not easily provoked." Let them but provoke one another to love; let them both labour earnestly, and with all their might, and so far as possible co-operate with each other, without rivalry or jealousy, but with mutual forbearance, and who shall say how great may be the benefits, which, under God's blessing, they may be the means of conferring upon our long neglected criminal children, and so indirectly upon the favoured land in which we dwell.

JUVENILE CRIMINAL EMIGRATION.

It appears to be the prevailing opinion that criminals when reformed, or when holding out promise of reformation, should be removed as far as possible from old haunts, old associates, and temptation to old habits. Whether this opinion be founded on strict justice or not, at any rate, such a step appears to be necessary, so long as there shall exist such difficulty in persuading masters to take into their employment any who have once had the brand of prison upon them. It is, perhaps, even advisable, until "a prisoner" shall hold a different and less degraded position in the estimation of those who are in better station, and who probably owe their immunity from penal degradation, not so much to their better principles, as to the more fortunate circumstances by which God has surrounded them. For ourselves, we confess that we should gladly welcome the time, if it ever come, when the returning prodigal shall be welcomed at home as one "who was lost and is found;" when a broken-hearted criminal shall be taught to believe himself an object of love and pity to man as well as to his Maker; and shall find that where the character was lost, there it may be possible to regain it, and that he shall not be scouted, but, so far as may be, encouraged in the attempt. As youths pass through the probationary system of the Reformatory School, and become fitted to enter into employment, and eat bread by the honest sweat of their own brow, the question as to the character and principles of those into whose service they are subsequently taken, becomes one of very vital importance. It will readily appear, that unless great care be exercised in the choice of those who are thenceforth to stand "in loco parentis" to them, there will be considerable danger of a relapse in many cases. The disposition and temperament will remain probably the same, and the inclinations, which were held in check by the watchfulness and religious care of the reformatory school, will in all probability again exert their influence, if the principles instilled at the reformatory are lost sight of, or contradicted by the conduct of the employer. In such a case temptation would again prevail, and the last state be worse than the first. It will be the duty, therefore, of the school committee to exercise the most watchful care in the selection of the employer. But the duty will not end here; we hold it to be a matter of no less consequence, that they should keep up, as far as practicable, intercourse with former inmates, and ascertain from time to time their continuance in the paths of right. Much of the apparent want of success in our national schools, may be attributable to the fact, not only that the scholars are removed too soon, but that when removed, they are placed beyond the wholesome influence of ministerial oversight, just when they are budding into fancied manhood; when the character is in process of formation, which will influence the whole after life; when in the pride of being "his own master" youth is tempted to resist control, and lay in evil companionship the seeds of future ruin. Much of this would be avoided, if the connection so happily commenced in the School or the Reformatory could be preserved, at least for a few years after removal. This is done in some cases, and attended with the happiest results—as for example, at the Refuge for the Destitute at Dalston. On New Year's Eve, a great number of former inmates spent a few happy hours in the building where they had received those lessons which formed the groundwork of their present restoration to self-respect, society, and their duty. This is as it should be—and this incident alone, in our estimation, constitutes a strong ground for public confidence in the Committee of the Dalston Refuge, and clearly indicates that the work of Reformation is there well done; that the affections of the inmates are secured by the managers, while on the other hand the interests of the inmates are not lost sight of when they quit the establishment. Now, the care in the selection of employers, and the intercourse with former inmates to which we have alluded, become infinitely more necessary where, as is mostly the case, youths after their term of reformatory probation, are sent to distant countries, to try their fortunes, and to test their principles and their steadiness in a completely new sphere of action. It may be perfectly true that they are there unknown as "prisoners," and free to act without restraint; having no fear that either a policeman, or an old acquaintance will inform their employers that they are convicted thieves—they are at perfect liberty to follow the dictates of their own conscience; but it must not be forgotten that human nature and human frailties remain everywhere the same, "Cœlum non animum mutant qui trans mare currunt;" temptations, varying perhaps in kind, but equally powerful with those they have left behind them, will undoubtedly again assail them, and, unless their conduct be based upon sound religious views, as undoubtedly overcome them. They may "take the wings of the morning and fly unto the uttermost parts of the sea," but they will nowhere escape from temptations, nowhere be able to resist them, except by the powerful weapons furnished to them by the Word of God. The primary influence of a Reformatory School upon character depends upon the religious principles of the teacher—the ultimate success, humanly speaking, depends mainly, if not completely, upon the principles of the masters to whom the inmates may be consigned, and we can imagine nothing more satisfactory to the Committee of a Reformatory, or indeed of any educational establishment, than to know, in various quarters of the world, far and near, and to keep up frequent intercourse with, parties of acknowledged worth, interested in the glorious work of saving lost souls, and having the means and influence, as well as the inclination to help and employ immigrants on their arrival in their respective localities. A very important step has recently been taken, in connection with the Reformatory movement, which has called forth the above remarks, and to which we intreat the serious attention of our readers.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Alexander M'Corkindale, who sailed from Gravesend in the brig "Portia," for Port Natal in the beginning of February, a gentleman, well known in Birmingham to be interested in the cause of reformation, conceived a plan which, if practicable, bids fair to be of very great importance. It appears that he chartered the vessel in which he sailed, and in it carried out with him his wife and sister, a school-mistress, a surgeon, several labourers, blacksmiths and carpenters, and 22 boys from reformatory schools, viz., 7 from Saltley Institution at Birmingham, 13 from the Philanthropic Farm School, Red Hill, and 2 from Miss Carpenter's School at Bristol. The arrangements, as far as we could ascertain them, appeared to us satisfactory, and likely to turn out well; the boys are apprenticed to Mr. M'Corkindale for three and a half years, during which time he is to provide them with proper food, clothing, and lodging, and further to pay them wages, 1s. per week during the 1st year, 1s. 3d. during the 2nd, and 1s. 6d. during the third, then 2*s*. They will then have the option of remaining six months longer at the current wages of the colony, at the expiration of which Mr. Mac Corkindale binds himself to present to each £15 with fifty acres of land. Due care has been taken that the boys, during their stay with Mr. M'Corkindale, shall be properly instructed, and their religious principles attended to. He is well acquainted with the colony, and has purchased 3,000 acres for his settlement, forty miles from Darbau, on the Tugala, not far from the missionary station, and the boys take out letters of recommendation with them to the Right Rev. Dr. Colenso, Bishop of Natal, under whose sanction, we understand, the arrangement has been entered into. This we look upon as a very important element in the scheme, calculated to afford a guarantee that the spiritual welfare of this exiled family will not be overlooked. Each boy has been provided with a suitable outfit, Bible, &c., and we understand that Mr. Mac Corkindale has expended £100 in the purchase of a library for the use of his little colony. It is needless to add that, where possible, the consent of the parents or guardians has been obtained, and that the expenses of the outfit and passage-money have been provided for by the Committee of the respective schools. It is intended to cultivate sugar, cotton, and coffee, for which the soil and climate appear to be in every way adapted. We heartily wish the measure success, though we foresee difficulties which may arise, inasmuch as the boys will have greater facilities to escape, and we are far from certain that the prospective advantages, great as they undoubtedly are, will prove a sufficient inducement to restrain those who may feel that they can obtain better wages, and will trust to chance for future promotion. We presume that it is ascertained that Mr. M'Corkindale is fully able, as well as willing to carry out all he desires; if so, he will prove a valuable accession to the forces now engaged in the Reformatory cause.

Charles Ratcliff, Esq., the Honorary Secretary of the Saltley Reformatory Institution visited the "Portia" on several occasions, and found all in excellent order. The boys were delighted with the new prospect opening to them. They all expressed the warmest feelings of gratitude for the care bestowed upon them while in the Reformatories, and a firm determination that their future lives should reflect credit upon the Schools. As an example of the completeness of Mr. M'Corkindale's preparations, we may mention that forty houses are now in course of erection on his estate at Natal, and that he takes out a full assortment of agricultural implements, and a large quantity of seeds adapted for use in the colony. The "Portia" is expected to touch at Madeira, whence letters will be forwarded to the Secretaries of the Schools, and the parents of the boys; and it is arranged that after arriving at the colony regular reports shall be transmitted to England. Should these prove favourable, it is in contemplation to send out more boys. We were also glad to learn from Mrs. M'Corkindale that she contemplated, in concert with her husband's designs, assisting girls in a similar manner, whose time will be principally occupied in the care of silkworms, for which it appears that the climate of Natal is eminently suitable.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION AND SATURDAY HALF-HOLIDAY.

For some months past an agitation and a counter-agitation have been sustained simultaneously in this country; the object of the one has been to relax the laws in relation to the Sabbath, so that the British Museum and the National Gallery should be opened on the Sunday, and the object of the other has been to conserve those laws in all their integrity. These agitations reached their culminating point a few days since, in the House of Commons, on a debate commenced by Sir Joshua Walmesley. A very large majority of that house determined to resist the motion of the member for Leicester. But the question is not settled. It will, in all probability continue to be agitated for years. We fear it is destined to occupy much public attention, and be the means of stirring up much political and religious strife. The parties on both sides are active, zealous, and determined. They are both preparing for a prolonged conflict. They both consider that they are in the right, and both think that they are promoting the intellectual and moral welfare of the people. We consider the present a good opportunity to offer a few observations on the absorbing question in the name and for the interests of philanthropy.

Those antagonistic parties who have committed themselves, either on the one side or the other of this question, are pretty equally balanced in the influences they command. Those who are for maintaining the laws which regulate the day of rest, as they have existed for ages, are powerful in the Church and in the State. They include the Archbishops and Bishops, and a large majority of the clergy of the Church of England, and almost all the ministers of other religious denominations, and a very large preponderance of the Church and Chapel-going people of the country. Under the Sabbatarian banner is marshalled an almost invincible phalanx.

Digitized by Google

The parties who think and who would act with Sir Joshua Walmesley, are also very numerous and powerful. They include a sprinkling of the religious public, popular orators like Mr. Roebuck and Mr. Cobden, noblemen like Lords Stanley and Ebrington, The Times newspaper, and almost all the widely circulated London weekly papers, and a large proportion of the working men of the country. The Premier belongs to this party, though he did not vote with it on Sir Joshua Walmesley's motion. We have briefly indicated the strength of the rival agitations, so that we may calculate on the probable intensity of the coming struggle.

It is abundantly evident that something must be done. What shall that something be? Will the Government diminish the incentives to drunkenness and degradation which now exist in every gin-palace which is open on the Sunday, or will other places of amusement be opened? The "trade" says, that gin-palaces shall not be closed; the Church and the Chapel say that the National Gallery and British Museum shall not be opened on the Sunday.

We desire to step between these rival agitations and conflicting opinions. A few months since we advocated a weekly half-holiday, and we are rejoiced to know, that since then, the suggestion has become popularized and taken a practical shape. The early closing association has given it especial attention, and we consider the present an opportune time to introduce it to the reconsideration of our readers. We consider the theory practical and possible. It has been realized in some of the large towns in England, and may be established in London.

One of the principal arguments urged by Sir Joshua Walmesley and Lord Stanley is, that as things now exist, with the existing necessities of our material civilization, and the increasing demands of our competitive system, it is desirable that those whose duty it is to toil should have occasional relaxation, but that it is almost impossible for them to get it on week-days, without considerable inconvenience and loss, and that, affording them more opportunities of innocent amusement on the Sunday, would conduce to their advantage. A weekly half-holiday established in all our large towns would rob this argument of most of its force.

Our space will not permit us on this occasion to argue the question at length, and show in detail its practicability and advantages. Our object is to show the middle point, between the zealous and resolved advocates on both sides of the Sunday question, and to ask them both to unite their efforts to promote a half-holiday, which, in our opinion would benefit all and injure none. Here is common ground on which both parties may meet, not to question each other's intentions and neutralize each other's influence, but to combine their endeavours for a common good. We advocate a half-holiday, because it is necessary for the physical and moral health of the people, because the discontent of the times demands some change, because hostile parties have assumed a threatening attitude, and because an endeavour to secure the boon herein suggested will admit of mutual co-operation, and issue in general good.

REFORMATORY SCHOOLS.

Important.—Liability of Parents to Pay for Children.

At the Town Hall, Chester, on the 20th of February last, the Mayor, Major French, Colonel Lloyd, and E. Wardle, Esq., in Petty Sessions, were attended by G. W. Latham, Esq., of Bradwall Hall, accompanied by Mr. W. Morgan, of Birmingham, the solicitor appointed by Sir George Grey to conduct proceedings under the Youthful Offenders Acts. Mr. Morgan stated that he appeared by direction of the Secretary of State to present a complaint against the parents of a boy who was now detained in the Reformatory at Bradwall, which had been lately opened, under the auspices of the excellent magistrate then in Court, and which had received the sanction of Government.

The boy had absconded from a workhouse in a distant part of the country, where he was maintained at the public expense, and had taken with him some pauper clothing. He had been neglected by his parents, who were living in comparatively prosperous circumstances in Chester.

It was no doubt an act of great charity to provide an asylum, where this boy might be trained for five years to come, and it would be a protection to honest boys to remove from contact with them one who might tempt them to crime. But lest on the other hand reformatories should prove too attractive, the legislature had wisely determined to lay a pecuniary burden upon parents, by whose negligence or connivance children might fall into crime. The Secretary of State was anxious it should be understood that this law would be enforced. In the present case he should content himself by asking that an order be made for such weekly payments for the ensuing five years as the magistrates might determine. He would not at present call any evidence, as he understood a very creditable course would be taken by the parents, which would render it unnecessary to enter into the facts.

Mr. Bridgman for the defendants consented to an order for the payment of four shillings per week, and costs. Mr. Morgan said, that if the magistrates, from their knowledge of the circumstances of the parties were satisfied, he would accept the proposed sum, and an order was made accordingly.

It was stated in Court that this was the first application of the New Act in the Midland and Northern Counties.

SLAVERY IN AMERICA.—The sympathies and efforts of philanthropy are limited by no national boundary or geographical distinction—they are as wide as the universe and as enduring as man. English philanthropists will be glad to know that the Anti-Slavery party of the United States have recently achieved a most significant triumph, in electing Mr. Banks as Speaker of the Congress at Washington. The free-soil or anti-slavery party in America is much stronger in number, in wealth, in moral influence and political power than the slaveholders of the South; but on account of their divisions and comparative indifference to the great question of the day in America, the slaveholders by their unity and unceasing watchfulness have managed to seize and hold political power. The slaveholders have elected Speakers and Presidents, and dictated to Cabinets. But they did not use the power they possessed with moderation and dignity.

About twenty years since, when Missouri was added to the Union the National Congress passed the Missouri Compromise Bill. The representatives of the North consented to that state becoming a slave state provided all other states, beyond a certain boundary, which should thereafter be added to the Union, should be free. About three years since a new state—Nebraska Kansas—was added to the Union; and since then, President Pierce and the Cabinets over which he presided have openly violated the stipulations of the Missouri compromise measure, by assisting to make Nebraska a free state. This evoked all the Anti-slavery life of the Union. The agitations in the North stirred the interested motives and latent anger of the South. A crisis was therefore at hand. Vast preparations were made for the coming struggle, and the election of Mr. Banks, the representative of Massachusetts, to be Speaker of the Congress, is regarded as the greatest triumph ever won by the Anti-Slavery party. For nine weeks the Congress was in a state of disorganization. During that time scores of votes were taken, and every effort was made by the representatives of the South to weaken, and intimidate those of the North. But Mr. Banks was not to be defeated by threats or corruption. "Never did a captain," says the correspondent of the Daily News, "a general or any other leader, hold a column of supporters so long together, with so little of defection, treachery, fault-bearing testimony or misgiving. The triumph is the greater because it is the first the Anti-Slavery party has had in the Congress."

The days of Slavery in America may now be said to be numbered. It never will be permitted to prove more politically influential than it is at the present moment; while the influences which are opposed to it are growing daily. The foundations of new states are now being laid, and the seeds of new forces are now being sown in the North, before which the slave-institutions of the South will ultimately yield and pass away. It is purely a question of time.

Digitized by Google

There can be no doubt of the ultimate events. All wrongs contain within themselves the elements of dissolution, and if the Anti-Slavery party be faithful to its trust, and heroic in the discharge of its duties, the time is not far distant when the foul stain of slavery shall be wiped from the star-bespangled banner of the Great Republic of the West, and another guarantee be given to the certainty and security of human progress.

Reviews.

LIGHT FOR DARK DAYS; or Solace in Sadness. London: Wertheim and Macintosh, 23, Paternoster-row.

THIS is a simple, yet sound little book, of 36 pages, full of judicious selections from Scripture, affording comfort, under the various afflictions of the world; and is intended to benefit by its sale "the Society for affording assistance to the widows and orphans of British officers," established 1855—and both for its philanthropic object and its intrinsic excellence, we have pleasure in recommending it. It does not pretend to much originality—but simply and yet forcibly urges upon the afflicted and sorrowful, an application to the only source of real solace. It would be useful and appropriate, in the many homes which, since the notes of war have sounded in our land, have felt the sad bereavement caused by the stroke of death upon the battle-field. We wish to recommend it, and give the following specimen of its teachings.

But there is yet a darker day of trouble, and an hour of deeper sadness. It is, when we are mourning the loss of some beloved friend, whom death has just snatched from us; one who was dear to us as our own life; whose loss we feel is irreparable; whose place in our affections no one else can fill; and whose removal has made the world a dreary blank, and seems to have cast a cloud over our future years. This is, indeed, a time of bitter trial. This is the arrow which pierces most deeply. This is the grief which rends the heart, and the sorrow that is almost more than we can bear. This is the time when we feel most inclined to murmur, and find it most difficult to say, "Thy will be done." But He who in mercy gives, and in no less mercy takes away, will also enable us to bear this "weight of woe" if we look to Him for strength and support in this dark day of trouble. Perhaps he saw that we were "setting up an idol in our hearts;" that in our delight at the gift we forgot the Giver; that we were trusting to an arm of flesh; and He has removed our treasure from earth, that we may find it in heaven; and that our affections may be more firmly set upon "things above." He who wept at the grave of Lazarus, who is also "the Resurrection and the Life," forbids not his people to sorrow for their departed friends, but they must not repine. And happy are those "who sorrow not without hope;" who have a blessed assurance that those dear ones "have safely passed the waves of this troublesome world," and are landed on the shores of "everlasting rest," and who can say, "I shall go to them, but they will not return to me." Oh! blissful reunion! however great may be our loss in their departure, however desolate our homes and lot without them, who can withhold the tribute of thanks in the beautiful prayer for the "Church Militant?" in which we say, "We bless thy holy name, for all thy servants departed this life in thy faith and fear." Oh! may we have grace "so to follow their good examples, that with them we may be partakers of the heavenly kingdom." Let the sweet hope of meeting our beloved ones in that "happy land," "where parting is unknown," cheer all mourning hearts, and let them not refuse to be comforted, but say, with meek and patient resignation, "Even so father for so it seemeth good in thy sight."

WORK AND WAGES, or the Penny Emigrant's Guide to the United States and Canada. By P. FOSTER. London: Cash, Bishopsgate-street Without.

WHEN we inform the reader that two hundred and eighty thousand copies of this penny guide have been printed and sold, we may imagine that the little work has been extensively appreciated. It gives a description of the United States and Canada, with the most suitable plans for settlement, including rates of wages, board, and lodging-house rent, prices of land, money matters, together with full information about the preparations necessary for the voyage, instructions on landing, and expenses of travelling in America. We have perused this little work with considerable interest, and warmly recommend it to all who think of emigrating. It is also very instructive to those who, though not intending to emigrate themselves, like to know something of the difficulties and advantages of the great tide of emigration which is ever tending from our shores, bearing on its surface the germs of those Anglo-Saxon institutions and habits, which are destined to exist in modified shapes in other climes and future ages.

TORTURE IN INDIA.

A GROSS instance of torture has occurred under the eyes of Calcutta and Mr. Theobald, yet it has received scarcely any attention. The punishment was too swift and too severe for a plausible accusation. The case occurred at Kidderpore, within the shadow, as it were, of Government-house. On Saturday, the 27th of October, the magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs was informed that a man had been brought into Alipore gaol complaining of the injuries he had received. The man's name was Muntoo. He had been arrested as he left the Calcutta gaol on a charge of theft, which he denied, but which he subsequently was induced by the torture to confess. It was late in the evening when the report reached the magistrate, and as the man's life was in no danger, nothing could be done that night. The next day was Sunday, but in such cases promptitude is humanity, and Mr. Fergusson commenced his investigation. The man had been tortured severely. According to his own account, he had been hung to the rafters by the wrists, severely beaten, and squeezed with a bamboo. His shoulders and loins bore marks of the treatment, and the medical testimony proved that he had sustained severe internal injury. He charged the Thannadar of Kidderpore and his policeman with the crime. It was committed, he said, in the Thannadar's own house, and thither the magistrate proceeded. The bamboo rafter was instantly pointed out, and on examination, appeared to bear the marks which a heavy rope always leaves on a bamboo. The neighbours testified to screams proceeding from the room. The Jemadar of the Calcutta gaol proved that the victim had left that establishment uninjured, and the local police proved that Muntoo appeared agitated on his return from the Mohurrir's house. The fact of torture appeared demonstrated. It remained to ascertain the criminal. Fortunately, direct evidence was not wanting. Two servants of the Mohurrir, who had been passive spectators, testified most unwillingly against their master. Some of the burkundazes implicated, confessed, and the case was clear. The Mohurrir had inquired into the charge of theft. He had directed the accused to be taken to his house. He had there ordered the torture, which was inflicted in his presence. The case was fully proved, and on the following morning, not 36 hours after the crime had been committed, the Mohurrir and his accomplices were committed for trial. Ten days after they were working in chains in the Alipore gaol. The chief delinquent had been sentenced to hard labour in irons for seven years, and his accomplices to a somewhat shorter period. He could not even in England have been punished with more swiftness or severity. The Darogah, against whom there was no direct evidence, was recommended for dismissal. The case, moreover, is illustrative of another obstacle in the way of Indian reform. In no European country would the magistrate have first heard of this case from the gaoler. The indignant neighbourhood would have performed his functions. The man's screams were clearly heard, yet no one interfered, or, as far as it appears, even inquired. There was no horror, no excitement, and no sympathy. The witnesses gave their evidence reluctantly, and we question whether the Mohurrir is not still considered in his own neighbourhood, and among his own class, an injured man. No Bengalee cares one jot for human suffering, and the fact is at once the true explanation of the practice and the greatest obstacle to its suppression.—Friend of India.

POLITICAL PHILANTHROPY.

Feb. 1st.—Sir J. Pakington inquired of the Home Secretary what were the intentions of the Government respecting the future support and regulation of juvenile reformatories, dwelling upon the magnitude which the question had assumed, and upon the inconveniences incident to the existing state of the law upon the subject.

Sir G. Grey acknowledged that the subject was one of undoubted importance; but, as the experiment was in course of trial (the result being so far satisfactory), Parliament, he thought, should have longer experience of its operation previous to further legislation.

After some observations by Mr. Miles, Sir S. Northcote, Lord R. Grosvenor, Sir W. Jolliffe, Mr. Milnes, Mr. Adderley, and Lord R. Cecil, the subject dropped, and the motion was agreed to.

Sir J. Pakington complained of the omission in the Speech from the Throne of any reference to the important subject of national education, and insisted upon the expediency of reconstituting the Committee of Privy Council, and of appointing a responsible Minister of Education in the House to superintend the administration of the grants.

Sir G. Grey said, although the subject had not been adverted to in the Speech, it had not escaped the attention of the Government, and a bill would be introduced into the other House to extend the existing means of education in this country, including the appointment of a responsible Minister of Education.

Mr. Cowper gave notice that on an early day he should ask leave to introduce a bill to amend the law relating to vaccination.

Lord J. Russell gave notice that early in March he should propose certain resolutions on the subject of national education in England and Wales.

Digitized by Google

Feb. 4th.—Leave was given to Mr. Horsman to introduce bills further to amend the laws relating to prisons in Ireland, and the burying of the dead in Ireland, and for the better care and reformation of youthful offenders in Ireland.

Sir G. Grey obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the acts relating to the metropolitan police, its object being, he said, to place the undivided control, responsibility, and management of the police of the metropolis in the hands of one commissioner, and on the same footing as the Irish constabulary.

Mr. Dillwyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the attention of Government had been directed to the inefficiency of the law as it now stands to repress violent assaults upon women and children; and, whether it was their intention to propose any measure to Parliament to amend the law relating to such offences?

Sir G. Grey said, the attention of the Government had not been specially drawn to the insufficiency of the existing law, but he had, of course, observed, in common with every one else, the frequency of the assaults, for the severe punishment of which an act was passed two years ago. That act had been very beneficial in its operation, though it had not succeeded, as no law could succeed, in extinguishing crimes of that nature. It was not the intention of the Government to propose any alteration of that act.

Mr. Wise said that, as a great number of offences had been committed by ticket-of-leave men, he wished to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department four questions:—first, whether it was intended to continue the system of giving licenses to go at large to convicts; second, whether there was any record of those convicts who were again brought to trial; third, whether, in cases of convicts relapsing into crime, the power of recapture was exercised and the licenses revoked; fourth, whether a return could be made of the number of revoked licenses, as well as the number of ticket-of-leave men convicted?

Sir G. Grey said, the hon. member had only given notice of the simple question whether the ticket-of-leave system was to be continued. The system was established by act of Parliament; it was of course, the duty of the Government to carry it into effect, and at present there was no intention to propose any alteration. There were records of all the ticket-of-leave convicts who were reconvicted, and there was not the least objection to make that return to the House. The practice of revoking licenses was also in force.

Feb. 5th.—In reply to Mr. Elliot,

The Lord-Advocate said, that it was his intention on an early day to ask leave to introduce a bill to make better provision for education in Scotland.

Sir G. Grey obtained leave to bring in a bill to render more efficient the police in counties and boroughs in England and Wales, upon a plan, he said, compatible with the existing systems of local management.

Feb. 7th.—Mr. Atherton obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the law relating to the conveyance of lands for charitable uses.

Feb. 8th.—On the order for the second reading of the Youthful Offenders (Ireland) Bill, Mr. V. Scully urged the postponement of the second reading, assigning reasons why Irish members should not be called upon then to assent to the principle of the bill.

After some remarks by Mr. Kennedy,

Mr. Horsman objected to postpone this stage of the bill, the provisions of which were the same as those the House had approved in the English bill of last year. The details, however, might be discussed in committee.

Mr. Maguire made some observations, and the bill was read a second time.

Feb. 12th.—Mr. L. Davies moved for a select committee to inquire into the advisability of constructing a harbour of refuge and defence in Cardigan Bay, and whether it may not be advantageous also to employ convict labour in the said works. He supported his motion in a speech of some length and full of statistics.

Sir C. Wood opposed the motion, on the ground that it would be undesirable to construct a harbour of refuge in Cardigan Bay, and a misapplication of the public money.

Mr. Davies replied, and after a few remarks by Mr. Wynne and Mr. Phillips, the motion was negatived.

Mr. Colvile obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the laws relating to the qualifications of justices of the peace.

The Charitable Uses Bill was read a second time.

Feb 13th.—On the order for the second reading of the Police (Counties and Boroughs) Bill,

Mr. Hadfield moved the postponement of the second reading for a fortnight. He objected to the principle and to some details of the bill.

Sir G. Grey said, if any good and substantial reasons were alleged for postponing the second reading, he should not object; but he had yet heard none. He had no interest in pressing the bill unduly; he was in the hands of the House, and was ready, after the second reading, to fix a late day for the committee.

Mr. Henley, Sir F. Baring, Mr. Robert Palmer, and Sir J. Walmsley recommended the postponement of the second reading, and Sir G. Grey ultimately consented to defer it for a fortnight.

The merits, or imputed demerits, of the measure continued, however, for some time under discussion.

Feb. 14th. Mr. L. King obtained leave to bring in a bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the summary jurisdiction of justices of the peace.

On the motion of Mr. J. Phillimore the committee on the appointment of public prosecutors was re-appointed from last year.

Feb. 18th—The Trial of Offenders Bill and the Metropolitan Police Bill went through committee.

The Charitable Uses Bill passed through committee, with amendments.

Feb. 19th.—Mr. Dunlop obtained leave to introduce a bill to make further provision for rendering reformatory and industrial schools in Scotland more available for the benefit of vagrant children, and a bill to constitute all legally qualified persons in Scotland Commissioners of supply, without being named in an Act of Supply.

A deputation of members of Parliament, consisting of Lord Goderich, Mr. Milner Gibson, Mr. Muntz, Mr. Brotherton, Mr. Bright, and other members had an interview with the Chancellor of the Exchequer yesterday, on the subject of establishing facilties for the transfer of stock and the payment of dividends in towns where branches of the Bank of England exist.

A deputation, consisting of the Marquis of Salisbury, Mr. Adderley, M.P., Mr. Monckton Milnes, M.P., Mr. Deedes, M.P., Mr. Berwick Baker, The Right Hon. Sir John Pakington, the Rev. Sydney Turner, Lord Robert Cecil, M.P., Hon. H. G. Liddell, Mr. Charles Ratcliff, Mr. Halswell, Mr. Cumming Bruce, Mr. Maxwell, Mr. Bower, Mr. Gent, Lord Charles Russell, Hon. R. Carleton, Rev. R. E. Brooke, and Sir Stafford Northcote, had an interview with Sir George Grey yesterday, at the Home Office, on the subject of obtaining increased government assistance in support of reformatories for juvenile offenders.

MORAL CONDITION OF ENGLAND AND IRELAND.

Dr. Cullen a few weeks since in his Lenten Pastoral drew a comparison between the moral condition of England and Ireland. He attempted to showthat [illegible] and presented a more discouraging picture than Ireland. A correspondent of The Times contradicts this by an appeal to facts. He says: "The population of Great Britain, according to the census of 1851, was, in England, 16,921,888, and in Wales 1,005 721, making 17,927,609. The population of Scotland was 2,888,742, so that the whole population of Great Britain was 20,816,351. The population of Ireland by the same census was 6,551,970.

"By this it appears that, where there are 16 people in Great Britain, there are five in Ireland. This being the proportion of the population, if the moral condition of the two countries were precisely the same, the Parliamentary returns of crime would show that, for every 16 offenders in Great Britain, there are five offenders in Ireland.

"What do these returns actually show? This question may be easily answered by any person who refers to an important document in Thom's Directory for 1856, page 135. It gives the facts relating to crime for the year 1853, and they present the following results:—

"The number of persons committed for all offences in Great Britain was 30,813. The proper proportion for Ireland at the rate of the population, that is 5 for 16, would be 9,629; but the actual number was 15,144.

"When we look a little closer in order to ascertain the degree of evil, as well as the number of evildoers, we find that the number of the graver offences against the person or against property, with violence, in Great Britain was 5,296, being 3,796 in England and Wales, and 1,500 in Scotland. The proper proportion for Ireland, according to the population, would be 1,655; but the actual number was 3,826, which is more than the whole number of such criminals in England and Wales.

"Yet one step further in this inquiry will make the matter still clearer. The law is rarely allowed to proceed to the extremity of capital punishment. There were eight executions in England and one in Scotland in the year referred to, making a total of nine. The proportion for Ireland would be three, to maintain an equality in moral condition. But the number of executions that actually took place in Ireland in the same year was nine, the same number that had taken place in the whole of Great Britain.

"These facts speak for themselves, and show what reliance can be placed on Dr. Cullen's argument."

THE CRUELTIES OF THE GUANO TRADE.

Two correspondents of the Daily News have recently published some strange revelations of the cruelties perpetrated, under the sanction of Peruvian law, on the persons of the Chinese who are employed in the Chincha Islands, as labourers in the guano trade—revelations which must not be permitted to pass into oblivion.

The Chincha Islands, which are famed for containing the richest deposits of guano in the world, are situate about 100 miles from Callao, the seaport of Lima. They consist of three large rocks, which are covered with guano to a great depth. Chinese, who are chiefly obtained either direct from China or from

Digitized by Google

Melbourne, are employed to convey the manure to the shipping places. The term of service for which they are professedly engaged is three years; but they seldom live to the close of that period, owing to "the nauseous dust and the overpowering effluvia of ammonia in which they work;" and owing also (but, of course, in a lesser degree) to the barbarous treatment which they receive. Their task-masters, in their conduct towards them, appear to have combined the enormities of the American slave system with the refined and studied cruelties of the practice of torture as it obtains in India.

"While we were at the islands," says a correspondent of the Daily News, "a poor Chinaman threw himself off the rocks and was dashed to pieces, rather than submit to the tortures that awaited him for having accidentally broken some tackle; and we can form a good notion of the severity of the punishment they were subjected to by the horrible howling constantly heard on the island." This correspondent further states that the Commandant, who administers a code of laws more inhuman than that of Draco, constantly inflicts upon the Chinese (even for trivial offences) such punishments as the following:—"Hanging in ropes, and chains round the waist, and in other ways from sunrise to sunset, without food during that period, one, two, or more days, in proportion to the magnitude of the offence, and lashing to half-tide buoys, subject to exposure to the waters in addition to heat and cold." Other modes of torture, some of them being almost incredible, are enumerated; such an one, for example, as chaining men to a small point of rock, "so small that sleep or change of position must result in their falling off." The particulars are also given of the case of a negro who was flogged, and afterwards hung in the bowline of the Commandant's hulk for swearing at his captain—an Englishman! The narrator declares that he has seen eight or nine men in the hulk at one time, placed in most painful positions.

A New Zealand settler, writing to the Daily News, confirms these extraordinary statements. He says: "Two years since I was at the Chinchas. The sad stories which were whispered about among the crews of our ships lying at the islands respecting their own men — who, at the time, were frequently punished in the way narrated by your correspondents—led me to inquire into the truth of such reports. I give you one case. A sailor from the English barque M——, upon some dispute with his captain, was handed over to the Commandant of the Island for punishment, and was, by his direction, taken out in a boat, chained upon a buoy, and left there. The following day the unfortunate man was discovered to have slipped off the buoy and disappeared—the calm waters of the Pacific flowed silently over the friendless mariner."

From this statement it would appear, that not only Chinese, but men of other races, and even Englishmen, are the victims of the revolting practices which prevail in the Chincha Island, and which rival the fabled torments of antiquity.

To comment upon these facts would be a work of supererogation. It is impossible to understand how such enormities can be tolerated under a Government which, but a little more than a year ago, liberated all the slaves of Peru, declaring "that it is due to justice to restore to man his freedom." There can be but one opinion as to the cour e that should be pursued. The policy which has caused England to declare the African slave trade to be piracy, and to remonstrate again and again with the Spanish Government for conniving at the unrighteous traffic, should, in this instance, be adopted. Let our Foreign Secretary place himself in communication with the Peruvian authorities, and, in the name of the civilised world, call upon them to put an end to the barbarities which now disgrace the guano trade. F. W. C.

TREAT TO SIX HUNDRED CHILDREN.

On the evening of the 5th ult. a treat was given to the Children of the Lambeth Parochial Boys and Girls Schools. About six hundred children participated in the festival. The good things consumed on the occasion, were provided by several kind friends, who are interested in promoting the education and the comforts of the poor of Lambeth. All the principal arrangements were made by the Rev. J. F. Lingham, to whose devotion and care the success of the festivity are attributable. A splendid tree, with about 800 toys and useful presents hanging from its branches, ornamented the room; and after a profusion of tea, cake, and bread-and-butter, had disappeared to the evident satisfaction of the juvenile congregation, the tree was relieved of its fruit. But what the tree lost the children gained. Little eyes sparkled when little hands received the various presents that were distributed. During the evening, the Lord Bishop of Winchester visited the meeting, and most affectionately addressed the children. There were also about two hundred visitors present. The proceedings terminated with profit to the children, and with pleasure to all. Much praise is due to Mr. Kershaw, the Hon. Secretary of the Schools, for his assiduous exertions.—From the South London Gazette.

THE METROPOLITAN CHURCH SCHOOLMASTERS' ASSOCIATION.

On the 1st ult. the annual festival of the Association of the Metropolitan Church Schoolmasters was celebrated at the Freemasons' Tavern, the Rev. F. C. Cook, A.M., Prebendary of St. Paul's, and one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, presiding. He was supported by the Rev. W. H. Brookfield and the Rev. F. Temple, also two of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools; the Rev. R. Burgess, Chelsea; the Rev. J. H. Gurney; the Rev. E. Blick, A.M.; the Rev. J. Sargeant; H. Cole, C.B., of the Department of Science and Art, Marlborough-house; Dr. Brewer; Messrs. Bowdler, Bradley, &c. In introducing the toast of "Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the rest of the Royal Family," the chairman observed that loyalty to the Sovereign was one great characteristic of the English nation, and urged the special claims the Queen and Prince Albert had upon those to whom had been committed the deep responsibility of educating our youth for the fitting discharge of the duties of life. The solicitude of Her Majesty and the Prince for the education of the nation at large had been manifested on every occasion, and schools had been founded for the children of the servants of the Royal household. The schoolmaster, therefore, amid all his difficulties, should take courage from their high example, and devote all his energies to the great work of instruction with which he was intrusted. The Rev. Mr. Gurney proposed the toast of "Church and State." The Rev. R. Burgess gave "Success to the Association," and maintained that much good had resulted from such institutions. They promoted the interchange of ideas, the exposure of erroneous and defective teaching, and the members derived encouragement and support from the counsels and sympathy of those with whom they were associated. Mr. Hay (one of the secretaries) read the report. The especial acknowledgments of the association were due to Canons Bickersteth and Champneys, Professor Thelwall, and Messrs. Minasi and Bodley, for lectures delivered before them, at the Sanctuary, Westminster. Classes had been formed for the study of chymical science, and they were indebted to the Lords of the Privy Council for the grant of apparatus for the use of these classes; and also to several gentlemen for donations of books to the library. The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Rev. Messrs. Temple, Blick, Brookfield, and Burgess; Messrs. Farnham, Myers, Hay, Cole, Dr. Brewer, &c., and at 10 o'clock the proceedings terminated.

FRENCH SISTERS OF CHARITY IN CHILI.

The Revista Catolica, a periodical published at Santiago, has the following concerning the French Sisters of Charity sent on a mission to Chili—"Towards the end of 1854," it says, "the Magellan left Havre with thirty Sisters of Charity, sent by the heads of their order to found a community at Santiago. They were received at that capital with an enthusiasm equal to the impatience with which they had been expected. As soon as they had recovered from the fatigue of the Journey 12 of them devoted themselves to take care of and wait upon the sick at the Hospital of St. Jean-de-Dieu; 12 others went to the Hospital of St. Francis at Borga; the others remained to form the central house. Those persons who have visited our hospitals before and after the arrival of these good sisters can alone appreciate how much these charitable institutions are indebted to the daughters of St. Vincent de Paul, and the importance of the improvements they have introduced in so short a space of time. The central house was soon converted into a school as large as the building allowed, where the children of the poor receive a gratuitous education and that care which they cannot find elsewhere. Their establishment has now been transferred to the Rue del Dieziocho, and the extent of their new premises has allowed them not only to increase the number of their day scholars, but has enabled them to take into their establishment some destitute orphan girls. They also visit the poor at their dwellings, and they have established a modest dispensary, where they give medicines to the poor gratuitously. No one is ignorant of what Sisters of Charity are, and of the good they will do in Chili; they will be an efficacious source of relief to our public misery, and will prepare the moral regeneration of the lower classes in our cities with whom they will be brought continually in contact. The religious sisters of the Bon-Pasteur have a holy and twofold mission. They endeavour to reform repentant girls, and keep back young persons whose virtue is in danger from the paths to perdition by giving them a solid Christian education. This year we were happy enough to receive from France a colony of these pious ladies, much to the edification of the town of San-Felipe, where they have been established by the ecclesiastical authorities."

SHOE-BLACK BRIGADES.—On Thursday evening, Feb. 7th., St. Martin's Hall offered a scene of a very interesting nature. It was decorated with flags and banners, sent for the occasion by Mr. Russell, as we understood, an acknowledgment of the purchase of blacking made from his establishment by the various shoe-black societies. The Hall was crowded at an early hour by a large assembly of ladies and gentlemen, amongst whom were the Earl of Shaftesbury, Lord C. Russell, Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood, the Hon. Captain Maude, Mr. D. W. Harvey, Lord Gort, Rev. W. W. Champneys, Mr. G. Moore, Rev. W. Cadman, Rev. J. Jenkinson, Dr. Crawford, Mr. R. Hanbury, &c. A letter was received from Sir R. W. Carden, expressing his great regret that an engagement at the last moment prevented his attendance; also another letter to the same effect from the

Digitized by Google

Rev. Dr. Guthrie, of Edinburgh. In the centre of the Hall, neatly dressed in new and bright coloured uniforms, of their respective colours—red, blue, and yellow, were some 150 boys, not long since the outcast and neglected, now being trained in ragged schools, and presenting a picture of cleanliness and order, gratifying in the extreme. There had been assembled to witness the presentation of medals to the deserving boys in each brigade. The boys having finished their tea, grace was said by the Rev. W. Cadman, the president of the Yellow Society. Some preliminary remarks having been made by Lord C. Russell, who occupied the chair until the arrival of the Earl of Shaftesbury, the meeting was addressed by Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood in a practical and humorous speech which greatly pleased the boys. The Rev. W. W. Champneys then addressed the boys—giving numerous anecdotes illustrative of the advantages of honesty and other virtues. On the arrival of the Earl of Shaftesbury, the boys sang a hymn in chorus, after which Mr. Macgregor explained that medals were about to be given to the best boys in each division of the societies. No person should encourage boys to beg by giving them money in the streets, but should send them to a ragged school, from which, if they behaved well, they would be admitted into the Shoeblack Society, and easily earn from 10s. to 15s. a-week. Three shoeblacks to be rewarded from the red brigade, were then called up. The treasurer, Mr. Fowler, said that there were 54 boys in this the oldest of the societies. During last year they earned 1,500*l.* The boy first to be rewarded had earned during the year 41*l.*, and, having paid 9*l.* for his sister's outfit to America, 3*l.* for his clothes, 10*l.* to his mother, and 10*l.* to the society's funds, he had now 15*l.* laid up in the savings banks. Four boys had left last week as sailors for the Black Sea fleet, and very many were now in the navy and army, and in respectable situations, who were homeless and destitute until rescued by the Shoeblack Society. Mr. Ware explained the merits of two boys from the blue brigade, under the management of the Rev. W. W. Champneys, and Mr. Snape, the hon. secretary of both the Red and Yellow Societies, introduced two of the latter body appointed for decoration. One of these had earned 14*l.* in six months. The medals were presented by the Red Society to each of the boys, through the Earl of Shaftesbury, who placed them on the boys' breast, shaking hands with each in his turn, amidst loud and general cheering. The meeting having been addressed by Mr. J. Payne, and a vote of thanks tendered to the chairman in the form of three cheers from the shoeblacks, the proceedings terminated by singing the National Anthem.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING AND EXTENDING EDUCATION IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

(Extracted from the Northampton Herald of Saturday, Feb. 16th, 1856.)

The general meeting of this society was held on Tuesday last, at the George Hotel, in this town. There were present, the Bishop of Sodor and Man, Lord Lilford, Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton, the Dean of Peterborough, E. Bouverie, Esq., Col. Cartwright, W. B. Stopford, Esq., W. Smyth, Esq., H. O. Nethercote, Esq., H. P. Markham, Esq., H. P. Gates, Esq., Revds. H. J. Barton, P. Lee, Thos. James, Chr. Smyth, G. S. H. Vyse, W. Woolcombe, H. De Sausmarez, R. Isham, D. Morton, F. M. Stopford, Hamlet Clark, H. Brookes, &c., &c., &c.

On the motion of Col. Cartwright, Lord Lilford was invited to preside.

REPORT OF THE GENERAL COMMITTEE.

The minutes of the previous meeting having been read, Lord Alwyne Compton read the following report:—

"When the Northamptonshire Society for the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church determined, in August, 1854, to discontinue its central schools in Northampton, to enlarge its objects, and, consequently, to adopt a somewhat different name—the following were laid down as the chief points to be kept in view:—

"1st. The introduction into rural schools of industrial instruction.

"2nd. The establishment of a training institution for the masters of such schools.

"3rd. The periodical inspection of such schools.

"4th. The improvement of the grammar schools throughout the county, and establishment of additional schools for the middle classes.

"5th. Reformatory institutions for young criminals of both sexes.

"And, 6th. Industrial feeding schools for the unemployed children in towns."

We have not room for the various reports presented to the meeting by the committee and shall content ourselves by giving the Reformatory Committee's Report.

The following report was next read:

"Your committee have to report that, after agreeing to a series of resolutions for their future guidance, they advertised for suitable premises and land, with the intention of receiving boys under 16 from any gaol in the county (including the soke of Peterborough), or for unconvicted boys who have fallen into vicious courses.

"Your committee having failed in obtaining what was required, some of its members agreed to advance a sufficient sum to purchase a small farm of 34 acres at Tiffield, near Towcester, the society paying the interest upon the mortgage so far as it exceeded the rent. The tenant of the farm expressed his willingness to take as many acres as the society had no immediate occasion for at the same rental as before, although he would lose the advantage of the barns and other buildings.

"It is hoped an arrangement will be made whereby the society shall pay 50*l.* a-year for 12 acres of land and the buildings referred to, with the power of taking as much more of the remaining 22 acres as they may require, and of purchasing the whole at the original cost.

"Having obtained the land, your committee agreed upon plans for building a school and school-house to accommodate a master and about 30 boys, which has been done in a most satisfactory manner by Mr. Dunkley, of Blisworth, for the sum of 383*l.* 10s.

"Your committee having made known the character of the proposed institution to the rector of the parish, and conferred with him on the subject, proceeded next to inquire for a master and superintendent, and they consider themselves fortunate in having secured the services of Mr. Julius Benn, who has been highly recommended for his experience and zeal in a similar institution, and who, for the present, will take the entire management of the school under the committee.

"Your committee have likewise to state that application was made at quarter sessions for the use of the militia store-house, in the town of Northampton, for a female reformatory school, and that the sessions have agreed to give up the store-house for that purpose as soon as a new one is built.

"As regards their financial position, your committee beg to refer to the report of the general committee, by which it will be seen that, in answer to the appeal agreed upon at the annual meeting last year, the sum of 1,221*l.* 14s., donations, and 10*l.* 5s., annual subscriptions, have been received, which, they regret to say, fall far short of what was expected, particularly in annual subscriptions.

"Your committee also regret that they have experienced a further disappointment in their appeal to the Committee of Council on Education for grants towards rent, &c.

"In conclusion, your committee have to state that the school-house, having been examined by Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons and certified by the Secretary of State, is now open for the reception of boys approved of by the committee; and that, in addition to the three who were brought from another reformatory by Mr. Benn, one boy has been admitted from the parish of Kettering, his parents paying a shilling a week towards his support. The other three boys are considered to be in a hopeful state, and likely not only to exercise a beneficial influence on their companions, but to be capable of assisting in the work of the establishment, for which they are to receive 1s. a week each.

"Rules have been agreed upon for the management of the institution, and a circular and forms of admission (which will be found with other printed documents, on the table) are to be sent to the clerks of the county and borough magistrates, and to those of the city and soke of Peterborough."

THE HEALTH OF LONDON IN 1855.

(From the Registrar-General's Return.)

Births ...	Males ...	43,352
	Females ...	41,592
	Total	84,944
Deaths ...	Males ...	31,203
	Females ...	30,303
	Total	61,506
Population (estimated for the middle of the year.)	Males ...	1,201,811
	Females...	1,363,768
	Total	2,565,579

If the population of London has increased since the census of 1851 at the same rate at which it increased during the ten years that preceded it, namely 1·97 per cent. annually, the number of inhabitants at the beginning of 1855 was about 2,540,000. This population was increased by 84,944 children born in the course of the year, and was diminished by 61,506 persons removed by death. If the account were not disturbed by immigrants and emigrants who are ever in motion, the gain to the population would be 23,438.

The births exceeded only by 260 those registered in 1854. The increase is very small. This is, perhaps, the effect of the high prices of food, and of war, which removes married men from their homes to occupy garrisons and encampments, to man the fleets, or as workmen to furnish the mighty equipments of sea and land.

The deaths contrast favourably with those in 1854, for they were less by more than 12,000 than in that year of the cholera epidemic. But the mortality of 1855, compared with that of some years unvisited by any serious epidemic, was not low, the very cold weather of the winter months (January, February, and March) having swelled the weekly returns to unusual proportions. In some weeks, at that time, the deaths exceeded, in others they fell not much short of 1,600; while in six weeks the mean weekly temperature was below freezing point. In the seventh week of the year the mean temperature was only 25·4°, and in the week following the deaths rose to 1,604.

Digitized by Google

In 1855 phthisis destroyed 7,545 persons, nearly the eighth part of the whole number who died in London in the year. About the same number died from this disease in the first quarter as in the second, and about the same in the third as in the fourth; while the proportion of deaths in the first half of the year to those in the second half was as 21 to 16. Next in order of mortality was bronchitis, which carried off 5,512 persons, and was nearly as fatal in the first three months as it was in all the rest of the year. Pneumonia was fatal in 3,992 cases, and declined from 1,559 in winter to 492 in summer. Both these diseases were very fatal; for, more than others, they grow or decay as the air is colder or warmer; and the mean temperature of the winter was nearly 6° below the average of 14 previous winters. The remainder of the year was also cold, with the exception of summer, which was rather warmer than usual.

Of epidemics, scarlatina was the most fatal, and numbered 2,602 victims; hooping-cough, 2,415; typhus, 2,332; diarrhœa, 2,061; smallpox, 1,024; measles, 864. Fifty-nine deaths from scarlatina were recorded in the sub-district of Kensington-town; 48 in the sub-district of Tottenham-court-road; 56 in Somers-town; 42 in Kentish-town; 125 in Islington; 106 in Woolwich; 29 in Plumstead; and to many other parts the disease extended its ravages. 42 deaths from small-pox occurred in Woolwich; 157 in the West sub-district of Islington, which contains the small-pox Hospital.

For every five persons, or rather more, who died in London, one died in a workhouse, hospital, or other public institution. Of the 11,310 who thus closed their career not in their own homes, 6,552 died in workhouses, 456 in lunatic asylums, 71 in prisons, the rest in hospitals for the sick, the infirm, or for the aged soldiers and sailors who have served the State.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of The Philanthropist.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE RESCUE OF YOUNG WOMEN AND CHILDREN, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury, has been very successful in the efforts of the past three quarters of a year.

The admissions, &c., have been as follows:

Total admitted from 1st of last April	210
Remaining at the end of previous year	49
Readmitted from hospitals and from situations through illness	8
Total	267

69 have been placed in situations; 24 have been restored to friends in England; 1 restored to her parents in Germany; 33 have been placed in other institutions; 15 have been assisted by grants of clothing, and placed in service; 2 have been sent as emigrants; 10 have been placed in hospitals; 38 have left; 75 remain under the Society's care; total, 267; 200 have been placed in service through the Society's Free Registry.

The majority of those admitted to the Society's care are 'prevention cases,' i. e., those who have not strayed from the path of virtue—young girls placed in circumstances of temptation—refractory girls over whom widowed mothers have lost control—young girls addicted to petty theft—friendless girls; or those very young creatures who for the first time are found within the walls of a prison.

During the past 9 months the society has opened another Family Home for girls from 10 to 15 years of age, as well as a Probationary Refuge in Whitechapel where young women are received at once preparatory to being placed in other institutions.

The committee have it in contemplation to establish another Family Home in addition to the three now established; also a Home for Servants and a Refuge for very young girls, who have fallen, from the age of 10 to 15, for alas! they have now under their care girls of this tender age who have been led astray and wandered "on the streets." The committee contemplate establishing a Laundry which shall be self supporting or nearly so, being fully persuaded that this can be accomplished, if properly attempted.

A missionary has been engaged by the committee, whose duty it will be to find out and visit these poor creatures, and endeavour to draw them from the wretched haunts into which they are entrapped, and restore them to their friends; he will also be occupied in investigating cases, and in promoting, generally, the welfare of those coming under the Society's care.

In this great good work we call upon all the friends of the young to give us a portion of their support.

On behalf of the Committee,
DANIEL COOPER, Sec.

SCHOOLS FOR GIRLS.

To the Editor of THE PHILANTHROPIST.

SIR,—There is one point towards which the attention of those interested in education can scarcely be too earnestly directed, namely, the importance of a sufficient and judicious training of the female children of the poorer classes of society.

There are many endowments existing, and earnest and constant efforts are being made for the education of boys, while that of girls is comparatively neglected; and even the efforts which are made to this end, are often very imperfect and misjudged. While the training of the intellect, and the storing of the mind with useful knowledge is the main thing (next, of course, to religious instruction) to be regarded in the one case, it is by no means exclusively, perhaps not even pre-eminently to be considered in the other. A girl is to be educated, not so much to be a first-rate reader, writer, arithmetician, geographer, or historian, as to become a good wife and mother. And to this end instruction in sewing and knitting is not sufficient, even though conducted in the spirit which dictated the excellent suggestion of a school-inspector (in a recent volume of the Minutes of the Committee of Council on Education), that girls should be instructed, not simply in making various articles of clothing, but that, by being taught to dress dolls, they should obtain some idea of the best way of fitting each garment to the figure, and thus, on a small scale, gain experience useful to them in after life, when called on to dress dolls of a larger size.

While the system of industrial training, is being introduced into our workhouse—and ragged schools, and boys are taught printing, tailoring, shoemaking, joinering, and the like, it is perhaps even more important that girls should receive a similar training in occupations which they will have to undertake at a later period of their lives, as for instance, cooking, washing, cleaning of all kinds, the theory and (where possible) the practice of nursing. As an instance of the need of this, may be quoted an anecdote (which lately appeared in the Illustrated London News) of a bride, who, in her anxiety that her husband should make the best possible appearance when they went to church together on the first Sunday after their marriage, starched the whole of his single white shirt, and when the unfortunate bridegroom attempted to put it on, he was compelled to throw it aside, declaring it to be "as hard as a board."

The moral results of such a general training of girls would speedily appear. The wife not only anxious, but also able to make her husband comfortable, would welcome him at noon to a savory and well-cooked dinner, plain and simple though its materials might be, and would be careful to have a bright fire and a clean floor for him to return to in the evening. If home were thus rendered attractive to the working-men, the public-house would, in the majority of cases, cease to be the favourite resort. What wonder indeed is it, that the weary labourer, who finds on his return home a dirty house, a black and smouldering fire, an ill-cooked meal, backed, it is but too likely, by the almost inevitable accompaniments of a scolding wife and crying children, should prefer the clean sanded floor, the blazing fire, the boon companions, presented by the tap-room, lighted brilliantly it may be with gas, decked with gaudy pictures, and enlivened by the strains of the strolling fiddler. Strong, indeed, must be the attachment and the character of the man who can bear patiently the discomforts caused by an ill-trained housewife, when such tempting attractions are held forth by the publican!

In the manufacturing districts, the ill-trained wife and mother, able to do nothing at home, seeks to repair the loss by paying a neighbour to look after her children, while she herself earns what she can as a factory hand; or in other districts, where no mill offers employment, engages in chairing, or such other occupation as presents itself; or still worse, makes no effort to earn money as a means of gaining help to supply her own deficiencies in domestic management. Were she by early education, well trained to fulfil the duties of a household, she would find ample occupation at home; and, by the increase of comfort and health to herself and her family, by the saving she would be able to effect in making clothes for her children, by stopping (as there would be little doubt that she would) the constant expenditure of her husband's wages at the public-house or the gin-palace, would economise far more than she could, in any ordinary case, earn by her own labours.

The advantages then, of an early training of girls to be good housewives seem clear, and are perhaps gradually forcing themselves on the notice of school-managers. But a further reform in this respect is still widely needed; and it is of even greater importance that schools should be far more extensively founded for the education of girls than at present exist.

But supposing that a sufficient number of good schools were established, and that mistresses trained to teach girls practically useful knowledge were to be found in sufficient numbers, there would still be some difficulty in procuring scholars. The comparative indisposition on the part of parents to send their girls to school will probably be found very general. They are useful at home in nursing the babies, in taking their fathers' meals; in helping their mothers in all the household work, in however slovenly a way that may be performed: they are often insufficiently or unfitly clad to resist all weathers; and their constitutions are naturally more delicate than those of boys; these and other reasons often make the attendance in a girls' school both more irregular and more unpunctual than in one for boys. Yet they may all be met. By proper and inexpensive clothing, they may be shielded from the effects of weather. By good management, and a little occasional judicious aid from the school managers, the home difficulties may be removed. In one instance in a midland county, the zealous sisters of a clergyman opened a school to which the girls were allowed to bring the babies whom they had to nurse. By a temporary self-denial and extra exertion on the mother's part, her girls may be spared for a regular attendance at school, these to gain instruction, which will enable the child richly to repay her mother's care at a subsequent time, in the valuable help which she will be able to give at home; in the intelligence and respectability of her character as a youth; and which will entitle her to a far better husband for her maturer years than she might otherwise have been able to gain.

Digitized by Google

This subject is one of extreme importance. Should the effort be made to supply a sound and useful training to the girls of the poorer classes in the present day, it needs but little faith to believe that the next generation would grow up with a much greater attachment to home; with much more moral, intelligent, and industrious characters; and that the public-house would no longer be able to compete in its attractions with the home, which would then present a dear and comfortable fireside, good meals, a neatly dressed and smiling wife, and healthy, happy, and intelligent children. W.

ABUSES CONNECTED WITH IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT AND CONTEMPT.

To the Editor of THE PHILANTHROPIST.

SIR,—I beg to solicit your assistance on behalf of honest debtors, who are incarcerated in various prisons throughout the United Kingdom, and in consequence of the disclosures at Winchester and other prisons, and extensive frauds and abuses connected with vesting orders in the Insolvent Court, and the fact of a number of persons being in the Queen's Prison, who have been incarcerated from five to twenty years, and three upwards of forty years. It is of the greatest importance that immediate and general inquiry should be made in the case of every prisoner for debt, or contempt, in England—who has been confined three months without applying to the Insolvent or Bankrupts' Court; also the case of every other prisoner who solicits such inquiry, and power for this purpose should be vested in the Commissioners of the Bankrupt Courts, for it is far beyond doubt that hundreds are imprisoned unjustly—in fact, not to enforce payment but to prevent the just application of property, and for the purpose of more conveniently defrauding the victims. The investigation will also protect them against much fraudulent litigation, and at the same time, it will assist in obliging the fraudulent debtors to apply the best means to meet all just claims against them. The inquiry should be held at the respective prisons' after giving the detaining creditors 7 days notice. Of course the Commissioners holding the inquiry must have the power of discharging prisoners on such terms as may appear just between debtor and creditor.

When a felon is taken by a police officer, he his removed from the station to the police office for examination by the magistrate before he can be committed to prison, and thus an opportunity is afforded him for explanation and defence. Why are debtors, when arrested, not taken from the lock-up house before a judge or commissioner at chambers for private examination previous to removal to a prison, where, by confinement, the difficulties of honest debtors are increased, and consequently the means of payment of their debts diminished? A similar investigation is desirable previous to allowing a detainer or vesting order—the latter particularly, because they are frequently applied for to enable dishonest solicitors to obtain the management of property they would not be intrusted with under other circumstances.

The operation of vesting orders, under the practice of the Insolvent Court, is of the most oppressive and unjust character when judged by common sense, and compared with a Fiat in Bankruptcy; for in the latter case the debtor very properly obtains immediate liberty and protection from arrest, with an allowance from his estate; but in the former, he is deprived of all control of his property, whatever may be the value, even if fifty times the amount of the debts, and his liberty also, and becomes a county pauper, he has no support from his friends, and if the keeper of the prison is a wrong man for the place, or disposed to exercise power instead of performing his duty, or bargain for his services to extort a written confession of insolvency in the form of an Insolvent's Schedule, the victim is placed in the Bastille part of the prison, called the Remand Ward, with prisoners who have been sentenced for every description of offence, punishable under the extraordinary powers of the Insolvent Court, in many cases in direct violation of the constitutional rights of British subjects. All these acts of oppression are in full operation in the year 1856, in a country were institutions exist for nearly every other class in want of protection; in fact, where horses, dogs, and cats are protected against acts of cruelty, and from which missionaries are sent to distant parts of the world in search of objects of benevolence, thus neglecting hundreds confined in the gaols of the country, some for a period of forty years, separated from their families and the world, and subject to privation and anxiety, which can be better imagined than described; and, in a large majority of cases, the victims of fraud and extortion.

There are no persons who have stronger claims for legal protection than capitalists and solicitors who lend money upon securities on fair and honourable terms, without taking advantage of the difficulty of dealing with titles to property, but none more deserving of punishment than those who take advantage of the wants of others to defraud them. There are abundance of solicitors ready to prosecute the needy bill stealers, whereas the wealthy estate stealers and their agents escape for want of a public prosecutor. And justice demands that the law should be promptly amended which detains a debtor in prison forty years, subjects the honest and solvent debtor to the same rules and regulations as the fradulent and insolvent, and allows tickets of leave to felons.

It has been justly observed by an able writer of the present day, in reference to imprisonment for debt:—

"It may be said, there would no longer be any credit if the power of punishing the dishonest debtor were taken away—that the system is essential to the maintenance of our trade and commence—that it could not be safely abrogated in a commercial country. Let us not delude ourselves, or allow ourselves to be deluded, by these plausible pretexts, every one of which was put forward in 1838, when the power of arrest on mesne process was taken away. It is not commercial men or fair traders that fill our prisons, or find employment for sheriffs' officers. It is usurious bill discounters, and unfair money lenders—the bill stealers, the patent stealers, the estate stealers, and the solicitors, who use their certificates as licences for fraud and extortion—who are anxious to get their victims out of the way, where they cannot contest and expose the nefarious transactions by which they have been plundered, and cause retributive justice to be visited on their oppressors. These are the classes for whose almost exclusive benefit we maintain our debtors' prisons at so heavy an expense to the country."

A creditor—that is, a fair, upright, honourable creditor, could not suffer such an idea to enter his mind, as that of depriving a man of his liberty. It is the direct and absolute interest of all such creditors, that their debtors should be free, prosperous, and happy; and the late Lord Melbourne publicly declared that half an hour's imprisonment was more than sufficient to pay the largest debt ever contracted.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
OBSERVER.

MISS NIGHTINGALE, AND THE GERMAN PROTESTANT DEACONESSES.

To the Editor of THE PHILANTHROPIST.

SIR,—The truly christian behaviour of Miss Nightingale has been so much praised and dilated upon in the whole of Europe, that it is not to be wondered at that our German neighbours should, with their usual sagacity, have searched after the genesis and origin of such an historical deed.—It is now nearly 30 years, since Pferner Fieldner, in Knaizermouth, on the Rhine, had conceived this idea, to put, from the side of protestantism, some competition to the catholic "Sœurs de la Charités (Barmherzgien Schmentern,)" who have existed for a long period in France, Austria, &c. The worthy Chaplain eventually established, by some private exertion, a hospital at Kaizersmouth, much assisted by the Prussian Government. There a number of young females (from the humbler classes of life.) were received as nurses; they wore a sort of uniform habit, and had to make a vow for a certain number of years, in fact, had to lead, if not a monastic, at least, a collegiate sort of life. Successively, the affair assumed more grand proportions, and when Chev. Bunsen, ever anxious for the honor of protestantism, established a German Hospital in London, these protestant Sisters of Charity, called Deaconesses, were called hither. Later. Pferner Fieldner himself visited London to put the affair into motion, and later still even, a number of these nurses went on to Constantinople and Jerusalem, where also German Protestant Hospitals were established. The family of the Bunsens (both father and eldest son) interested themselves much about the London German Hospital, and the Ambassador drove there indiscriminately at any time of day. Mr. Ernest Bunsen, and Mrs. Ernest Bunsen did the same. As the latter is a daughter of Mr. Gurney, and the Gurneys and Nightingales are closely connected, it is not unlikely that their numerous conversations and discussions on such matters as these families had at heart, may have reached young susceptible Florence, and made her choose that path she has since so creditably followed. At about the same time, a Prussian young Lady of noble lineage, Fraülein von Ranzan embraced the state of a deaconess and became chief matron of the great Hospital de la Charitié, at Berlin. When this young Lady was unfortunately on her death-bed, the Queen of Prussia paid her a visit for solacing the last moments of one who had been a solace to thousands of her fellow creatures.

J. LOTZKY.

14, Gower Street, North, Feb. 12.

Digitized by Google

GENTLEMEN AT EASE AND COMMITTEE-MEN.

To the Editor of The Philanthropist.

Sir,—On more occasions than one I have witnessed and heard of circumstances to set me thinking on the vast amount of benevolence which is played upon, and actually thrown away, in this land and age of charity. I think the Mendicity Society most valuable in its operations, but I take it for granted that the efforts of that society are mainly bent, and its operatious chiefly confined, to begging letters and street mendicants. Now, sir, there are respectable beggars, men of position, who require watching; I believe that benevolence is imposed upon to a very large extent by societies — ostensibly benevolent, but like "Mr. Roper's needlewoman's home" which you properly exposed, rotten in the core. Some of the quasi-benevolent societies, are thus false throughout; some, though well-intentioned, waste much public money by bad internal management. Could you not use your influence by urging upon some of the many gentlemen who have leisure time upon their hands, how much benefit they might be the means of doing, if they would act in committees—not merely nominally, but personally, and in reality; if they would look into the management;—check extravagant expenditure, and by personal inspection become acquainted with what takes place under their supposed sanction, and so be able to guarantee the public against the abuse of its benevolence. No gentleman should allow his name to remain as a guarantee to a society of whose doings he is not at least perfectly satisfied; but many gentlemen living at ease, and having, say, a few hours a week at their disposal, might confer a lasting benefit on their fellow-creatures if they would regularly attend at the various meetings of committee, in societies to which their names are attached, and for which they are, therefore, morally responsible. I hope, sir, that you will take this subject up, in your valuable pages, and that the public may in time understand that every benevolent society,—especially female refuges which are so liable to abuse—to which known and credible names are attached as committee men, may be relied upon, as being watched and cared for by those whose names are so published. I hope the time will come when benevolent and well-meaning parties will not unwittingly give their names and support to every Roper who ask it, or to such institutions as if properly looked into, would be found undeserving either of their support or that of the public. I fear, sir, this is too much the case, and I think every member of committee should be made answerable in some degree for the proper management and conduct of the institution to which he belongs.

I am, sir,
Your obedient servant,
"Hic et ubique."

SOUTHWARK RAGGED SCHOOLS.

On Monday the 3rd of February, the annual meeting of the promoters of ragged schools in the parish of St. George-the-Martyr, Southwark, was held at the Literary Institution, Borough Road, and was very numerously attended. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided, and among the speakers were Admiral Vernon Harcourt, the Rev. Canon Champneys, the Rev. W. Cadman, Mr. Glover, Mr. Collinson, and Mr. Joseph Payne. A very earnest spirit in favour of these new educational institutions, of which there are not less than seven now established in the parish, was evinced during the proceedings, and abundant testimony was borne to their utility. From the report, which was read by the honorary secretary, Mr. Arthur Newman, it appears that in the seven schools no less than 1,500 children are under actual training, there being 2,000 names entered on the books. Although there are 140 voluntary teachers engaged in the work of tuition, more are wanted. The benefit derived from visits on the part of persons interested in such undertakings were also strongly insisted on. With reference to the brigade of yellow-coated shoe-blacks some curious statistics were given. Into this corps 103 boys have been admitted, of whom 21 have left, 22 have obtained situations, 32 have been dismissed, and 28 are still employed. Since the formation of the brigade in November, 1854, it has earned a total of 436*l.* From that amount 280*l.* has been given to the boys themselves, 72*l.* has gone to defray expenses in blacking-brushes, &c., and 78*l.* has been paid into their several banks in sums ranging from 3*s.* 6*d.* to 4*l.*, and will be available for furnishing them with outfits when they obtain situations. On the motion of Mr. Glover, seconded by Mr. Collinson, who represents the parish in the Metropolitan Board of Works, a resolution was carried pledging the meeting to forward the work of ragged-school teaching by every means in its power. The present annual cost of the seven schools in St. George-the-Martyr is upwards of 800*l.*, and it appears from the statement of account that there is a considerable balance due to the zealous clergyman of the parish, the Rev. Mr. Cadman, who acts as treasurer, and has been indefatigable in his exertions to establish and promote the usefulness of these schools. The proceedings of the evening terminated with a vote of thanks to the Earl of Shaftesbury, who here, as elsewhere, has been a warm and liberal supporter of such institutions.

Statistics of Pauperism in the Western Counties.—A statement of the average number of in-door and out-door paupers relieved in the half-years ending Michaelmas 1854 and 1855, together with the half-yearly expenditure for out-door relief, and cost per head for in-door maintenance, in the several unions in the western counties, has been published. From this it appears that the average number of in-door paupers relieved for the half-year ending Michaelmas 1854, in the unions of Devonshire, was 2,317, in the Michaelmas quarter of 1855 the number was 2,349. The average number of out-door paupers for the half-year ending Michaelmas 1854, was 25,816; in 1855 the number was 25,416. The amount of out-door relief paid during the half-year ending Michaelmas, 1854, was 55,290*l.*; in 1855 it was 52,978*l.* The total cost of food and clothing for in-door maintenance for the two periods ranged from 2s. 4d. to 2s. 11d. per head. In the county of Cornwall the average number of in-door paupers for the half-year ending Michaelmas, 1854, was 1,709; in 1855 the number was 1,586. The average number of out-door paupers for the half-year ending Michaelmas, 1854, was 12,767; in Michaelmas 1855, the number was 12,071. The amount of out-door relief paid during the half-year ending Michaelmas, 1854, was 24,938*l.*; in 1855 the amount was 23,815*l.* The total cost of food and clothing for in-door maintenance ranged from 1s. 10½d. to 3s. 0¾d. per head. In Somerset the average number of in-door paupers for the half-year ending Michaelmas, 1854, was 3,037; in 1855 the number was 3,217. The average number of out-door paupers for the half-year ending Michaelmas, 1854, was 29,204; in 1855 the number was 29,605. The amount of out-door relief paid during the half-year ending Michaelmas, 1854, was 62,128*l.*; in 1855 the amount was 62,215*l.* The total cost of food and clothing for in-door maintenance ranged from 2s. 2¼d. to 3s. 8*d.* per head.

Benevolence Abused.—The evils of indiscriminate giving has again been condemned by the bench and the press. We cannot do better than adduce the opinions of Sir R. W. Carden. He said a short time since, "A heavy responsibility lies upon those who give money to these children, who are brought up in almost every instance by their parents to idleness, and I am actually disposed to believe that the evil will receive no correction or alleviation except by some act inflicting a penalty for the offence of giving street alms. The money thus solicited is not for bread or for meat. It was but a short time ago that some ladies of my acquaintance were solicited by a wretched-looking woman, who had a train of ragged children after her, and begged with an earnestness which seemed to be inspired by famine alone. The ladies were near a butcher's shop at the moment, and, determined to give a Christmas treat to such a miserable family, ordered the butcher to cut off three or four pounds of good beef steaks, to make their other contributions more perfect. The moment, however, they turned their backs in walked the recipients of their bounty, and laying down the steaks, said to the butchers, 'You know we don't want this. Take it back, and give us the money you got for it; or buy it from us at any price you can afford.' Just such is the fate of the gifts of the humane but unreflecting population of London to street-beggars."

The evil operates in two ways, and affects both children and parents. The children become thieves, and the parents are confirmed in their habits of drunkenness and debauchery. We make no excuse for reprinting Sir R. W. Carden's concluding remarks on the case of this child, Charles Bond:—

"Sir R. W. Carden.—There is no practice so injurious as that of street almsgiving, and the kindness, or rather the criminal infirmity, of the shopkeepers who allow these infant beggars to beg round their houses is a great encouragement to the trade, which is of all trades the most likely to ruin the minds of the wretched children. They go on from begging to thieving, and they will continue in that horrible progress till they sink into the grave, so long as the mistaken humanity, which my brother magistrates and I are constantly deprecating, is without restraint. I am confident that many of the low ginshops would be obliged to shut up if they were not fed by the money procured by these children for their unnatural parents; and the system is carried on in such a manner that it cannot escape detection by any one acquainted with life. I trust that the public will look to this great evil for the sake of the poor objects themselves."

If any one would see to what a state a population can be reduced by indiscriminate almsgiving, let him visit the Papal States, and see the result produced where a nation is composed of almoners and beggars. No! whatever may be our commiseration and pity, we must refrain from encouraging the trade in slave children by giving alms in the public streets. It is only to ourselves that we are kind—we increase their miseries to save ourselves a passing pang.

Public Income and Expenditure.—It appears from a Parliamentary paper that the income of the United Kingdom in the year ended the 5th of January, 1853, was 57,755,571*l.*, and the expenditure 55,229,367*l.*, in the year ended the 5th of January, 1854, 58,962,512*l.*, while the expenditure was 55,769,252*l.* Thus far there was an excess of income over expenditure; but in the year ended the 31st of March, 1855, the former amounted to 64,091,571*l.*, and the latter to 70,236,817*l.*, leaving a deficiency of 6,145,246*l.*

Digitized by Google

SLACK'S NICKEL SILVER is the hardest and most perfect White Metal ever invented, and equals Silver in durability and colour. Made into every article for the Table, as TEA and COFFEE POTS, CRUET FRAMES, CANDLESTICKS, WAITERS, &c. A sample Tea-spoon forwarded on receipt of 10 postage stamps.

	Fiddle Pattern.	Strongest Thread Fiddle.	King's Pattern.
Table Spoons and Forks, per doz.	12s. and 15s.	..	28s.	30s.
Dessert ditto ditto	10s. and 12s.	16s.	21s.	25s.
Tea Spoons, per dozen	5s. and 6s.	3s.	11s.	12s.

SLACK'S NICKEL ELECTRO PLATED.

R. & J. S. also call attention to their NICKEL SILVER, Electro-plated by Messrs. Elkington and Co.'s Patent Process, which cannot be distinguished from Sterling Silver except by mark.

TABLE SPOONS and FORKS, per dozen 30s. and 40s.
DESSERT ditto and ditto ditto 20s. and 30s.
TEA SPOONS ..... 12s. and 18s.

Slack's Table Cutlery and Furnishing Ironmongery has been celebrated for nearly 50 years

FOR QUALITY AND CHEAPNESS.

Iron Fenders, 7s. 6d.; Bronzed ditto, 8s. 6d., with standards; superior Drawing-room, ditto, 14s. 6d. and 18s. 6d.; Fire Irons, 2s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. Patent Dish Covers, with handles to take off, 18s. set of six. Table Knives and Forks, 8s. per dozen. Roasting Jacks, complete, 7s. 6d. Tea-trays, 6s. 6d. set of three; elegant Papier Machie ditto, 25s. the set. Tea-pots, with plated knob, 5s. 6d.; Coal-scuttles, 2s. 6d. A set of kitchen utensils, for cottage, £3. As the limits of an advertisement will not allow of a detailed list, purchasers are requested to send for their catalogue, with 900 drawings, and prices of Electro Plate, Warranted Table Cutlery, Furnishing Ironmongery, &c. Every article marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible prices. May be had gratis, or post-free.

ORDERS above £2 delivered CARRIAGE FREE per RAIL.

RICHARD & JOHN SLACK, 336, Strand, (opposite Somerset House,) Established 1818.

PARIS EXHIBITION LAMPS.

The Third Arrival. Unprecedented Display.

Every MODERATOR LAMP now sold by the Metropolitan Light Company is fitted with Clark's Patent Improvements, and merits the attention of all purchasers of this celebrated Lamp. The Company, being in co-operation with the largest manufacturers, not only secure all the new designs, but are enabled to sell a single lamp at the manufacturer's price. The trade supplied.

Elegant Bronze Lamps, for £1 1s.

Superb Porcelain Lamps, for £2 2s.

Thousands to select from, from 5s. upwards.

N.B. Old lamps taken in exchange.

CLARK'S

Crimean Cooking Lantern,

As ordered by H.M.'s Government and fully approved, admitted to be the soldier's solace, is now considered indispensable for the soldier or surgeon on field duty.

447, STRAND.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST TEAS IN ENGLAND ARE TO BE OBTAINED OF PHILLIPS & Co., Tea Merchants, No. 8, King William Street, City, London,

WHO are now supplying very superior Teas and Coffees, at the following prices:—

BLACK TEA, 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d.
GREEN TEA, 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., 5s. 0d.
COFFEE (Warranted Pure), 1s. 0d., 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 4d., 1s. 6d.

COLONIAL PRODUCE and SPICES considerably under most houses. (See General Price current.)

SUGAR—For the convenience of their numerous Customers, PHILLIPS & Co. supply RAW and REFINED SUGARS at Market Prices.

PHILLIPS & Co. send Teas, Coffees, and Spices, CARRIAGE FREE, TO ANY RAILWAY STATION OR MARKET TOWN IN ENGLAND, if to the value of 40s. or upwards. By this liberal arrangement, those residing at a distance can enjoy all the advantages of the London Markets for Tea, Coffee, and Colonial Produce, just as though they were residing in London.

A general Price Current is published every month, containing all the advantages of the LONDON MARKETS, and is sent free by Post on application to PHILLIPS & CO., Tea Merchants, 8, King William Street, City, London.

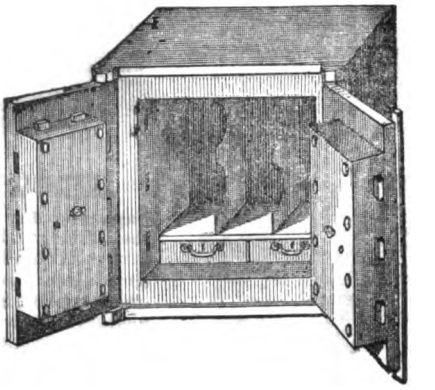
Post-office Orders should be made payable to PHILLIPS & COMPANY, Chief Office, London.

CAUTION.—To Tradesmen, MERCHANTS, SHIPPERS, OUTFITTERS, &c.

Whereas it has lately come to my knowledge that some unprincipled person or persons have for some time past been imposing upon the public, by selling to the trade and others a spurious article under the name of BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK, this is to give notice, that I am the original and sole Proprietor and Manufacturer of the said article, and do not employ any Traveller, or authorize any person to represent themselves as coming from my Establishment for the purpose of selling the said Ink. This caution is published by me to prevent further imposition upon the public, and serious injury to myself.

E. R. BOND, Sole Executrix and Widow of the late John Bond, 26, Long Lane, West Smithfield, London.

* To avoid disappointment from the substitution of counterfeits, be careful to ask for the genuine Bond's Permanent Marking Ink; and further to distinguish it, observe that no SIXPENNY SIZE is or has at any time been prepared by him, the Inventor and Proprietor.



ROBBERIES PREVENTED. FIRE RESISTED.

GEORGE PRICE'S Patent Fire-resisting and Thief-proof Safes and Chests are allowed by all Scientific and Practical Judges to be the strongest, best constructed, and cheapest Safeguards in the world against Fire and Thieves.

Fitted with Gibbons and Price's, Tucker and Reeves, or Cottrill's Patent Unpickable and Powder-proof Locks.

See Mr. Price's Challenge and Letters to Mr. Milner, which, with Illustrated Descriptive Lists of Prices, may be had gratis from the Patentee and Manufacturer, Cleveland Safe Works, Wolverhampton; at the London Depot, 181, Fleet Street; or from his Agents throughout the Kingdom.

PHILOSOPHY.—Mr. Deane F. WALKER is anxious to dispose of his Apparatus, illustrating the Subjects of Mechanics—the Properties of Matter—Chemistry—Pneumatics—Hydrostatics—Electricity—Optics, and Astronomy, to some Lover of Science, Institution, or Talented Pupil. Also, the Original Eidouranion Celestina MSS. Lectures, &c. A Fine Table Orrery, and unique Model of a Fortified Town. Particulars of Mr. Walker, West Hill, Wandsworth, Surrey.

A REALLY good Steel Pen, adapting itself to any hand, very durable, will not corrode, and as flexible as the quill. Price only 1s. 3d. per box of 12 dozen, or post free for 1s. 9d. stamps. Sold only by the makers, PARTRIDGE and COZENS, 1, Chancery Lane, corner of Fleet-street. Stationery 30 per cent. lower than any other house. Price lists post free.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

A Complete Apparatus for £3, £5 5s., and £11 11s. Send for a List at GILBERT FLEMING'S, 498, Oxford-street; author of "First Steps in Photography," price 6d., by post, 7 stamps.

FOR DECAYED TEETH.—A Packet of Ashton's Adamantine Stopping, the best extant, will be sent on receipt of 12 Postage Stamps, and a directed stamped envelope by Mr. ASHTON, Surgeon Dentist, 154, Sloane Street, London.

Printed by GEORGE WATSON, of No. 4, New River Terrace North, in the Parish of St. Mary, Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at his Office, No. 5, Kirby Street, Hatton Garden, in the Liberty of Saffron Hill, Hatton Garden, and Big Bents, in the Parish of St. Andrew, Holborn; and Published at the Philanthropist Office, 289, Strand, London.—Saturday March 1, 1856.

Digitized by Google

Kent's Patented Inventions

promoting Domestic Economy.

KENT'S PATENT STEAM WASHING APPARATUS

Supersedes the destructive system of washing hitherto pursued. It is a well-known and admitted fact, that by the rubbing and scrubbing, and severe treatment to which linen is subjected in the operation of washing, more is destroyed than in the actual use or wear. This evil is effectually remedied by the use of this apparatus. It is most simple in its operation, requires a very small amount of fuel, effects an immense saving in time, labour, and materials, and as, by the action of the steam, it effects a complete purification of the linen from all malaria or germs of disease, is, in a sanitary point of view, an invention of the utmost importance at the present time, as being peculiarly adapted for the use of large bodies of men in camp or hospital. It has been exclusively adopted by the Minister of War in France, for the use of the army generally, more especially for the garrison of Paris, and has been successfully adopted in numerous hospitals, hotels, and other large establishments.

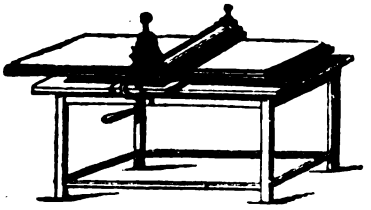
It is made in various forms for the use of private families as well as large establishments, at prices varying from £3 10s. upwards, and as a useful auxiliary for camp purposes, a Locomotive Apparatus is adapted.

The patentee has received numerous highly satisfactory testimonials as to the efficient application of this process; the original letters conveying such, as well as drawings and descriptions of the apparatus in its various forms, may be seen on application.

KENT'S PATENT
Rotary Knife Cleaning and Polishing Machine.

This really valuable invention is now so universally known and approved, that it is unnecessary to do more than mention that it is made in seven sizes, varying in price

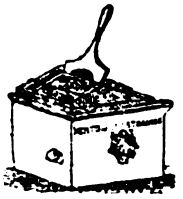
From £4 15s. to £14 14s.



KENT'S PATENT
PORTABLE MANGLE.

This invention is simple, easily worked, and effective. When in use it stands on the kitchen table—when out of use it can be placed on a shelf one foot wide: yet in its operation quite equals the largest and most expensive of the old Mangles, simply because its action is the same.

Price £4 10s. and £5 10s.



KENT'S PATENT
TRITURATING STRAINER.

This is one of the most useful inventions for culinary purposes that has been introduced for a long time, and is highly valued for its great economy, cleanliness, simplicity, and efficiency, for all culinary preparations where the ingredients require to be reduced to a fine smooth pulp or liquid, or to be thoroughly mixed and strained. This simple contrivance will also be of important service to various trades and manufactures, where their materials require similar treatment.

Price 27s. 6d. and 37s. 6d. each.

Kent's Patent Rotary Cinder Sifter.

This highly useful invention promotes economy and cleanliness; it saves trouble, and renders waste impossible, and in a few months saves its own cost.

PRICE FROM THREE GUINEAS UPWARDS.

GEORGE KENT,

Sole Patentee and Manufacturer,

Manufactory and Wholesale Department, 199, High Holborn; Retail Depot, 329, Strand, London.

[An Illustrated Catalogue] [Sent Post Free on Application.

THE PHILANTHROPIC

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE.

VOL. V.—No. 41.] LONDON, OCTOBER 1, 1858. [Price Sixpence, Stamped. Fivepence, Unstamped. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 5s.

THE ROYAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

ESTABLISHED FOR

The Promotion of Industry and Economy;
The Investigation of Cases of Distress;
The Assistance of Deserving Persons;
AND,
The Collection and Diffusion of Information tending to Ameliorate the Condition of the Poor.

Patron.
His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, K.G., &c.

President.
The Viscount Raynham, M.P.

Vice-Presidents.

The Duke of Leeds.
The Duke of Manchester.
The Marquis Townshend.
The Earl of Albemarle.
The Earl Cowper.
The Earl of Ilchester.
The Earl of Southesk.
The Earl of Darnley.
The Lord J. Russell, M.P.
Colonel Sir Thomas Troubridge, Bart., C.B.

Trustees.
The Marquis Townshend. | Colonel Hudson.

Treasurer.
The Viscount Raynham, M.P.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

The Hon. Wm. Ashley.
J. F. Basset, Esq.
Edmond Beales, Esq.
W. Lloyd Birkbeck, Esq.
C. Holte Bracebridge, Esq.
The Rev. Dr. Brewer.
General Buckley, M.P.
Benjn. Bond Cabbell, Esq.
Capt. Wm. C. Caldwell.
Colin G. Campbell, Esq.
G. W. Chasseaud, Esq.
R. L. Cole, Esq.
Lt.-Col. the Hon. Peregrine F. Cust.
A. H. Davenport, Esq.
The Rev. R. H. Davies.
Heneage Dering, Esq.
Rob. Dimsdale, Esq.
Edward Drummond, Esq.
Henry D. Erskine, Esq.
Lieut.-General Fane.
Sir J. Fergusson, Bart.
J. Stuart Glennie, Esq.
Montague Gore, Esq.
W. Irving Hare, Esq.
The Rev. H. J. Hatch, M.A.
Prescott Hewett, Esq.
The Rev. G. Townshend Hudson.
The Viscount Ingestre, M.P.
The Lord Kingsale.
H. Gore Langton, Esq. M.P.
J. Z. Laurence, Esq., F.R.C.S.
Henry Mayhew, Esq.
Sir Richard Mayne, K.C.B.
Fred. North, Esq., M.P.
W. Ogle, Esq., M.D.
The Lord Alfred Paget, M.P.
John Pares, Esq.
Colonel Pinney, M.P.
The Rev. Andrew Reed, D.D.
The Rev. George Ridsdale.
Arthur Russell, Esq. M.P.
George Russell, Esq.
John St. Aubyn, Esq.
A. Nowell Sherson, Esq.
W. Campbell Sleigh, Esq.
The Hon. E. Lyulph Stanley
Lieut.-Col. Stuart, M.P.
W. W. F. Synge, Esq.
Chas. Trueman, Esq., M.P.
T. Twining, Jun. Esq. F.S.A.
Percy Wyndham, Esq.

LADIES' COMMITTEE.

The Marchioness (Maria) of Ailesbury.
Mrs. Beales.
The Lady Selina Bridgeman.
The Lady Augusta Cadogan.
The Lady Honoria Cadogan.
Miss Campbell.
Mrs. Chasseaud.
Mrs. Robert Dimsdale.
Mrs. Cecil Fane.
Mrs. Hatch.
Mrs. Heygate.
The Lady Jane Hildyard.
Mrs. Hudson.
The Viscountess Ingestre.
Miss Mayne.
Mrs. Pares.
The Lady Elizabeth St. Aubyn.
Mrs. Sheppard.
The Lady Anne Sherson.
The Marchioness Townshend.
The Lady Wensleydale.

Hon. Solicitors.
Messrs. Henderson and Leach.

Hon. Physician.
H. G. Wright, Esq., M.D.

Secretary.
Captain Sheppard.

Bankers.
Messrs. Coutts and Co.

Offices.
8, St. Martin's Place, Trafalgar Square.

That impulsive and indiscriminate charity which is moved to compassion by the mere appearance of destitution, and bestows its alms broadcast on the outward semblance of want, is, in the generality of cases, productive of harm rather than good; for it encourages the idle, the dissolute, and the cunning to assume the guise of poverty for the purposes of imposition, and thus offers a premium to deception, and causes a waste of the funds of the benevolent, which are inadequate to meet the demands made upon them.

Meanwhile, untended and uncared for, because unknown, there exist at this moment, both in the higher and humbler paths of life, thousands of persons in distress to whom the benevolent would gladly afford relief, and whom a trifling outlay of money would efficiently aid.

But it is difficult to discover many of these cases without a judiciously-organized system, and equally difficult, without considerable knowledge of industrial resources, to afford that relief best calculated to enable its recipients to earn a livelihood.

To meet these difficulties, and to supply the various information necessary for practically assisting the poor, are the objects of this Society: and the fullest confidence is felt in the willingness of the wealthy and benevolent to support an institution which proposes, in addition to its main charitable intentions, to develope a sense of self-reliance, and inculcate habits of industry.

It is the object of this Society, to place unemployed and reduced persons in a position to call forth their own energies, to teach them to rely on their own powers, and to show them that extrication from their difficulties lies chiefly in their own hands. It is confidently believed that, by the judicious application of the funds contributed by its supporters, thousands may be effectually and permanently relieved, who, stricken down by their misfortunes, would otherwise gradually but surely sink into destitution and despair.

By placing the Society in communication with the several Metropolitan Police-courts, information of many cases of very great though uncomplaining distress are acquired, and every endeavour made for their immediate relief.

Much permanent good is effected by the system which has been in particular cases adopted by the Society of granting small loans to deserving persons, for the purpose of starting them in some way of business, or enabling them to obtain articles necessary for entering on a new employment.

A register of trades and modes of employment is kept for persons who have been recommended to the Society.

Under peculiar circumstances, in the cases of women and children, or where physical incapacity prevents the applicant from gaining a livelihood by manual labour, small sums of money are paid, as premiums, to enable them to acquire a knowledge of such light employment as may prove remunerative.

The welfare of all persons assisted by the Society is further promoted whenever opportunity occurs; but all additional assistance to persons to whom advances of money have been made by the Society, depend, in a measure, upon the exertions made by the recipients towards repayment.

The objects of the Society also include the occasional delivery of lectures to the poor on subjects connected with their moral and social welfare; and the publication of a periodical devoted to the collection and diffusion of information tending to ameliorate the condition of the poor.

Attention is also given to the advantageous results that may, in many cases, be afforded by promoting emigration. The poor, as a class, are generally ignorant on all points connected with this subject. The nature of the climate, the demand for labour, the rates of wages, and the prospects of ultimate success in our Colonies, are, to them, unknown. The advantage of a register of every particular bearing on these points; as well as of the costs of transit to the different ports in our Colonies where occupation may be readily found, is obvious.

Particulars of all institutions of a benevolent character can be obtained at the offices of the Society, and respecting them the Secretary will be happy to communicate with persons desirous of giving or receiving information.

Acting in particular cases as a medium between the afflicted poor and the various charitable institutions for their relief, temporary assistance is afforded by the Society until, through exertions on their behalf, admission to suitable asylums can be obtained. In furtherance of this object, presentations and votes are solicited, which will be given to persons who, after careful inquiry, prove the most worthy of public sympathy and support.

Members of the Society are entitled to submit to the Executive Council any cases for inquiry and relief presented to their notice, and for this purpose printed forms of recommendation, to be filled up with the necessary particulars, are provided.

All cases so submitted are promptly and strictly investigated by the Executive Council, and if found deserving, are assisted as the station or occupation of each person recommended may render most advisable, and a check is thus afforded to the present extensive system of imposition, which, among other evil consequences, has too often the effect of discouraging charitable intentions.

Members are entitled, should they require it, to receive a written statement of the decision of Council on all cases submitted to them. An annual report of the proceedings of the Society, with a statement of accounts, is furnished to every member; and the books are, at all times, open for their inspection.

An annual subscription of one guinea or upwards, or a donation of ten guineas or upwards, in one sum, constitutes the donor a member of the Society.

Subscriptions and donations are thankfully received by the Treasurer, the members of the Executive Council, the Bankers, and also by the Secretary, at the offices of the Society. RAYNHAM, President.

GOVERNESSES' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION. Incorporated by Royal Charter. WITH POWER TO HOLD LAND BY GIFT, PURCHASE, OR BEQUEST.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.
H.R.H. THE PRINCE ALBERT.
H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER.
H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF KENT.
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE.
H.R.H. THE HEREDITARY GRAND DUCHESS OF MECKLENBURG-STRELITZ.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS MARY ADELAIDE.

President,
THE EARL OF HARROWBY.

Board of Management.

The Hon. William Ashley.
Charles Edward Boothby, Esq.
B. B. Cabbell, Esq., M.P., F.R.S., F.S.A.
F. Patey Chappel, Esq.
W. Timbrell Elliott, Esq.
Sir J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S.
William Gilpin, Esq.
John William Hale, Esq.
S. Carter Hall, Esq., F.S.A.
The Lord Lilford.
The Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P.
The Rev. D. Laing, M.A. F.R.S.
Colonel Long.
J. Tidd Pratt, Esq.
Frederick R. Say, Esq.
Robert A. Slaney, Esq.
W. Jesse Street, Esq.
The Earl Talbot.
Edward Thornton, Esq.
T. Parry Woodcock, Esq.

The objects of the Society are:—

TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE to Governesses in distress, afforded privately and delicately through the Ladies' Committee.

ANNUITY FUND.—Elective Annuities to Aged Governesses, secured on invested capital, and thus independent of the prosperity of the Institution.

 The Hon. Mr. Ashley having most kindly opened a Fund to raise all the Society's Annuities to 25*l.*, any Donations which may be kindly given, may be addressed "The Hon. Mrs. Ashley, to the care of the Secretary."

PROVIDENT FUND.—Provident Annuities purchased by Ladies in any way connected with education, upon Government Security, agreeably to the Act of Parliament. This Branch includes a Savings' Bank.

A HOME for Governesses during the intervals between their engagements.

A SYSTEM OF REGISTRATION, entirely free of expense.

AN ASYLUM for the aged.

CHARLES WILLIAM KLUGH, Secretary.
32, Sackville-street, London.

THE PHILANTHROPIST NEWSPAPER PENNY

Digitized by Google

CLERICAL DISTRESS.—To the Wealthy and Benevolent.—A young Clergyman, with four children (his wife now confined with the fourth), is in great difficulty and distress; so much so, that unless some ASSISTANCE is afforded, he, with his wife and little ones, must have their home taken from them. Full particulars, with name, reference, &c., on addressing B.D., Post Office, Park Street, Camden Town, by whom any donations of money or postage-stamps will be thankfully received. Reference to the Rev. W. G. JERVIS, 4, Trafalgar Square, W.C., is kindly permitted.

ORPHAN CHILDREN'S HOME and PARENTAL SOLACE.—The Advertiser, who is anxious to promote the welfare of two orphan children, desires to meet with some gentlemen, similarly circumstanced, willing to co-operate in a plan for an Institution of a self-supporting character, providing a home education and introduction to the duties and business of life, free from the repugnance and obnoxiousness of soliciting the suffrages of a Charity, and having a germ of rapidly-extending good that would recommend it as a great public benefit if respectably introduced by men of character and sincerity. Address J. C., care of Henry Webber, Provision Merchant, 1, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

ALLEN's ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of PATENT PORTMANTEAUS with Compartments, DESPATCH BOXES, WRITING and DRESSING CASES, TRAVELLING BAGS with Square Opening, and 500 other Articles for travelling.—Post-free.

J. W. and T. ALLEN, MANUFACTURERS,
18 and 22, STRAND.

RANSOMES and SIMS, Ironfounders and Manufacturers of Agricultural Implements, and Machines, Ipswich.

R. and S. manufacture Lawn Mowing Machines, Stable Fittings, Digging Forks, Oat and Bean Crushers for Gentlemen's Stables, Chaff Cutters, Pony Ploughs, &c.

Illustrated Catalogues sent free on application to the Works, Ipswich, or London Office, 31, Essex Street, Strand. SHEPPARD RANSOME, Agent.

CRICKETING OUTFITTERS.

F. LILLYWHITE and WISDEN, 2, NEW COVENTRY STREET, LEICESTER SQUARE, W., beg to acquaint Naval and Military Cricketers that they can supply them with every Article connected with the Game.

Large or small Outfits packed on the shortest notice.

All Goods warranted.

They also keep Articles for all National (Athletic) Games, such as Foot-balls, Racquets, Quoits, Bowls, Dumb-bells, Boxing-gloves, &c.

An Illustrated Catalogue of Prices sent post free.

INKS FOR EXPORT, &c.

G. BELL and CO. beg to call the attention of Buyers to their superior PRINTING INKS and WRITING FLUIDS—Blue and Red, for use with Metallic Pens—Copying, Blue-Black, Violet-Green, Black Bordering, Ruling and Japan Ticket Inks of first-rate quality. All large purchasers treated on liberal terms. Lists sent free by G. BELL and Co., Wellington Street, St. Luke's, E.C.

GLANVILLE'S HYDROSULPHATE of IRON MIXTURE, a certain and expeditious cure for Cholera, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, and Bowel Complaints, Spasms, Pains, Sickness, Cramp in the Limbs or Stomach, Weakness of the Chest, Stomach, and Bowels, General Debility, and Nervousness Hundreds of testimonials of its wonderful effects; recommended by eminent medical men.

Manufactured only by the Proprietor, 3, Clifton Terrace, West Brompton, London. Sold by all Chemists and Druggists. Price 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.

The following is an EXTRACT from the Second Edition (page 188) of the Translation of the Pharmacopœia of the Royal College of Physicians of London, by Dr. G. F. Collier, published by Longman and Co.:—"It is no small defect in this compilation (speaking of the Pharmacopœia) that we have no purgative mass but what contains aloes; yet we know that hæmorrhoidal persons cannot bear aloes, except it be in the form of COCKLE'S PILLS, which chiefly consist of aloes, scammony, and colocynth, which I think are formed into a sort of compound extract, the acridity of which is obviated, I suspect, by an alkaline process, and by a fourth ingredient (unknown to me) of an aromatic tonic nature. I think no better and no worse of it for its being a patent medicine. I look at it as an article of commerce and domestic convenience, and do not hesitate to say it is the best-made pill in the kingdom—a muscular purge, a mucous purge, and a hydrogogue purge combined—and their effect properly controlled by a dirigent and corrigent. That it does not commonly produce hæmorrhoids like most aloetic pills, I attribute to its being thoroughly soluble, so that no undissolved particles adhere to the mucous membrane."

THE BANK of LONDON & NATIONAL PROVINCIAL INSURANCE ASSOCIATION.

[With which is united the Business and Connections of the "National Provincial" and "Falcon" Life Assurance Societies, and "National Provincial Fire Insurance Company."]

Established for effecting every description of Life and Fire Insurance Business.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES—Threadneedle Street, London (Adjoining the Bank of London).

LONDON DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir HENRY MUGGERIDGE, Alderman, Director of the Bank of London.

Vice-Chairmen—JOHN CUMBERLAND, Esq.
WILLIAM ANTHONY PURNELL, Esq.

John E. Anderdon, Esq., 15, Stratford-place, Oxford-street, Director of the Bank of London.
William Black, Esq., Langley House, East India-road, Poplar.
Stephen Broad, Esq., Rye-hill, Peckham.
John Cropp, Esq., Oaklands, Park-road, Clapham.
John Cumberland, Esq., Camden-road Villas.
John Geary, Esq., Hyde-side, Edmonton.
Thomas Gooch, Esq. (firm of Gooch and Cousens), Director of the Bank of London.
Lord Claud Hamilton, M.P., 19, Eaton-square.
Fred. Winn Knight, Esq., M.P., 106, Sloane-street, and Wolverly-house, Kidderminster.
Thomas Luce, Esq., M.P., King-street, St. James's, and Malmesbury, Director of the Bank of London.
John Malcolm, Esq., 47, Mark-lane.
Professor Morton, Royal Veterinary College.
Wm. Anthony Purnell, Esq., Lee-terrace, Blackheath.
Peter Robb, Esq., St. Martin's-le-Grand.
Thomas B. Stevens, Esq., The Elms, Kilburn, and Derwent Mills, Derby.
John Tarring, Esq. (firm of Tarring and Son), 23, Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital, and 26, Bucklersbury.
Alfred Wilson, Esq. (firm of Venables, Wilson, and Tyler), Director of the Bank of London.

Actuary—Thomas Walker, Esq., B.A., F.S.S., F.I.A.

In all Assurance transactions the first consideration to an insurer should be to satisfy himself that the Office in which he effects his insurance possesses unquestionable means for fulfilling the engagement entered into by his policy.

This Association, in addition to its large annual income, affords the protection and security of a capital of One Million sterling, thereby offering ample security to all having transactions with it.

Prospectuses, forms of proposal, and every information, may be obtained on application at the Chief Office, or to any of the Agents throughout the country.

The Directors are prepared to entertain applications for Agencies in those districts where the Association is not already represented.

EDMUND CLENCH, Manager and Secretary.

HOMES for SERVANTS OUT of PLACE:
21, Nutford-place, Edgeware-road, W.; Superintendent, Mrs. Butcher.
110, Hatton-garden, Holborn, E.C.: Superintendent, Mrs. Peake.
52, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-rd. S.: Superintendent, Mrs. Garrard.
Lodgings, &c., at 1*s.* 6*d.* per week.

FUNDS are needed from the benevolent public. These Homes have been established many years, and have sheltered more than 6000 young women; 31,000, unable to pay, have registered free. Of the 100,000 servants in London, 10,000 are always out of place and changing places.

Treasurer—R. C. L. Bevan, Esq.
Bankers—Messrs. Barclay and Co.
DANIEL COOPER, Hon. Sec.

LATE DWERRIHOUSE and CO.,
27, DAVIES STREET, BERKELEY SQUARE.

ESTABLISHED 1760.

J. WHITESIDE begs most respectfully to invite an inspection of his extensive and elegant Stock of ENGLISH and FOREIGN CLOCKS and GOLD and SILVER WATCHES.

CLOCKS WOUND and KEPT IN REPAIR by the year, as usual.

IMMEDIATE HELP REQUIRED for the METROPOLITAN REFORMATORY, Brixton hill. This Institution has now been in operation nearly five years. Much good has been done; 250 have been admitted to the benefits of the Refuge, and 172 have been hopefully reformed. The Committee have laboured earnestly in the work, and are greatly encouraged by the results they have seen and known. They have been unsparing of their own time and money in promoting the object. But they cannot carry it on without a larger measure of public support. Fifty-five are at this moment in the Reformatory, and money is absolutely necessary to carry it on from day to day. The Committee urgently appeal for help. They invite the most rigid scrutiny into the management and expenses of the Institution. Many difficulties have been surmounted. There is every reason to encourage the hope of increased success in the work; and the Committee earnestly ask all who are able to assist not to suffer such an Institution to be closed for want of present pecuniary assistance.

Donations will be thankfully received by John Cunliffe, Esq., Treasurer, 24 Lombard Street; George Moore, Esq., Trustee, Bow Church-yard; C. T. Jenkinson, Esq., Hon. Sec., 7 Clement's Lane, Lombard Street, and at the Institution.

BRECKNELL'S SKIN SOAP, recommended as the best for producing a clear and healthy skin, being the old yellow soap, made expressly for the purpose of the best materials, and not scented.

Sold only in 1s. packets of four rounded tablets, or eight squares, and extra large tablets 6d. each.

BRECKNELL, TURNER & SONS, Wax and Tallow-Chandlers, Soap and Oil Merchants, &c., to Her Majesty, BEEHIVE, 31, HAYMARKET.

Please observe that each tablet and square is stamped "Brecknell's Skin Soap."

THE REFUGE for the DESTITUTE, Manor House, Dalston, has been established upwards of 50 years. It is the oldest Charitable Institution for Criminal and Destitute Females in the metropolis.

Since its foundation in 1805, it has received more than 6000 young persons. The admissions last year amounted to 62. The number sent out to service, or restored to their parents and friends, 67. Young women are admissible between the ages of 15 and 25, and are chiefly received from prisons, and occasionally from Magistrates and through private recommendation.

It is ascertained, from careful calculation, that from 60 to 70 per cent. are permanently reformed, and become useful and creditable members of society, after undergoing a discipline and religious training of eighteen months in the Refuge.

The inmates are employed chiefly in laundry work, and are attended each day by a Chaplain for prayers and religious instruction, and have a Schoolmistress to superintend their general education.

The funds of the Charity are now depressed through the death of several annual subscribers and liberal contributors; and donations are earnestly sought towards the outlay found necessary from the erection of a new and commodious laundry, in consequence of the large increase of industrial work. Bankers and Treasurer, Messrs. Barnett, Hoares, and Co., 62, Lombard Street; Rev. W. Stone, Chaplain and Secretary; Miss Mollison, Matron, Manor House, Dalston.

ELEGANT DRAWING-ROOM LAMPS,
FROM ONE GUINEA.
ELABORATE VASE PORCELAIN LAMPS,
Each fitted with CLARK'S PATENT IMPROVEMENTS, from TWO GUINEAS each.
THREE THOUSAND to CHOOSE FROM.
BRONZE LAMPS, 4s. 9d. each.
OLD LAMPS TAKEN IN EXCHANGE.
FRENCH LAMPS CLEANED and REPAIRED at 2*s.* each.
IMPORTERS OF BRILLIANT COLZA OIL.
PATENTEES OF CLARK'S PATENT DIAMOND OIL.
METROPOLITAN LIGHT COMPANY,
LONDON WAREHOUSE, 447, STRAND, next to the Electric Telegraph Company's Office.
JOHN CLARK, Manager.

Digitized by Google

INDUSTRIAL HOME, TRE-WINT, HACKNEY.

This Reformatory and Training Institution is intended for girls of sixteen years and upwards, who from their own fault, or from relative circumstances, are placed in positions of difficulty or of danger. Prison and penitentiary cases are inadmissible.

The inmates are under the care of two resident Matrons, and of visiting Ladies, whose united effort it is to use those means which, by the blessing of God, may restore them to the paths of rectitude and peace. They are industriously employed. Assistance is earnestly requested, either by contributions in money, or by a supply of laundry work for the inmates.

Mrs. Eliza Bacon, Laundry Matron.
Mrs. Salmon, House Matron.

To whose care applications respecting washing, or the admission of cases, may be addressed.

Contributions will be thankfully received by Wilbraham Taylor, Esq., 1, Robert Street, Adelphi; and by Henry Roberts, Esq., Stamford Hill.

THE GIRLS' REFUGE.—The KING EDWARD RAGGED and INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS and EASTERN REFUGE, Albert Street, Buxton Street, Brick Lane, Spitalfields.—The objects of this Institution are to educate and train in habits of industry that class of children who, for want of clothing, or the means of paying for instruction, are unable to attend other schools, and to gather in the vicious and depraved who swarm in our streets, and endeavour to civilize and instruct them, and, as far as the funds permit, to provide food, clothing, and shelter for the most destitute.

In the erection of this Institution, provision has been made for about seventy inmates, while accommodation exists for the daily instruction of more than 400 poor children. The number of Refuges which have of late years been opened for the reception of houseless and destitute boys induced the Committee to depart from their original intention, and make this a Refuge for girls. In addition to the large number of children under daily instruction, thirty-five destitute girls are now enjoying the benefits of the Refuge, and the Committee are desirous of extending the sphere of their usefulness, and to afford food, shelter, and clothing to at least thirty-five more.

The varied operations of such an Institution necessarily involve a large annual expenditure, to meet which, and to carry out to the full extent the objects contemplated in its erection, subscriptions and donations are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Samuel Gurney, Esq., M.P., Treasurer, Lombard Street; Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths, Bankers, 1, Lombard Street; and by the Hon. Sec., 2, Penbury Grove, Hackney. H. R. WILLIAMS, Hon. Sec.

THE CAMBRIAN and UNIVERSAL LIFE and FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY. Capital 100,000*l.* Established 1849.

OFFICE, 27, GRESHAM STREET.

Agencies in the principal towns of England and Wales.

This office offers the benefit of insurance in all its branches, and is highly eligible for every description of life assurance.

A new and most important feature, entirely originating with this Company, viz., Marriage Dowries, Life Assurance, and Deferred Annuities, included in one policy.

Rates of Premium moderate.
Annuities granted. Family endowments.
Loans on personal and other securities.
Forms of proposal and every information may be obtained on application. By order, ALFRED MELHADO, Manager.

FOR THE HAIR.

BALM OF COLUMBIA.

It is unerring in its operation, highly approved in the leading circles of Fashion, and extensively demanded by all who cultivate the graces of the toilette.

IT STRENGTHENS AND NOURISHES,
Exerting a healthy influence, and occasioning an ample and luxuriant growth of hair,—

PRESERVES
Where the hair is already full.—

RESTORES
When weak or falling off.—

BEAUTIFIES
It, gives a rich and beautiful appearance.

IT CLEANSES THE HAIR,
And for young people supersedes the use of the fine comb, as the most respectable heads of schools can testify.

THE NURSERY.
The peculiar mildness of the Balm, the action of which may be regulated at discretion, especially suits infancy and childhood. No well-regulated Nursery can dispense with it again.

Prices 3*s.* 6*d.*, 6*s.*, and 11*s.* per Bottle.
No other prices are genuine.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM.

Sold, Wholesale and Retail, by the Proprietors, 13, Wellington Street North, 7 doors from the Strand, London, and by all respectable Perfumers and Chemists.

BRITISH PROVIDENT LIFE AND FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY.
4, Chatham-place, Blackfriars, London.
Established 1850.
Incorporated by Act of Parliament 7th and 8th Vict. cap. 110.

Capital £100,000, with power to increase to £1,000,000.

Trustees.
Sir Edward Bindloss Perrott, Bart., Plumstead, Kent.
The Rev. John Wood, Addington-place, Camberwell.

Directors.
Captain Thomas Malkin, Sandhurst Lodge, Queen's-road, Gloucester-gate, Regent's-park, Chairman.
John Britten, Esq., 21, Basinghall-street, and Collingtree, Northamptonshire.
G. Lane, Esq., Finchley-road, St. John's Wood.
William Burchett, Esq., Cheapside and Hammersmith.
Joseph Gimson, Esq., 1, Harewood-place, Harewood-sq.
John Sheridan, Esq. (Managing), Laburnum House, Brompton.
James Goad, Esq., Islington.

Auditors.
H. Brinsley Sheridan, Esq. (Manager of the "Times Life and Guarantee Company"), 32, Ludgate-hill, and Belfield House, Parson's green, Fulham.
T. Wilson, Esq., 103, 104, and 105, Cheapside, and 7, York-terrace, Peckham.
Alexander Webber, Esq., Davies-street, Berkeley-square, and 47, Upper Baker-street (Director of the "Times Life and Fire Assurance Company").
J. Britten, jun. Esq., 11, Basinghall-street.

Bankers.—
Physician.—William Grove Grady, M.D., F.R.C.S.E., M.R.C.S.I.
Surgeon.—William Harding, Esq., 4, Percy-street, Bedford-square.
Standing Counsel.—Henry P. Hinde, Esq., Hall Staircase, Inner-temple.
Solicitor—Henry Empson, Esq., 61, Moorgate-street.
Manager—J. Sheridan, Esq.

LIFE POLICIES indisputable and not liable to forfeiture through inability to keep up the payments. Assurances on single, joint, and survivorship lives. Annuities—immediate, deferred, or survivorship. Endowments for Children. Assurances against accidents. Saving Fund Policies. Profits divided. Yearly, half-yearly, and quarterly payments taken.

EXAMPLE.

Single Life, with Profits, for 100*l. at Death.*

Age.	Yearly.	Half-yearly.	Quarterly.
30	2*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*	1*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*	11*s.* 4*d.*

Just Published, price Sixpence,

THE REFORMATORY MOVEMENT: A PAPER

Read before the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, at Birmingham, October 15th, 1857,

By the Rev. HENRY J. HATCH, M.A., Magdalene College, Cambridge, Chaplain of the House of Correction, Wandsworth,

As the Representative of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, 118, Pall Mall.

London: Printed at the Preventive and Reformatory Institution, 237, Euston Road, N.W., near Gower Street North.

Will be forwarded on application, with seven postage stamps, to Rev. H. J. HATCH, Wandsworth.

In the Press, and shortly will be Published, in One Vol., boards, 6s,

A LETTER to Sir FITZROY KELLY, M.P., on the STATE of the CRIMINAL LAW, with Suggestions for its Amendment, and Cases Illustrative of present Defects.

By WILLIAM HENRY BARBER, Solicitor.
CROCKFORD, Essex Street, Strand.

Just published, price 3s. 6d., bound in cloth, Second Edition,

THE NIGHT-SIDE OF LONDON.
By J. EWING RITCHIE.

Seeing a Man Hanged—Catherine Street—The Bal Masque—Up the Haymarket—Ratcliff Highway—Judge and Jury Clubs—The Cave of Harmony—Discussion Clubs—Cider Cellars—Leicester Square Night Houses—Boxing Night—Caldwell's—Cremorne—The Costermongers' Free-and-Easy, &c.

W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

ACCOUNT BOOKS, first-class.—Ledgers, Journals, Cash and Bill Books, Accounts, Current, &c.; Foreign Bills, English, French, German, and Spanish, in Books of 100 Sets.—Copying Machines, Stamping Presses, Bankers' Cheques and Foreign Bank Notes Engraved; Overland Papers, the new "Bankers' Envelope."

NISSEN and PARKER, Printers and Exporting Stationers, 43, Mark Lane, London.

Now ready, Postage free,

A LIST of the Principal NEW and CHOICE BOOKS recently added to MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Also,

A LIST of SURPLUS COPIES of RECENT WORKS

Withdrawn from Circulation, and offered at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES FOR CASH.

CHARLES EDWARD MUDIE, New Oxford Street, London; and Cross Street, Manchester.

AT SANDWELL, near BIRMINGHAM, a HOME is OFFERED to WIDOWS and SINGLE LADIES, and the means of Education to Orphan Children, suitable to their situation in life. Girls from thirteen to sixteen are received and trained as domestic servants by being employed in waiting on the inmates of the Home. Boys from twelve to fifteen years old are also received and employed in the house, stable, farm, or garden. Ladies without family ties are invited to join in this work of usefulness, whereby many young persons are rescued from idleness and its attendant temptations. Further particulars may be obtained by letter addressed to the Superintendent, Sandwell, Birmingham, enclosing a stamped envelope, with the name and address of the applicant. Subscriptions are gratefully received by Messrs. LLOYD, Bank, Birmingham, to the credit of the Sandwell Institute.

ESTABLISHED 1810.

JAMES FLOOD, AUCTIONEER, SURVEYOR, APPRAISER and UNDERTAKER;

Valuer of every description of Property, and for Probate-Legacy Duty, &c.

ESTATE, HOUSE, SCHOLASTIC, BUSINESS, MEDICAL AND CLERICAL AGENT,
84, WELLS STREET,
Next 64, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

EPPS'S COCOA.—Pound and Half-pound Packets, 1s. 6d. and 9d. EPPS, Homœopathic Chemist, 170, Piccadilly; 112, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury; and 82, Old Broad Street, City. Manufactory, 398, Euston Road. Also of the principal Grocers. Each packet is labelled.

WHO'S YOUR PRINTER?

Why pay such exorbitant prices, when it can be done considerably less, and in a superior manner?

G. MADDICK, PRACTICAL PRINTER, 1, CRANE COURT, FLEET STREET.

WANTED, the Printing of a Newspaper, Magazine, &c., on unusually advantageous terms. Would not object to take an interest.

RITCHIE'S PATENT GRANULATED CORK MATTRESSES and BEDS expel Vermin, effectually cure Rheumatism, prevent Cramp, and, by preserving electricity, promote Health and prolong Life. The Patent Cork Mattress and Cork Fabric Manufactory, 66, Hatfield Street, Blackfriars.

PATENT LIQUID CEMENT, FOR FRONTS OF HOUSES, &c.

THIS valuable and economic Material is always ready for use, simple in application, and only one-eighth the cost of oil paint. It will not decompose or wash off. For beauty it stands pre-eminent, giving the appearance of fine cut stone, and one cwt. will cover 400 to 500 square feet. Sold in casks of one, two, and three cwt., at 8s., 15s., and 21s. each, casks exclusive.

MIXED LEAD or ZINC PAINTS are ready for use, economical, and unchangeable in colour. Price 7s. per gallon for ordinary colours.

Permanent Brilliant Black for all kinds of outside work, Barges, Park Railings, &c., 2s. per gallon.

DAMP WALLS.—PATENT ELASTIC PAINT, an effectual remedy, by which they are rendered fit for papering or finished in oil colours. Price 10s. per Gallon, which will cover and finish about 150 square feet.

PATENTEES.—GEORGE BELL and CO., Steam Mills, No. 2, Wellington Street, Goswell Street, London, E.C.

TRELOAR'S
COCOA NUT FIBRE MATTING
IS THE BEST.

PRIZE MEDALS AWARDED—LONDON, NEW YORK, and PARIS.

Catalogue, containing Prices and every particular, post free.

WAREHOUSE, 42, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

THE PLAYGROUND and GENERAL RECREATION SOCIETY.

PATRONESSES.

The Duchess (D.) of Norfolk.
The Lady Noel Byron.
The Hon. Mrs. Ashley.

PATRONS.

The Marquis of Westminster.
The Earl of Shaftesbury.
The Lord Bishop of London.
The Lord Henry Cholmondeley.
The Hon. W. Ashley.
The Rev. Canon Dale.

COMMITTEE.

The Hon. Mrs. Charles Boothby.
John Cassell, Esq.
The Rev. T. B. Coulson, M.A.
The Right Hon. W. F. Cowper, M.P.
Charles Dickens, Esq.
The Earl of Durham.
Mrs. De Morgan.
The Lord Ebury.
The Viscount Ebrington, M.P.
W. Ewart, Esq., M.P.
T. H. Farrer, Esq.
The Right Hon. H. Fitzroy, M.P.
The Rev. Edward Garbett, M.A.
Russell Gurney, Esq. (Recorder)
H. Harwood Harwood, Esq.
The Rev. H. J. Hatch, M.A.
Mrs. Howitt.
Herbert Ingram, Esq., M.P.
The Rev. Bennett Johns, M.A.
The Rev. D. Laing, M.A., F.R.S.
The Rev. Chas. Mackenzie, M.A.
The Rev. John Oliver, M.A.
The Lady Laura Palmer.
Miss Parkes.
J. H. Pepper, Esq.
The Lord Radstock.
C. Ratcliff, Esq.
Dr. Roth.
W. A. Rose, Esq., Ald.
Philip Smith, Esq.
The Earl Stanhope
R. A. Slaney, Esq., M.P.
The Rev. Edwd. Spooner, M.A.
Miss Twining.

HONORARY SOLICITOR.

W. Jesse Street, Esq.

AUDITORS.

Henry A. Bathurst, Esq.
Samuel Tomkins, Esq. (Messrs. Willis, Percival, & Co.)

BANKERS.

Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co., Birchin Lane, Cornhill.

SECRETARY.

Edward West, Esq., 17, Bull and Mouth Street, St. Martin's le Grand.

The streets of London, and of other large towns throughout the Kingdom, are said to furnish victims for every variety of temptation; and the experience of daily life will evidence how great are the bodily evils which arise to the children of our poor, from the necessity which now exists for their playing in crowded thoroughfares, and play they must—somewhere.

The want of Public Playgrounds has long been felt: this movement arose with a London Clergyman, whose dense parish induced him to seek, in June, 1857, for the formation of an Association to effect so desirable an object.

The idea was most favourably received by many influential parties; and a meeting was called in the month of August following, at which the Playground Society was established.

The Committee feel assured, that for the sake of society at large, as well as for that of the thousands of children whose interests, both bodily and spiritual, are concerned, the Public will come forward to aid them liberally in their effort to achieve a great public good. Even in the most dense neighbourhoods it is possible to make arrangements for the present, with the hope that changes of site and transfers of property may afford better opportunities in the future. One school in St. Martin's-in-the-Fields recently afforded an example of a method of meeting the want, by forming the playground in an upper story; and although the experiment did not succeed there, the idea may be applied usefully elsewhere.

Refuges and Reformatories are the Christian care of our time. This society designs prevention, and trusts to obviate, in many cases, the necessity for reform.

Contributions for local objects will be gladly accepted, under strict limitations to the neighbourhood in their expenditure; and promises of support from the nobility and gentry with reference to the cities and towns contiguous to their estates will be gratefully acknowledged by the Committee, who will be prepared to assist and guide local efforts, and who earnestly invite grants of land, which can by legally conveyed for the purpose.

The Society consists of Subscribing and Honorary Members, who are entitled to vote upon all questions at the Annual General Meetings; the former are qualified by an annual subscription of One Guinea, or a life donation of Ten Guineas; the latter comprise donors of sites, or any parties who have gratuitously assisted to convey sites. The subscriptions become due on the 1st of January in each year.

Bequests, whether in money, lands, or houses, entitle executors to be Life Members, in the proportion of one Life Member for each £50 (the names being taken in the order in which they are named in the will); and if the value of the bequest exceeds £1000, each executor is entitled to the same privilege for each thousand pounds beyond the first.

Donations and Annual Subscriptions of any amount will be thankfully received by the Bankers, Messrs. Williams, Deacon and Co., Birchin Lane, Cornhill: and by Edward West, Esq., Secretary, 17, Bull and Mouth Street, St. Martin's Le Grand;—who will with pleasure send for any contribution, upon receiving a notification to that effect.

Just Published, price 2d.,

THE EVILS OF WET-NURSING. A WARNING TO MOTHERS.

Prepared under the direction of the Committee of the Ladies' National Association for the Diffusion of Sanitary Knowledge.

London: GROOMBRIDGE and SONS.
Brighton: W. SIMPSON.

No. III. (October), price 1s.,

MELIORA. CONTENTS:—I. Life in Arcadia. II. Recent Travels in Norway. III. The Philosophy of Wages. IV. Social Claims and Aspects of Science. V. Genius and Prospects of the Negro. VI. History of the Struggle in Maine. VII. Caste.

London: PARTRIDGE and Co., Paternoster Row.

HARD WATER rendered as SOFT as RAIN WATER by the HOLLAND PATENT COMPOUND, by perfectly uninjurious and cheap means. Sold in packets of 1s., 6d., 2d., and 1d., at our Agents and some of the most respectable Oil and Colourmen, Grocers, and Chemists.

We beg to call the attention of the public, and especially of the Managers of Philanthropical Institutions, Laundries, &c., to this recent discovery, which supersedes entirely the use of soda, and is highly recommended by Dr. A. W. Hoffman, F.R.S., for washing and domestic use. All water softened and purified by its agency makes superior tea, remains quite sweet for several months, and is particularly adapted for shipping purposes.

For large quantities and particulars, apply at DE JONG and Co.'s, 8, Baynam Terrace, Camden Town, London, N.W.

IMPERIAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY,
1, Old Broad Street, London. Instituted 1820.

DIRECTORS.

Martin Tucker Smith, Esq., M.P., Chairman.
George William Cottam, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

Thos. George Barclay, Esq.
James C. C. Bell, Esq.
James Brand, Esq.
Charles Cave, Esq.
Geo. Henry Cutler, Esq.
Henry Davidson, Esq.
George Field, Esq.
George Hibbert, Esq.
Samuel Hibbert, Esq.
Thomas N. Hunt.
Jas. Gordon Murdoch, Esq.
Frederick Pattison, Esq.
William R. Robinson, Esq.
Newman Smith, Esq.

SECURITY.—The existing liabilities of the Company do not exceed £3,000,000. The investments are nearly £1,000,000, in addition to upwards of £600,000 for which the shareholders are responsible, and the income is about £120,000 per annum.

PROFITS.—Four-fifths, or 80 per cent. of the profits, are assigned to policies every fifth year. The next appropriation will be made in 1861, and persons who now effect insurances will participate rateably.

BONUS.—The additions to Policies have been from £1 10s. to £63 16s. per cent. on the original sums insured.

CLAIMS.—Upwards of £1,250,000 has been paid to claimants under policies.

Proposals for Insurances may be made at the Chief Office, as above; at the Branch Office, 16, Pall Mall, London; or to any of the Agents throughout the kingdom. SAMUEL INGALL, Actuary.

EMIGRATION to CANADA and the UNITED STATES, by Steamers INDIAN, from Liverpool, on 8th September, and LADY EGLINTON, from Galway, on 16th September; also by first-class fast-sailing Ships of the Liverpool and Quebec Line, sailing weekly during the season, and by Sailing Ships from London, Plymouth, and Bristol. Passengers of all classes booked throughout for one payment, at the lowest fares, including the railway fare from London to Liverpool. Goods and Parcels despatched at through rates, to all parts of Canada and the United States. Money Orders on Canada and Chicago granted.

For fares, dates of sailing, through tickets, the Government pamphlet (which is distributed gratis), and every information, apply to CARMAN and PEARSE (Grand Trunk Railway of Canada), 21, Old Broad Street, E.C.

BANK OF DEPOSIT,
Established A.D. 1844.
No. 3, PALL MALL EAST, LONDON.

PARTIES desirous of Investing Money are requested to examine the Plan of the BANK of DEPOSIT, by which a high rate of interest may be obtained with security.

Deposits made by Special Agreement, may be withdrawn without notice.

The interest is payable in January and July.

PETER MORRISON, Managing Director.

Forms for opening accounts sent free on application.

SPECIAL.—At a village named Morsang, about twenty-two miles from Paris, is a very interesting Institution for Orphan Children, not of French, but of English parentage. It was established some years ago by Mr. Argent, who, by private appeals to benevolent friends, has been able to procure funds for its subsistence. He has been in the actual labour of the Institution almost singlehanded.

Now, however, it is in great need of help. Several friends have feared that unless assistance be rendered, it will have to be given up; and they have determined to make the fact known at their own expense, by inserting this advertisement.

There are eighteen children in the Home. They are most interesting little girls—the orphans of clerks and others—a little above the position of servants, who have died on the Continent. They have been rescued from imminent peril. They were in danger of falling into the hands of the Jesuits, but were happily provided for.

Their cases are briefly as follows:—

F. and L. (sisters), aged 8 and 15. Both parents dead.
F. and M. (sisters), aged 9 and 12. Both parents dead.
A. and M. (sisters), aged 6 and 10. Both parents dead.
E., C., and A. (sisters), aged 7, 8, and 10. Fatherless.
M., W., and E. (sisters), aged 10, 12, and 15. Fatherless.
E. P., aged 9. Both parents dead.
E. S., aged 6. Both parents dead.
E. B., aged 12. Motherless.
E. R., aged 12. Fatherless.
L. F., aged 14. Both parents dead.
T. H., aged 7. Both parents dead.

To prevent the Institution being closed, and those dear children from being cast upon the world in a Popish land, a friend has proposed a gift of £20, conditionally, that an equal sum be given by four other persons.

May God dispose some benevolent hearts to come and assist in this contribution! Smaller sums will be gratefully received.

Please address Mrs. Buckmaster, 5, Bedford Square, London; Mrs. C. Streatfield, Cherts Edge, Westerham, Kent; or Mr. Daniel Cooper, 11, Poultry, London, E.C., Bankers to the Home; Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, and Co., 54, Lombard Street, London, E.C.; or the Editor of the Philanthropist, 337, Strand.

TO LADIES.—A Lady, whose residence is rather too retired and secluded, wishes to meet with a Lady who would become a near neighbour and occasional Companion. A Single or Widow Lady, possessing an annuity bordering on £100, or a capital of about £2000, might, in the first instance, board with the advertiser, and be introduced to such society as the advertiser believes would prove of material service in promoting such a lady's happiness, as well as that of others. A reply would be considered confidential, and be honourably treated, and references given to families of distinction; therefore no one need reply who cannot, if required, give satisfactory references. Address by letter C. W. M. D., General Post Office, Worcester.

TO THE BENEVOLENT.—A Married Lady (the orphan daughter of a Clergyman) in very destitute circumstances, and now entirely dependent on charity for her support, seeks the aid of the benevolent to ASSIST her in obtaining a Light Business to keep herself and two young children from absolute want. The highest references can be given on application to the Rev. J. VALE, Mummery, Warren Cottage, Dalston, N.E., and at 19, Paternoster Row, E.C.; or to the Editor of the "Philanthropist," care of Mr. Tweedie, 337, Strand, by either of whom any contributions will be thankfully received.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN BREWER. Containing Practical Instructions by which any man can brew his own Beer, equal to the best London Porter, at 4d. per gallon; Stout at 5d., and a variety of Ales at a proportionate expense. Also, Instructions for making Soda Water in Bottles, without a machine, at a cost of 5d. per dozen, fully equal to the best machine-made article. Also, Ærated Lemonade, Ginger Beer, Fruit Beverages, and Ærated Mineral Waters.

Sent free for 24 stamps, by Mr. Clarkson, 35, Chancery Lane; and of Piper and Co., Paternoster Row; and by order of all Booksellers.

CLOVE PINK PRESERVATIVE
TOOTH PASTE.

For Removing Tartar from the Teeth and Scurvy from the Gums, without injuring the Enamel, giving them a pearly Whiteness, and the flavour being most agreeable.

1s. per Pot.

Prepared by GEORGE W. LANE,
13, Rathbone Place, Oxford Street, London.
AGENT for CONDY'S NATURAL DISINFECTANT.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE,

October 1, 1858.

Index.

Self-improvement of the Working Classes . . 221
Borough of Salford—Superannuation Fund . . 225
Girls' Industrial Home, St. Matthew's, Ipswich . 227
Editorial Articles:
Ladies' National Association for the Diffusion of Sanitary Knowledge 228
Johnston the Cutler 229
Associated Farming 230
Workhouse Visiting Society 231
St. James's Back Ragged School, Bristol . . 232
Beerhouses 232
Archdeacon Denison's Harvest-Home . . . 233
Education 234
The Gaol of Newgate 234
The Oldmill Reformatory, Aberdeen . . . 235
Correspondence:
Case of Rev. J. K. Walpole 235
The National Association for the Promotion of Social Science 235
The Orphan Home at Morsang-sur-Seine . . 236
Associated Farming 236

SELF-IMPROVEMENT OF THE WORKING CLASSES.

On Saturday evening, September 25th, Dr. Booth, F.R.S., delivered a lecture at the Leeds Mechanics' Institution, on the Self-Improvement of the Working Classes —the Right Hon. M. T. Baines, M.P., in the chair. Dr. Booth spoke as follows:—

I am here this evening to talk to you about the self-improvement of the working classes. And by the term working classes, I would be understood to mean not merely those who day by day spend their bodily strength in the performance of unskilled labour, I would not confine it even to those who exercise some manual craft, requiring perhaps the greatest nicety of touch, or skill of hand, or judgment in execution —men who, as Mr. Stephenson the other day observed, alone rendered that practicable which science pronounced to be possible – but I would extend the sense of the term so as to include all those as well who, by the patient exercise of their talents, strive to the utmost of their power, and with the full force of an earnest will, to discharge the duties of the station—be that what it may—in which God has willed to place them. I draw the line between the workers and the drones of society. There is, too, a peculiar propriety in an address on self-improvement, delivered from this place, and in the week during which the British Association holds its annual migratory session in this town. For where in the annals of the present time shall we find names more illustrious than those on the past and present rolls of the British Association? Such men are living examples to you of the practicability and the power of self-improvement. For to what do those distinguished men owe their present high position as lights of science, and as instructors of their kind, but to their singleness of purpose, their unswerving application and continuity of thought? You are not to attribute their acquirements or trace their discoveries to the possession of external advantages, such as wealth or station, or leisure, or access to libraries, or laboratories, or museums. Nay, so far from these external aids being indispensable helps to improvement, they often damp the ardour of exertion. Many a one so placed has said, "Why should I, who have nothing to hope and nothing to fear, strive to acquire the laborious habit of sustained exertion?" They must be made of finer mould who in the very temple of luxury and before the shrine of fashion can

"Scorn delights and live laborious days."

Take this great truth with you, which has been but too often overlooked, you cannot set up the understanding to work but through the feelings. Show a man that something is desirable in itself, and possible of attainment, and you set the intellect in motion to compass means to acquire it. External advantages, believe me, seem to give more real aids than they in reality confer. The ivy ornaments the oak round which it twines its graceful foliage, but saps its strength and vigour. The British Association is itself a conspicuous example of the great truth that we must move the intellect through the emotions. Far other than mathematical investigations, or chemical researches, are the immediate objects of those scientific gatherings. He must, indeed, be little acquainted with the action of the human mind, when engaged in the pleasing tasks of philosophical investigation, who expects that these processes can be conducted with success in crowded assemblies, when the feelings are excited and the attention is distracted. Far other are their uses. They supply to the solitary student, to the humble searcher of truth, those motives to labour which are denied him from the hope of wealth, or title, or power. To supply incentives to exertion, to honour those who are honoured nowhere else, is their legitimate province. It is the appropriate mission of such meetings to draw forth and encourage modest genius and retiring merit that shrinks within itself by the countenance of numbers, and the sympathies of genius, and the approbation of the wise. My address to you here this evening will have amply done its work if I can succeed in enforcing this one great stern truth upon your minds, worth a volume of complimentary platitudes, that your improvement rests mainly with yourselves. If you do not strive with your utmost energies to succeed, you must not cast the blame of your failure on the want of books, or the absence of teachers, or the lack of apparatus. These things are all very well in their way, but they are not the one thing needful. He to whom God has given a fair average understanding, and health of body, but gifted with unswerving will, untiring perseverance, and unyielding tenacity of purpose, possesses within himself the true elements of success. And if it should so be that he is not to win, for the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, let him not repine, for such a one will at least enjoy that of which no chance can deprive him, the soothing consciousness that at all events he had done his duty. Again, to you who are not over quick in learning, I would say, be not disheartened. Learning is very often like money—"Soon got, soon gone." Some persons learn with marvellous rapidity, but soon forget what they thus soon learn, while others learn very slowly, but retain what they do learn with astonishing tenacity. Some men's brains would seem to be as soft as putty, while those of others are as hard as ivory. Therefore, aptitude in itself, without reference to other qualities, is no criterion of the intrinsic power or value of any man's intellect. Slowness frequently arises, not from stupidity, but from the resistance the mind exhibits to weigh arguments or to examine facts from new points of view. No one considers that the softness of lead is more to be prized than the hardness of silver. Besides, a man may have a fine intellect, but not possess the moral qualities that would enable him to use it to the best advantage—such as decision, promptitude, energy and perseverance. Much in the same way as a woodman may have a very fine and keen axe, but of what value will it be to him if he had lost the use of his arms. If you fail in your first effort try again and again. Thousands no wiser, no better than yourselves, have tried and succeeded before you, why should not you? They who the other day laid the great Atlantic cable twice failed in their attempt, and were deeply discouraged by the tremendous obstacles they encountered. Did they give over their exertions and abandon the attempt? No. They tried again, and at last achieved a splendid success. Let this be a lesson to you. You may fail in a first, or second, or a third attempt, to kindle the sympathetic spark of knowledge in your minds, or to bring them into contact with the truths before you. Do not, therefore, give over—your efforts, in all likelihood, will be crowned with success at last. I would earnestly desire once more to impress this great truth on your minds, and it cannot be too deeply sunk into them—that your power of learning does not so much depend on what is called talent or cleverness as on the ability to bring the whole force of the understanding to bear upon a single point and to keep it there. But this has been overlooked. Talent and ability have been prized as if they were the great elements of success, while power of concentration, a great and rare gift, has been undervalued as plodding. Many vain persons desire to have it said of themselves that they never work, that they learn intuitively, that they can master any subject that comes before them without the need of plodding over it, and other like foolish boasting. Now, should you meet with such persons, you may be sure, either that they do not tell the truth, or that the knowledge they have is not worth having, at least in the way they possess it. There is nothing more certain than that the amount of knowledge which any man has acquired, is directly proportioned to the quantity of mental labour he has expended in its acquisition. There is nothing new in all this. It would indeed be very strange were it otherwise. The Almighty has laid down the irreversible decree that labour shall be the condition of acquirement, whether it be knowledge or habit, or mental accomplishment, or manual dexterity, or wealth, or position. Expenditure of muscular force or intellectual energy is the price we must pay. True, men sometimes labour and do not acquire, while others enjoy the rewards of industry without any equivalent labour, as if a man should stumble on a treasure by accident. But there is this great essential difference between personal and external acquisitions, that in the former case it is our personal labour that is the ordained equivalent, while in the latter case the labours of others will suffice. Thus a man is a duke because his father happened to be one before him, but no one can claim genius or learning as his inheritance. A lord chancellor transmits his peerage and his fortune to his heir, but not his eloquence or his varied knowledge. These illustrations may seem trite, but they confirm the great moral truth, that, for every acquisition, we must pay an equivalent price, sometimes the labour of a whole life. It will follow from this that men cannot acquire, or at all events assimilate, knowledge so as actually to work it into the very warp and texture of the mind by listening passively to instruction. What you want is to work knowledge inch by inch into your own minds, not merely to listen to a man who has got it already, dealing it out by the yard; you can no more think with another man's brains than you can walk with another man's legs. You here present this evening, the representatives of a powerful and mighty class—the workmen of England—enjoy many advantages which your fathers never expected, never hoped to see, and it will be my duty now to place some of them before you. It has become popular to encourage mechanics' institutions, to provide libraries, museums, and reading-rooms for periodicals and newspapers. However much it may be the fashion to decry the reading of newspapers, we must not forget that through them we live in our own time. They teach us how to modify the ever-changing features of the present, while history only deals with the immobility of the irreversible past. You have encouragements which those who went before you never had, nor hoped to see. Some fifty years ago, had a young man attempted to improve his condition, as I hope you all do now, he would have been looked upon with suspicion and dislike as a discontented man, or even as a disaffected person who was not satisfied with the station in which God had placed him, but forgetting the humility that belonged to his condition, was contriving how to raise himself out of his proper place, his reprovers choosing to forget that they were doing the very same thing themselves, using up every energy of mind and body in the pursuit of places, pensions, and titles. You know how men in your own class who formerly pursued knowledge under difficulties were forced to study in the hours filched from the scanty time allowed for sleep, how they were compelled to beg or borrow old books here and there; how nobody, save only those very near and dear, felt any sympathy with their pursuits, and sometimes not even these; how they received no word of encouragement, nobody to bid them God speed. You know how often the rare knowledge thus laboriously and painfully acquired, died with them, for the opportunity to use it never came. They laboured not seldom without hope. Let not your labours fall short of theirs. Such were the difficulties that men like Watt and Arkwright, and Brindley and Gifford, and George Stephenson and Chantrey, and a thousand others, had to contend with. You have not fallen on their evil days. You live when public meetings like this are assembled to show you sympathy and to give you encouragement. Libraries are built and endowed for you by the munificence even of private persons, as Mr. W. Brown did some short time since at Liverpool. Parks are planted and laid out and then made over for your use as Mr. Crossley recently set the example at Halifax. I would not omit your parks and pleasure grounds, and healthy sports—all are instruments of instruction, and means of education. The influences thus in operation throughout the country are vast, and work together for good. There are your churches and chapels, your Sunday-schools and evening classes, your newspapers and broad sheets, your public libraries and your railway literature, your lectures and your examinations. Then you have extraordinary facilities for travelling. There are your steamboats and railways, and you have your cheap letter postage and your book-post. That is the best education, which, like our own population, is made up of many different elements all converging to and uniting in one great end, the happiness and well-being of the whole. Indeed, the means of self-improvement at the present day are far greater than any former period of this world's history. For only consider the wide interval that lies between the massive black letter volume chained to its desk, with padlocked iron chain, and the railway volume or the penny tract. There are no mysteries either in literature or science now. When a man makes a discovery of any importance or of no importance, he hastes to make it known. In our own day has not the instantaneous transmission of knowledge become the crowning marvel of science, flashing upon us, as it were, a glimpse of the mysterious power and universal presence of Him "who maketh a way in the sea and a path in the mighty waters?" Such, then, are the facilities which are offered to you. We could not in our times have a Gifford working his problems on a bit of old leather with an awl, when he might have an Euclid for the asking. Indeed, I have serious doubts whether there are not too many books to be had. It requires time to digest reading as well as food, and the quantities of both must be kept within due limits if one would have regard to the health of the mind as well as the body. Avoid dreaming over a book. Do not skim over volumes. If they are good they deserve careful perusal; if they are worthless throw them aside. Many persons have a notion that when they get through a book as they do through an article in a newspaper, they have mastered its contents. They have fallen far short of anything of the kind. To read a book in such a way as to acquire a thorough knowledge of it, if the book be worth reading, you must deal with it as a lawyer does with a brief; you must pencil-mark the important passages, underscore the points which the author makes, interline his arguments, and number his propositions. Then make an abstract of it, a little practice will give you facility. You will be agreeably surprised in the first place at the clearness and precision of your knowledge of the book, and in the next place, you will be astonished to find within how small a compass the essence of a volume of considerable bulk may be condensed. When you try this experiment, you will be surprised to find how much even well-written books contain of matter that is either superfluous or irrelevant, or mere twaddle. But this, perhaps some of you will say, "This way of reading would take a great deal of time, would cost a world of trouble, and be a very irksome process besides. And how could we afford to spend so much time and take so much pains with one book, while new ones shower down upon us as thick as leaves in autumn." Just so, and hence the truth of the old saying. Beware of the results of concentrated attention and exact study. Multifarious reading so confuses the memory and dilutes its attention, that it scarcely retains the flavour of any. I have said the only way to set the intellect in motion is through our passions and affections. The road to the head lies through the heart. Now, I cannot help thinking that a franchise based on education and intelligence, as well as property, would be a wise and conservative measure. I am well aware, the education franchise has been ridiculed. Indeed almost every wise innovation on established notions has had to undergo what Lord Shaftesbury long ago called the test of truth. But, for my part, I cannot see, why a man's knowledge and attainments are not as worthy of weight in the government of the country as a miserable hovel, or tumble-down old tenement, rated at 5*l.* a-year. Would not the intelligent living man be as solid a buttress of the state as dead stone walls? Besides, in these reforming times, you must ever bear in mind that it is on the intelligence and independence of your constituencies, not on mere crowds of venal voters, in which all sense of responsibility is lost, that the conservation of your freedom depends. You may have universal suffrage side by side with the most absolute despotism. All history, even the most recent, proves this. The liberties of the country do not depend on the purity of this or that constituency, or the integrity of this or that honourable member, they rest on the strength of a sound and undaunted public opinion, developed by the press, and manifested through your public meetings. Nothing can be more sensitive to public opinion, or more clearly indicate its prevailing tendency than the state of the political barometer, if I may so call it, in the Legislature. It responds to every passing phase. Even the House of Lords, which in theory stands entirely out of the shade of such influences, is just as sensitive as if the peers had to canvass for a renewal of their peerages at an annual popular election. Nothing can be more fatal, as all history shows, than the exercise of dominant political influence by a people, whose intelligence and patriotism fall short of their power, and whose responsibility is not controlled by the consciousness of duty. It is on these grounds that I look upon the intelligence of our constituencies as a far more important consideration than their numerical amount. Provide for their intelligence, and make them as numerous as you please. Instruct them in their duties, and tell them how freedom, the birthright of every Saxon, is enjoyed alone by Englishmen and their descendants. Let them learn, too, how other nations once were free, but lost their freedom, because they abused it, or knew not how to preserve it. Show how much wiser it is to repair and to restore than to pull down and to demolish. Make them understand how a state of progressive development is just as natural to the growth of society as it is to any other growth, whether animal or vegetable; that it may be stunted or indefinitely retarded, but can rarely be accelerated. Show how internal change may be consistent with the most perfect security, and be essential to the welfare of the whole, just as the oscillations of the ocean, while they do not affect its mean stability, are the condition of life for all within its bosom. Teaching these principles of political action and conservative renovation you need not dread the extension of your right of suffrage, and you will breathe into them the living force of religious conviction—by showing how they flow from the letter and the spirit of the Gospel, that great charter of human freedom wrested from no earthly sovereign but the free gift of the Eternal King. I do not advocate the notion that an education franchise should give the right of voting for special members, just as a university degree confers the privilege of returning university representatives. All I contend for is this, that education, information, skill, and general intelligence should qualify their possessor to exercise those rights which it is proposed freely to confer on the renter of a hovel at 1*s.* 10*d.* a-week. But a much higher boon and far more valuable privilege has been conferred upon the middle and lower classes of this country by an Act of Parliament passed last session. For the first time in the history of this country, one of you may claim, as a matter of right, and not of grace, to show that you are worthy to serve the State in an official capacity: Though the people at large, from time immemorial, have taken part in the legislation of the country through their representatives in Parliament, no man could enter the executive departments of the State, or lay claim to any of its offices, even the poorest or the meanest, but through the favour of somebody, who had himself been appointed through the favour of somebody else. Thus the service of the State was damaged and degraded. Its offices were bartered away in the discharge of personal obligations. The merit or fitness of those nominated was notoriously the very last thing taken into account. But now all this is changed, or in a state of transition; and the corrupting influence of private patronage in the disposal of first appointments is rapidly passing away. The civil service is recruited from a wide circle of selected candidates, and I trust will soon be thrown open to the widest competition. Commissions in the artillery and engineers are made the rewards of industry and talent. But above and beyond all, the vast continent and teeming population of India are now brought into closer control with the talent, the energy, the perseverance, the morality, and the Christianity of England. And they who for the time to come are to represent this country in its relations with India are to be selected men, men who are to be openly chosen on the ground of tested competence and proved ability, not nominated through personal favour, as the acknowledgment of private friendship or political obligation. Any one who pleases may claim to be examined for an Indian appointment, under certain obvious restrictions, and if successful he will be as a matter of course appointed. And it is specially worthy of remark how, at the late examination for the Indian service, fully one-third were neither from colleges nor schools. What a noble function and grand prerogative for Lord Stanley. With him will rest the organization and constitution of that machinery for testing the qualifications of those who offer to serve their country in India. The system now about to be established will exert full as important an influence on the direction and progress of education in this country, as it will bring to bear on the well-being and happiness of the millions subjected to our rule throughout the vast regions of Southern Asia. The introduction, extension, and establishment of the principle of throwing open admissions into the public service to general and almost unrestricted competition, is beyond all others the great charter of education reform. It will not only raise the standard of mental ability and average acquirements amongst those who may desire to obtain public appointments, but it will stimulate the general education of the country, deepen its earnestness, and improve its tone. High praise they indeed have earned (and the gratitude of the country is due to those young men), who, without either wealth or rank, or official connection, have forced their way into the reluctant service of the State, and have given ample practical proof that genius and integrity may exist together, and that talent is not incompatible with common sense. You must not be surprised at the interest I feel in this matter; long ago I worked out this great problem, step by step, how a national education, using the phrase in its widest sense, might be most effectually promoted. In October, 1847, just eleven years ago, I published the conclusion to which I had arrived in a pamphlet under the title "Examination the Province of the State, or the Outlines of a Practical System for the Extension of National Education." It was but little noticed at the time, although the late Bishop of London and Mr. Gladstone were pleased to speak favourably of it, and Lord Lyttelton at Birmingham the other day attested the justice of my claim to be considered the originator of this great movement. It was in advance of its time. I will only add that though during the last three years I have had much practical experience in the organizing and working of examinations, and have read nearly everything that has been written about them, I have nothing to alter and but little to add to what I had then written. You will find in it every feature of the plan organized by me for the Society of Arts, and of the present Oxford scheme. In 1852 I joined the Society of Arts with the sole object of testing the soundness of my theory as applied to the improvement of education in the mechanics' institutions of the kingdom, which I learned were about to form a union with the Society of Arts. In 1854, when the principle had as yet made but little way with the public, I lectured in St. Martin's Hall on examination as an instrument of education. I mention these matters personal to myself with some reluctance, because attempts have been made to ignore or give the credit to others of what I have done to promote this movement. But the highest sanction which the principle of the examination has as yet received is from the University of Oxford. Mr. Temple, now Dr. Temple, and head master of Rugby School, at that time a member of the board of examiners of the Society of Arts in April, 1857, a few weeks before the Huddersfield examination, wrote a letter to Dr. Jeune, of Pembroke College, Oxford, calling his attention to the success of the Society of Arts scheme of examinations, and pointing out how desirable it was that the University of Oxford should occupy the ground which a private body like the Society of Arts could not cover. The University of Oxford responded with much energy and public spirit to Mr. Temple's proposal. Of the remarkable success which their first experimental trial has achieved you are no doubt aware. Now, I believe that no small share of that success was due to this—that the Oxford examiners adopted with little or no modification those features of the Society of Arts' scheme which in practice were found to work so well. They selected a number of populous, important, and accessible centres. They conducted the examinations at these centres under the personal superintendence of men of eminence deputed by the university to preside. And above all, they retained in their own hands that which is by far the most important feature in these schemes—the preliminary examination. They did not leave it to the loose judgment or undefined discretion of discordant local boards acting without either unity of proceeding or pre-arranged standard of comparison to decide who had passed a satisfactory examination in those humble but all essential elements of every man's education, those vulgar matters called reading, writing, spelling, and the common rules of arithmetic. In the scheme of which I was the author, and in the present Oxford plan, these much-despised subjects stood in the highest rank, and were of paramount importance. For what is the use of a man's algebra if he cannot work a sum correctly in the rule of three? An acquaintance with the common facts of English history will not compensate mistakes in spelling the English language. Of what avail will this certificate of merit be if he cannot write a common business letter? These are the points to which the very eminent men who constituted the late board of examiners of the Society of Arts chiefly directed their attention; and their published reports called public notice to their importance. That this importance was not overrated we have now the evidence of the late Oxford examinations, in which the extraordinary number of 700 out of 1000 candidates were rejected for ignorance and inaccuracy in the very elements of education. The mechanics' institutions have now lost the means of applying a uniform and precise standard to test the soundness of that instruction which, beyond all other, is of the most surpassing importance in their classes, instruction in the very ground of all knowledge. It is indeed much to be deplored by all true friends of popular advancement through the aid of this and other like institutions, that a scheme of examination which had received the warm support of the principal mechanics' institutes, which was highly popular, and likely to be of great benefit to those who toiled early and late for their own self-improvement, should have been wilfully broken-up and wantonly destroyed, merely to see how another scheme might be made to run that once refused to go. But enough of this. There must be a strong living principle in mechanics' institutions. They must meet a great national want, and supply a great social deficiency, for they are sometimes mismanaged, often get into debt, and frequently lose sight of the great objects for which they were founded. They were long suspected, their views were misrepresented, and they came into collision from time to time with the natural prejudices of very powerful bodies. Such mistakes and such opposition would have swept away associations far more wealthy and far more powerful than they. But notwithstanding all this they grow, they multiply, they live down opposition. And whence this tenacity of life? Because they are not based upon a fleeting popularity; because they are not mere instruments in the hands of this or that political party, but because they have their foundations deep down in the hearts of the people. Indeed the statistics of your great Yorkshire Union are most encouraging. Truly gratifying must they be to those who early saw the great value of those bodies, and upwards of twenty years ago laid the foundation of this great Yorkshire Association. I find that the total number of the members is nearly 23,000, that between 7000 and 8000 pupils are attending the classes of its united institutions, nearly as many as are receiving instruction in the universities of Oxford and Cambridge combined. But he who should take these statistics, gratifying though they be, as the measure of their usefulness on the limit of their success, would, indeed, much underrate their vast influence for good. No statistics could record the amount of their unseen action and their undetected influences for good. They are felt in the stray volume borrowed from the library, and read by the winter fireside in many an humble dwelling. They are felt no less in the earnest lecture casually heard. They, too, are felt in the village applause which awaits him on his return who carries back with him the Oxford testimonial or the Society of Arts certificate. Many a youth will thus be urged to follow the example of his neighbour, or class-fellow, or fellow-workman. Who shall say through what depths the electric spark of knowledge may have flashed on the minds of the working classes' of this country? Such are the benefits which mechanics' institutions confer, and I cannot but think—and there are many who think with me—that had the mechanics' institutions of England an organization of their own, controlled by themselves, an organization which should have set no other object before it but their welfare, order and system, and, above all, continuity of action, would be secured to an extent which few who have not mastered the details of the question can adequately realise. I cannot help believing that more would be accomplished in this way to consolidate the institutions, to create a common bond of sympathy, to secure an uniformity of action, and a general participation of privileges, than any amount of government support or doles of public money could confer. For only consider how small the chance, how remote the prospect of anything being done in this way. For many years past modern Cabinets in this country, especially since the Reform Bill, have abandoned the initiative functions of Government. They are now mere administrations—that is to say, the Ministry of the day (whether it be Whig or Tory, Radical or Conservative, makes no difference) administers the affairs of the country, while the country governs itself. Hence it is, that every Ministry, being fully occupied in discharging the executive duties which day by day they are obliged to dispatch, have neither the time nor the inclination to discuss speculative reforms. Hence, too, no Government brings in or attempts to carry any measure in these days on its own responsibility, or on the ground of its abstract excellence or legislative fitness. It must be urged from without. Popular opinion must be decidedly expressed in favour of a measure before any Government will even entertain it; hence the need of pressure from without. Hence it is that Governments are squeezeable. Consequently as the country happens to be very much divided on this question of education, everybody having his own specific cure, and applauding his own nostrum, you may clearly see the reason why it is utterly hopeless to expect the Government to do more than it is doing at present. In a letter which I addressed some time ago to the managers of an important institution, I said—"Now that this question of education has been discussed for so many years in all its political, religious, and social aspects, without any mutual approximation of the several adverse parties, and a natural solution in which all shall agree would seem now to be as far off as ever, would it not be the wiser course to give over wrangling, and with the means at hand endeavour to effect something practical and try to obtain a result." But there is yet another phase of self-improvement, which I shall only touch upon, and with great brevity, for I have too long occupied your attention—I mean female education. The methods I have advised you to follow, the arguments I have urged to stimulate you to exertions, are all adapted to promote your intellectual improvement, and indirectly your moral culture as well. But be assured of this, if you would have a truly moral, religious, and temperate population, you must provide for the careful education of your young women. They have their rights and their duties as well as we, and why should they not be trained to discharge them? Now, I tell you, that neither your institutions, much as I admire them, nor your lectures, nor your sermons, will secure your moral elevation until you begin at the beginning, and make the education of your girls a very different thing from what it is. Mind I do not say that your classes, and your lectures, and your examinations will not make you cleverer, will not give you clearer views as to your own interest, and thus save you from becoming the dupes of the designing. They will do all this, and more, they will improve your minds and make you better workmen, but they will not advance your moral improvement to the same extent. I have been led to make these few remarks on this subject, from reading the report of the Huddersfield Female Institute, associated with the admirable Mechanics' Institution of that town. I regret to see that female education is very much overlooked. I do not mean book learning merely, but your young women do not appear to get that kind of instruction, that sort of training that would qualify them to be good wives, thrifty housekeepers, and, above all, intelligent mothers. While your intellectual progress depends on the energy of your application and the concentration of your attention, your moral advancement will be moulded by the habits you form. A youth receives his intellectual bias at the lecture, or in the class room, but his moral education will take its hue from what takes place at home. This constitutes the great difference between instruction and education. Men are trained up to, not lectured into, sobriety, piety, truthfulness, and the like. The fact is our virtues are habits, not beliefs. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." A truer or pithier maxim has not been uttered since. Habits, as we all know, are formed by the repetition of acts of the same kind. Good habits cannot be acquired by passively listening to good precepts. They must be worked in the body, or the mind, by the active imitation of suitable examples. Principles may be sown broadcast over the mind, but if they are not worked into it, and take root in it, using the husbandry of habit, of what use are they? They only serve to show the foulness and the extent of the moral quicksands in which we are plunged. It is true that good principles, though visible to none, must underlie good habits which are patent to all, much in the same way as the roots of a tree that are covered by the soil, supply sustenance to its trunk, its branches, its leaves, its blossoms, and its fruit, which gladden the landscape with their beauty. From the luxuriance of the foliage, and the flavour of the fruit which we see and taste, we might infer the soundness and vigour of the roots beneath. So it is with principles in reference to habits. Hence it is that home, the parents' fireside, is, or ought to be, the pure spring whence all our social virtues, religious habits, kindly affections, love of kindred, love of country, and love of God, swell up and overflow. Now when we speak of home, and home influences as regards the working classes, we must refer chiefly to the wife and mother. The working man sees but little of his children on week days; he goes to his early work before his children are awake, and when he returns home late in the evening, they will have gone to sleep. Therefore, among the working classes, the father can exercise but little influence on the habits of his children. It rests almost entirely with the mother. The mother has in the training and education of the children, to take the place of both parents. She is the centre of home influence. She it is who is to set the guiding example of sobriety, thrift, truth, cleanliness, and godliness. She ought, therefore, to know something of housekeeping, a little of cooking; she ought to know how to clean up a house, to wash, to market, to mend and to make; and, above all, she should know her duties to herself, her family, and her God. You must not imagine that books and book learning, though no doubt the principal, are the only instruments of education. Men have been trained and educated before the invention of writing or letters. It is doubtful whether Homer could read or write, yet where is the poetry that will live so long. I have no sympathy with that cramming, miscalled instruction, which consists in shovelling into the mind and cramming the memory with odds and ends, and bits and scraps of unconnected facts jumbled together. Much good surely it must do a young woman who is about to take on herself the arduous duties of a wife and mother, doubly arduous in her condition, to be able to answer by rote who built the pyramids? Where was Babylon? Who was Cyrus or Tiberius Cæsar? What was Pompey? But I cannot dwell longer on this deeply-interesting question, I will leave it to your own good sense and high feeling to endeavour to contrive some remedy for this state of things. I have spoken plainly to you—for you who are engaged in, or are about to enter on, a course of self-improvement, I have not glossed over the ruggedness of the difficulties you will meet and which you must labour to overcome. Neither on the other hand have I overstated your inducements to exertion. They are indeed many, and are becoming greater every day. But some of you may in your hearts reply, or some who may wish to keep you in ignorance may answer for you, "You talk to us about work and drudgery. Have we not enough of it during the day without giving our evenings to it likewise? Why should we take upon ourselves all this labour? Why should we face this heavy work?" I will tell you the reason why. Because it is a duty to yourselves and to those who are dependent on you and look up to you. Because it is your duty to Him who has endowed you with faculties and capacities, who, in bestowing them upon you, manifestly intended that they should not remain idle, or continue undeveloped. That such was the design of Providence may, I think, be argued from this, that there is a progression in the discovery of truth and the development of knowledge. It has not been discovered all at once. Those who have gone before us did not bring to light all the golden ore either of mind or matter. Even in that, the most ancient, and the most exact of all the sciences, geometry, so entirely independent of external aids and instrumental helps, we find the rate of discovery as rapid now as in any former time. Lord Brougham, in his admirable edition of "Newton's Principia," with that felicity of diction which stands in need of no eulogy of mine, observes, "There is a kind of law which seems to regulate the progress of human improvement—a law of continuity, which apparently prevents any sudden, and as it were violent change from being made in the intellectual condition of the species, and prescribes the unfolding of all great truths by slow degrees, each mighty discovery being preceded by others only less considerable than itself and conducting towards it. The great discoveries in pure mathematics affords striking examples of this truth." Nothing can be more profoundly just than these observations of Lord Brougham. The fertility of nature is inexhaustible—one discovery is but the harbinger of another, uno avulso non deficit alter. It is more in accordance with that adaptation of means to end which so far as it has been permitted us to know prevails throughout creation—more in accordance with the uniformity and stability of nature to hold, that so long as man's understanding shall continue as it is, pleased with research and delighted with discovery, new truths and unforeseen relations will be developed and evolved in the same rich profusion as at present. Let no searcher after truth for its own sake be cast down or disquieted as if nothing remained to reward his labours. The field is perfectly inexhaustible. Do not for a moment imagine that I advise you to join these classes with the assured expectation that by so doing you are, through your diligence and industry, to obtain some high social position on which you may have set your hearts. Avoid such day dreaming; it leads only to disappointment. Leave the future in the hands of Him who will decide better for you than you can for yourselves. It has been said, "Whatever is, is best." Enter the classes with the hope that your diligence and industry, your energy and perseverance, shall at length place you in the proud position of that servant to whom the talents were entrusted. I repeat, it is a man's duty, if God has endowed him with any choice talent or rare gift, to cultivate that talent or amplify that gift to the utmost, for we know that it has been given with an object, and that is to use and not abuse it. It is very frequently said, with a view I presume to discourage such studies by the working classes, that a man after the work of the day is disqualified by his previous bodily exertion for taking up any subject of study. This is a great error. A man who is engaged all the day in business, or labour, or out-door employment, when he returns home from his work in the evening, finds it a positive relief to take up a book or subject of study, because in so doing he brings into action a set of faculties that were dormant during the day. This is the reason why so many merchants, men of business, and artizans have been so distinguished for their attainments in literature and science. The body may be worn down with fatigue while the mind continues vigorous and fresh; even extreme old age, while it paralyzes and debilitates the bodily powers, often but purifies, exalts, and strengthens the faculties of the mind, as if the decay of the body had "purged its visual nerve," and had removed that corporeal film which so often dims in early youth and manhood the eye of the understanding. And now let me not tresspass further upon your attention, but bring my observations to a close by saying that idleness and ignorance are so costly that we can ill afford to pay for them. They press heavily on our resources; only consider the yearly amount of our national poor rates. Are they expended on the self-instructed artizan or the industrious mechanic? Are not our workhouse paupers notoriously the handless, the headless, and the thriftless? If by some miraculous interposition they could be transformed into moral and industrious workmen, what an accession would it be to the wealth, and, above all, to the true well-being of the country. Yet nineteen out of the twenty of those paupers might have been trained to this. Again, take our convict population, our ticket-of-leave system, and our commercial immorality. Does not crime prevail to an extent in other countries unknown? Let us then set our house in order. We have now happily concluded our wars and put down our rebellions, there is a lull in the political horizon. Now is the time to strengthen its walls and to repair its bulwarks. We cannot afford to waste our population either in mind or body. We are actually too few in number for the gigantic work we have undertaken, even if the powers and faculties of every man in the kingdom were developed to the utmost. Meetings are held, speeches made, societies formed, money subscribed, and rewards offered for improving the stock of our horses, sheep and oxen, but man is looked upon as one of those worthless animals that are beneath our care. Whether man physically deteriorates or not but little concerns ourselves, yet it is a subject worthy of our most serious consideration. When we know that to crowd men into vast overgrown cities, to shut them up in huge mills, factories, and workshops, breathing cotton flue and pernicious fumes and deleterious gases, has a tendency to shorten life, and to embody it while it does last in a feeble, rickety frame, the conclusion forces itself upon us that exercise and amusements for the people in the open air should be encouraged to the utmost. This is too wide and serious a subject to be handled at the close of a lecture. For conquest and for victory have we not done enough? The whole of Eastern Asia lies at our feet. Those vast regions called China are for the first time in the history of mankind thrown open to the enterprise of the West. Let us for the future show those subject races that we govern for their good. At home let us direct our energies to social improvement. We cannot afford to pass by in silence the menaces of the unscrupulous and the powerful, nor need Cherbourg fright the isle from its propriety. Ours is indeed a glorious destiny, if we shall only approve ourselves worthy of it. Obstacles that apparently will terminate our progress serve only to accelerate our advancement. Subject races rise up against us only to draw forth our hidden strength, and to develop our latent resources. Even nature herself becomes our ally, and reveals to our astonished gaze those secrets which had been treasured in her bosom since the birth of time. The electric nerve will thrill for us beneath the depths of the ocean, and flash intelligence from Whitehall to our most remote possessions. Great are our privileges, deep our responsibilities, urgent are our duties, God grant that we—unlike other nations that have gone before us—shall prove ourselves not unequal to the charge, lest the Nemesis of nations that tracks the steps of the victors shall overtake us at the last, and we too shall pass away.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

BOROUGH OF SALFORD.

THE following Report has been issued by the borough-treasurer on the proposed establishment of a Police Superannuation Fund.

To the Watch Committee of the Borough of Salford.

GENTLEMEN,

In compliance with the Resolution of your Committee, I beg to submit the following report on the proposed establishment of a Police Superannuation Fund in Salford.

I purpose 1st—To ascertain the powers now possessed by the Watch Committees of Boroughs to grant Rewards, Gratuities, or Superannuation Allowances to Constables.

2ndly.—To examine in what respect these powers are defective, and to suggest a remedy.

And 3rdly.—To make an estimate on the plan proposed of the Income and Expenditure of the Police Superannuation Fund in Salford, and to furnish other information, statements, and returns bearing upon the subject.

The Acts conferring powers on Watch Committees of Boroughs are:—The Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 and 6 Wm. 4, cap. 76), and The Borough Police Superannuation Act, 1848 (11 Vict. cap. 14).

The Municipal Corporations Act of 1835 gives general powers to Watch Committees of Boroughs to grant Rewards or Compensation out of the Borough Fund. Section 82 provides that—

"The said treasurer shall also pay such further sums as the Watch Committee shall, subject to the approbation of the Council, award to any of the persons belonging to the said constabulary force, as a reward for extraordinary diligence or exertion, or as a compensation for wounds or severe injuries received in the performance of their duty, or as an allowance to such of them as shall be disabled by bodily injury received, or shall be worn out by length of service; and all other charges and expenses which the Watch Committee shall, subject to the approbation of the Council, direct to be paid for the purposes of the constabulary force, under this Act."

The Police Superannuation Act, 1848, authorizes Watch Committees of Boroughs to establish Superannuation Funds; the following is a brief synopsis of its provisions:—

"SECTION 1.—Town Councils of Boroughs may establish Police Superannuation Funds."

"SECTION 2.—Superannuation Fund to be supported by contributions of police force, as nearly as may be equal to $\frac{1}{56}$th part of their weekly pay and emoluments (clothing excepted), and also by all fines on police constables for misconduct, sales of cast-off clothing, and service of summonses and warrants."

"Superannuation Fund to be a separate fund, and to be managed and audited same as Borough Fund."

"A Superannuation Allowance to be granted for fifteen years' service, if the constable be 50 years of age, of one-half his AVERAGE full pay; but if the constable be able and willing to continue his service he may do so, with consent of Watch Committee, and receive, besides his regular full pay, one-third part of the above-named allowance from the Superannuation Fund. After twenty years' service, each constable, if 50 years of age, to receive Superannuation Allowance of two-thirds of his average full pay, or if able and willing to continue his service he may do so, with consent of Watch Committee, and receive, besides his regular full pay, one-third part of the last-named allowance from the Superannuation Fund."

"SECTIONS 3 AND 4.—Watch Committee may, in special cases, order Superannuation Allowance for injuries on duty, or infirmity of body or mind."

"SECTION 5.—Constables who resign or are dismissed, to forfeit all claim on Superannuation Fund."

"SECTION 6.—Superannuation Fund moneys may be lent to Borough Fund, on payment of five per cent. interest, or may be invested in Government Stock, or real securities, in the name of the 'Treasurer of the Borough for the time being.'"

"SECTIONS 7 AND 8.—In case the Superannuation Fund should become exhausted, the Borough Fund may lend it money, or the Superannuation Allowance may be reduced, pro ratâ, during the insufficiency of the fund. All such reductions to be repaid when the fund recovers."

The Acts of Parliament authorizing the establishment of Superannuation Funds in Counties are—

The County Police Act, 1840 (3 and 4 Vict. cap. 88), and

The Police Counties and Borough Act, 1856 (19 and 20 Vict. cap. 69).

These Acts sanction the appropriation, to the County Police Superannuation Funds, of 2*l* 10*s*. per cent. of wages of police constables, stoppages from wages during sickness, fines for misconduct, and also any portion (to be fixed and directed by the presiding magistrate) of the fines imposed upon drunken persons, or for assaults on police constables, and of the moieties of fines and penalties awarded to constables as informers, and proceeds of sales of worn or cast-off clothing.

The powers of all the above-mentioned Acts are defective in consequence of there being no provision by which old constables, or those who have served a considerable time, can be allowed at the discretion of the Magistrates or Watch Committee, or on some definite principle, to count some portion of their past service towards the period entitling them to be superannuated. In consequence of this omission, it has been held* that in case such a fund should be established in Salford, or any other Borough, in a similar position, any constable, 50 years of age, and having already served fifteen years in the police force, could legally claim the superannuation allowance prescribed in the statute, notwithstanding he may have contributed nothing to such fund; and that all the constables could legally claim to have the number of years of their past service reckoned in the period entitling them to the superannuation allowance.

General Cartwright and Captain Willis, Government Inspectors of Constabulary, refer to this subject in their official report for 1857, pages 11 and 85, and regret the existence of difficulties which prevent the establishment of Superannuation Funds in nearly all the boroughs and cities in the kingdom.

These difficulties have been considered so great as to induce the Corporations of Manchester and Liverpool to obtain special powers by Acts of Parliament, viz.:—The Manchester New Streets &c. Act, 1853, and the Liverpool Police Superannuation Fund Act, May 12th, 1854 (17 Vict. cap. 14). (See Appendixes A. and B.)

The amount of expense and trouble incurred in obtaining the two local Acts, as above referred to, may be accepted as some proof of the importance attached to this subject.

There appears to exist no difference of opinion as to the great desirability of establishing Superannuation Funds in all Police Forces; and it is therefore a matter of astonishment that the subject should not have been strongly pressed upon the consideration of Government, with a view of obtaining powers to enable Watch Committees of boroughs, and Magistrates of counties, to allow old constables to reckon such a portion of their past service before the establishment of Superannuation Funds, towards the stipulated period of fifteen years, as such Watch Committees or Magistrates may determine.

The provision above mentioned would remove the principal objection which now exists, and would at once enable all the large boroughs in the kingdom to establish Superannuation Funds with due regard to the claims for past service of their old and faithful servants.*

If it should be decided not to venture to establish a Superannuation Fund in Salford in the present state of the law, I would respectfully suggest that steps should be taken to bring the subject under the consideration of the Government, either in conjunction with Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary, or the Watch Committees of other Boroughs, with the view of obtaining the introduction of a short Act, in the present Session, containing the provision before mentioned.

With the view of enabling your Committee fully to consider the subject, I have obtained and prepared the following Returns and Statements, showing the practicability of carrying out the above suggestion, viz.:—

No. 1.—Return of the age, rank, period of service of each constable, the probable duration of life, date when entitled to be superannuated, amount of superannuation allowance, and number of years the claims for such allowance will exist during twenty years, ending December 31, 1877.

Nos. 2 and 3.—Estimated income and expenditure of Superannuation Fund for the next twenty years calculated on the supposition that each person is allowed to count half the period of his past service towards the statutory period entitling him to claim to be superannuated.

No. 4.—Comparative return of the actual periods of service of the constables in the Metropolitan, Liverpool, Manchester, and Salford police forces.

No. 5.—Comparative return of the number of

* See Town Clerk's Report to your Committee, dated January 23, 1858.

* It may be found desirable in any general Act obtained for this object, to assimilate the sources of income of the Superannuation Funds in Boroughs and Counties. In the Liverpool Superannuation Act, nearly all the items of income authorized by the General Counties and Boroughs Acts, before referred to, are included.

Digitized by Google

deaths, and the number of dismissals and resignations, and the number superannuated and allowed gratuities, during the past fifteen years, in each of the four police forces above mentioned.

No. 6.—Returns relating to periods of service, and state of police force, in Manchester, Liverpool, county of Lancaster, and city of London.

The Return No. 1 shows the estimate number of claims* on the fund during the next twenty years, provided an allowance (not exceeding ten years) of one-half their past service is made to all constables who have served more than two years: and Returns Nos. 2 and 3 show the estimated income and expenditure of the fund.

From these returns it will be seen that the actual period proposed to be allowed to twenty men, coming within the above designation, is equal to 114 years, and that their subscription to the Superannuation Fund during that period, had the fund been in existence, would have amounted only to 197*l.* 12*s.*

When it is considered that during the past twelve years the Corporation have received and appropriated to the Borough Fund, for the service of summonses and warrants, 937*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, and that, had a Police Superannuation Fund been established the whole of this amount would have been legally payable thereto, it appears to be only reasonable to allow the old constables to count the half of their past service as proposed.

The Estimated Income and Expenditure in Tables 2 and 3, show that the income of the fund will be ample to meet this extra charge. It is of the utmost importance that the calculation of the claims should be made so as to include the largest number that, under extreme circumstances, would be made on the fund, and these estimates are therefore framed on the principle of considering the expenditure at its maximum amount, and the income at its minimum amount.

From Table No. 3, showing the estimated number of claims on the fund in each year for twenty years, it will be seen that of the eighty-three men in the police force, only thirty-seven will have a claim on the fund in that period; the remainder (forty-six men) being under thirty years of age will have to serve more than twenty years each to be entitled to claim.

It will be observed that in fifteen years it is calculated that nineteen persons will be (if they remain in the force) entitled to be superannuated; and that a deduction of one-half the number has been made for the number leaving the service, and other causes, leaving 9½ or 11·44 per cent., as claimants. And that in twenty years thirty persons will be so entitled, and that fifteen of such persons, or 18·07 per cent., will be claimants on the fund.

These estimates are proved to be amply sufficient by the Return No. 4, from which it will be seen that in the Metropolitan, Liverpool, Manchester, and Salford Police Forces, the number of men who have actually served fifteen years is respectively, 8·76, 5·02, 7·22, and 6·02 per cent., whilst the number of men who have actually served twenty years in the said forces, is respectively 3, 8·89, 4·33, and 3·61 per cent.

Return No. 5 confirms generally the above results, and shows that the number of men who resign, die, or are dismissed, is equal to about 20 per cent. per annum. The large number of claimants on the Superannuation Fund in the Metropolitan Police Force, as compared with those of other places, arises from the fact of the men having, on its establishment, been allowed to count the whole of their past service towards the period entitling them to the superannuation allowance. The impolicy of this decision appears to have been fully proved, as although a very large sum was accumulated in a few years after its establishment, the very heavy claims subsequently made have now absorbed the whole of it, and a portion of the funds to meet these claims have now to be annually provided for out of the taxes.

The claims on the Superannuation Fund in Liverpool and Manchester have been much lighter than the number estimated in my calculation for Salford.

Table No. 6 shows the actual receipts and expenditure of the Manchester Police Superannuation Fund for twelve years and a half, from which it appears that the total receipts have been 10,371*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*, and the payments 1850*l.* 3*s.*, leaving an accumulated surplus of 8520*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* It may be observed in regard to this fund, that it derives a considerable sum annually from the charge made for allowing the keys of warehouses to be deposited at the police stations.

In Liverpool, the result of four years' working under their new Act has been as follows:—

	No. 1 Acc. £	s.	d.	No. 2 Acc. £	s.	d.
Income from Stoppages, Fines, &c. . .	9723	14	0	4204	12	2
Expenditure, Allowances, Gratuities, &c.	1357	18	0	11	0	0
Accumulated Balance invested and in hand.	8365	16	0	4193	12	2

Thus showing a total surplus of 12,559*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* in four years.

To complete the information on this subject, it is desirable to present the result of the experience of the Superannuation Fund of the County of Lancaster Police Force, and as it was found impossible to supply it in a tabular form, I append a brief statement of information kindly furnished to me by the Chief Constable.

"The present number of men in the Lancashire County Constabulary is 653.

"The Police Superannuation Fund was established January, 1843 (under 3 and 4 Vict., cap. 88, sec. 10).

"The amount of contributions of men is about 2 per cent., or 5*d.* in the pound, which with other sums amounts to more than 2000*l.* per annum.

"The number of men who have died in the force since its establishment is 44.

"The number of men pensioned in the force since its establishment is 17, of whom three have since died, leaving the present number on the superannuation list 14.

"The pensions now amount to 419*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* per annum.

"The number of men discharged with gratuities, under the 11th section of the Act, for ill health, although not having served the requisite time to be superannuated, is 21.

"The gratuities are fixed at one month's pay for every year's service, and the total amount thus granted is 458*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

"The present accumulated capital of the fund is 21,702*l.* 7*s.*

"The total expenditure to this date, in pensions, gratuities, brokerage, bank commission, &c., has been 1272*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.*"

In conclusion, I beg to repeat the recommendation that steps should be taken to induce Government to introduce a measure applicable to the whole country, to enable counties and boroughs to allow, on the establishment of a Superannuation Fund, old constables to count a reasonable portion of their past service towards the period entitling them to superannuation allowance. I have endeavoured to prove that in our own borough, it will be quite practicable to do so, as the income of the fund will be sufficient to meet the estimated ordinary expenditure, and leave a large surplus to cover any extraordinary charge to which the fund, under the proposed scheme, can be liable.

If the proposed general Act cannot be obtained, your Committee will, I trust, consider it desirable to include in the next local Act for Salford, such clauses as will confer upon you the discretionary powers suggested.

I have to express my great obligations to Major-General Cartwright, Lieut.-Col. Woodford, and Captain Willis, Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary; to Sir Richard Mayne, Commissioner of Metropolitan Police; to Capt. Sheppard, Chief Constable of the County of Lancaster; to Major Greig, Chief Constable of the Liverpool Police; and to Captain Palin, Chief Constable of the Manchester Police, for their kindness in answering my inquiries and affording me information.

When I cheerfully undertook to consider and report, upon this subject, I was not aware of the labour and difficulties involved, and in consequence of my numerous official engagements, I have not been able to devote as much attention to the subject, as its importance required. I have therefore to ask that you will be pleased to bear in mind this fact as some excuse for any defects in the report.

I am, gentlemen,
Your obedient Servant,
DAVID CHADWICK.

Town Hall, Salford,
June 11, 1858.

APPENDIX A.

Abstract of Clauses in Liverpool Police Superannuation Act (17 Vict. cap. 14).

Section 2.—Trustees of Police Superannuation Fund:—The Mayor, Recorder, Police Magistrate, and Chairman of Watch Committee.

5 and 6.—The Police Superannuation Fund to consist of two accounts. No. 1 account to be for police constables who were in the service before the passing of this Act. No. 2 account for police constables who have joined the force after the passing of this Act.

7.—Fines on police constables for misconduct; fines for assaults on police constables; fees for service of summonses and warrants; shares of penalties to constables as informers; proceeds of sales of cast-off clothing, accoutrements, and unclaimed property, and such other sums as Watch Committee and Council may direct to be paid to Superannuation Fund, in the following proportions, viz.:—two-thirds to No. 1 account, and one-third to No. 2 account.

8.—Deductions from wages for Police Superannuation Fund to be as follows:—

	per Week.	per Week.
If pay does not exceed .	21*s.*	6*d.*
" exceed 21*s.* and does not exceed . .	25*s.*	7*d.*
" exceed 25*s.* and does not exceed . .	27*s.*	8*d.*
" exceed 27*s.* and does not exceed . .	33*s.*	10*d.*

Exceeding 33*s.* per week, 3½ per cent. to No. 1 and No. 2 accounts respectively.

The above rates may be reduced by Watch Committee and Council.

9.—Funds to be invested.

10 and 11.—Reports to be made or state of account No. 1 before any payments are made therefrom.

12 and 13.—When all claimants on No. 1 are dead, all balances to be transferred to account No. 2.

14.—Annual examination and report of account No. 2 to be made.

15.—After twenty years' service, from the passing of this Act, police constables to be entitled to superannuation allowance, from No. 2 account, equal to from one-half to two-thirds of pay, as Watch Committee may direct.

16.—Fifteen years' like service to entitle to superannuation allowance, from account No. 2, of from three-eighths to one-half of pay, as Watch Committee may direct.

17.—The superannuation allowance to be calculated on the pay of each police constable in the various ranks he may have served.

18.—The superannuation allowance not to be given to any police constable who is under fifty-

* The estimated duration of life in this Table is taken from the Annuity and Mortality Tables of David Jones, Esq., F.R.S., &c.

Digitized by Google

two years of age, if below the rank of superintendent; and above that rank if under fifty-five years of age.

19.—If incapacitated, constables, after ten years' service, to be entitled to superannuation allowance of from one-fourth to three-eighths of average pay.

20.—The number of years' service of police constables under No. 1 account to be calculated for the purposes of superannuation allowances as follows:—from 1836 to 1854, at half the period of such service; for police constables who have left the service and subsequently rejoined, the like proportion in the periods above mentioned may be granted by Watch Committee. The length of service under the No. 2 account to be calculated from the date of entry into the service.

21.—After five years' service, Watch Committee may grant superannuation allowance to police constables, in a gross sum, not exceeding twenty days' full pay for each year's service.

22.—Police constables disabled whilst on duty may have such superannuation allowance, not exceeding two-thirds of pay, as Watch Committee may direct.

23.—Persons entitled to superannuation allowance on account No. 2, if willing to continue in service, with consent of Watch Committee, to receive, besides full pay, the following additional payments:—

					Per cent.
If wages do not exceed 75*l.*					20
„ exceed	75*l.*	and not exceed	100*l.*		17½
„ „	100	„ „	150		15
„ „	150	„ „	200		12½
„ „	200	„ „	300		10
„ „	. . . . .		300		7½

In regard to persons entitled to superannuation allowance on account No. 1, who shall continue as police constables, with consent of Watch Committee, the like additional sums, or such pro ratâ sums as account No. 1 is able to bear may be granted.

24.—The above addition to the full pay of police constables not to be calculated as part of the wages in the computation of his weekly contributions or stoppages for Police Superannuation Allowance.

25.—Watch Committee empowered to commute annual superannuation allowance for a sum, in gross, not exceeding five years' purchase.

26.—Watch Committee and Council may grant special superannuation allowance, or other payment, under extraordinary circumstances.

27.—If money received on account No. 2 is insufficient to meet the demands, the payments to be reduced pro ratâ during such time.

28.—Dismissal from force for misconduct, to debar police constables from all claim on Superannuation Fund.

29.—Police constables entitled to superannuation allowance, not to be thereby deemed members of a benefit society or club.

30.—Liverpool Police Relief Fund, amounting to 3900*l.*, to be transferred to account No. 1, and applied to general account of that fund, and to relief of widows and children of deceased police constables.

31.—Watch Committee may grant allowances to widows and children of police constables out of account No. 2.

32.—Act not to apply to police constables who may hereafter join the force (except as head constable or superintendent), who at the time shall be more than thirty-five years of age.

34.—Costs of Act of Parliament to be paid out of the Borough Fund.

Appendix B.

Abstract of the Clauses relating to Police Superannuation Fund in the Manchester New Streets Act, 1853. (Clauses 57 to 75.)

Section 57.—Police Superannuation Fund clauses in Manchester Act, of 1857, repealed.

58.—Two per cent. of constable's weekly pay to be deducted for Police Superannuation Fund, which fund may receive all such other sums as it may be lawful for the Council to pay.

59.—All police constables, after twenty years' service, entitled to superannuation allowance of three-eighths of his pay.

60.—After fifteen years' service to one-fourth of his pay.

61.—After ten years' service, if infirm or incapable, with consent of Watch Committee, to have annual allowance, not exceeding one-fourth of his pay.

62.—After five years' service, if infirm or incapable, with consent of Watch Committee, may receive gratuity, not exceeding the proportion of twenty days' full pay for every year's service.

63.—Police constables disabled in execution of duty, may receive annual allowance, not exceeding three-eighths of his pay.

64.—If police constable be killed on duty, Watch Committee may allow annually not exceeding one-fourth of his pay, to his widow or family.

65.—Family of police constable dying whilst in service may receive gratuity, not exceeding twenty days' pay for each year's service.

66.—Length of service to be calculated from October 1, 1845, or any subsequent time of entry.

67.—Watch Committee may allow time, in any case, to be reckoned from police constable's first entrance into force, or allow previous service to any old police constable who may a second time join the force.

68.—Superannuation allowance not to be reckoned to inspector, clerk, &c., above the rank of constable, unless after the service of three years in such office.

69.—No police constable to have superannuation allowance who is under fifty years of age unless unfit for service, or by special resolution of Watch Committee.

70.—Police constables dismissed from service, to have no claim on Superannuation Fund. Pensions to cease on conviction for felony.

71.—Watch Committee may appropriate one-third of sums received in aid of Police Superannuation Fund, until 15,000*l.* be accumulated.

72.—The Police Relief and Superannuation Fund, including the said sum of 15,000*l.*, to be invested in names of trustees, viz.—The Mayor, the Recorder, the Stipendiary Magistrate, and Chairman of the Watch Committee for the time being.

73.—Interest on 15,000*l.* aforesaid, together with other receipts, to be carried to Superannuation Fund.

74.—If Superannuation Fund is exhausted, all charges thereon to be reduced pro ratâ during such period of insufficiency.

75.—If Superannuation Fund is sufficient, allowances may be increased prô ratâ, at the discretion of Watch Committee.

GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL HOME, ST. MATTHEW'S, IPSWICH.

On Wednesday, by the courtesy of S. B. Chapman, Esq., we inspected the Girls' Industrial Home, St. Matthew's. This establishment, which is fitted up for 24 inmates, was opened in September, 1857, its founder being Mr. Chapman, who, unaided and alone, opened a Refuge for those unfortunate girls who have fallen into the paths of vice, and for whose recovery to virtue there is little chance, unless through the medium of an Institution of this character. Its inauguration was ushered in by no county meetings, with long and effervescing speeches, with tedious declamation upon what should be done, and with formal resolutions indicating what ought to be done; but Mr. Chapman, being impressed with the value of such an establishment, quitted his more dignified and honourable magisterial duties, wholly devoted himself to the formation of the "Home," and has since had it entirely under his control. Up to the present it has worked well. It is founded on what is called the "family principle," an experienced matron being at the head, whom the unfortunate inmates are taught to consider more as a mother than as a mistress. She is constantly with them—at their meals and at their work—partakes of the same food, and engages in the same industrial occupations. There is no uniformity of apparel, no degrading badge, the object being to rescue rather than to punish. The girls are always called by their Christian names, and their antecedents are simply recorded by Mr. Chapman, who scrupulously throws over them the veil of secresy, so as to avoid any cause for irritation or remark amongst themselves. The premises are airy and well-ventilated; the rooms are very clean; the greatest order seems to prevail, and as much comfort as is consistent with the object in view. There is a bath-room, a washing-machine, a laundry, school-room, sick ward, refractory ward, &c. The bedrooms are fitted up with small iron bedsteads, and each inmate is provided with a box for her own use. There is, also, a small library, which has been augmented by a grant of books from the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. When not engaged in household duties, the inmates are employed in picking fibre, which Mr. Chapman, by turning an amateur upholsterer, makes up into mattresses. These, when completed, are used in the "Home." So thoroughly devoted is Mr. Chapman to the interests of the establishment, that, what with the time spent within its walls, and incidental correspondence, his whole time is occupied. He officiates as manager, chaplain, schoolmaster, treasurer, and secretary—in short, he does all the business, his only reward being an approving conscience that he is doing his best to ameliorate the condition of the helpless and the orphan. Those who support the Institution by their voluntary contributions need have no misgivings as to misappropriation of funds or extravagance in expenditure. Mr. Chapman, himself labouring without fee or reward, would not permit anything akin to waste. In many institutions contributions pass through various sieves ere they reach the treasurer's hands; but here there are no such extraneous claimants. The money is devoted directly to the purposes for which it is given. The Institution, as we stated at the time, was certified and gazetted in June last, after being inspected by the Rev. Sydney Turner, and consequently receives the Government grant. It may be mentioned as a satisfactory indication of the management pursued, that Mr. Turner himself has since his visit sent a young person as an inmate; whilst Mr. Chapman has received several letters from those girls who have been discharged and found situations, full of gratitude for the attention they received when in the "Home," and expressing hopes that others may be like benefited. This is a cheerful testimony to the value of the Institution, and to Mr. Chapman it must be a source of great satisfaction thus to learn that his self-denying and truly philanthropic efforts have not been in vain. We think the inhabitants of this town who feel an interest in a work of this kind, cannot do better than second Mr. Chapman's labours by their contributions. Good wishes are very well, but something more practicable is required, and it would certainly be a reproach to Ipswich if an Institution, originated by the benevolence of a gentleman, and managed by him gratuitously, should suffer for the want of public support.—Suffolk Chronicle.

Digitized by Google

NOTICE.

Owing to circumstances which were unavoidable, the publishing of the October Number of "The Philanthropist" has been delayed; but Subscribers are informed that arrangements have been made to prevent such an occurrence in future.

N.B. As "The Philanthropist" will be published in future by Mr. Tweedie, 337, Strand, the Editor requests that all communications may be forwarded to him there, where they will receive immediate attention.

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Five lines and under	0	2	6
Every additional line	0	0	4
A column	1	15	0
Half-page	2	5	0
A page	4	0	0

The Philanthropist,
AND
SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE,
October 1, 1858.

LADIES' NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE DIFFUSION OF SANITARY KNOWLEDGE.

It is not to be doubted that there are certain spheres of action adapted specially for the gentler sex, on which man could not enter with a tithe of the prospective usefulness which would attend the labours of a female. Man may, indeed, be more deeply versed in the abstruse laws of nature; man may write with more force on sanitary axioms and on physical education; but to carry to the conviction of the mother, and to introduce into young families sound habits as to management of babies and training in health, there can be no influence so powerful as personal intercourse with ladies, who are known to give their time and attention, practically as well as theoretically, to the promotion of sound sanitary rules in reference to all those household matters, more especially relating to children and infants, which naturally devolve upon the wife. We sincerely hope that most, if not all of our readers, know and support the Association which was formed last year for this purpose, by some kind-hearted ladies, who, feeling that the greater part of the debility, disease, and premature mortality in this country, was the result of preventible causes, but that very few preventive measures bearing upon the personal habits of the people had yet been adopted; that in a majority of cases, the principal cause of a low physical condition was ignorance of the laws of health; formed a Society in order to propagate this important branch of knowledge.

1st. By establishing Institutions in which Schoolmistresses and Pupil Teachers belonging to any schools for the working classes can attend, gratuitously, a course of theoretical and practical instruction in all subjects relating to the preservation of health, in order that they may impart this branch of knowledge to their pupils. By these means, school-girls, the future wives and mothers of the working classes, will obtain information which, though necessary to all, is at present possessed by very few. Classes will also be formed for private governesses and other ladies. Special attention will be paid to instruction in the management of infants and children, as being one of the most important duties of woman. In order to make this part of the instruction thoroughly practical, some orphan infants will be reared in the Institution. Schoolmistresses will thus have an opportunity of gaining a thoroughly practical knowledge of all matters relating to infantile health; and, through them, this knowledge will be imparted to the working classes, who have at present little opportunity for gaining it, except from dearly-bought experience, or from books, which, in many cases, they have neither inclination or means to purchase, or intelligence to comprehend. Nursery-maids will be admitted to this part of the instruction; and the Association hopes thus to supply that great desideratum, intelligently-trained nursery-maids, to whom infants may be safely entrusted. Clergymen, medical gentlemen, and all who are interested in sanitary reform, are earnestly solicited to use their influence to establish such institutions in connection with branch associations in their various localities.

2nd. By compiling and publishing interesting, simple, and practically-written tracts, on all subjects relating to the preservation of health (see list). Ladies will thus be enabled, during their visitation of the poor, to bring the influence of tract literature to bear upon the physical condition of those visited, as well as upon their spiritual condition, which, though pre-eminently important, certainly ought not to be the only subject of tracts distributed among the poor, as it generally is.

3rd. By establishing loan-libraries of popularly-written interesting books upon all subjects relating to the preservation of health.

4th. By arranging for the delivery of popular lectures on the preservation of health at 14a, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, London, and of a commodious house, 17, Egremont Place, Brighton.

The Association is entirely dependent upon the contributions of benevolent individuals, and it earnestly solicits the assistance of those who approve its objects, and that solicitation we cordially second. The first report has been forwarded to us, from which we make the following extracts:—

The preparation and publication of tracts being a part of the Association's plans which is well adapted to give publicity to it, and being, moreover, the one which can be performed with the least outlay, has been selected as the first to receive attention, and has been carried on as far as the funds at the disposal of the committee have permitted. The following tracts have been published:—

5000 "How to Manage a Baby."
5000 "The Cheap Doctor: a Word about Fresh Air."
5000 "How to Feed a Baby with the Bottle."
1000 "The Evils of Perambulators."

The first three of these form part of a series intended more especially for gratuitous distribution among the poor by district visitors, religious tract distributors, and others. These tracts are sold at a very low price, and they contain explanations of the elementary laws of health, written in an attractive style, and in the most simple language in which the information can be conveyed. The tract entitled the "Evils of Perambulators," is one of a proposed series intended more especially for the better educated classes.

During February, March, and June, the committee were enabled, through the kindness of a medical gentleman, to provide two courses of eight free, popular lectures to ladies, on "Physical Education and the Laws of Health;" and several papers upon sanitary subjects have been contributed by members of the committee to some of the leading periodicals.

The press generally has expressed very cordial approbation of the Association; the notices in Household Words of December 12, 1857, in the Athenæum of December 19, 1857, and in the Lancet of November 14, 1857, and July 17, 1858, may be cited as specially gratifying; and subscriptions, expressions of cordial approbation, and promises of aid, have been received from some of the leading members of the medical profession, from clergymen, and ladies and gentlemen in many parts of the kingdom, and even from one in Australia.

Digitized by Google

Such encouragements confirm the committee in the conviction that their undertaking tends to supply a great social want, and will, therefore, not fail to meet with continued and increased support from the philanthropic and enlightened part of the community. They feel that they "need not bate a jot of heart or hope" for the future; but, with deep gratitude to, and humble reliance upon, the Author of all good, they cheerfully pledge themselves to increased exertions, and earnestly invite the co-operation of all who wish to benefit disease-stricken humanity.

We have also received their recent publication on "The Evils of Wet-Nursing: a Warning to Mothers," and a timely warning it is when fashion is permitted to interfere so generally with the sacred duties which link the infant so closely to the mother's affections—when maternal offices are so heedlessly deputed to a stranger. The Association will, we hope, circulate this tract as widely as possible; and many a high-born dame may see her folly, and be in future induced to follow the dictates of her duty, and her privilege in dealing with her helpless offspring.

JOHNSTON, THE CUTLER.

If the most credible of novelists or romance writers had defaced his pages with the account of a citizen of London, in a good established business as a cutler, in the very heart of the great city, singing outside the door of the room in his own house in which his wife lay a-dying; and not only discarding his children, but recommending for their adoption a line of infamy and sin—the girls to be prostitutes, the boys thieves—as a means of earning the living which he as their father refused to afford to them out of his own sufficient means,—and all this in the middle of the nineteenth century,—unless, indeed, the writer of such work coupled with this revolting spectacle the fact of insanity in the delinquent—we feel sure that the very conception of such a character would condemn the work in the eyes of the reading public as too extravagant for credibility; and yet it is the painful duty of the journalist of this day to bring before the public a truth which is indeed stranger than fiction.

On the 26th of last March a young woman named Frances Johnston, aged 18, was conveyed to St. Thomas's Hospital, having dislocated her hip in an attempt at self-destruction by throwing herself from London Bridge. In the course of investigation into the cause which drove her thus to precipitate herself into the presence of her Maker of her own accord, such a sad picture of parental depravity unfolded itself as to call into exercise the benevolent exertions of the Mayor of London; and in an inquiry which took place before him, which we give in detail in another part of our paper, the following story was laid before the public. Robert Johnston, the father of the said Frances Johnston, is a citizen of London, competently established in Gracechurch Street as a cutler. Many years ago he married, and his wife bore him seven children, of whom, as we gather, the three elder are young women whose ages range at this time from about 18 to 27. Johnston and his wife lived on bad terms for some time, and in separate parts of the house; Mrs. Johnston, as it appears, assisted by her sister, and partly by an allowance from her husband, maintaining and educating the children. In October, 1856, Mrs. Johnston died, leaving Amelia, Frances, and Arthur Johnston in the house, and the other children settled in charge of the business which had hitherto supported them. Prior to the decease of his wife, Johnston comes and sings outside the door of her sick room; and after her death, in place of tendering the support or consolation which such a time might have elicited from the most hardened heart in behalf of his own daughters, he, in a few days, demands a weekly rent from them, as an alternative of their quitting his house, giving them formal notice of his determination. The result is, that in February, 1857, they leave the house, and Frances, after being assisted somewhat by her brothers and sisters, obtains employment as a needlewoman at a dressmaker's. Without casting a wholesale imputation on dressmakers' establishments, we may, we think, fairly picture to ourselves the scanty pittance she might there earn, the insults to which she might be there exposed, the trials she might have to undergo; and in all this, superadded to her father's cruelty, read a fair excuse for the mental agony which prompted the rash act of throwing herself from London Bridge, to end, as she thought, her miseries in the river. She was rescued by the captain of a passing steamer; and was for six months in the hospital in consequence of the injuries inflicted by her striking against one of the parapets of the bridge.

Black as this portion is in itself, there is yet a darker tint to be added. We can conceive that a father, whose dislike to his wife had generated a hatred of her offspring, might wish to get them from his sight; we can even understand a cruelty which might consign his children to the earning of their own living; nay, we will go so far as to say that it is just intelligible that such a father might say to his children, "I worked my own way in the world; you have been educated, and must work yours also. I can't assist you; but if you are steady and persevering, you will get on, as I and others have done before you;" and, as a climax to our conception, we may even suppose his turning them out without a word of advice or comment. We and the world would have been sufficiently shocked; but Johnston's blackness appears of double dye, for it was elicited, in the course of the trial, that he had deliberately, and repeatedly, recommended to his daughters that they should earn their living by prostitution, and his sons by thieving. Well and nobly spoke the Lord Mayor of London when Mr. Sleigh advocated the termination of the investigation, on Johnston's promise "to take charge of his daughter for the future"—a result which he felt sure would satisfy her, and satisfy the public mind, and satisfy the Mayor:—"The question is not now, Mr. Sleigh," said his Lordship, "one of mere maintenance; for I am quite sure the British public would utterly discard the idea of a father maintaining his child after the revelations now made. I am quite sure the British public would rather maintain her themselves; and if he would allow her 1000*l.* a-year, it would not satisfy justice."

The Times, in a leader commenting on this revolting case, makes the following judicious remarks:—

"So inconceivable did such a fact appear that it was not until the adjourned inquiry that it could be really credited; but on Saturday last the examination left the original statement beyond reach of doubt. It would have been some slight relief to the enormity of the imputation if we could imagine the words to have been used in the madness of passion, as related by one of those actually addressed. 'You girls had better go on the streets, and your brothers had better go and steal—that's what you will all come to.' But there is no such escape from the conclusion advanced. The speech was made more than once; it was repeated over and over again, and addressed, not only to Frances, the youngest, but to Henrietta, the eldest daughter. It is to be noticed indeed, that Frances, the original witness, abstained from revealing this most shocking circumstance, and confined herself to a general description of her father's unkindness. The communication itself came from the lips of one of her sisters, who accompanied and supported her on her appearance before the Lord Mayor.

Digitized by Google

"We pass by the other incidents of the case, revolting as they are, because they are really overwhelmed by this unparalleled feature of depravity. Under ordinary circumstances it would almost transcend belief that a father, when informed of his child's rescue from death, should ask the person bringing the message what authority he had for communicating such information; or that, when the poor girl was hanging between life and death in the hospital for months, he should never once have gone to see her. All this, however, sinks into insignificance by the side of the rest; nor was it, perhaps, to be expected that a man who had advised his child to take up the trade of a prostitute should be recalled to any sense of his duty by her sickness or peril. Better, indeed, according to his view, that she should die than live. Yet it does happen that, so far as such a case can admit of aggravation at all, this aggravation may be found in the various particulars detailed. The man was not struggling against penury himself, nor plunged into any miseries by which his feelings might be deadened. For all that appeared to the contrary, he was tolerably well to do; he lived in a house rented at 96*l.* a-year, and the allowance which at one time he contributed to his wife and children was 150*l.* a-year. That his conduct towards his family originated in some aversion taken to the mother seems indeed probable; but we learn nothing of the circumstances in which such aversion could have arisen. He must needs have lived with his wife, on some terms or other, nearly 30 years, and, as he had seven children by her, some period of their union, at any rate, must have been happy. Nor was the behaviour of the children themselves in any way calculated to provoke anger or severity. We do not know that the mother was in fault at all; but, even if she had been, there was certainly no misconduct on the part of the family. The Lord Mayor described their pursuits, from accounts which had come to his own knowledge, as respectable and praiseworthy in the extreme, and announced in open court that they had laboured most patiently and honourably for a maintenance ever since their mother died.

"We are left, therefore, with the spectacle of the father, such as he has appeared, in absolute and unrelieved deformity, and this, perhaps, is so far fortunate that it will permit us to suppose him—not, indeed, unaccountable for his actions, but possessed by some species of mania overruling his mind. It is not much, indeed, to say that this suggestion was made by counsel on his behalf; but the statement of one of his children that he was always in a passion with them, and his deportment in court, when, after a single exclamation, he fell down as if in convulsions, might be thought to point towards some such explanation. One feature, at any rate, characterized the proceedings, which, we trust, will not be overlooked in the reflections likely to be made. The foreign journals, which amuse themselves with depicting the manners of the English from the reports of our police-courts, will doubtless be impressed with this new specimen of our national depravity, and it will probably be represented that Englishmen, besides selling their wives, are ready also to prostitute their daughters. Yet there were circumstances in this terrible affair redeeming much of the disgrace which might seem to be reflected on the community. Though an Englishman has, indeed, been found to urge such wickedness upon his children, these children, though tortured by want and misery, did not consent, but showed, in very deed, that they would embrace even death before the proffered dishonour. The magistrate who heard the case, and the audience who listened to it, so revolted from its disclosures as to give expression to their feelings by an irresistible impulse, and the very advisers and defenders of the prisoner, though they discharged the bounden duties of their profession, acknowledged the pain which their position cost them, and almost apologized to the public for their appearance in such a cause. The fact is on record, no doubt; but it is also on record that the people of this country were as much astounded with the discovery as they would have been at any incredible and unprecedented crime."

One word more, and we have done. There cannot be a doubt that the sympathies of the benevolent must be touched by the sad tale here unfolded, and we shall not be surprised if large contributions flow into the hands of the Lord Mayor to assist the Johnston family; for while indignation is naturally raised against the cruelty of the father in its hideous and unrelieved deformity, the struggles of his family under such sore trials will act upon the tender feelings of all, and those who are able will feel it a duty and privilege to do something to relieve them. The British public will, as the Lord Mayor said, be ready to maintain Frances Johnston, rather than commit her to the care of such a father; and they will not omit to care for the others of her family, who not improbably suffered in as great a degree, though not goaded to the sad act, which, while we pity, we cannot but condemn. Only let the British public take care, in their charitable donations in aid of this struggling young family, rather to strengthen than to undermine that spirit of independence which has manifested itself in their past conduct. With this reservation we shall be rejoiced to hear that the neglect of this unnatural father has been supplied to the full to his offspring by the kind and generous British public.

ASSOCIATED FARMING.

We are agreeably surprised at the interest felt in the plan for assisting farm labourers by means of associated farms, as carried out so successfully by Mr. Gurdon, of Assington Hall, Sudbury, which we alluded to in our last number. We are not ourselves practical farmers; but we ascertained from Mr. Gurdon such information as will enable us to answer the queries which have been made to us as to the mode of establishing and carrying on the farm more in detail. Our correspondents will, we trust, find solution of their hesitations and doubts in the following sketch of the details of working out the plan.

Presuming any gentleman of means to be desirous to establish a society of this description, the first thing to be done is to call together a certain number of labourers, say one to every six acres of the intended farm. The plans and rules having been read to them, such as we gave in our last number, it will then be necessary to select three of the most enlightened, real practical labourers—such as there is in reality no difficulty in finding in most neighbourhoods; for intelligence and shrewdness, apart from book-learning, are by no means such rare characteristics of the English labourer as might be supposed. When these have been selected, they should be invested with authority to conduct the farm. One of these should be, more especially, fit for the agricultural part, and he should be considered as the head, and have authority to a certain extent as such. The second should be a man accustomed to cattle, who not only understands the breeding and fattening, but the buying and selling; in short, what is considered a good judge of stock. The third should be a good accountant; and he should receive from and disburse moneys to the former two. Each member should pay down 2*l.* as a sort of guarantee; and they should receive nothing from the farm until the original loan, as starting capital, had been paid off, excepting the carting of coals and the difference between flour ground from their own wheat and the price at the shop, which would be about 5*s.* a sack: they may, however, receive any other produce, as potatoes, pork, milk, &c., at the wholesale prices.

Digitized by Google

As regards stores, each member should give in to the accountant his requirements, soap, sugar, tea, candles, stockings, linen, &c., &c., and when the waggon takes out corn to a market town, the goods might be brought back, or a donkey-cart might be sent over, with one of the wives, for the purpose. Each package should be done up separately; and, under certain regulations, the members might be allowed to pay by instalments. Boots and shoes, &c., if, say, two dozen pairs were ordered instead of single pairs, a considerable saving per pair would be effected. Beer might also be brewed for the whole party, as for a family, without requiring a licence.

When the loan is paid off, all the profits should be divided yearly. In the worst of times, we are assured, the farm would pay its way, even if it gave no profits. A farm of 100 acres would require five men constantly employed. In any particular time, such as harvest, the first committeeman must engage other labourers, always giving preference to members, if out of work, and desirous of employment.

No member must be allowed to interfere with the management of the Committee; but at any quarterly meeting he may suggest alterations which would take effect if carried by a majority. Of course any member may walk over the farm as he pleases. It may be that the farmhouse is too good for a labourer—this appears to have been the case in one of Mr. Gurdon's farms; but he says that, at a very little expense, a house can generally be divided so as to accommodate two of the Committee, simply by making a partition, and breaking open a new door.

Our readers will bear in mind that the points we have touched upon, though apparently desultory, are answers to several questions which have been asked of us in reference to the conduct of such a farm, rather than intended as a complete sketch of the operations; but we think that, taken in connection with the agreement and the rules, which we inserted in our last, it will put the plan as a whole fairly before our readers, in so far at least as to enable them to make the experiment should they be so minded. Mr. Gurdon assures us that, although other benefits might be added, such as reading-rooms, bakehouse, washhouse, &c., &c., yet so far as the plan has been already carried out, it has answered completely to the satisfaction of the landlord, the labourer, and the ratepayer. Mr. Gurdon adds, that it is highly necessary that each member should belong to an established benefit club founded on Government principles, adding that one which he established 30 years ago has now a capital of 20,000*l.*

Mr. Gurdon concludes by saying:—"Stewards will throw cold water upon this scheme, as they will fear it will cause them more trouble; and short-sighted farmers will oppose it as an infringement upon their order; but when they find their labourers belonging to this society are men to be depended upon (as a conviction for dishonesty would dispossess them of their property), and when they find their poor's rate diminished, they will be of a contrary opinion. I should also state, when provisions are high, labourers naturally are grumbling and discontented; this society of course will be most flourishing—consequently they are, under any variation, perfectly contented.

WORKHOUSE VISITING SOCIETY.

UNDER this title a Society has been formed, in connection with the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, under the presidency of the Right Hon. W. F. Cowper, M.P., and a very influential committee of both ladies and gentlemen.

The object of the Society is to promote the moral and spiritual improvement of workhouse inmates, of whom there are upwards of 600,000 in England and Wales; and to provide a centre of communication and information for all persons interested in that object.

Acknowledging the importance of moral influence over all classes of workhouse inmates, the chief object at which the Society aims is the introduction of a voluntary system of visiting, especially by ladies, under the sanction of the guardians and chaplains, for the following purposes:—

1. For befriending the destitute and orphan children while in the schools, and after they are placed in situations.

2. For the instruction and comfort of the sick and afflicted.

3. For the benefit of the ignorant and depraved, by assisting the officers of the establishment in forming classes for instruction; in the encouragement of useful occupation during the hours of leisure, or in any other work that may seem to the guardians to be useful and beneficial.

The co-operation of guardians is earnestly desired in furthering these objects. Similar plans have been adopted in prisons for many years with decided success, and with the entire sanction of the magistrates and officials; it is hoped, therefore, that the same result may attend the work of this Society in a still more hopeful field.

The sanction of the Poor Law Board has already been obtained to this mode of action, subject to such regulations as may prevent any infringement of the discipline of workhouses, and with the concurrence of the guardians.

The following rules are to be observed:

1. Members shall endeavour by local action and individual exertion, to interest guardians and chaplains throughout the country in the objects of this Society, and to obtain their sanction to its operations—the names of all visitors being submitted to the guardians and chaplains for approval.

2. Visitors shall attend the workhouses at hours most convenient to the inmates and to the officers.

3. Visitors shall abstain from all interference with the religious opinions of those who differ from them.

4. Any communications between the visitors and the authorities shall be made in writing, and with the sanction of the committee.

5. Local committees will communicate with the central Society.

6. The Society will endeavour to promote the formation and enlargement of workhouse libraries.

7. Members of the National Association may be members of this Society; persons not being members of the Association will pay an annual subscription of five shillings, to defray the expenses of the Society.

Communications or subscriptions may be forwarded to the Secretary, Miss L. Twining, at the office of the National Association, 3, Waterloo Place, London, S.W.; or at 13, Bedford Place, London, W.C.

Digitized by Google

ST. JAMES'S BACK RAGGED SCHOOL, BRISTOL.

EFFECT OF THE MINUTES OF COUNCIL.

SPACE would not permit us to insert the whole of the Eleventh Report of this useful School. We, however, insert some extracts, which tend to show how strangely the last Minutes of Council, issued from the Educational Department early in this year, in reference to Government aid to Reformatories, Refuges, and Industrial Schools, has influenced the position of the School.

The Report, after stating the necessity for making a special appeal for pecuniary aid, not only to pay a balance due to the Treasurer for the past year, but to insure the existence of the School, explains the present pecuniary condition of the School as follows:—

It was stated in the last Report, that on June 2, 1856, the Committee of Council on Education passed a Minute in aid of "Ragged and Reformatory Schools," by which liberal assistance was offered, adapted to the needs of such Schools.

As Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, three of whom had in succession closely examined the School, had uniformly borne a high testimony to the Master and Mistress, and expressed great satisfaction with the efforts made to enforce obedience, cleanliness, and order in the School, and the results of those efforts on the children, the Managers proceeded at once to act on this Minute. They increased the salary of the Master, which they considered due to one who had for ten years zealously devoted himself to the School, and on whom its efficiency mainly depended; they engaged an Assistant Master, especially with the view of carrying on better the Industrial department of the School, on which the Committee of Council judiciously lay great stress, and of throwing regular help, which was greatly needed, into the Evening School; and they engaged as Assistants in the Juvenile and Infant Schools two young women, who were desirous of preparing themselves to be Teachers, in the place of the two Pupil Teachers, whose discontinuance had been recommended by Her Majesty's Inspector of Schools. In his official report he says,—"I think it a dangerous place for training Apprentices, especially when the Pupil Teachers reach a critical age; but I believe it to be as good as any Ragged School can be made." Such increase of staff necessarily involved considerable additional outlay, but it was calculated that this would be fully met by the increased aid promised by the Council.

But to the surprise and perplexity of the Committee, early in the present year the following Minute was added:—"If the establishment has not been licensed by the Secretary of State, the following Certificate must be signed by two Justices of the Peace:—

"We, the undersigned, being two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for * * * * have satisfied ourselves, through the Police, and by other means, that the young persons received into this establishment have either been legally convicted of crime, or have been accustomed to begging and vagrancy, not having any home or settled place of abode, or proper guardianship, and having no lawful or visible means of subsistence."

It is evident that the Committee could not ask any Justice of the Peace to sign this Certificate. A Free Day School cannot maintain children who have "no visible means of subsistence," nor supply a home to those who have none; and though many children have been received into the School who have been convicted of crime, if they have manifested a desire to change their course of life, yet it is evident that it cannot take the place of a Reformatory. And however deficient we may consider the parental care exercised over a large proportion of the children, we should not be prepared to ask Magistrates to declare that they have satisfied themselves "that the children had no proper guardianship."

Existing Minutes under which the St. James's Back School had received aid in former years, having now been cancelled as regarded Ragged Schools, the Committee were thus virtually excluded from any aid from the Parliamentary grants. After some correspondence, however, on the subject, Her Majesty's Inspector of Schools, under the Minutes of June 2nd, 1856, Jelinger Symonds, Esq., Inspector of Union Schools, was sent to inspect that of St. James's Back. Though he reported that the School is under fair discipline, and containing the class of children contemplated by the Council, yet his report did not satisfy the Council of the general claims of the School to receive aid under the Minutes of June 2nd, 1856. Her Majesty's Inspector having requested that the grants might not be altogether withdrawn for the current year, a grant of 45*l.* was made to the Infant department of the School, the mistress being certificated, together with 13*l.* for the rent and Industrial Implements, but the Secretary of the Committee of Council thus wrote to the Managers:—"The rest of the School does not fulfil the conditions of any Minute now in force. It is neither a Feeding School for outcasts, nor an Elementary School of the common kind. In order to prevent misconception, I am to state expressly that if the School continues to be organized as at present, it will not receive any grant for the year ending April, 1858. The grants now allowed are not strictly regular, and will not be admitted as a precedent for others."

Under these circumstances the Committee immediately dismissed the Assistant Master, substituted an Assistant for the Infant School Mistress, and gave up the Evening School, placing the Industrial Afternoon School under the management of Mr. Andrews, thereby lessening the expenditure of the School, but greatly diminishing its usefulness.

The Committee considered that the present position of the St. James's Back Ragged School involved a most important general principle, viz. that the benefit of education should be brought to bear on a large class of the population hitherto untouched by any other agency than Ragged Schools, and that these, carried on by a larger amount of voluntary, pecuniary, and personal effort than any other Schools, are entitled to a fair share of the Parliamentary Educational Grants. The Managers of this School had striven for nearly ten years to fulfil the conditions of the Minutes framed for Elementary Schools of the common kind. They had done so as fully as the peculiar nature and condition of the children permitted, and valuable testimony to this was borne by three successive Inspectors. But their utmost efforts had proved that those Minutes were utterly inapplicable to the Ragged Schools, which were now excluded from the new Minutes. It appeared a fit time to bring the whole subject before the Privy Council Educational Committee. A Memorial was therefore prepared, developing this principle. It was signed by every member of the Committee, and forwarded to the Managers of other Ragged Schools. It was signed by those of Liverpool, Manchester, Hull, Ipswich, Gloucester, and Cardiff. This Memorial was presented to the Lord President on the 4th of December, by a very influential deputation headed by Sir John Pakington, and supported by Lord Shaftesbury, with the Secretaries of the London Ragged School Union. The annual outlay for the Day and Evening Schools in an efficient state cannot be less than 300*l.*; the present subscriptions do not exceed 140*l.*; there will therefore be a deficiency of 160*l.* on the current year, unless prompt and efficient aid be given; and the Managers do not feel that it would be right again to encounter a large adverse balance.

The scholars are gathered from the lowest parts of Bristol. A portion of them are simply extremely poor, and unable to pay for schooling, but the larger number are so low in habits and character, that when seen in their ordinary condition in the streets, it would appear almost impossible to bring them under good School training, yet when in the School they make such efforts to improve their condition, and are so orderly and attentive, that experienced visitors usually imagine that they must belong to a higher class. About 220 children are taught in the Day School, with an average attendance of from 70 to 90 in the Juvenile School, and from 80 to 100 in the Infant School. Mr. Sydney Turner thus speaks of the School:—

Aug. 14th, 1857.—"I cannot but express the pleasure which my visit to this School has afforded me. The good order and cheerful appearance of the children, the cleanliness and judicious arrangement of the premises, and the intelligence and earnestness of the Master, have all given me the greatest satisfaction.

"SYDNEY TURNER, Red Hill."

Numbers are now useful, self-supporting members of society, who owe all to this School; numbers are thus brought under Christian influences who were living entirely cut off from the respectable portion of society; and when the children of any family have continued for some time in the School, a decided change is visible in their habits and character. In many cases where the elder children have been convicted delinquents, the younger ones, being kept at School, have turned out respectable members of society.

The Committee trust (we endorse the hope) that such an agency for good will not be shackled or crushed from want of pecuniary means, but that their friends and the public will help them in their persevering efforts to save these poor children from ignorance and crime.

BEER-HOUSES.

THE following letter, on the subject of Beer-houses, addressed by Dr. Beddome, Mayor of Romsey, to a lady of rank, is worthy of perusal. The question referred to is a most important one; and we are pleased to hear that Lord Derby has promised to grant the Bishop of Oxford a Committee of Inquiry early in the next session of Parliament:—

"Romsey, May, 1858.

"My dear Madam,—The great respect and esteem I have for you induce me to write to you on a subject which presses on my mind, not only as a member of society deeply impressed with the evil, but officially as chief magistrate of this town—I mean the ruinous extent of beer-houses; and I do so from the hope that you may be induced to urge upon the Bishop of Oxford, one whom God has gifted with transcendent talent, to take the matter up; and I am the more induced to this step from a movement which has lately taken place amongst the under-graduates at Oxford about penitentiaries, and which does his Lordship great credit. Christianity and the good social order of society call loudly for an alteration of the existing law. I have been a magistrate of this borough for twenty-two years, and served the office of mayor six times, and in this as well as in my medical capacity, have had abundant opportunity of seeing the evil of the present system in a parish of this kind, and a town of this size. Under the present law, magistrates have no control over the number of these houses, as by obtaining the signatures of six householders, and paying the Excise fee, this is all that is necessary; so that a rich brewer may almost license an indefinite number. When introduced by the Duke of Wellington, his hope was, that the brewer monopoly would be broken up; but very few of these houses brew their own beer; they mostly belong to the brewers. The argument in their favour, I have always been told, is expediency, the property invested, and the revenue the licence brings. But one of our greatest legislators once said, 'What is morally wrong can never be politically right.' A Christian people can never be justified in demoralizing the community because of the gain it produces. Three cases in this town have occurred within my experience of disreputable public-houses where the bench refused licences for gross misconduct and immorality; and the parties at once took out an Excise licence, and bid us defiance. It is easier to describe the evil than to suggest a remedy. No beer ought on any pretence to be drunk on the premises, except at public-houses licensed by magistrates. It also strikes me that beer might be sold, as vinegar and other exciseable articles are, in chandlers' shops; or certainly it would much remedy the evil if beer-houses were licensed by the magistrates and amenable to them, the Excise fee remaining. But my principal object is to rouse attention to a notorious evil every one admits, but no one attempts to remedy. I am, my dear Madam, taking a great liberty in thus addressing you; but I know your earnest desire to have this monstrous curse remedied; and I hope you may persuade your friend the good Bishop to give his powerful advocacy to the attempt. Believe me, my dear Madam, faithfully and respectfully yours,

Digitized by Google

"J. R. Beddome, M.D., Mayor.

"To the Hon. Mrs. ———.

"I have shown the above to two of my brother magistrates—one, Mr. May, has not only been a magistrate as long as I have myself, but also a member of the Board of Guardians, and chairman 17 years, and his experience is, that two out of three applications to the Board for relief have originated in dissipation, licentiousness, and drunkenness. A very affecting case of seduction at a beer-house and desertion was brought before them only yesterday. He thinks Government has been legislating for effect in raising penitentiaries and reformatories; whereas, if the cause was removed, the fire would go out, or at least burn less fiercely. Take the town through, there is a beer-house or public-house to every nineteen inhabited houses.

"Another magistrate, Mr. Taylor, also a medical man of extensive practice, reminds me of four lads under 14 we sent to gaol, who, with others, were in the habit of playing and gambling for beer at skittle-grounds connected with beer-houses, the money being stole from their masters. He thinks nothing in our social system is so injurious as beer-houses, and low public-houses, and the effect of these in this town has been to ruin the public-houses, as well as to lower the respectability of those that remain. The public-houses have to maintain skittle-alleys, and to congregate poachers and prostitutes, to hold their ground against the beer-houses. The scenes of debauchery, drunkenness, and the lowest animalism, that are nightly taking place in the beer-houses of this town, are impossible to be detailed—delicacy forbids.

"My friend Mr. Tylee, our intelligent solicitor and magistrates' clerk, writes me that 'he believes if the laws relating to beer-houses were really enforced by the police, a great check would be put on the evils they lead to. If beer-houses were put on a footing with all houses and inns in the matter of licences, their number would be restricted, and the licences be withheld in case of abuse. Practically, there is little or no check on the part of the Excise to the increase of disorderly houses.' He adds, 'I am not favourable to restrictions on trade, but if there must be, then put these houses under the control of the justices, and let them grant the licences.'"

ARCHDEACON DENISON'S HARVEST HOME.

(From the Somerset County Gazette.)

A happy scene was witnessed at East Brent on the occasion of the village harvest home. The locality, the day, the weather, the vicar, the villagers, the visitors, the arrangements, everything appertaining to the festivity, could not have been more peculiarly fitted for a gathering so interesting, an event so truly appropriate to the season of the year. East Brent acted wisely in rescuing from desuetude the good old English custom, and it has shown by its doings this year that what it did in 1857 was no mere flash in the pan, but an earnest revival of a practice right worthy of annual celebration all over the country, wherever a crop of wheat has been garnered, wherever there reside true-hearted, pious tillers of the soil, thankful to the great God for his bounteous dispensation. The harvest that has just been gathered in was a glorious one. Harvest homes are productive of many beneficial influences, and it is somewhat surprising that they should have been discontinued. What can be more suited to the period after the golden treasures of the fields have been safely housed than to merrily rejoice and give thanks? What can be more calculated to delight the rustic mind than the knowledge that at least once a year a hey-day treat will be promised? What can have a greater tendency to create permanent good feeling between employers and employed than to meet on one day in each twelve months, in common rejoicing, on easy equality, or terms of gladsome friendship? What can present such a picture of high rural felicity as a harvest home? We will attempt, though feebly, to describe the happinesses of these fêtes champêtres as exemplified in the one it is our privilege to have to record.

At the foot of a luxuriantly-fertile knoll reposes the clean and peaceful village. Between the vicar and his parishioners subsists the deepest affection. A bond of goodwill knits together the souls of the villagers of all classes. Presently the villagers, in holiday attire, gradually collect at the place of general rendezvous. Visitors attracted by the fame the fête has acquired come driving in in every species of conveyance, and at 11 o'clock there issues from the vicar's grounds, headed by the venerable archdeacon himself and a brass band, a procession consisting of the more influential inhabitants and persons invited to attend. The sacred edifice is speedily crowded by the processionists and others, to whom the much-revered pastor preaches a sermon remarkable for simplicity of diction and true feeling. The church service over, the procession re-forms, parades the ground to the strains of excellent music, and then enters the charmingly-decorated tent, where more than 400 male parishioners dine together, not one above fourteen years of age being excluded, and the banquet of roast beef and plum pudding old English cheer, being provided by the more opulent. All mix together without restraint—farmer and day-labourer sitting side by side without discomfort, every face bearing upon it the impress of unalloyed gratification and temperate enjoyment. As soon as the formidable joints of substantial meats are removed, some fifty or sixty ladies may be observed walking two by two from the vicarage, each carrying a dish containing a plum-pudding of large dimensions and excellent quality, and who separate into two divisions on reaching the dinner pavilion—one portion entering at one end, and the other at another—received, as may be well supposed, with the deafening cheers of the 400 diners, who simultaneously spring to their feet to do honours to the fair matrons and maidens who have condescended thus to furnish them with most acceptable provender. Dining, like all things, comes to an end, and at its close speeches congratulatory, eulogistic, and amicable, are delivered in toast-giving and toast-acknowledging, by the titled and untitled occupants of the canvas banqueting-hall.

Outside the tent diverting pastimes are ministering to the pleasure of hundreds—dancing, football, &c., being freely indulged in. Towards four o'clock the dinner company disperses, and then the tent is occupied by those whose business it is to arrange the necessary apparatus for 600 females and children of the parish to partake of the succeeding meal—tea, for which mountains of cake have been sliced. Before the church clock tolls five, another interesting procession wends its way from the school-room towards the large tent, consisting of sixty or seventy ladies, preceded by the Ven. Archdeacon Denison and Lady Georgiana Wolff, each carrying a heaped-up plate of bread and butter and rich cake. The merry laughter, the happy faces, the cheerful looks of the 600 tea-attendants, delight the spectators, who assemble round the tent in multitudes, leaving the more boisterous sports of the field to gaze with unfeigned satisfaction on the right jovial scene before them, in which every matron and maiden of the village takes part—the social meal being provided, as was the dinner, free of expense, by the more well-to-do. Tea over, the company disperse themselves about the ground, which now swarms with hundreds of inhabitants from the adjoining villages, who have closed their shops and homes to hasten to East Brent for an hour or two's most desirable relaxation, and to contemplate and take share in a festivity which the inscription over the vicar's entrance-gate truly declares to be "Welcome to all." The games are joined in with a zest that tells eloquently how sincerely they are appreciated by those who join in them, and wherever the Archdeacon and his visitors of rank appear they are hailed with an unobtrusive and deferential respect. Dancing and harmless sportiveness are then carried on beneath the spacious tent, and when the shades of evening have deepened, a display of fireworks astonish bucolic optics with their startling brilliancies, their sparkling coruscations, their fantastic illuminations and borrowed light. Visitors and villagers linger long upon the scene which has been to them such a source of sterling pleasure.

Digitized by Google

The main roads leading to the village were adorned with neatly-constructed arches decorated with flowers, evergreens, and agricultural implements, on which were such inscriptions as the following:—"Harvest Home," "Welcome All," "Welcome," "Hurrah for the Farmer," "God protect us All," "Peace," "Hurrah for Old England," "God speed the Harvest Home."

The service in the church was read by the Rev. F. Bagot, and the Ven. Archdeacon preached, selecting for his text the 4th chapter of Ecclesiastes, and part of the 12th verse—"The threefold cord is not quickly broken." As soon as the proceedings in the church had terminated, the vicar, preceded by the band, walked with the visitors and farmers in procession to the principal tent to partake of dinner, which followed soon after the return of the procession from the church. The Ven. Archdeacon Denison presided, supported on the right by Mr. W. Miles, M. P., and on the left by Mr. Ralph Neville Grenville. Mr. George Reed, the lord of the manor, occupied the vice-chair, supported by Messrs. H. F. Emery and E. Davies. Amongst the 400 guests we noticed Sir Arthur Hallam Elton, Bart., M.P., Sir Claude Wade, Sir C. Freeman, Sir Benjamin Hawes, Dr. Elton, &c.

EDUCATION.

THERE is good sense in the following letter:—

To the Editor of the South London Journal.

SIR,—In your Journal of the 24th there were some strictures on a pamphlet written by me some twenty years since, and which I have taken some pains lately to distribute in the neighbourhood of South Norwood in consequence of a movement towards establishing schools in that vicinity. I trust you will allow me to explain that I am an ardent advocate for education, but I fear your notice of the pamphlet will lead your readers to an opposite conclusion. My position is, that much, if not nearly all the complicated, expensive, and, I think, absurd machinery in the fashionable or prevailing schemes in the shape of schools and other means for the education—as it is called—of the poor, are upon the whole (for I admit there are exceptions) abortive, if not mischievous.

In avowing myself an advocate for education, I mean by education an adaptation to usefulness and happiness, founded on the very simple principles,—our relations to God and man. I am aware that in these times of progress—of artificial and scientific superiority—that any one who dares to doubt that an unqualified extension of the arts is education and is necessarily a good, is in danger of obloquy, or at all events takes an unpopular view. Such, however, is my position.

It is now fashionable to suppose that persons who give money to any scheme said to be for educational purposes, are friends to education, and practically suppose that the human mind can be formed to usefulness and virtue as easily and by the same means as the school-houses are raised. They have paid the architect and builder, a pretty, and in many cases a beautiful and imposing building is erected, more money is subscribed for the endowment, and the subscribers for the most part think their work is done, and trouble themselves but little more about the matter. Now, sir, I contend that this is a very cheap and easy, but at the same time a most pernicious mode of dealing with a most serious evil—namely, popular ignorance; and as I believe that ignorance is very popular, and is connected with an important prejudice, namely, that money alone can effect a reform if subscribed in sufficient amounts, this movement, I, for one, will not join. This prejudice I refuse to fall into, and, as far as in me lies, will combat. My reasons are too numerous to give at length, but let us look to results. After all the efforts of the last twenty-five years, is "the great social evil" diminished or diminishing? Is it not notorious that it is ripest in the neighbourhoods of large educational establishments, whether naval, military, or ecclesiastical? Was it not recently a matter of controversy whether an educated man could marry upon three hundred a-year? Is crime diminishing? and by crime I do not mean mere violations of the law, but the silent abstraction—by legal means or by operations which the law cannot reach—of the means of the honest, the confiding, the widow, and the orphan? Is our commercial morality higher than it was twenty-five years ago? If these questions cannot be satisfactorily answered, I hold that it is a piece of presumption for the middle classes to take upon them the education of the poor, while they are so wofully deficient themselves. Rest assured, sir, that the English workman, faulty though he may be, is too well instructed, even now, not to see through these things, and in many instances thoroughly understands them. It will be said—what do I propose as better than the means now adopted for the moral elevation of our species, the poorer classes of them in particular? I simply answer—Mix with them as much as possible, let them feel that you are personally their friends, set them a good example, pay them justly (rather liberally than otherwise), inculcate in them habits of truthfulness and holiness by your example, bring up your own children in the paths of humility, piety, and peace, and let their example operate in society. These are some of the things to be done, but which cannot be done by deputy, and whoever fancies he can shirk these duties by the cheaper, easier, but more ostentatious mode of helping to swell a subscription-list, will assuredly find—sooner or later—that he has only been paying, as it were, tithe in mint, anise, and cummin, but neglecting the weightier matters of the law. The movement for the education, as it is called, of the children of the poor, I do not go with. I am anxious, however, for the moral elevation of my countrymen, both rich and poor, and on my conscience I believe we all need such elevation; but I should like to see the examples of the great and accredited teachers of mankind imitated, who bent their energies in the direction of instructing the people. They seemed to care but little for the children. Nevertheless, we know the effect was mighty. Infuse into the minds of the people the truth, and even the common people will hear you gladly. Make the tree good, and you will have good fruit, but you will not really improve the fruit of a corrupt tree, however much you may varnish, adorn, or colour it.—I am, sir, yours faithfully,

R. HOVENDEN.

South Norwood, Aug. 26, 1858.

THE GAOL OF NEWGATE.

ON Wednesday, the 29th September, the following Report was presented by the Chairman of the Gaol Committee to the Court of Aldermen.

"We whose names are hereunto subscribed, your committee of the whole court, in relation to the gaols of this city, to whom, on the 26th of February, 1856, it was referred to carry into execution the recommendations contained in our report, agreed to by your honourable court on that day for affecting certain alterations of the northern wing of the gaol of Newgate, whereby an additional number of separate cells would be provided, and the governor enabled to establish a better separation and supervision of the prisoners, do certify that the said alterations, as recommended, have since been carried into effect, and the new building constituting the northern wing of the gaol has been erected and completed, and a certificate of the Government Inspector of Prisons of the fitness of the cells in the new wing for the separate confinement of prisoners has been transmitted from the Secretary of State for the Home Department; and your committee having directed an entrance to be made from the old portion of the prison into the new wing, the prisoners were accordingly removed into the new building in the month of August last.

"Your committee beg further to state that their attention has since been called to the desirability of pulling down the buildings between the new south airing yard and the chapel yard of the gaol, which would materially improve the ventilation of the prison, and greatly facilitate the visiting of the prisoners; and having inspected and considered the plan of the prison, and also been attended by the city architect, whom we heard in explanation thereof, and it appearing that the expense attending the proposed work, after allowing for the sale of the old materials, would only amount to about 25*l.*, we are therefore of opinion, and recommend, that the said work should be accordingly performed.—William Cubitt, D. W. Wire, Thomas Sidney, J. J. Mechi, John Carter."

Upon the motion that the report be agreed to, and that its recommendation be carried into effect,

Alderman SIDNEY requested the attention of the court for a moment. There appeared to exist a difference of opinion between the members of their body as to the general adoption of the principle of uniformity throughout the interior of the prison. Now, the great object of the changes which had been recently made was the improvement of the moral condition of the inmates, and he apprehended, from what had been stated, that the female side of the building would be still kept under the old system, and that of course the enlarged benefits expected by the Secretary of State and the other authorities of the Government from the decision of the Court of Aldermen would end in disappointment. Now, it was his intention, on a future day, to press the attention of the court to that subject, with the view to the establishment of complete uniformity in all the compartments of the prison with the view of securing the moral advantages to the unfortunate persons within its walls.

The Lord Mayor elect (Alderman WIRE) said he had all along opposed the pulling down and rebuilding of the prison under the existing circumstances of the corporation. He thought it most imprudent to incur the expense of 10,000*l.*, which it was expected the change would reach, and his opposition was completely justified by the amount of the bills already sent in, extending to the sum of 15,000*l.* Now, he always thought that the court ought to have acted on the occasion quite independently of prison inspectors, the variableness of whose opinions had become proverbial.

The report was agreed to, and the court adjourned.

Digitized by Google

THE OLDMILL REFORMATORY, ABERDEEN. Among the numerous institutions in Aberdeen and neighbourhood, we would point to the Oldmill Reformatory as one possessed of great interest. The Institution is licensed, under the sanction of the Secretary of State, for the care and custody of boys convicted of theft, and the name of the Institution sufficiently indicates its object. It was opened on 25th March, 1857, just eighteen months ago.

The house is a plain, yet neat structure externally, occupying a good situation, on an eminence facing the south, and with the pleasant woods of Hazlehead as a prospect. It is surrounded by fifty-four acres of land, gifted in 1839 by that enlightened philanthropist, the late Dr. Watt, of Old Deer, to the Aberdeen House of Industry and Refuge. That Institution and the Reformator are now under the same management, though the accounts are kept distinct. The house is constructed to accommodate fifty inmates, and is susceptible of enlargement. There are at present thirty boys on the roll, their ages varying from eight to sixteen. With two exceptions, all are under warrant for theft, the period for which the warrant applies varying from two to five years. This feature—the length of the term of—we cannot accurately say confinement, but residence—is an important one, in the view of forming good habits.

The daily order of the house may be shortly noted—Rise at six all the year round, wash, &c., till seven, when school begins, and continues till a quarter before nine, when worship takes place. At nine, breakfast, consisting of porridge and good milk. From ten till two, work—agricultural employment almost exclusively. At two, dinner, which varies—broth, pea-soup, potato-soup, barley and milk, cabbages, &c. The elder boys again work from three to six; the younger resume their lessons. From six to seven, play, &c.; at seven, supper—porridge, or bread and milk, occasionally potatoes. Worship at eight, to bed at nine.

The work of the boys has begun to tell on the land; a burn has been cleared, and the sides built up; a large portion of a seven acre park in front of the house has been converted by drainage and digging from a bog into a fruitful vegetable garden; besides, a long strip along the side has been laid off in flower gardens (each sixteen feet in front) for the boys, who cultivate them in their leisure time; in some cases two boys join and till a double plot in company. Fifteen acres are in the hands of the directors, but the whole of the fifty-four acres will shortly be so. A young man, hired, assists the governor in managing this department, but the services of a grieve will now be required.

The boys are making considerable progress in the branches of useful knowledge, reading, writing, arithmetic, also a little geography, with single exercises. They are also acquiring habits of order, cleanliness, and industry. There have been a few escapes, but not latterly, though the grounds are quite open. It may be mentioned that photographs of all the boys have been taken, which would be useful in any event of this kind. The system of moral supervision is as nearly as possible that of a family, the governor and matron being in loco parentum, Mr. and Mrs. Aiken, who hold these offices respectively, fully identifying themselves with the welfare of the boys, who have been quite subdued by their mingled kindness and discipline. It is too early yet to speak with confidence of results, but so far as present appearances indicate, this Institution is a vast improvement on the prison, and bids fair to aid, in no small degree, in solving, with good results for society, one of the most important social problems of our time.

Correspondence.

CASE OF REV. J. K. WALPOLE.

To the Editor of The Philanthropist.

45, Parliament Street, 24th Sept. 1858.

Sir,—My attention has been directed to a statement of the case of the Rev. J. K. Walpole, which appeared in your last number.

I would willingly have left Mr. Walpole in possession of any advantage he may have proposed to himself in printing and circulating through your pages such a statement, but as he only tells a part of the truth the impression he conveys is, as you suspect, very far from being correct.

The main object Mr. Walpole appears to have in view is to persuade his friends that he was illegally removed from the Convict Service by the Directors of Prisons, that the motives which actuated them, and myself in particular, were connected with personal private resentment, &c.

Now at the time Mr. Walpole penned the statement which appeared in your columns, he had in his possession a letter from the Under Secretary of State, dated 11th Dec., 1856 (the day preceding his removal), in which he was informed that Sir G. Grey, having referred to Mr. Walpole's letters to him of the 2nd of Oct. and the 6th of Dec., had been reluctantly compelled to adopt the conclusion that his further continuance in the office of Assist. Chaplain was inconsistent with the interests of the public service, and that he had requested the Directors to make arrangements for transferring the duties to another person, consulting, as far as was compatible with their duty, the convenience of Mr. Walpole as to the precise time at which his employment should terminate.

The discretion of the Directors was, under the circumstances, limited to a very brief period, and gladly would they have availed themselves of an opportunity of submitting a proposition that he should be continued in his office until the spring, a period of between three and four months, but at the very time that this subject was under consideration, circumstances occurred which precluded all hope of allaying the discord that had prevailed for so long a time, and the Directors had no choice, consistently with their duty, than that of recommending that Mr. Walpole should cease to perform the clerical duties on board. He, however, received his salary in the first instance to the end of December, and subsequently Sir G. Grey was good enough, on my making an earnest appeal, to sanction an additional quarter's salary. As regards the extracts which Mr. Walpole has given from the letters I addressed to him, the following more copious extracts will better explain the circumstances.

Extract from a Letter addressed by Colonel Jebb to the Rev. J. K. Walpole, 12th of Dec., 1856.

"Sir,—I had written a reply to your letter of the 9th instant, which would have been forwarded to-day, but I have this morning received from Mr. Waddington the copy of a letter he has addressed to you, from which I find that the arrangement I had proposed in your favour will not now be carried into effect.

"I shall not further advert to your letter, but address myself to that part of Mr. Waddington's communication, in which he requests that the Directors will, as far as is compatible with their duty, consult your convenience as to the precise time at which your employments in the Convict Service shall terminate.

"I have now to inform you, that having consulted my colleagues, we are unanimously of opinion that it is a duty to look to the public interests, and that they cannot fail to be prejudiced by the continuance of any one in the execution of the important duties of a chaplain, who has given the superior officers of the ship so many and such just causes of offence.

"We are, therefore, of opinion, that it will be most for the interests of the Service to make temporary provision for the discharge of these duties, and to relieve you from further attendance and responsibility.—I am, &c."

Extract from a Letter addressed by Colonel Jebb to the Rev. J. K. Walpole, 22nd of Dec., 1856.

"Sir,—I have received your letter of the 20th instant, this day, and regret to find that it differs but little, either in spirit or expression, from those which you have before written.

"As regards the charges you prefer, they have already been investigated, or will be inquired into.

"With respect to your saying that I have advised Sir George Grey to turn you and your family into the world in the middle of winter, for 'offending the superior officers of the ship,' that may be the light in which you may choose to view and represent the circumstances, but I can only say, you are entirely in error on both points.

"The arrangement I had proposed was one which under the circumstances was highly favourable to you, and you are yourself alone to blame for being now deprived of the opportunity of accepting it.

"I am not insensible to the painful position in which you have placed yourself and family by the course you have pursued. I should have hoped that the experience of the last twelve months would, if you had no better grounds, have led you to see that it was neither a wise nor a Christian course.

"After your treatment of myself, I can have no personal communication with you; but if you desire my opinion, I would confer with any friend in whose judgment you can rely.

"Under any circumstances I should advise your consulting such a friend before you commit yourself further.—I am, &c."

Having limited myself to saying thus much in explanation, I would add that Mr. Walpole has a large family on whom an accumulation of undeserved misfortune has been brought, and that I believe them to be well deserving in every way of the kind sympathy of your readers.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

J. Jebb.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

Sir,—Allow me to offer one or two remarks with reference to an article which appeared in the September number of the Philanthropist, announcing the Annual Meeting of the above Association, and suggesting some fresh regulations concerning the reception of "papers."

The writer appears to think that "discussion kept within proper limits is an essential part of the business of the meeting;" but a question naturally arises as to the means by which such a limit can be prescribed. It is true that each speaker may be limited as to time, but that is not all—if no one would attempt to speak save those who can speak "to the purpose," no objection could be taken—indeed, much good might be expected; it would be a great loss to the public, however, to sacrifice papers, which must be the result of much deliberation and labour, in order to secure time for impromptu and desultory discussion.

Digitized by Google

The object of discussion—viz. to elicit various opinions on any given subject—could be as well secured by some other means, at some more appropriate time.

I think the length of the "papers" might be circumscribed even more than the prospectus certifies, but I venture to suggest that it would not be wise to limit the number of papers on any grounds but those of their intrinsic unfitness.—I am sir, yours very truly,

M. A. B.

THE ORPHAN HOME AT MORSANG-SUR-SEINE.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

Paris, August 28, 1858.

Sir,—I have just returned from a visit to an Orphan Institution, at Morsang-sur-Seine, a place twenty-two miles distant from Paris. The "Orphan Home" is for the "Protection and Education of British and American Orphan and Necessitous Children on the Continent." It must not be supposed that they are all the children of poor people, who have gone to the Continent as servants. I found, that of the eighteen children sheltered and educated in this "Home," six were the legitimate offspring of clerks—one of these was employed as cashier in Rothschild's Bank here in Paris.

The house inhabited by this little band of orphans I reached by an hour's ride to Corbeil, by the Orleans line of railway, and thence about half-an-hour's drive to the village abovenamed. The house is much like an English farm-residence, and is beautifully situated in a valley—the river Seine running at the bottom of the gardens. The grounds comprise about five acres of land. The gardens abound with fruit, the walls of the gardens and buildings being covered with vines yielding a most tempting supply of grapes. There are fowls and rabbits in great numbers.

I found the house in just the condition with regard to fittings that I should have wished, had I been the superintendent, viz.—an absence of everything of a luxurious nature. The rent of these most excellent premises I found to be only 50*l*. a year. This, said I to myself, is just the place for an Orphan Institution; and when I inquired how it came to be there, the answer satisfied me that it was by a most providential circumstance. The Government, which it must be remembered is not Protestant, had thrown difficulties in the way of its continuing in Paris, and had determined that it must be closed, when Mr. Argent, the originator of the Institution, met with a friend, who actually offered to let him have the house for three months rent free, of which he gladly availed himself, and has since rented it, and I believe has taken some steps to purchase it.

I found in it eighteen children, from the ages of four to sixteen. They were very clean and healthy; indeed, I found that scarcely any illness has been experienced during the sixteen months that they have been there. I put various questions to the children, and was delighted with their answers and also with their general behaviour. They are taught both French and English,—and displayed an acquaintance with the English language which astonished me, knowing as I did that they had been born in France, and that before they had entered the Institution they only spoke the French language. I attribute this to the kind efforts of an English lady, who has assisted Mr. Argent very efficiently in this laudable undertaking.

But the most interesting point to me, and it must be so to every Christian philanthropist, was the histories of these children. I found that not orphanage alone commended them to Mr. Argent's solicitude, for they might readily have found protectors in the convents with which France abounds—more particularly from the fact of their parents having been Protestants. I found that there were extraordinary means used by the managers of these Convent Institutions to get children of this class. Their terms were temptingly low; and many rich Romanists would, for the purpose of proselytism, pay the cost of a child's maintenance in an establishment of this kind, if opportunity presented itself.

In the case of a family of three children, now sheltered in the Home at Morsang, I found that the Romanists had actually hidden them for three days, with a view to getting them into a convent; and it was only by the indefatigable labours of Mr. Argent that they were saved from this doom.

In the circumstances of the other children there were details of a most novel and interesting character; but I may not narrate them.

And now I come to a most painful subject. I regret to say that the Institution is deeply in need of funds. Oh! I grieve at this. Would that I could afford it the assistance it needs! It is so far involved, that unless Christian friends come to its help, it will have to be given up. I cannot think that the Lord will allow it to fall; but ruin seems near at hand. Its chief promoter, Mr. Argent, is almost single-handed; and with persecutions of one kind and another he has not been able to keep out of debt. I believe he has exhausted his own resources in the maintenance of the good work. His best energies for years have been given to it. His whole heart and soul have been and still are absorbed in the welfare of the Institution; but now, I fear, he is getting discouraged. I do hope and earnestly pray that some friend or friends will be raised up to assist Mr. Argent at this crisis.

Surely no such calamity will befall these children as that which seems to threaten them. That they should fall, one and all, into the hands of the Romanists were worse than death itself.

Earnestly do I hope and pray that deliverance may come ere it be too late. Can there be a greater charity named than this? Is there a work under heaven more pleasing than to administer to the fatherless?

I am, sir, your very obedient servant,

Daniel Cooper.

Communications may be sent to Mr. E. Augustus Argent, who is now in England, addressed to 11, Poultry, London, E. C.

ASSOCIATED FARMING.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

Assington Hall, September 15, 1858.

Dear Sir,—Any plan for relieving the misfortunes of mankind comes, I believe, within the scope of the Philanthropist. The loss of live stock has been so severely felt by agriculturists, that not only most of the Insurance Societies have recognised it, but others have been established for the special purpose; but owing to the evasions that are continually occurring, together with the necessary expensive machinery, many have relinquished this class of insurance, and amongst those that were established for the express purpose, one only I believe at present exists.

A large capital being necessary to meet the expenses; a numerous staff to carry on the business; and an officer in London, so raised the rates of insurance, that but few thought it worth their while to embark therein—the Apostolic injunction (which cannot err), "Bear ye one another's burdens," becoming, in this instance, a dead letter, whereas in the plan I propose, it stands out in bold relief, for upon every loss each member bears his portion. No capital is required to be raised, consequently no interest to be paid—no expense is incurred, and no imposition can possibly take place.

I remain, dear sir, yours truly,

John Gurdon.

Live Stock Mutual Insurance Society, requiring no Capital—incurring no expense, and obviating all imposition.

It is proposed that a few leading agriculturists should meet to form a mutual Live Stock Insurance Society to draw up Rules and Regulations something similar to this:—

Rules.

I. That an Agricultural Live Stock Insurance Society be formed and that ———— be the chairman of the same.

II. That the chairman insert in a minute book the names of the members, their abodes and acreages.

III. That candidates be proposed and seconded by a member, and balloted for—black balls to exclude.

IV. That a member be elected as inspector for each parish.

V. That on the loss of an animal, the member to apprize the inspector, who shall value the same, and enter it in a book, with description, age, cause of death, &c. In case there should be difference of opinion as to value, a third member to be brought in as umpire.

VI. That in case an animal dies through neglect, ill-treatment, or disease contracted previous to insurance, that member shall receive nothing.

VII. That no member be allowed more than ——— for an agricultural horse, ——— cow, ——— bullock, ——— sheep, &c., &c.

VIII. That if any member be in the habit of purchasing green or dry food that his acreage be increased accordingly.

IX. That on the first market day after Michaelmas the members shall meet at the Town Hall ————, when the chairman shall receive all the inspector's books, and the losses approved by the members shall be entered in the general minute book, and a rate per acre be raised, not exceeding ——— per acre, and the same paid to the chairman, who shall immediately reimburse the members for the losses sustained.

X. At the general meeting candidates to be balloted for, and any other business to be transacted—in case of any member being unable to attend, he must depute another member to pay his contribution, or be fined.

Government Emigration.—The "Forest Monarch," of 887 tons, Captain Thomas R. Anderson, sailed from Southampton on Wednesday, the 25th of August, for Sydney, New South Wales, with Government emigrants—viz., 51 married couples, 83 single men, 75 single women, 72 children, and nine infants, under charge of Surgeon Superintendent Craur. This ship has been fitted, under sanction of the Emigration Commissioners, with Dr. Normandy's patent condensing apparatus for procuring fresh water from the sea water. Several trials of its efficiency were made while the ship was in the Southampton River, and it was found to answer very satisfactorily, producing pure aërated fresh water, fit for immediate use, at the rate of above twenty gallons per hour. Mr. Walcott, Secretary to the Commissioners, visited the ship to inspect the apparatus and test its efficiency.

Digitized by Google

AN UNNATURAL FATHER.
THE CASE OF FRANCES JOHNSTON.

MANSION HOUSE.—Robert Johnston, of 63, Gracechurch Street, cutler, appeared to answer a summons taken out at the instance of Mr. Abbiss, churchwarden of the parish of St. Benet, Gracechurch Street, charging "that he, the said Robert Johnston, being in good health and well able to work and maintain himself and family, did, on the 28th of September last, unlawfully refuse and neglect to contribute to the support of Frances Johnston, his daughter, so that she, the said Frances Johnston, did then become and still was chargeable to the said parish in the City of London Union."

The proceedings had originated in the appearance in this court, on Monday last, of the unfortunate Frances Johnston upon a charge of attempting to commit suicide under circumstances of a peculiarly deplorable and pitiable character, which are probably still fresh in the recollection of our readers. The case since that time had excited a high degree of interest in the neighbourhood, so that it was found necessary to take extraordinary steps to prevent too great an influx of spectators; but notwithstanding this precaution the court before the proceedings terminated was crowded with eager and excited listeners.

Mr. Sleigh, instructed by Mr. Buchanan, of Basinghall Street, appeared for the defendant; Mr. Bowring, clerk to the City of London Union, conducted the case on behalf of the guardians, many of whom attended to watch the result.

The defendant, an elderly, gray-haired, and respectable-looking man, with an indurated countenance, and somewhat restless eye, having taken his station in front of the bar,

Mr. Sleigh said, he was anxious to explain, before the case was gone into, that when Mr. Johnston, in reply to the message of the Lord Mayor requesting his attendance on Monday last, sent word back that he declined to come then, but that he would come if a summons were issued, he did not mean to treat his Lordship with any disrespect. He only meant to convey to his Lordship that he wanted time to prepare himself, which in the case of a summons being taken out must necessarily be given to him.

The Lord Mayor said, he certainly did not gain such an impression from the officer's report; and the officer himself certainly understood Mr. Johnston to mean that he would not come unless he (the Lord Mayor) had power to compel him.

Mr. Sleigh replied that it was no doubt a misunderstanding upon the part of the officer.

The charge was then formally read over by Mr. Goodman (chief clerk), and

The defendant pleaded "Not Guilty."

Mr. Bowring said, it was unnecessary for him to take up the time of the court further than to say that the summons had been taken out under the 5th section of George IV., cap. 83, commonly called the Vagrant Act. He should therefore at once proceed to call his witnesses.

Frances Johnston, who looked somewhat better in health than upon her last appearance in court, was then assisted to a seat near the Lord Mayor, where she remained during her examination; but before that was entered upon

Mr. Sleigh requested that any relatives of hers whom it might be intended to examine might be ordered out of court.

This having been done,

Frances Johnston was examined, and said,—I am 18 years old, and am daughter of the defendant. I have brothers and sisters by the same mother older than myself, and one brother who is younger. Since last Monday I have been in the City of London Union Workhouse, and shall return there when I leave this court. I lived with my father, or at his house, last in February, 1857. I left him then, and lived for some time with my brother Robert and sisters.

Mr. Bowring.—At that time did your father suggest to you any mode by which you might obtain a living?

Witness.—Yes, he did.

Mr. Bowring.—What was it? You need not be afraid to answer.

Witness (hesitatingly).—He said I might go on to the streets.

There were expressions of "Shame!" and "Horrible!" from the spectators.

The Lord Mayor.—Stay a moment; now, be careful; are you quite sure about that?

Witness.—Quite sure, my lord.

The Lord Mayor.—Take time for reflection. Call to your aid all your powers of memory, and tell me is it not possible that you may have misunderstood him?

Witness (sadly).—No, Sir; it is as I have said. (Sensation.)

Examination resumed.—It was at that time I left my father and went to live with my brother and sisters. Afterwards I went to live with a person named Williams, who kept a baby linen shop. I went to wait in the shop. I had my board and lodging for doing so, but no money or clothes. I got money for clothing from my brother and sister. I lived at that place till last March, when something happened which made it necessary for me to be taken to St. Thomas's Hospital, where I remained till I was removed to the City Union Workhouse, a period of six months. I was confined to my room during the whole time, and my father never called to see me once, although his shop is in Gracechurch Street and the hospital is just over London Bridge. I never wrote to him to say that I was there. He did not behave kindly to me while I lived with him. I am lame now and not able to work. I am in the infirmary of the City of London Union Workhouse. My mother is dead; she left no property, and I have no means of maintaining myself beyond what my brothers and sisters may give me. I am not now able to return to the shop to do the work I have been accustomed to do.

Cross-examined by Mr. Sleigh.—My brother and sisters were brought up in my father's house. They were not sent to school by my father, to my knowledge. I was not educated at his expense, but was sent to school by my aunt, my mother's sister, who is dead now. I believe she also sent the other children to school, and my father fed and clothed us. Up to the time of my mother's death she did not, to my knowledge, carry on business on her own account.

Mr. Sleigh.—I don't wish to go too deeply into family matters, but your father and mother did not live happily together, I think?

Witness.—No, they did not.

Mr. Sleigh.—They had separated, in fact?

Witness.—They lived apart from each other, but in the same house.

Mr. Sleigh.—And he allowed her 150*l.* a-year for her own use?

Witness.—I don't know that.

Mr. Sleigh.—But you know that he allowed her something for her support?

Witness.—I think that was only for a few weeks. My mother died in October, 1856. I was living in the same house with my father at the time, but in a different part. My father paid the rent.

Mr. Sleigh.—You say your mother died in October,—in November did not your father address a letter to you?

Witness.—I do not recollect that he did.

Mr. Sleigh.—Well, I will read it.

The learned gentleman accordingly read a letter written by defendant, in which he stated that, in consequence of the death of the mother of the person to whom it was addressed, it became necessary to make some arrangements for the future, asking for information as to future prospects, and suggesting that the person to whom it was written should state in reply what was wished to be done; and that, if consistent with the writer's views, it should be done. If this were not acceded to, the writer went on to say, the only honest and honourable course will be for you or me to apply to the City of London Union.

Did you receive such a letter as that?

Witness.—Not that I remember.

Mr. Bowring.—I have that letter of which you hold a copy, Mr. Sleigh, and if you look at it you will find it was addressed not to the witness, but to her brother Arthur.

Mr. Sleigh.—But I am instructed that she received a similar letter. Will you swear, witness, that you never received such a letter?

Witness (after reflection).—I swear I never did.

Mr. Sleigh.—Well, look at this letter. Is not that in your handwriting?

Witness.—I think not. I cannot say whose handwriting it is, but I do not believe it is mine. I know Mr. Robert Wyatt, who was a friend of mine and of my mother; but I do not remember seeing him about the time of my mother's death, nor that I told him I had received a letter from my father about my future prospects. My name is Frances Louisa, but I am not generally called Louisa, and never was. I have no sister named Louisa.

Mr. Sleigh.—Did not you and your brother Arthur leave your father's house together, without first telling your father?

Witness.—Yes, we did.

Mr. Sleigh.—And did you not, without your father's knowledge, remove some furniture from the house in a cart?

Witness.—Yes, Sir, we did; but it did not belong to him—it belonged to my aunt.

Mr. Sleigh.—Well, from that time to the time of the unfortunate occurrence which brought you here, did you ever write to your father?

Witness.—No, I did not.

Mr. Sleigh.—Did you ever attempt to communicate with him directly or indirectly?

Witness.—No, I did not.

Mr. Sleigh.—Well, I don't wish to hurt your feelings, but if, as you say, you left your father's house in February, 1857, and in March, 1858, were living in a good situation, or, at all events, where you had a house over your head, with plenty of food—how was it that, as you told the Lord Mayor the other day, after being so long without attempting to communicate with your father, you then made that rash attempt to destroy your life?

The poor girl drooped her head for a few moments, and was understood to say (for she spoke indistinctly, with a bosom heaving with emotion) that she was miserable from thinking over her father's unkindness, and from having no means of procuring clothes except from the goodness of her brother and sisters.

Mr. Sleigh.—You have said that during the six months you were at the hospital your father did not once call to see you. Did not a gentleman come to see you there who said your father had sent him?

Witness.—A gentleman known to my father called, but he said it was without my father's knowledge. I was very ill at the time, but I do not believe he said he came from my father or at his desire. He did not tell me that if I would go back to my father's house I should there find a home.

Mr. Sleigh.—Now, listen; this is most serious as regards your father. You have said he told you once to go upon the streets for a livelihood. When was that?

Witness (reluctantly).—He told me so several times.

Mr. Sleigh.—Was that about the time of your mother's death?

Witness.—Yes, and several times after.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Sleigh.—It is so monstrous an imputation that I must ask you whether you have any witnesses to this. Did any human being besides yourself hear him say so?

Witness.—He used to say it while I was passing up and down stairs by myself, but I think some of my brothers and sisters have heard him say so.

Mr. Sleigh.—Generally did your father speak kindly to you?

Witness.—He has not spoken to me for years, except as I have just said. (She spoke mournfully, and the audience shuddered.)

Mr. Sleigh.—You say that your father and mother lived unhappily. I suppose some of the children took his part and some hers?

Witness.—No; we all took our mother's part.

The Lord Mayor.—Once again I will ask you, is it possible that you can be mistaken about your father telling you to go on the streets?

Witness.—It is not possible; there can be no mistake about it.

The Lord Mayor.—Well, I am not surprised that you should have no witnesses to that, for I should think no father would say such a thing before witnesses.

By Mr. Bowring.—My aunt's name was Lawrence. She had some property, which she sold, and I believe the money went to send us to school, and to establish a business for the support of my aunt, my mother, and the children.

The Lord Mayor.—Was your mother ill long before she died?

Witness.—She was always delicate.

The Lord Mayor.—But how long was she seriously ill before she died?

Witness.—About a fortnight.

The Lord Mayor.—What was your father's conduct towards her during that fortnight?

Witness (pathetically).—He used to come and sing outside her door. (Murmurs of disgust.) During that fortnight I got my meals in a room downstairs, my brother paying for them, and if he had not done so, I believe my father would have given me neither money nor food. (Renewed murmurs.) He had refused to do so. He took his own meals in a room on the same floor.

Mr. Bowring.—While you were living in a room of your father's house with your sister Amelia, did she not receive a letter from your father telling her that she must pay 5*s.* a-week rent or leave?

Mr. Sleigh objected to any reference being made to the letter, unless it was intended to produce it.

The Lord Mayor said, the letter might be important as showing the cause why witness left her father's house.

Mr. Bowring then handed in the letter, which

The Lord Mayor read,—"To Miss Amelia Johnston. Madam"—that is, to his daughter—and the letter goes on to say, "As your mother's death has severed every tie between us, I hereby give you notice that it is my intention from this day to charge you 5*s.* a-week rent for the room which you occupy, with use of the kitchen. If you are willing to remain on these terms, let me know immediately, so that, if not, I may take steps to let the room to some other party.—Robert Johnston." This is a strange notice to quit from a father to his children; and I suppose this was very soon after the death of his wife?

Mr. Bowring.—Almost immediately after.

The Lord Mayor.—It is a terrible revelation. It gets blacker and blacker as we go on. Who paid the expenses of your mother's funeral?

Witness.—I don't know; but my father did not attend it, nor did he provide me with mourning. My brothers and sisters did.

Mr. Goodman (chief clerk).—I will ask you this question. Was the letter, or notice to quit, addressed to your sister Amelia by your father the reason why you left his house?

Witness.—I believe it was.

Mr. Bowring.—And in consequence of the advice he had given to you as to the mode of getting your living?

Witness.—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sleigh.—My Lord, this is by far the most painful investigation in which I have ever been engaged, and I think it is one which may now terminate, for Mr. Buchanan, by whom I am instructed, has spoken to the defendant, and he has agreed to take charge of his daughter for the future, a result which I am sure will satisfy her, and satisfy the public mind, and satisfy yourself. The defendant will enter into a proper and legal arrangement with trustees for that purpose, and I hope they will be deemed sufficient; but I must take the opportunity of saying, both upon my own behalf and that of Mr. Buchanan, that it is with the utmost pain we find ourselves connected with a case of so revolting a nature. (Applause.)

The Lord Mayor.—The question is not now, Mr. Sleigh, one of mere maintenance, for I am quite sure the British public would utterly discard the idea of a father maintaining his child after the revelations now made. I am quite sure the British public would rather maintain her themselves (loud applause), and if he would allow her 1000*l.* a year, it would not satisfy justice. The question goes further than a mere maintenance of his daughter. The question is whether by his brutal and inhuman conduct he drove her to commit that rash act by which she suffered such terrible injuries and so nearly lost her life? That is his offence, and I have no doubt that every man who goes into that dock there would gladly promise not to commit the same offence again as that with which he is charged, if he were permitted to go unpunished in consequence. I shall not, therefore, consent to the settlement which you propose, and the case must go on. (Applause.)

Mr. Sleigh.—Very well, my Lord, I can but bow to your decision.

Mr. James Abbiss, churchwarden of the parish of St. Benet, Gracechurch Street, formally proved the fact that Frances Johnston had become chargeable to that parish, adding that he had called upon defendant to ask whether he would contribute towards his daughter's support, upon which occasion defendant told him that he would do no more than the law compelled him to do, and said he had been the best of husbands and the best of fathers. Defendant's rental was 96*l.*, and he was rated at 85*l.*

Cross-examined by Mr. Sleigh.—He did not tell me that he had sent a friend to see her at the hospital, nor that if she would go to him there would be a home for her.

City Police-constable 597 deposed to the fact that he conveyed Frances Johnston to St. Thomas's Hospital after she was taken out of the Thames.

Sergeant White, 3, City Police.—On the 27th of March I went to defendant, and saw him at his residence at Gracechurch Street. I told him a young woman, who I understood was his daughter, had thrown herself into the river, and was then lying at St. Thomas's Hospital, apparently at the point of death. He said, "My name is Johnston, and I married her mother;" and then he asked me what authority I had to go to him about it? I told him I considered it my duty to do so upon my own authority. I went to him again the other day at your Lordship's command to tell him that you requested his presence here, but he declined to come unless he was summoned. He seemed to treat the case as a matter of indifference.

Henrietta Johnston.—I am 27 years old. I am daughter of the defendant, and his eldest child but one. Some years ago my father told me to go on the streets as a means of living.

Mr. Bowring.—What did he say?

Witness.—He said the girls had better go on the streets, and the boys had better go stealing.

Expressions of horror burst from the spectators at this statement, and the defendant, who had up to this stage of the proceedings maintained his position with a stolid indifference, suddenly started from his apathy, threw up his arms in the air, rolled his eyes frantically, and exclaimed, "Oh, my Lord, I can't stand this!"

Mr. Sleigh and Mr. Buchanan both exhorted him to "be quiet;" but, heedless of their exhortations, he moved for a moment or two from side to side as if about to rush from the court, and then fell to the ground, where he lay, with contorted limbs, struggling and screaming as if in a fit, until, by the Lord Mayor's directions, he was removed from the court into the open air. Then, when the sensation created by this occurrence had subsided and when order was restored,

Mr. Sleigh said,—After this painful occurrence, my Lord, I think I am fully justified in asking for an adjournment of all further proceedings on this unhappy case for a few days, and, in addition to the evident unfitness of the defendant to appear before you again at present, I may state that Mr. Buchanan, who instructs me, tells me that he himself has not been instructed more than 48 hours—a time which has not been sufficient to enable him to make those inquiries which, as he is himself instructed, will justify him in giving the fullest contradiction to the imputations most grave and serious, which have been cast upon the defendant's character.

Mr. Bowring said, that if the defendant was really unfit again to appear in court that day he should not, of course, oppose the application for an adjournment.

Mr. Sleigh.—Some gentleman here says that this fit is all simulation, and that nothing is the matter with defendant. If that imputation is seriously made, the best way will be to send at once for a medical man and take his opinion upon the subject.

Lord Mayor.—Yes, we will have a medical man if he is not better directly.

The gentleman referred to by Mr. Sleigh explained that he did not mean the fit was simulated, but only that it was the result of excitement.

Lord Mayor.—Well, in that case he will, no doubt, soon be better. Officer, go and see how he is getting on. (The officer went and returned.) I am told that he is able to come back now, but that he says he won't come.

Mr. Sleigh.—Oh, but he must come. Mr. Buchanan must go to him and tell him so; and tell him, too, Mr. Buchanan, that if he don't come in I shall walk out.

As Mr. Buchanan was about to leave the court to essay his powers of persuasion, defendant was led in between two officers, and after sitting down for a minute or two resumed his standing position in front of the dock, apparently as stolid as ever, and the examination of Henrietta Johnston was resumed. She said,—I am prepared to swear that what I before stated was correct. I went to see my sister several times while she was at the hospital. When at home I never saw my father treat my sister kindly, but latterly I was not much there, as once when I went my father shut the door against me and told me I should not go there any more so long as he paid the rent.

Cross-examined by Mr. Sleigh.—I left my father's house three years ago. My father and mother occupied separate parts of the house. There was some talk of an allowance once, but after a week or two my father left it off. I can't say that my father never contributed anything to the support of my mother and sisters.

Mr. Sleigh.—What did your father say when he told you to go on the streets and your brothers to steal?

Witness.—Ten years ago he said so; he was in a passion, and he said, "You girls had better go on the streets, and your brothers had better go and steal; that's what you will all come to."

Mr. Sleigh.—Then he said it in a passion?

Witness.—Yes; but he never spoke to us except he was in a passion. I cannot say whether the letter produced is in my handwriting. If so, it was written a long time ago. It is not in the writing of my sister Frances.

Digitized by Google

Amelia Johnston.—The letter now produced is not in my sister Frances's handwriting. It is in my handwriting. (The letter was written to the father after the mother's death. It stated that during seven years he had only been at an expense of about 1100*l.* for the support of the mother and family, and that it would be advisable for him to advance some money to enable the children to continue the business which had been carried on by their aunt and mother.) I remember my brother Arthur showing me a letter which he had received from my father just after my mother's death, and my sister Frances showed me a similar one. That letter spoke about some arrangements to be suggested by her to her father with regard to her future prospects in life, as being necessary in consequence of the death of her mother, until she could obtain constant employment. Subsequently I had some conversation with my sister about the subject-matter of that letter, and, after consulting with my elder sister, an answer was returned through Mr. Wyatt, who, I believe, had left the letter for my sister at the house. As I recollect it, the reply we sent asked either for a premium to put her apprentice, or sufficient money for her to live upon until she could maintain herself.

By Mr. Sleigh.—I frequently visited my sister at the hospital. I saw Captain Styles there, and asked him if he came with my father's knowledge and sanction. He said, "No." I think he said he had seen my father since the accident, but he did not say that if my sister would go home, my father would receive her. As far as I recollect, he said exactly the reverse. Another gentleman, Mr. Hunter, who is also a friend of my father's, was there at the same time.

By Mr. Bowring.—I received the letter produced (asking 5*s.* a-week for the room) from my father, and quitted his house in consequence shortly after. The only advice I ever heard my father give my sister Frances was to go on the streets, but, of course, she did not follow that advice.

By Mr. Sleigh.—We never knew how much money my mother had of my father. My aunt carried on business for herself, and he used to have goods of us to supply to his correspondents. Then he puzzled us so with his accounts that we could never tell how much money we had of him. I do not remember how much money we asked my father to let us have to assist us in carrying on the business after my mother's death.

By Mr. Bowring.—Mr. Wyatt acted as a friend between my brothers and sisters and my father.

Mr. Bowring.—That completes our case, my Lord. I have no more evidence to offer.

Mr. Sleigh.—Then, my Lord, I must apply for an adjournment, to enable Mr. Buchanan to make inquiries in order to disprove the imputations which have been thrown upon the defendant's character.

The Lord Mayor.—I see no good that can result from an adjournment, and, unless you can assign some special grounds, I do not feel disposed to accede to your application.

Mr. Sleigh.—As a special ground for the application, I may mention the absence of Mr. Hunter, whose name has been mentioned in the evidence, and who, in the absence of Captain Styles from the country, may be able to prove that that gentleman conveyed to the daughter while at the hospital the willingness of her father to receive her back to his home.

The Lord Mayor.—But, even if you could show that, which I do not believe, it would not refute the charge made against the defendant of having refused to contribute to his daughter's support—a fact which is placed beyond dispute.

Mr. Sleigh.—Then, my Lord, I can only bow to your decision; and, in reply to the irrelevant matters which have been dragged into the case, I must remind you that it has been clearly proved that the defendant, who is charged with such gross inhumanity to his family, expended large sums for their benefit.

The Lord Mayor.—No, no, Mr. Sleigh; it is only alleged that he expended 1100*l.* upon them in seven years—or 150*l.* a-year; which, if it be so, is surely little enough for a man in such a position to expend upon his wife and several children.

Mr. Sleigh.—Be that as it may, I must express my hope that your Lordship will stay your hand, and, not exercising the power which the law gives you, that you will rely upon the defendant's promise properly to maintain his unfortunate daughters for the future. I hope you will incline mercifully towards this old man, whose conduct I can only account for by supposing that he is afflicted with some indescribable mania, and whose liability to maintain his child and whose refusal to do so I will not deny. Let the case stand over for a certain period, and at the end of that period let him again appear here, and then let him be punished as the law directs if it be proved that his promise has not been fulfilled. This is what I feel justified in asking at your hands; but, should your Lordship decide to exercise the power which the law gives you, and send this grayhaired old man to prison under the Vagrant Act, I can only say—repeating the expression of my regret and that of Mr. Buchanan that we should have been ever professionally engaged in such a case, with all the sad details of which we were not previously acquainted—that I have done my best to clear the defendant's character from those horrible imputations which have been thrown upon it by evidence the truth of which I must reluctantly admit I cannot now question, so steady and uniform has been the tale told by that old man's daughters.

The Lord Mayor.—Robert Johnston, I have given a great deal of time and patience to this most painful investigation. It is painful, not only on account of your conduct in itself, but still more so because of the effect which that conduct has produced upon your own unfortunate child. It has been clearly proved that your conduct towards your family for a long period was brutal and cruel in the extreme, and there is no doubt in the world that it was your brutality and inhumanity towards her that drove your innocent daughter to desperation, and goaded her on to that dreadful attempt which she made to destroy her own life. Glad am I that she did not succeed in that attempt; and how thankful should you be that it pleased the Almighty to snatch her from death, since, if she had perished, you would have been legally responsible, and might have had to meet the consequences of your brutality in another court. Animals belonging to the most savage tribes will fight desperately, even against far superior strength, in defence of their young, and we might expect that any parent belonging to the human race and possessed of human feelings would be still more anxious to protect his offspring. But with you how different it has been; for not only have you left your children to struggle on as they could through the world, but you have advised them to obtain a living by means which must have destroyed their peace of mind and purity for ever. Fortunately for them and for you they have had strength of mind to put aside their father's evil counsels, for I have made every necessary inquiry, the result of which is that they are most respectable and praiseworthy in their conduct; and I must say that a family of more prepossessing appearance I never beheld. The special and particular offence with which you stand charged has been clearly proved, and, though I should rejoice if I could spare your gray hairs such a disgrace, and permit you to go hence free as you entered, I feel that I should be neglecting my duty to society and degrading the judgment seat if I did not inflict upon you the utmost punishment which the law will enable me to inflict, and sentence you, as I now do, under the Vagrant Act, to one month's imprisonment with hard labour.

This sentence was received with applause by the spectators, and with apparent indifference by the defendant, who was at once taken to one of the cells below the court, and shortly after removed in the prison van to the City Prison at Holloway.

AT WESTERTON'S LIBRARY,
120,000 VOLUMES IN CIRCULATION.
 Books sent once a week to Wandsworth, Wimbledon, and its vicinity.
Single Subscription, One Guinea per Annum.
WESTERTON'S LIBRARY, HYDE-PARK-CORNER.

SOCIETY FOR IRISH CHURCH MISSION TO THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.

CHAIRMAN OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
J. C. Colquhoun, Esq.

CHAIRMAN OF FINANCE COMMITTEE.
Major-General Alexander.

TREASURERS.
Hon Arthur Kinnaird.
John Labouchere, Esq.

HON. SECRETARIES.
The Rev. Alex. R. C. Dallas, M.A., for Missions.
The Hon. and Rev. F. N. Clements, M.A., Northern Division of England.
The Rev. Sir C. R. Lighton, Bart., M.A., for West Midland Division.
The Rev. Joshua Greaves, M.A., East Midland Division.
The Rev. J. B. Owen, M.A., for Southern Division.

The Committee of this Society desire to urge the importance of its object upon the earnest consideration of the Christian public; and to ask whether the Protestants of Great Britain are willing that, for lack of means, the Society's operations should be yet further curtailed, and the great Reformation movement thereby restrained.

The bold, yet kindly, aggressive system on which the Society has ever acted, has proved, by the blessing of God, most powerful in its effects. The results are not to be estimated merely by the numbers of conversions, the increase of Protestant congregations, where such previously existed, and the formation of them in many localities where, ten years ago, none were to be found; but also in the almost universal spirit of inquiry and demand for the Bible among Roman Catholics in Ireland, their altered feelings towards their priests, on the one hand, and the Missionary agents and Protestants generally, on the other; and the frequent and loud complaints of the priests that the people are neglecting their "duties"—forsaking the Confessional, and disregarding the claims of their Church.

The organized opposition against the Mission work, by the powers of Rome, in the use, not of arguments, but of violence and abuse, is an unmistakable evidence of the effect of the Mission operations. The priests are compelled to admit that their system is in danger, and to use every effort to counteract the influence they dread.

Surely, then, Protestants will not now withhold their help. By their liberality the early operations of this Society were rapidly extended. Experience and practice have rendered the agency much more efficient, and the opportunities for their labours far exceed the power of the Society to supply labourers, while the prosperity of the work is evident to all who have the opportunity of seeing its results. To this many valuable testimonies have been borne by independent witnesses, who have communicated their impressions to the Committee, some of which have been published in the Society's Occasional Papers.

The Committee therefore most earnestly solicit a continuance and increase of pecuniary support. They have had some months of trying anxiety; and enter upon another month with an empty treasury. 2200*l.* is required for the liabilities of the month of October; and they cannot but fear the probable necessity of reducing their Missions at the close of the year, unless a liberal response be given to their appeal, not merely in the way of present relief, but of a permanent increase of the Society's income.

The Committee employ at present 35 ordained missionaries, 166 lay-agents and scripture readers, 64 schoolmasters, 65 schoolmistresses, and 240 Irish teachers, besides paying for 21 agents, employed by Local Committees for Missions in parts of Ireland where no direct Mission is established.

GEORGE MAXWELL, Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE SOCIETY.
11, Buckingham Street, Adelphi, London (W.C.)

BANKERS.
Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co., Pall Mall East.
Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co., Birchin Lane.

Money-Orders in favour of the Society's funds are requested to be made payable to Charles A. Johnson, Assistant Secretary, 11, Buckingham Street, Adelphi, to be drawn on "The Charing Cross" Money-Order Office.

Digitized by Google

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.—

Issue from the Depot until the present time Forty-two Millions of pages.

NEW TRACTS.

No.		Pages
262.	Job Brown's Two Glasses	4
263.	What is Port Wine?	4
264.	The Results of One Year's Drinking. By Joseph Livesey	4
265.	How liberally to Support a Church without Cost	2
266.	The British Workman's Home, what it too often is, and what it ought to be. By Rev. Stopford Ram	16
267.	The Public House. Is there not a spell on it?	8
268.	Five Shillings and Costs. By Hugh Stowell Brown.
269.	The Sabbath School Robbed. By J. P. Parker	2
270.	The Reclaimed Bricklayer; or, "Touch not the Drink." By J. P. Parker	4
271.	The Malt Liquor Delusion. By J. Livesey	2
272.	The Experience of a Hard-working "Navvie" from the Crimea. By J. P. Parker	4
273.	The Influence of Class upon Class in Supporting the Intemperance of our Country. By Samuel Bowley	12
274.	The Gold Piece. A Sketch from Life	4
275.	Sad Realities. Where does the Guilt lie? Who will remedy the Evil?	8
276.	An Awful Warning	2

All sold in Sixpenny Packets. Sent post free by remittance sent to RICHARD DYKES ALEXANDER, Ipswich. Fifty packets for a Guinea sent by train to London.

W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

The whole Series of Tracts and Juvenile Books post free for Nine Shillings.

THE GREAT SOCIAL EVIL.—Eighty out of every hundred poor young women on the streets belong to the class of domestic servants! We find this by reference to the reports of institutions for the reclamation of the "fallen."

One great cause of this is found to be the want of respectable lodgings, where, at a low charge, female servants out of place can resort. For instance, "A young woman from the country, who has been in London only for a short period, is thrown out of her place. She knows no one but the charwoman, of whom she can inquire for a lodging. She is recommended to some low place, where she is brought under the evil influence of other young women. She remains there until her money is spent. It is then suggested that she can pledge her clothes at the corner shop. The money goes to pay the landlady; and not being in a position now to seek a situation, the next idea insidiously proposed is to 'go out at night.' She is led to accompany some one, and becomes an outcast from society."

The "SERVANTS' HOME SOCIETY" has long been aware of this fact, but did not believe, until now, that female servants formed so large a proportion of "unfortunate" females. Twenty-two years ago, it proposed to form twenty "Homes" in the Metropolis, but was not able to establish more than two, which have been in operation many years. Another has recently been added to the number, and the Committee will not cease their exertions until additional Institutions of this kind have been established in London.

These Homes have afforded a safe lodging to more than 6,000 servants, and have allowed about 37,000, who have not been able to pay the fee, to register free of expense.

The whole expenses do not amount to more than £500, and about £300 of this is met by the rents and fees paid by servants and employers. For the three Homes only £200 is required in voluntary contributions. The Homes are in full operation; and by a recent liberal contribution from a clergyman they are happily free from debt. The Committee are now, therefore, desirous of establishing another "Home." A lady has just forwarded a donation of £35 towards this object, and when the remaining sum to complete the requisite amount shall have been given, together with a promise of £60 yearly for the rent, the Committee will take steps to open another "Home."

"Prevention is better than cure," and is there any cheaper means of prevention than this?

Earnestly do the Committee APPEAL to all who are interested in the repression of the "Great Social Evil." They appeal to employers of female servants—to heads of families—to fathers and mothers—to all who can pity the friendless and the orphan; for, alas, the majority of those who come under their care are orphans!

Any benevolent person wishing to do good amongst young women, at little permanent cost, should spend about £100 in furniture for the fittings of a Servants' Home, and pay the rent of a house. By this means hundreds of young persons might be saved from ruin. They might be brought, when out of place—and there are 10,000 servants in London always out of place, or changing places—under healthy religious influence, and stimulated, in an endless variety of ways, to act uprightly in the station in which God has placed them. What a check would be given to the almost universal practice of dishonesty, if every servant dreaded the affectionate reproval of a motherly superintendent at a Servants' Home!

By these considerations, and many others which suggest themselves to all right-thinking persons, the Committee appeal for assistance.

DANIEL COOPER, Hon. Secretary.

110, Hatton Garden, E.C.

LONDON REFORMATORY for ADULT MALE CRIMINALS,

9, Great Smith Street, Westminster.

Colonel HENRY STACE, Governor.

The Committee gratefully acknowledge the undermentioned sums, which have been received since the kind promise of Mr. R. Hanbury, M.P., to give £50, if others would make it up to £500.

Amount already advertised	£403	0	0
SINCE RECEIVED:—
Commander Bowerbank, R.N.	5	5	0
H. S., per Herries and Co.	5	0	0
Y. T.	10	0	0
The Misses F. & A., per Herries & Co.	5	0	0
Mrs. G. F.	20	0	0
E. H. B.	20	0	0
Robert B. Kaye, Esq.	5	0	0
Mrs. Robertson, per Earl of Shaftesbury	5	0	0
P. L. Hussey, Esq.	5	0	0
T. E. S., per Herries and Co.	5	0	0
Sums under £5	12	1	0
Robert Hanbury, Esq., M.P.	50	0	0

JOSEPH C. WOOD, Treasurer.
JOHN M. CLABON, Hon. Sec.

Donations and Subscriptions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer or the Governor, at the Institution.

Cast-off Clothes much wanted for the Inmates.

Extract from a Letter from a former Inmate of the London Reformatory, who was sent out as an emigrant, and is now steward on board a large ship:—

"I have been on board one month, and like her very well. My wages are £6 a month. We are loading for ———. Dear Sir,—I send my best regards to you and all the gentlemen of the Committee. I shall ever be thankful for what they have done for me, because had they not took care of me, and got me away from the country, why, I might have been a convict by this time, instead of what I am; and, Sir, I hope that the Institution will stand and be well supported, to do for others what it has done for me, for nobody knows what a useful Institution it is but those who make good use of it. I should, if God spares me, like to return to my native country. I shall not forget to call, and I hope to give you a trifle towards the support of such a place."

TRAINING INSTITUTION FOR MASTERS.

WANTED A YOUNG MAN between 25 and 30 years of age, to take the instruction of lads training as Masters and Assistants for Reformatory Industrial and Ragged Schools. Testimonials required; a liberal salary will be given. For further information, apply in the first place by letter addressed, G. J. Bowyer, Esq., Honorary Governor, North West London Prevention and Reformatory Institution, 237, Euston Road, near Gower Street.

NORTH WEST LONDON PREVENTIVE and REFORMATORY INSTITUTION,

237, Euston Road, near Gower Street, N.W.—This Institution is much in want of funds, there are now nearly 100 Inmates, and many applications are refused.

The Training Institution for Masters is complete, and will shortly be opened.

The Industrial School under 20 & 21 Vict., c. 48, 1857, will be finished the early part of the month, for each of these objects subscriptions are most earnestly requested, and will be most gladly received by George J. Bowyer, Honorary Governor, 43, Ampthill Square, N.W.

Dear Friend, July 24th 1858.

I write to let you know a little about India. Sir, on 1st July 1857 a company and a half started from Spithead to the India war and I was one of them, we had some very good weather in the Bay of Biscay and when we crossed the line the weather turned very rough and our old ship flew round the Cape at the rate of 11 nots an hour we kept this rate up until we got into Madras we stoped there for 2 days and 2 knights and if you had seen the people you would have laffed at them they wear no clothing only a bit of rag round their loins not much larger than string they come right out to sea on a mear peas of wood the natives live in the water all the time starved with cold tho the sun is so hot for us. we started from this and went thro the Bay of Bengal we got into a hurrekin which lasted for 1 month we began to think we should never reach our journeys end but the lightning ceased and so did the rain and thunder and we got in on the 13th of November at Calcuter, we marched thro fort William and we stoped there for 1 day we then went to the station and in the morning we found ourselves at a place called Rungunge about 104 miles from Calcuter we had no more riding after this because the Seapoys pulled the railway iron up as far as Lucknow, the place we got to next was Benares a fine city been destroyed by the Seapoys and to tell you the truth all the places are alike except Calcuter, we marched from Benares towards Cornpore driving the enemy in front of us on 4th Dec. marching on the road the Brigeear Genral said regiments form up the enemy is advancing on us we had loaded and sent our 9 pounders in front but thank God we did not fire it turned out to be the Sikes that was escorting our wounded and sick that was emed in at Lucknow. Sir we reached Cornpoor at last and we got in we stood under arms for 2 or 3 hours, this was about 6 in the evening we had our grog and went to bed the call sounded about ½ past 3 o'clock in the morning of 6 Decr. the regiments was formed up and the guns was parted some to one brigade and some to another, the brigades parted one went to the right and another to the left and one in the senter so our regiment being the Rifle Corps we was sent to the front in scurmishing order and the guns just behind us and our caverly behind the guns then the enemy shoed front to us and we to them. I thought to myself this is my last home when they keep coming on us and we on them, then commenced the firing shot and shell and canister then grape then the men falling in numbers on the right and left of us, the smoke was so thick we could not see but they was very close to us and soon after the firing was heard at a distance and we took the town in 2 days with hard fiting I did not get hit after all we stoped at Cawnpore some time and then we marched with the seage for Lucknow, Sir I forgot to tell you how many we slaid at Cornpoor about 1000 as near as I can gess, we are hanging them by 6 and 8 at a time we show no quarter and hanging is too good for them, you should see what I have seen at Cornpoor, see where the masecree had taken place the reches burnt our people alive and put their heads on bamboo sticks we are giving them their deserts now, Sir, we have been here some time I have fought 4 engagements since Cornpoor and we are going to lay siege in the morning which will make them fly but they did not fly so easy as we thought, it lasted 21 days and 5000 of the rebels and Seapoys was some to be slain and about 600 of us British. I have gone thro the siege of Lucknow and thank God I have not got a scratch yet I was taken bad with sun stroke after Lucknow was taken so that I got out of no firing, the country is very hot and now the Winter is coming we shall go after them again they are in the jungles and Nanersab is still commanding them the naner sing is killed and 2 sons of Naner Sab, sir you must excuse my writing so I must conclude my dear Parent Mr. Bowyer.

Please to give my respects to these I name—Mr. and Mrs. White Stock Willcocks Gapper and all that is under your care when they are under your care they have a Friend Sir, would you be so kind to let me know what regiment W. Reed is in. Good knight and God bless you direct your letters &c.

691 Private T. B.

Kind Sir,

I now take the opportunity of addressing these few lines to you, for the first time in this country, for as I know you are very anxious to know how we arrived at Quebec; we arrived there on Monday morning at about two o'clock, after a rough passage of six weeks; we had a hard wind all the journey it drove us into the Atlantic Ocean where we were surrounded by Ice and we did not know one moment from the other but what we should sink to the bottom of the Sea: when we got to Quebec we staid on board till Tuesday morning, when the doctor came on board and the Emigration Agent; we then went by a steam boat to the Grand Trunk Railway, there we staid till 9 o'clock the same evening, and we travelled all night, and arrived at Montreal at eleven o'clock, we then took the Rail-road to Preston and then farewell to our friends that were going to London, we staid all night for the train did not start until 8 the next morning, and then we came straight to Ottowa and we arrived there at 12 o'clock, there were plenty of Men waiting to hire us there, and they all seemed to think that I would suit them but I would not engage myself to them; I then took my clothes into the station and went straight to the Emigration office, and the Agent gave me a letter to go to the B——— for a situation of which I am now occupying, I am getting six dollars for the first month with board, lodging, and washing; for the second I am to have seven dollars. A——— and G——— have got a job at Carpentry, and are going to-morrow morning, it is a few miles out in the country.

18th, Sunday morning got up and went to Church; the Church is about 3 minutes, walk from the house where I live; The passage of Scripture that was taken for the text, you will find in the 10th, chapter of Matthew, at 32nd and 33rd, verses. Sir if there are any more Emigrants coming out, I would advise them to come to this part for they cannot get men enough to work; they want Carpenters, Blacksmiths, and Labourers, in abundance.

Sir I shall never forget the good I received while in your happy abode, for indeed it was a happy abode to me, and likewise to all those who left it. The reason I have not paid the postage is because they do not send the letters if they are paid for; and if you should write to me Sir please not to pay the postage, and then I shall be sure to receive the letter. Please to remember me to Mr. W——— and tell him I will write to him as soon as possible. Remember me to P——— V——— C——— H——— and all the Inmates and tell them to learn all they can for it will be very useful to them out here: and Remember me to all the Superintendants. I have no more to say at present, and I remain your Humble Servant,

G. W.

Printed for the Proprietor by Messrs. WOODFALL and KINDER, Angel Court, Skinner Street, London; and Sold by W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

October 1, 1858.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE.

VOL. V.—No. 42.] LONDON, NOVEMBER 1, 1858. [Annual Subscription, 6s. PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

THE ROYAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

ESTABLISHED FOR

The Promotion of Industry and Economy;
The Investigation of Cases of Distress;
The Assistance of Deserving Persons;
AND
The Collection and Diffusion of Information tending to Ameliorate the Condition of the Poor.

Patron.
His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, K.G., &c.

President.
The Viscount Raynham, M.P.

Vice-Presidents.

The Duke of Leeds.
The Duke of Manchester.
The Marquis Townshend.
The Earl of Albemarle.
The Earl Cowper.
The Earl of Ilchester.
The Earl of Southesk.
The Earl of Darnley.
The Lord J. Russell, M.P.
Colonel Sir Thomas Troubridge, Bart., C.B.

Trustees.
The Marquis Townshend. | Colonel Hudson.

Treasurer.
The Viscount Raynham, M.P.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

The Hon. Wm. Ashley.
J. F. Basset, Esq.
Edmond Beales, Esq.
W. Lloyd Birkbeck, Esq.
C. Holte Bracebridge, Esq.
The Rev. Dr. Brewer.
General Buckley, M.P.
Benja. Bond Cabbell, Esq.
Capt. Wm. C. Caldwell.
Colin G. Campbell, Esq.
G. W. Chasseaud, Esq.
R. L. Cole, Esq.
Lt.-Col. the Hon. Peregrine F. Cust.
A. H. Davenport, Esq.
The Rev. R. H. Davies.
Heneage Dering, Esq.
Rob. Dimsdale, Esq.
Edward Drummond, Esq.
Henry D. Erskine, Esq.
Lieut.-General Fane.
Sir J. Fergusson, Bart.
J. Stuart Glennie, Esq.
Montague Gore, Esq.
W. Irving Hare, Esq.
The Rev. H. J. Hatch, M.A.
Prescott Hewett, Esq.
The Rev. G. Townshend Hudson.
The Viscount Ingestre, M.P.
The Lord Kingsale.
H. Gore Langton, Esq. M.P.
J. Z. Laurence, Esq., F.R.C.S.
Henry Mayhew, Esq.
Sir Richard Mayne, K.C.B.
Fred. North, Esq., M.P.
W. Ogle, Esq., M.D.
The Lord Alfred Paget, M.P.
John Pares, Esq.
Colonel Pinney, M.P.
The Rev. Andrew Reed, D.D.
The Rev. George Ridsdale.
Arthur Russell, Esq. M.P.
George Russell, Esq.
John St. Aubyn, Esq.
A. Nowell Sherson, Esq.
W. Campbell Sleigh, Esq.
The Hon. E. Lyulph Stanley
Lieut.-Col. Stuart, M.P.
W. W. F. Synge, Esq.
Chas. Trueman, Esq., M.P.
T. Twining, Jun. Esq. F.S.A.
Percy Wyndham, Esq.

LADIES' COMMITTEE.

The Marchioness (Maria) of Ailesbury.
Mrs. Beales.
The Lady Selina Bridgeman.
The Lady Augusta Cadogan.
The Lady Honoria Cadogan.
Miss Campbell.
Mrs. Chasseaud.
Mrs. Robert Dimsdale.
Mrs. Cecil Fane.
Mrs. Hatch.
Mrs. Heygate.
The Lady Jane Hildyard.
Mrs. Hudson.
The Viscountess Ingestre.
Miss Mayne.
Mrs. Pares.
The Lady Elizabeth St. Aubyn.
Mrs. Sheppard.
The Lady Anne Sherson.
The Marchioness Townshend.
The Lady Wensleydale.

Hon. Solicitors.
Messrs. Henderson and Leach.

Hon. Physician.
H. G. Wright, Esq., M.D.

Secretary.
Captain Sheppard.

Bankers.
Messrs. Coutts and Co.

Offices.
8, St. Martin's Place, Trafalgar Square.

That impulsive and indiscriminate charity which is moved to compassion by the mere appearance of destitution, and bestows its alms broadcast on the outward semblance of want, is, in the generality of cases, productive of harm rather than good; for it encourages the idle, the dissolute, and the cunning to assume the guise of poverty for the purposes of imposition, and thus offers a premium to deception, and causes a waste of the funds of the benevolent, which are inadequate to meet the demands made upon them.

Meanwhile, untended and uncared for, because unknown, there exist at this moment, both in the higher and humbler paths of life, thousands of persons in distress to whom the benevolent would gladly afford relief, and whom a trifling outlay of money would efficiently aid.

But it is difficult to discover many of these cases without a judiciously-organized system, and equally difficult, without considerable knowledge of industrial resources, to afford that relief best calculated to enable its recipients to earn a livelihood.

To meet these difficulties, and to supply the various information necessary for practically assisting the poor, are the objects of this Society: and the fullest confidence is felt in the willingness of the wealthy and benevolent to support an institution which proposes, in addition to its main charitable intentions, to develope a sense of self-reliance, and inculcate habits of industry.

It is the object of this Society, to place unemployed and reduced persons in a position to call forth their own energies, to teach them to rely on their own powers, and to show them that extrication from their difficulties lies chiefly in their own hands. It is confidently believed that, by the judicious application of the funds contributed by its supporters, thousands may be effectually and permanently relieved, who, stricken down by their misfortunes, would otherwise gradually but surely sink into destitution and despair.

By placing the Society in communication with the several Metropolitan Police-courts, information of many cases of very great though uncomplaining distress are acquired, and every endeavour made for their immediate relief.

Much permanent good is effected by the system which has been in particular cases adopted by the Society of granting small loans to deserving persons, for the purpose of starting them in some way of business, or enabling them to obtain articles necessary for entering on a new employment.

A register of trades and modes of employment is kept for persons who have been recommended to the Society.

Under peculiar circumstances, in the cases of women and children, or where physical incapacity prevents the applicant from gaining a livelihood by manual labour, small sums of money are paid, as premiums, to enable them to acquire a knowledge of such light employment as may prove remunerative.

The welfare of all persons assisted by the Society is further promoted whenever opportunity occurs; but all additional assistance to persons to whom advances of money have been made by the Society, depend, in a measure, upon the exertions made by the recipients towards repayment.

The objects of the Society also include the occasional delivery of lectures to the poor on subjects connected with their moral and social welfare; and the publication of a periodical devoted to the collection and diffusion of information tending to ameliorate the condition of the poor.

Attention is also given to the advantageous results that may, in many cases, be afforded by promoting emigration. The poor, as a class, are generally ignorant on all points connected with this subject. The nature of the climate, the demand for labour, the rates of wages, and the prospects of ultimate success in our Colonies, are, to them, unknown. The advantage of a register of every particular bearing on these points; as well as of the costs of transit to the different ports in our Colonies where occupation may be readily found, is obvious.

Particulars of all institutions of a benevolent character can be obtained at the offices of the Society, and respecting them the Secretary will be happy to communicate with persons desirous of giving or receiving information.

Acting in particular cases as a medium between the afflicted poor and the various charitable institutions for their relief, temporary assistance is afforded by the Society until, through exertions on their behalf, admission to suitable asylums can be obtained. In furtherance of this object, presentations and votes are solicited, which will be given to persons who, after careful inquiry, prove the most worthy of public sympathy and support.

Members of the Society are entitled to submit to the Executive Council any cases for inquiry and relief presented to their notice, and for this purpose printed forms of recommendation, to be filled up with the necessary particulars, are provided.

All cases so submitted are promptly and strictly investigated by the Executive Council, and if found deserving, are assisted as the station or occupation of each person recommended may render most advisable, and a check is thus afforded to the present extensive system of imposition, which, among other evil consequences, has too often the effect of discouraging charitable intentions.

Members are entitled, should they require it, to receive a written statement of the decision of Council on all cases submitted to them. An annual report of the proceedings of the Society, with a statement of accounts, is furnished to every member; and the books are, at all times, open for their inspection.

An annual subscription of one guinea or upwards, or a donation of ten guineas or upwards, in one sum, constitutes the donor a member of the Society.

Subscriptions and donations are thankfully received by the Treasurer, the members of the Executive Council, the Bankers, and also by the Secretary, at the offices of the Society. RAYNHAM, President.

GOVERNESSES' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

Incorporated by Royal Charter. WITH POWER TO HOLD LAND BY GIFT, PURCHASE, OR BEQUEST.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.
H.R.H. THE PRINCE ALBERT.
H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER.
H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF KENT.
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE.
H.R.H. THE HEREDITARY GRAND DUCHESS OF MECKLENBURG-STRELITZ.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS MARY ADELAIDE.

President,
THE EARL OF HARROWBY.

Board of Management.

The Hon. William Ashley.
Charles Edward Boothby, Esq.
B. B. Cabbell, Esq., M.P., F.R.S., F.S.A.
F. Patey Chappel, Esq.
W. Timbrell Elliott, Esq.
Sir J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S.
William Gilpin, Esq.
John William Hale, Esq.
S. Carter Hall, Esq., F.S.A.
The Lord Lilford.
The Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P.
The Rev. D. Laing, M.A. F.R.S.
Colonel Long.
J. Tidd Pratt, Esq.
Frederick R. Say, Esq.
Robert A. Slaney, Esq.
W. Jesse Street, Esq.
The Earl Talbot.
Edward Thornton, Esq.
T. Parry Woodcock, Esq.

The objects of the Society are:—

TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE to Governesses in distress, afforded privately and delicately through the Ladies' Committee.

ANNUITY FUND.—Elective Annuities to Aged Governesses, secured on invested capital, and thus independent of the prosperity of the Institution.

 The Hon. Mr. Ashley having most kindly opened a Fund to raise all the Society's Annuities to 25*l.*, any Donations which may be kindly given, may be addressed "The Hon. Mrs. Ashley, to the care of the Secretary."

PROVIDENT FUND.—Provident Annuities purchased by Ladies in any way connected with education, upon Government Security, agreeably to the Act of Parliament. This Branch includes a Savings' Bank.

A HOME for Governesses during the intervals between their engagements.

A SYSTEM OF REGISTRATION, entirely free of expense.

AN ASYLUM for the aged.

CHARLES WILLIAM KLUGH, Secretary.
32, Sackville-street, London.

Digitized by Google

ORPHAN CHILDREN'S HOME and PARENTAL SOLACE.—The Advertiser, who is anxious to promote the welfare of two orphan children, desires to meet with some gentlemen, similarly circumstanced, willing to co-operate in a plan for an Institution of a self-supporting character, providing a home education and introduction to the duties and business of life, free from the repugnance and obnoxiousness of soliciting the suffrages of a Charity, and having a germ of rapidly-extending good that would recommend it as a great public benefit if respectably introduced by men of character and sincerity. Address J. C., care of Henry Webber, Provision Merchant, 1, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

ALLEN'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of PATENT PORTMANTEAUS with Compartments, DESPATCH BOXES, WRITING and DRESSING CASES, TRAVELLING BAGS with Square Opening, and 500 other Articles for travelling.—Post-free.

J. W. and T. ALLEN, MANUFACTURERS, 18 and 22, STRAND.

RANSOMES and SIMS, Ironfounders and Manufacturers of Agricultural Implements, and Machines, Ipswich.

R. and S. manufacture Lawn Mowing Machines, Stable Fittings, Digging Forks, Oat and Bean Crushers for Gentlemen's Stables, Chaff Cutters, Pony Ploughs, &c.

Illustrated Catalogues sent free on application to the Works, Ipswich, or London Office, 31, Essex Street, Strand. SHEPPARD RANSOME, Agent.

CRICKETING OUTFITTERS.

F. LILLYWHITE and WISDEN, 2, NEW COVENTRY STREET, LEICESTER SQUARE, W., beg to acquaint Naval and Military Cricketers that they can supply them with every Article connected with the Game.

Large or small Outfits packed on the shortest notice.

All Goods warranted.

They also keep Articles for all National (Athletic) Games, such as Foot-balls, Racquets, Quoits, Bowls, Dumb-bells, Boxing-gloves, &c.

An Illustrated Catalogue of Prices sent post free.

EMIGRATION to CANADA and the UNITED STATES, by Steamers INDIAN, from Liverpool, on 8th September, and LADY EGLINTON, from Galway, on 16th September; also by first-class fast-sailing Ships of the Liverpool and Quebec Line, sailing weekly during the season, and by Sailing Ships from London, Plymouth, and Bristol. Passengers of all classes booked throughout for one payment, at the lowest fares, including the railway fare from London to Liverpool. Goods and Parcels despatched at through rates, to all parts of Canada and the United States. Money Orders on Canada and Chicago granted.

For fares, dates of sailing, through tickets, the Government pamphlet (which is distributed gratis), and every information, apply to CARMAN and PEARSE (Grand Trunk Railway of Canada), 21, Old Broad Street, E.C.

BANK OF DEPOSIT,

Established A.D. 1844.

No. 3, PALL MALL EAST, LONDON.

PARTIES desirous of Investing Money are requested to examine the Plan of the BANK of DEPOSIT, by which a high rate of interest may be obtained with security.

Deposits made by Special Agreement, may be withdrawn without notice.

The interest is payable in January and July.

PETER MORRISON, Managing Director.

Forms for opening accounts sent free on application.

The following is an EXTRACT from the Second Edition (page 188) of the Translation of the Pharmacopœia of the Royal College of Physicians of London, by Dr. G. F. Collier, published by Longman and Co.:—"It is no small defect in this compilation (speaking of the Pharmacopœia) that we have no purgative mass but what contains aloes; yet we know that hæmorrhoidal persons cannot bear aloes, except it be in the form of COCKLE'S PILLS, which chiefly consist of aloes, scammony, and colocynth, which I think are formed into a sort of compound extract, the acridity of which is obviated, I suspect, by an alkaline process, and by a fourth ingredient (unknown to me) of an aromatic tonic nature. I think no better and no worse of it for its being a patent medicine. I look at it as an article of commerce and domestic convenience, and do not hesitate to say it is the best-made pill in the kingdom—a muscular purge, a mucous purge, and a hydrogogue purge combined—and their effect properly controlled by a dirigent and corrigent. That it does not commonly produce hæmorrhoids like most aloetic pills, I attribute to its being thoroughly soluble, so that no undissolved particles adhere to the mucous membrane."

THE BANK of LONDON & NATIONAL PROVINCIAL INSURANCE ASSOCIATION.

[With which is united the Business and Connections of the "National Provincial" and "Falcon" Life Assurance Societies, and "National Provincial Fire Insurance Company."]

Established for effecting every description of Life and Fire Insurance Business.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES—Threadneedle Street, London (Adjoining the Bank of London).

LONDON DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir HENRY MUGGERIDGE, Alderman, Director of the Bank of London.
Vice-Chairmen—JOHN CUMBERLAND, Esq.
WILLIAM ANTHONY PURNELL, Esq.
John E. Anderdon, Esq., 15, Stratford-place, Oxford-street, Director of the Bank of London.
William Black, Esq., Langley House, East India-road, Poplar.
Stephen Broad, Esq., Rye-hill, Peckham.
John Cropp, Esq., Oaklands, Park-road, Clapham.
John Cumberland, Esq., Camden-road Villas.
John Geary, Esq., Hyde-side, Edmonton.
Thomas Gooch, Esq. (firm of Gooch and Cousens), Director of the Bank of London.
Lord Claud Hamilton, M.P., 19, Eaton-square.
Fred. Winn Knight, Esq., M.P., 106, Sloane-street, and Wolverly-house, Kidderminster.
Thomas Luce, Esq., M.P., King-street, St. James's, and Malmesbury, Director of the Bank of London.
John Malcolm, Esq., 47, Mark-lane.
Professor Morton, Royal Veterinary College.
Wm. Anthony Purnell, Esq., Lee-terrace, Blackheath.
Peter Robb, Esq., St. Martin's-le-Grand.
Thomas B. Stevens, Esq., The Elms, Kilburn, and Derwent Mills, Derby.
John Tarring, Esq. (firm of Tarring and Son), 23, Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital, and 26, Bucklersbury.
Alfred Wilson, Esq. (firm of Venables, Wilson, and Tyler), Director of the Bank of London.
Actuary—Thomas Walker, Esq., B.A., F.S.S., F.I.A.

In all Assurance transactions the first consideration to an insurer should be to satisfy himself that the Office in which he effects his insurance possesses unquestionable means for fulfilling the engagement entered into by his policy.

This Association, in addition to its large annual income, affords the protection and security of a capital of One Million sterling, thereby offering ample security to all having transactions with it.

Prospectuses, forms of proposal, and every information, may be obtained on application at the Chief Office, or to any of the Agents throughout the country.

The Directors are prepared to entertain applications for Agencies in those districts where the Association is not already represented.

EDMUND CLENCH, Manager and Secretary.

HOMES for SERVANTS OUT of PLACE:
21, Nutford-place, Edgeware-road, W.; Superintendent, Mrs. Butcher.
110, Hatton-garden, Holborn, E.C.: Superintendent, Mrs. Peake.
52, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-rd. S.: Superintendent, Mrs. Garrard.
Lodgings, &c., at 1*s.* 6*d.* per week.

FUNDS are needed from the benevolent public. These Homes have been established many years, and have sheltered more than 6000 young women; 31,000, unable to pay, have registered free. Of the 100,000 servants in London, 10,000 are always out of place and changing places.

Treasurer—R. C. L. Bevan, Esq.
Bankers—Messrs. Barclay and Co.
DANIEL COOPER, Hon. Sec.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN BREWER. Containing Practical Instructions by which any man can brew his own Beer, equal to the best London Porter, at 4d. per gallon; Stout at 5d., and a variety of Ales at a proportionate expense. Also, Instructions for making Soda Water in Bottles, without a machine, at a cost of 5d. per dozen, fully equal to the best machine-made article. Also, Ærated Lemonade, Ginger Beer, Fruit Beverages, and Ærated Mineral Waters.

Sent free for 24 stamps, by Mr. Clarkson, 35, Chancery Lane; and of Piper and Co., Paternoster Row; and by order of all Booksellers.

LATE DWERRIHOUSE and CO.,
27, DAVIES STREET, BERKELEY SQUARE.
ESTABLISHED 1760.

J. WHITESIDE begs most respectfully to invite an inspection of his extensive and elegant Stock of ENGLISH and FOREIGN CLOCKS and GOLD and SILVER WATCHES.

CLOCKS WOUND and KEPT IN REPAIR by the year, as usual.

IMMEDIATE HELP REQUIRED for the METROPOLITAN REFORMATORY, Brixton hill. This Institution has now been in operation nearly five years. Much good has been done; 250 have been admitted to the benefits of the Refuge, and 172 have been hopefully reformed. The Committee have laboured earnestly in the work, and are greatly encouraged by the results they have seen and known. They have been unsparing of their own time and money in promoting the object. But they cannot carry it on without a larger measure of public support. Fifty-five are at this moment in the Reformatory, and money is absolutely necessary to carry it on from day to day. The Committee urgently appeal for help. They invite the most rigid scrutiny into the management and expenses of the Institution. Many difficulties have been surmounted. There is every reason to encourage the hope of increased success in the work; and the Committee earnestly ask all who are able to assist not to suffer such an Institution to be closed for want of present pecuniary assistance.

Donations will be thankfully received by John Cunliffe, Esq., Treasurer, 24 Lombard Street; George Moore, Esq., Trustee, Bow Church-yard; C. T. Jenkinson, Esq., Hon. Sec., 7 Clement's Lane, Lombard Street, and at the Institution.

THE REFUGE for the DESTITUTE, Manor House, Dalston, has been established upwards of 50 years. It is the oldest Charitable Institution for Criminal and Destitute Females in the metropolis.

Since its foundation in 1805, it has received more than 6000 young persons. The admissions last year amounted to 62. The number sent out to service, or restored to their parents and friends, 67. Young women are admissible between the ages of 15 and 26, and are chiefly received from prisons, and occasionally from Magistrates and through private recommendation.

It is ascertained, from careful calculation, that from 60 to 70 per cent. are permanently reformed, and become useful and creditable members of society, after undergoing a discipline and religious training of eighteen months in the Refuge.

The inmates are employed chiefly in laundry work, and are attended each day by a Chaplain for prayers and religious instruction, and have a Schoolmistress to superintend their general education.

The funds of the Charity are now depressed through the death of several annual subscribers and liberal contributors; and donations are earnestly sought towards the outlay found necessary from the erection of a new and commodious laundry, in consequence of the large increase of industrial work. Bankers and Treasurer, Messrs. Barnett, Hoares, and Co., 62, Lombard Street; Rev. W. Stone, Chaplain and Secretary; Miss Mollison, Matron, Manor House, Dalston.

ELEGANT DRAWING-ROOM LAMPS,
FROM ONE GUINEA.
ELABORATE VASE PORCELAIN LAMPS,
Each fitted with CLARK'S PATENT IMPROVEMENTS, from TWO GUINEAS each.
THREE THOUSAND to CHOOSE FROM.
BRONZE LAMPS, 4s. 9d. each.
OLD LAMPS TAKEN IN EXCHANGE.
FRENCH LAMPS CLEANED and REPAIRED at 2*s.* each.
IMPORTERS OF BRILLIANT COLZA OIL.
PATENTEES OF CLARK'S PATENT DIAMOND OIL.
METROPOLITAN LIGHT COMPANY,
LONDON WAREHOUSE, 447, STRAND, next to the Electric Telegraph Company's Office.
JOHN CLARK, Manager.

Digitized by Google

INDUSTRIAL HOME,
TRE-WINT, HACKNEY.

This Reformatory and Training Institution is intended for girls of sixteen years and upwards, who from their own fault, or from relative circumstances, are placed in positions of difficulty or of danger. Prison and penitentiary cases are inadmissible.

The inmates are under the care of two resident Matrons, and of visiting Ladies, whose united effort it is to use those means which, by the blessing of God, may restore them to the paths of rectitude and peace. They are industriously employed. Assistance is earnestly requested, either by contributions in money, or by a supply of laundry work for the inmates.

Mrs. Eliza Bacon, Laundry Matron.
Mrs. Salmon, House Matron.

To whose care applications respecting washing, or the admission of cases, may be addressed.

Contributions will be thankfully received by Wilsham Taylor, Esq., 1, Robert Street, Adelphi; and by Henry Roberts, Esq., Stamford Hill.

THE GIRLS' REFUGE.—The KING EDWARD RAGGED and INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS and EASTERN REFUGE, Albert Street, Buxton Street, Brick Lane, Spitalfields.—The objects of this Institution are to educate and train in habits of industry that class of children who, for want of clothing, or the means of paying for instruction, are unable to attend other schools, and to gather in the vicious and depraved who swarm in our streets, and endeavour to civilize and instruct them, and, as far as the funds permit, to provide food, clothing, and shelter for the most destitute.

In the erection of this Institution, provision has been made for about seventy inmates, while accommodation exists for the daily instruction of more than 400 poor children. The number of Refuges which have of late years been opened for the reception of houseless and destitute boys induced the Committee to depart from their original intention, and make this a Refuge for girls. In addition to the large number of children under daily instruction, thirty-five destitute girls are now enjoying the benefits of the Refuge, and the Committee are desirous of extending the sphere of their usefulness, and to afford food, shelter, and clothing to at least thirty-five more.

The varied operations of such an Institution necessarily involve a large annual expenditure, to meet which, and to carry out to the full extent the objects contemplated in its erection, subscriptions and donations are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Samuel Gurney, Esq., M.P., Treasurer, Lombard Street; Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths, Bankers, 1, Lombard Street; and by the Hon. Sec., 2, Penbury Grove, Hackney.

H. R. WILLIAMS, Hon. Sec.

HARD WATER rendered as SOFT as RAIN WATER by the HOLLAND PATENT COMPOUND,
by perfectly uninjurious and cheap means. Sold in packets of 1s., 6d., 2d., and 1d., at our Agents and some of the most respectable Oil and Colourmen, Grocers, and Chemists.

We beg to call the attention of the public, and especially of the Managers of Philanthropical Institutions, Laundries, &c., to this recent discovery, which supersedes entirely the use of soda, and is highly recommended by Dr. A. W. Hoffman, F.R.S., for washing and domestic use. All water softened and purified by its agency makes superior tea, remains quite sweet for several months, and is particularly adapted for shipping purposes.

For large quantities and particulars, apply at DE JONG and Co.'s, 8, Baynam Terrace, Camden Town, London, N.W.

FOR THE HAIR.
BALM OF COLUMBIA.
It is unerring in its operation, highly approved in the leading circles of Fashion, and extensively demanded by all who cultivate the graces of the toilette.

IT STRENGTHENS AND NOURISHES,
Exerting a healthy influence, and occasioning an ample and luxuriant growth of hair,—

PRESERVES
Where the hair is already full.—

RESTORES
When weak or falling off.—

BEAUTIFIES
It gives a rich and beautiful appearance.

IT CLEANSES THE HAIR,
And for young people supersedes the use of the fine comb, as the most respectable heads of schools can testify.

THE NURSERY.
The peculiar mildness of the Balm, the action of which may be regulated at discretion, especially suits infancy and childhood. No well-regulated Nursery can dispense with it again.

Prices 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per Bottle.
No other prices are genuine.
OLDRIDGE'S BALM.
Sold, Wholesale and Retail, by the Proprietors, 13, Wellington Street North, 7 doors from the Strand, London and by all respectable Perfumers and Chemists.

BRITISH PROVIDENT LIFE AND FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY.
4, Chatham-place, Blackfriars, London.
Established 1850.
Incorporated by Act of Parliament 7th and 8th Vict. cap. 110.

Capital £100,000, with power to increase to £1,000,000.

Trustees.
Sir Edward Bindloss Perrott, Bart., Plumstead, Kent.
The Rev. John Wood, Addington-place, Camberwell.

Directors.
Captain Thomas Malkin, Sandhurst Lodge, Queen's-road, Gloucester-gate, Regent's-park, Chairman.
John Britten, Esq., 21, Basinghall-street, and Collingtree, Northamptonshire.
G. Lane, Esq., Finchley-road, St. John's Wood.
William Burchett, Esq., Cheapside and Hammersmith.
Joseph Gimson, Esq., 1, Harewood-place, Harewood-sq.
John Sheridan, Esq. (Managing), Laburnum House, Brompton.
James Goad, Esq., Islington.

Auditors.
H. Brinsley Sheridan, Esq. (Manager of the "Times Life and Guarantee Company"), 32, Ludgate-hill, and Belfield House, Parson's green, Fulham.
T. Wilson, Esq., 103, 104, and 105, Cheapside, and 7, York-terrace, Peckham.
Alexander Webber, Esq., Davies-street, Berkeley-square, and 47, Upper Baker-street (Director of the "Times Life and Fire Assurance Company").
J. Britten, jun. Esq., 11, Basinghall-street.

Bankers.—
Physician.—William Grove Grady, M.D., F.R.C.S.E., M.R.C.S.I.
Surgeon.—William Harding, Esq., 4, Percy-street, Bedford-square.
Standing Counsel.—Henry P. Hinde, Esq., Hall Staircase, Inner-temple.
Solicitor—Henry Empson, Esq., 61, Moorgate-street.
Manager—J. Sheridan, Esq.

LIFE POLICIES indisputable and not liable to forfeiture through inability to keep up the payments. Assurances on single, joint, and survivorship lives. Annuities—immediate, deferred, or survivorship. Endowments for Children. Assurances against accidents. Saving Fund Policies. Profits divided. Yearly, half-yearly, and quarterly payments taken.

EXAMPLE.
Single Life, with Profits, for 100l. at Death.

Age.	Yearly.	Half-yearly.	Quarterly.
30	2l. 5s. 3d.	1l. 2s. 8d.	11s. 4d.

Just Published, price Sixpence,
THE REFORMATORY MOVEMENT:
A PAPER
Read before the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, at Birmingham, October 15th, 1857,
By the Rev. HENRY J. HATCH, M.A.,
Magdalene College, Cambridge, Chaplain of the House of Correction, Wandsworth,
As the Representative of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, 118, Pall Mall.

London: Printed at the Preventive and Reformatory Institution, 237, Euston Road, N.W., near Gower Street North.

Will be forwarded on application, with seven postage stamps, to Rev. H. J. HATCH, Wandsworth.

In the Press, and shortly will be Published, in One Vol., boards, 6s,
A LETTER to Sir FITZROY KELLY, M.P., on the STATE of the CRIMINAL LAW, with Suggestions for its Amendment, and Cases Illustrative of present Defects.
By WILLIAM HENRY BARBER, Solicitor.
CROCKFORD, Essex Street, Strand.

Just published, price 3s. 6d., bound in cloth, Second Edition,
THE NIGHT-SIDE OF LONDON.
By J. EWING RITCHIE.
Seeing a Man Hanged—Catherine Street—The Bal Masque—Up the Haymarket—Ratcliff Highway—Judge and Jury Clubs—The Cave of Harmony—Discussion Clubs—Cider Cellars—Leicester Square Night Houses—Boxing Night—Caldwell's—Cremorne—The Costermongers' Free-and-Easy, &c.
W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

ACCOUNT BOOKS, first-class.—Ledgers, Journals, Cash and Bill Books, Accounts, Current, &c.; Foreign Bills, English, French, German, and Spanish, in Books of 100 Sets.—Copying Machines, Stamping Presses, Bankers' Cheques and Foreign Bank Notes Engraved; Overland Papers, the new "Bankers' Envelope."
NISSEN and PARKER, Printers and Exporting Stationers, 43, Mark Lane, London.

Now ready, Postage free,
A LIST of the Principal NEW and CHOICE BOOKS recently added to MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.
Also,
A LIST of SURPLUS COPIES of RECENT WORKS
Withdrawn from Circulation, and offered at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES FOR CASH.
CHARLES EDWARD MUDIE, New Oxford Street, London; and Cross Street, Manchester.

AT SANDWELL, near BIRMINGHAM, a HOME is OFFERED to WIDOWS and SINGLE LADIES, and the means of Education to Orphan Children, suitable to their situation in life. Girls from thirteen to sixteen are received and trained as domestic servants by being employed in waiting on the inmates of the Home. Boys from twelve to fifteen years old are also received and employed in the house, stable, farm, or garden. Ladies without family ties are invited to join in this work of usefulness, whereby many young persons are rescued from idleness and its attendant temptations. Further particulars may be obtained by letter addressed to the Superintendent, Sandwell, Birmingham, enclosing a stamped envelope, with the name and address of the applicant. Subscriptions are gratefully received by Messrs. LLOYD, Bank, Birmingham, to the credit of the Sandwell Institute.

ESTABLISHED 1810.
JAMES FLOOD, AUCTIONEER, SURVEYOR, APPRAISER and UNDERTAKER;
Valuer of every description of Property, and for Probate-Legacy Duty, &c.
ESTATE, HOUSE, SCHOLASTIC, BUSINESS, MEDICAL AND CLERICAL AGENT,
84, WELLS STREET,
Next 64, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

EPPS'S COCOA.—Pound and Half-pound Packets, 1s. 6d. and 9d. EPPS, Homœopathic Chemist, 170, Piccadilly; 112, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury; and 82, Old Broad Street, City. Manufactory, 398, Euston Road. Also of the principal Grocers. Each packet is labelled.

WHO'S YOUR PRINTER?
Why pay such exorbitant prices, when it can be done considerably less, and in a superior manner?
G. MADDICK, PRACTICAL PRINTER, 1, CRANE COURT, FLEET STREET.
WANTED, the Printing of a Newspaper, Magazine, &c., on unusually advantageous terms. Would not object to take an interest.

RITCHIE'S PATENT GRANULATED CORK MATTRESSES and BEDS expel Vermin, effectually cure Rheumatism, prevent Cramp, and, by preserving electricity, promote Health and prolong Life. The Patent Cork Mattress and Cork Fabric Manufactory, 66, Hatfield Street, Blackfriars.

PATENT LIQUID CEMENT, FOR FRONTS OF HOUSES, &c.
THIS valuable and economic Material is always ready for use, simple in application, and only one-eighth the cost of oil paint. It will not decompose or wash off. For beauty it stands pre-eminent, giving the appearance of fine cut stone, and one cwt. will cover 400 to 500 square feet. Sold in casks of one, two, and three cwt., at 8s., 15s., and 21s. each, casks exclusive.

MIXED LEAD or ZINC PAINTS are ready for use, economical, and unchangeable in colour. Price 7s. per gallon for ordinary colours.

Permanent Brilliant Black for all kinds of outside work, Barges, Park Railings, &c., 2s. per gallon.

DAMP WALLS.—PATENT ELASTIC PAINT, an effectual remedy, by which they are rendered fit for papering or finished in oil colours. Price 10s. per Gallon, which will cover and finish about 150 square feet.

PATENTEES.—GEORGE BELL and CO., Steam Mills, No. 2, Wellington Street, Goswell Street, London, E.C.

TRELOAR'S
COCOA NUT FIBRE MATTING
IS THE BEST.
PRIZE MEDALS AWARDED—LONDON, NEW YORK, and PARIS.
Catalogue, containing Prices and every particular, post free.
WAREHOUSE, 42, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

NORTH WEST LONDON PREVENTIVE and REFORMATORY INSTITUTION, 237, Euston Road, near Gower Street, N.W.—This Institution is much in want of funds, there are now nearly 100 Inmates, and many applications are refused.

The Training Institution for Masters is complete, and will shortly be opened. The following have kindly promised to attend:—

Lord Shaftesbury.
Bishop of Oxford.
The Recorder, Russell Gurney, Esq., Q.C.

Wm. Cotton, Esq.	Thomson Hankey, Esq., M.P.
Rev. Canon Dale.	K. D. Hodgson, Esq., M.P.
Wm. Gladstone, Esq.	J. G. Hubbard, Esq.
Dr. Goulburn.	Ralph Ricardo, Esq.
Capt. John Grant.	Russell Scott, Esq.
Rev. J. H. Gurney.	H. S. Thornton, Esq.
H. E. Gurney, Esq.

The Industrial School under 20 & 21 Vict., c. 48, 1857, will be finished the early part of the month, for each of these objects subscriptions are most earnestly requested, and will be most gladly received by George J. Bowyer, Honorary Governor, 43, Ampthill Square, N.W.

Dear Friend, July 24th 1858.

I write to let you know a little about India. Sir, on 1st July 1857 a company and a half started from Spithead to the India war and I was one of them, we had some very good weather in the Bay of Biscay and when we crossed the line the weather turned very rough and our old ship flew round the Cape at the rate of 11 nots an hour we kept this rate up until we got into Madras we stoped there for 2 days and 2 knights and if you had seen the people you would have laffed at them they wear no clothing only a bit of rag round their loins not much larger than string they come right out to sea on a mear peas of wood the natives live in the water all the time starved with cold tho the sun is so hot for us. we started from this and went thro the Bay of Bengal we got into a hurrekin which lasted for 1 month we began to think we should never reach our journeys end but the lightning ceased and so did the rain and thunder and we got in on the 13th of November at Calcuter, we marched thro fort William and we stoped there for 1 day we then went to the station and in the morning we found ourselves at a place called Rungunge about 104 miles from Calcuter we had no more riding after this because the Seapoys pulled the railway iron up as far as Lucknow, the place we got to next was Benares a fine city been destroyed by the Seapoys and to tell you the truth all the places are alike except Calcuter, we marched from Benares towards Cornpore driving the enemy in front of us on 4th Dec. marching on the road the Brigeear Genral said regiments form up the enemy is advancing on us we had loaded and sent our 9 pounders in front but thank God we did not fire it turned out to be the Sikes that was escorting our wounded and sick that was emed in at Lucknow. Sir we reached Cornpoor at last and we got in we stood under arms for 2 or 3 hours, this was about 6 in the evening we had our grog and went to bed the call sounded about ½ past 3 o'clock in the morning of 6 Decr. the regiments was formed up and the guns was parted some to one brigade and some to another, the brigades parted one went to the right and another to the left and one in the senter so our regiment being the Rifle Corps we was sent to the front in scurmishing order and the guns just behind us and our caverly behind the guns then the enemy shoed front to us and we to them. I thought to myself this is my last home when they keep coming on us and we on them, then commenced the firing shot and shell and canister then grape then the men falling in numbers on the right and left of us, the smoke was so thick we could not see but they was very close to us and soon after the firing was heard at a distance and we took the town in 2 days with hard fiting I did not get hit after all we stoped at Cawnpore some time and then we marched with the seage for Lucknow, Sir I forgot to tell you how many we slaid at Cornpoor about 1000 as near as I can gess, we are hanging them by 6 and 8 at a time we show no quarter and hanging is too good for them, you should see what I have seen at Cornpoor, see where the masecree had taken place the reches burnt our people alive and put their heads on bamboo sticks we are giving them their deserts now, Sir, we have been here some time I have fought 4 engagements since Cornpoor and we are going to lay siege in the morning which will make them fly but they did not fly so easy as we thought, it lasted 21 days and 5000 of the rebels and Seapoys was some to be slain and about 600 of us British. I have gone thro the siege of Lucknow and thank God I have not got a scratch yet I was taken bad with sun stroke after Lucknow was taken so that I got out of no firing, the country is very hot and now the Winter is coming we shall go after them again they are in the jungles and Nanersab is still commanding them the naner sing is killed and 2 sons of Naner Sab, sir you must excuse my writing so I must conclude my dear Parent Mr. Bowyer.

Please to give my respects to these I name—Mr. and Mrs. White Stock Willcocks Gapper and all that is under your care when they are under your care they have a Friend Sir, would you be so kind to let me know what regiment W. Reed is in. Good knight and God bless you direct your letters &c.

691 Private T. B.

Kind Sir,

I now take the opportunity of addressing these few lines to you, for the first time in this country, for as I know you are very anxious to know how we arrived at Quebec; we arrived there on Monday morning at about two o'clock, after a rough passage of six weeks; we had a hard wind all the journey it drove us into the Atlantic Ocean where we were surrounded by Ice and we did not know one moment from the other but what we should sink to the bottom of the Sea: when we got to Quebec we staid on board till Tuesday morning, when the doctor came on board and the Emigration Agent; we then went by a steam boat to the Grand Trunk Railway, there we staid till 9 o'clock the same evening, and we travelled all night, and arrived at Montreal at eleven o'clock, we then took the Rail-road to Preston and then farewell to our friends that were going to London, we staid all night for the train did not start until 8 the next morning, and then we came straight to Ottowa and we arrived there at 12 o'clock, there were plenty of Men waiting to hire us there, and they all seemed to think that I would suit them but I would not engage myself to them; I then took my clothes into the station and went straight to the Emigration office, and the Agent gave me a letter to go to the B——— for a situation of which I am now occupying, I am getting six dollars for the first month with board, lodging, and washing; for the second I am to have seven dollars. A——— and G——— have got a job at Carpentry, and are going to-morrow morning, it is a few miles out in the country.

18th, Sunday morning got up and went to Church; the Church is about 3 minutes, walk from the house where I live; The passage of Scripture that was taken for the text, you will find in the 10th, chapter of Matthew, at 32nd and 33rd, verses. Sir if there are any more Emigrants coming out, I would advise them to come to this part for they cannot get men enough to work; they want Carpenters, Blacksmiths, and Labourers, in abundance.

Sir I shall never forget the good I received while in your happy abode, for indeed it was a happy abode to me, and likewise to all those who left it. The reason I have not paid the postage is because they do not send the letters if they are paid for; and if you should write to me Sir please not to pay the postage, and then I shall be sure to receive the letter. Please to remember me to Mr. W——— and tell him I will write to him as soon as possible. Remember me to P—— V—— C—— H—— and all the Inmates and tell them to learn all they can for it will be very useful to them out here: and Remember me to all the Superintendants. I have no more to say at present, and I remain your Humble Servant,

G. W.

"COME OVER AND HELP US."

A short Statement relative to the Lord's work among some of the Poor of Twig Folly, Bethnal Green, since 1st January, 1858, with Proposal for more extended Means of Usefulness. By DAVID WARDLAW SCOTT.

London: WILLIAM YAPP, 4, Old Cavendish Street, Oxford Street, W.; and may be had, by order, of any Bookseller; or of the Author, 9, Palestine Place, Cambridge Heath Gate, N.E.

Price 2d. For distribution, 1s. 9d. per dozen; or 12s. 6d. per hundred.

It is hoped that those anonymous friends who have kindly helped in this work will provide themselves with copies of the above, and that all interested in the progress of the work will promote the circulation of this little statement as much as possible.

CLOVE PINK
PRESERVATIVE
TOOTH PASTE.

For Removing Tartar from the Teeth and Scurvy from the Gums, without injuring the Enamel, giving them a pearly Whiteness, and the flavour being most agreeable.

1s. per Pot.

Prepared by GEORGE W. LANE,
13, Rathbone Place, Oxford Street, London.
AGENT for CONDY'S NATURAL DISINFECTANT.

THE HAIR.

THE BEST MEANS to ADORN it is to use CHURCHER'S TOILET CREAM, which imparts fragrance, softness, and beauty to it, and is admitted to be the most economical article for the purpose extant. Price 1s., 1s. 6d., and 6s.

Decidedly the best Hair Dye is BATCHELOR'S INSTANTANEOUS COLUMBION, in the New York Original Packets. Price 4s. 6d., 7s., and 14s.

Sold by Hairdressers, and by R. HOVENDEN, Wholesale Perfumer, &c., No. 5, Great Marlborough Street (Three Doors East of the Pantheon), W., and 57 and 58, Crown Street, Finsbury Square, London, E.C.

INKS FOR EXPORT, &c.

G. BELL and CO. beg to call the attention of Buyers to their superior PRINTING INKS and WRITING FLUIDS—Blue and Red, for use with Metallic Pens—Copying, Blue-Black, Violet-Green, Black Bordering, Ruling and Japan Ticket Inks of first-rate quality. All large purchasers treated on liberal terms. Lists sent free by G. BELL and Co., Wellington Street, St. Luke's, E.C.

SPECIAL AND URGENT APPEAL.

SURREY SOCIETY for the EMPLOYMENT and REFORMATION of DISCHARGED PRISONERS. Established in 1824.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester.
His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.
The Most Noble the Marquis of Bristol.
The Right Honourable the Earl of Egmont.
The Right Honourable the Earl Somers.
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Winchester.
The High Sheriff.
H. Drummond, Esq., M.P.
J. I. Briscoe, Esq., M.P.
Hon. J. P. Locke King, M.P.
Thomas Alcock, Esq., M.P.
} Members for the County.
Lord Lovaine,
Edward Penrhyn, Esq.
J. W. Freshfield, Esq.
J. E. Johnson, Esq.
T. Tilson, Esq.
} Chairmen of Quarter Sessions.

COMMITTEE.

Charles Baldwin, Esq., 28, Sussex Square, Hyde Par Gardens.
A. K. Barclay, Esq., Bury Hill, Dorking.
Rev. G. W. Cockerell, St. John's Lodge, Batterses.
The Hon. Sydney Roper Curzon, Grove House, Tooting.
Rev. H. A. Dixon, Trinity Square, Southwark.
S. Elyard, Esq., Balham Hill, Tooting.
C. Francis, Esq., Belgrave House, Wandsworth Road East.
J. C. Fyler, Esq., Woodlands, Bagshot.
J. H. Goodhart, Esq., Upper Tooting.
H. Gosse, Esq., Epsom.
J. Jeffery, Esq., 10, Weymouth Street.
J. E. Johnson, Esq., 14, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars.
J. Ledger, Esq., Back Street, Horsleydown.
J. More Molyneux, Esq., Loseley Park, Guildford.
R. Onslow, Esq., Wandsworth Common.
Capt. Leycester Penrhyn, East Sheen.
T. Puckle, Esq., Clapham Common.
R. Ricardo, Esq., 10, Park Square East, Regent's Park.
Chas. Nelson Wilkinson, Esq., Wandsworth Common.

TREASURER.

Charles Curling, Esq., Clapham Common.

SECRETARY.

Rev. H. J. Hatch, Wandsworth Common.
F. Gould, Esq., Local Hon. Secretary, Kingston.

BANKERS.

Dimsdale and Co., 50, Cornhill.

The funded property has been completely sold out. The Committee at their last meeting were unable to meet the whole of the accounts. Those placed in institutions are paid for, generally, at 5s. per head per week, between £60 and £70 per month, besides aid given to others not adapted for institutions, in tools, clothes, emigration, or otherwise. The Committee have hitherto paid all accounts monthly, and as a rule avoided debt; so that unless some assistance be granted immediately, they will be compelled, however reluctantly, to discharge some of those now doing well in institutions. It is grievous enough to be unable to aid the many now entreating to be snatched from a life of wretchedness; but to discharge back on the world those who are doing well in institutions, seems very shocking; like driving them upon desperation and a return to prison, for those whom it is desired to aid are generally without home, friends, money, or character, and however willing, can seldom or never get employment; and the result may be easily imagined.

The Committee, in behalf of a very pitiable class of our fellow creatures, entreat the kind support of the public, especially of the county of Surrey.

ITS OPERATIONS DURING THE YEAR 1857.

Prisoners on their discharge—

Sent to Reformatory Institutions	252
Restored to friends after correspondence	85
Sent home by train or steamer	45
Supplied with stock for sale, &c.	63
Provided with employment	33
Supplied with tools and clothing	25
Provided with temporary lodgings	4
Presented with small grants of money	553
Supplied with Bibles, prayer books, and tracts	55
Applied for help, but rejected for want of funds	39

PAYMENTS MADE DURING THE YEAR 1857.

	£	s.	d.
North-West London Institution	99	3	[illegible]
Brixton Reformatory	79	4	[illegible]
Home in the East	57	19	[illegible]
Gun Street Refuge	28	19	[illegible]
Philanthropic Society	32	19	[illegible]
Eastern Refuge	22	0	[illegible]
Rescue Society	15	14	[illegible]
Wandsworth Reformatory	265	13	[illegible]
Lock Hospital	10	10	[illegible]
Paid to and for prisoners on discharge	54	19	[illegible]

Donations and Subscriptions will be thankfully received by Charles Curling, Esq., Treasurer, Clapham Common; Rev. Henry J. Hatch, Secretary, Wandsworth Common; or any of the Committee.

Annual Reports will be sent on application to the Secretary, the Rev. H. J. Hatch, Wandsworth Common.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE,

November 1, 1858.

Index.

Surrey Michaelmas Sessions 245
Monmouthshire Quarter Sessions 246
Punishment and Reformation 243
Education 249
Death of a Veteran 249
Chaplain's Reports 250
Editorial Articles:
The Social Science Conference 252
Public Drinking Fountains in London . . . 252
Reformatory and Refuge Union 253
Convict Hulks 253
Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society . . . 253
The National Association for the Promotion of Social Science 254
The Metropolitan Reformatory, Brixton . . 255
Reformatories and Ragged Schools . . . 256
National Association for the Promotion of Social Science 259
Ragged School Teachers' Association . . . 259
Reviews 260
Correspondence 261

SURREY MICHAELMAS SESSIONS.

The business of this session was opened on Tuesday, October 12th, at the Court-house, Kingston-upon-Thames. The following magistrates were present:—E. Penrhyn, Esq. (Chairman), J. I. Briscoe, Esq., M.P., T. Alcock, Esq., M.P., H. Drummond, Esq., M.P., Capt. Penrhyn, Col. Challoner, Capt. Calvert, Major Terry, and T. Grissell, T. Tilson, B. Drew, E. R. Carter, P. Gassiott, H. Gosse, R. Hutton, E. R. Northey, G. Best, H. E. Gurney, E. Bray, W. Lambert, R. Hudson, C. F. Robinson, J. Spicer, and R. Webb, Esqrs.

The customary formalities having been complied with,

The Chairman charged the Grand Jury. He proceeded to express a wish that he could congratulate them on any serious diminution in the amount of crime, on account of the few prisoners to be tried at the present session; but the fact was, that the amount of criminality in the county could not be judged of by the number of prisoners tried at these sessions, because the greater part were tried at Newington. He found, on looking at the report, that there were 760 prisoners confined in the county gaol. Although this number had been larger, it was more than the prison could accommodate; in fact, it became necessary to transgress the prison rules, in order to accommodate them; and the magistrates had been obliged to take steps to build another wing to that already large prison. Generally, on the occasion of this session, he had taken the opportunity of calling the attention of the grand jury to those acts of parliament which may have been passed during the previous session, and were likely to be brought into operation at the quarter session, but he intimated that, on the present occasion, he had very little to say on that subject. Parliament, during the last session, had been so much occupied with the change of ministry and other matters, as to be unable to devote much attention to the improvement of the criminal law. One very important act, however, had been passed; it consisted of one clause only, and provided that every person who, by a false pretence, induces another to sign any bill of exchange or valuable security, or promissory note, with intent to defraud, the offence shall be considered a misdemeanor, and the person so inducing another thus fraudulently to sign, is liable to four years' penal servitude, or to a fine, or both. It was a very short act, but a very important one, and would give protection to many persons induced to sign papers without knowing what they are signing, and it was curious that in this country that description of crime had been allowed to go unchecked so long. Another point to which he called their attention was an alteration in the law with regard to the powers to divide the court. If there was more business than could be done by one, the magistrates had power to divide into two courts; and, under a new act, it was not necessary to state how long the sessions would last, and the court might on all occasions divide the court. The same act likewise gave power to the clerk of the peace to provide a deputy. Another section of the same act provided that when property was made over to the county it could be invested in the name of the clerk of the peace; while hitherto it had been the practice to have a certain number of trustees, who held the county property for county purposes; and in the event of the absence of one of those trustees, great inconvenience was experienced. The present act not only enabled the county to invest property in the name of the clerk of the peace, but gave the clerk of the peace power to enter into all agreements, and to sue and be sued in all cases on behalf of the county. This provision would be found to be a great improvement. There was only one other act to which it was necessary to call the attention of the grand jury—an act relating to friendly societies, amending an act passed some years ago. It enacted that when children died under the age of ten years, whose lives should be assured, it should be necessary for any officer of any such society to have a medical certificate as to the cause of death before payment of the money on such insurance, and other arrangements were provided to prevent frequent insurances being effected for large sums on the lives of children. The act provided also increased facilities for making complaints before justices of the peace in the case of disputes between members of friendly societies. These, the chairman continued, were all the acts of parliament to which he thought it necessary to call their attention. Since last he met the grand jury last year, much had been done towards carrying acts of parliament into operation; and, among the rest, the provisions referring to Reformatory Schools had been adopted. The county had made an agreement with the Philanthropic Society to receive fifty criminal boys this year and fifty next year, in order that at the end of their sentences they might be provided with the means of obtaining a livelihood. For this purpose payment was made partly by Government, partly by what could be obtained from the parents of the boys, and partly by contributions from the county rate. This was a very important step; and he was very glad to see that so beneficial a measure had been adopted in this large and populous county. Transportation had now ceased to form a punishment provided by law. Therefore, if crime was to be checked in this country, it must be checked, not by sending criminals out of the country, but by dealing with it at its source, and preventing boys from becoming abandoned criminals. In this point of view he believed the Reformatory Acts would be found most salutary, and he was glad to find that they had been adopted in the county. There were already numerous reformatories in the country, and no less than 2000 juvenile offenders were at the present time receiving education in those institutions. We had the experience of Mettray, in France, and of Redhill, in this county, to show that a large proportion of the criminals sent to those institutions were permanently reformed. Great pains were taken by the managers to follow out the career of the individuals educated at those schools; and it was found that at Mettray as many as 85 per cent. were permanently reformed, and at Redhill the large proportion of 75 per cent. Now, if anything like such an improvement as this could be insured, it became a matter of great importance to save so large a proportion of juveniles from a life of criminality. There was one other subject to which he wished to call the attention of the grand jury, and one which, though allied to the subject of Reformatory Schools, was yet distinct from it, namely, the relief given by the Surrey Society to discharged prisoners. He did not think that society was so well known or appreciated as it ought to be. It was a society supported entirely by voluntary contributions, and was therefore quite distinct from Reformatory Schools, which depended on the county, the contributions of parents, and the Government. The Surrey Society depended entirely on voluntary contributions; and if not supported by those means, it would inevitably fail. Now he held that that would be a great misfortune, because the Society dispensed assistance not only to juvenile prisoners, but to adults, who during their imprisonment showed a disposition to reform. There were many such, and the machinery by which the assistance was accorded was very satisfactory. Persons were in communication with the chaplain, and when it was seen that there was evidence of a prisoner's desire to reform, the case was laid before the committee, which distributed the funds at their disposal by assisting such prisoners on their discharge, either by giving them tools or sums of money, or sending them to certain refuges where they were placed in a state of protection for a certain time before being sent forth into the world. At the end of last year there were 51 persons in different refuges, where they were maintained out of the funds of the Surrey Society. He was sorry to say the funds of the Society were now very low, and that many prisoners who had given great promise of reform, had not in consequence received that assistance which it would have been desirable to give. For that reason he earnestly called the attention of the county to the condition of the Society's finance.

The grand jury then retired.

CHAPLAIN'S REPORTS.

The Rev. Mr. Jessopp, the chaplain of the county gaol, made his annual report, which extended to a considerable length, and referred to several very important and interesting matters in connection with crime and the administration of justice. He particularly called the attention of the court to the manner in which the Criminal Justice Act appeared to be administered, and stated that the magistrates appeared to be in the constant practice of applying its provisions to the cases of old and hardened criminals, and showed that in the present year, 1024 prisoners had been committed under this statute for short periods of imprisonment; whereas in the previous year, only 1018 had been committed for trial to all the different sessions; and it appeared that, instead of the act, as was intended, being made to apply to persons charged with a first offence, or who were young in crime, in many instances ticket-of-leave men and prisoners who had been several times convicted, were merely sentenced to short periods of imprisonment, by which proceeding they were soon again turned loose upon the public, instead of being sent for trial, when a sentence that would be likely to prevent them from committing further depredations, would be passed upon them.

Colonel Challoner, in the course of the reading of the report, interposed, and said it appeared to him that the rev. gentleman in the report he had made to the court, had overstepped his duty, and had referred to matters of law that were not within his province, and that the time of the magistrates was unnecessarily wasted by reading a long report upon such subjects. He left the matter in the Chairman's hands.

The Chairman said he thought it would be well to put it to the chaplain, that if he gave a very long report, it would interfere with the business of the county. The report was certainly a very long one, but as it was very interesting and nearly finished, it would be as well perhaps to allow the reading to be concluded.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Briscoe said he did not wish at all to dictate to his brother magistrates, and if it was their opinion that the report ought not to be read, he should at once defer to it. He could not, however, help observing, that it appeared to him that the statements made by the reverend gentleman were of the greatest importance and interest in connection with the subjects of crime and the administration of justice, and that they were deserving of serious consideration.

Captain Best said it appeared to him that the effect of the report was to dictate to the magistrates the manner in which they ought to perform their duties and to administer the law. He considered that this was no part of the duty of the chaplain of a prison, and that the time of the court ought not to be occupied by reading such a report.

The Clerk of the Peace having finished reading the report,

Mr. Hutton said, on a former occasion, when too long a report was submitted to the court by one of the chaplains, an intimation from the court had the desired effect. In conjunction with Colonel Challoner, he suggested that if a long report on extraneous matters were prepared by the chaplain, it should be submitted in the first instance to the Visiting Committee; and that if considered worthy to occupy the attention of the court, it should be printed and circulated among the magistrates. Otherwise, it could not produce the necessary impression.

Mr. Briscoe said that on hearing the report read it appeared to him to contain some very valuable suggestions, calculated to lead to the diminution of crime. The hon. gentleman was understood further to intimate that the chaplain had the opportunity of dealing with prison rules.

Mr. Best said the report dealt with Acts of Parliament, not rules; and aimed at teaching them their duties as magistrates; that was all.

Mr. Briscoe said he thought the court was indebted to the chaplain for the pains he had taken, and for the manner in which he had discharged his duty. He refrained from expressing any more decided opinion.

Mr. Gassiot recommended that the report should be printed and circulated. It was an annual report, and embraced matters requiring much consideration. If printed and circulated, the magistrates could better form their opinions upon the matters referred to; and without that it was impossible that the magistrates could give it due attention. He wished to ascertain whether it was the opinion of the magistrates that a report of that kind ought to be printed; for in that case the committee of Horsemonger-lane would take the matter into consideration, and in future get similar reports printed.

Mr. Tilson thought it would be a better way to ask the chaplains to submit their reports in the first place to the visiting justices; and the magistrates of the county would be better able on receiving a printed report, to form an opinion on the matters contained in it. The same suggestion might be applied to the report of the surgeons. The printing would cost the county a very small sum. He begged to be understood, however, that his observations applied only to the annual reports. He took the opportunity of moving that the annual reports of the surgeons and chaplains, on being presented in the first instance to the Gaol Committee, be printed and circulated among the magistrates.

The Chairman said it was formerly the custom many years ago, when the chaplain made a voluminous report, to order it to be printed; but the more the reports were ordered to be printed the more voluminous they became; and at last long pamphlets were got up. He did not know whether the county was prepared to bear the expense of printing; but it would be almost impossible to avoid reading the pamphlets, and it would become a very serious tax on the time of the magistrates.

Mr. Tilson said he only suggested that the reports should be printed, if the visiting magistrates thought fit.

Mr. Best intimated that if it were left to the visiting justices to determine whether the reports should be printed in the form in which they were submitted to them, a difficulty would arise.

Colonel Challoner said that if the chaplains would confine themselves to what concerned their sacred calling, the reports would not be so long. He confessed, however, that when he was a member of the visiting committee, their attention was sometimes called by the chaplain to valuable suggestions which the committee adopted. At the same time, he thought that those which did not come within the sacred calling of the chaplains should not be introduced into their reports.

Mr. Hutton said he thought the court ought to have sufficient confidence in the visiting justices to believe that they would not suppress anything of importance in the reports.

On the suggestion of Mr. Briscoe, the 104th rule, relating to the duties of chaplains, was read by the clerk of the peace. The rule provided, that at every Michaelmas Quarter Session the chaplain should make to the justices a written statement as to the religious and moral instruction of the prisoners, with his observations thereon.

Colonel Challoner.—Exactly; his report has nothing to do with other matters.

The Chairman thought that the rule excluded a great deal of what had been introduced into the report before the court, because it confined the report to the state of religious and moral instruction of the prisoners; whereas the report included matters more properly the business of the magistrates.

Mr. Hutton suggested that the clerk of the peace should intimate to the chaplain the general opinion of the court on the matter.—The suggestion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION, WANDSWORTH.

The report of the Chaplain (the Rev. H. J. Hatch) set forth that among the causes tending to fill the prison was that of drunkenness, which, it was intimated, would continue, so long as legal facilities for its indulgence were so great. The extraordinary inequality of the sentences passed on old and habitual offenders, especially in the Metropolitan Police Courts, was referred to as having been brought under the notice of the visiting justices. The peculiar working of the poor-law system was also referred to as a prolific source of filling the prison. The Surrey Society, it was further stated, had been instrumental in placing large numbers of discharged prisoners, both male and female, in hopeful positions; and, its funds being nearly exhausted, a hope was expressed that it would not be allowed to perish, but that in so wealthy a county it would receive adequate support.

GAOL REPORTS.

House of Correction.—The Governor reported that the prison was in good condition, and the number and description of the prisoners in custody to be as follows:—

	Males.	Females.
Felony	302	106
Misdemeanors	206	28
Poaching	5	0
Vagrancy	53	46
Excise	2	1
Total	568	181
Grand total		749

Of these 23 males and one female were juvenile under 14 years of age, and nine were children with their mother.

County Gaol.—The Governor reported that the condition of the gaol was good, and the number and description of prisoners in custody as follows:—

	Males.	Females.
For trial at the Assizes	3	3
Ditto at Central Criminal Court	8	2
Do. at present Session	9	1
Ditto at adjourned Session	20	10
For re-examination	21	6
For want of sureties	5	2
Under sentence of penal servitude	0	6
Summary conviction	27	7
Deserters awaiting a route	14	0
Judgment respited	4	0
Total criminal prisoners	111	37
Sheriff's debtors	40	4
County Court debtors	21	0
Total criminals & debtors	172	41
Grand total		213

MONMOUTHSHIRE QUARTER SESSIONS,

October 18th, 1858.

Report of the Chaplain of the House of Correction.

Gentlemen,—I am happy to have this year to report a diminution by 63 in the county House of Correction at Usk, bringing the number somewhat below the standard from which it had risen during the preceding year. In 1856 there were 774 committed, the next year 833, and this last year the number has sunk to 770.

Owing to the systematic and vigorous methods now in force for the detection of crime in this county, it is to be expected that the analogy between the perpetration and punishment of crime will now be much closer than heretofore, and that the number of committals may be taken as a surer index of the actual amount of offences than it could be before the County Constabulary was in operation. The effect of an improved police, crime being stationary, would be, of course, to cause such an increase of prisoners as appeared last year; but since, now, under an improved police, prisoners have decreased, we have sound reasons for hoping that crime itself is on the decline.

Large though our number of criminals usually is, when compared with other counties, yet my own experience never led me to believe that there is in this county any very great amount of deliberate or determined criminality, or much that is of an organized or preconcerted character. Offences in Monmouthshire are mostly such as arise from sudden impulse or temptation, and especially from loss of self-control through intemperance. Vice seems their parent rather than cool design, and individuals the perpetrators rather than combined bodies; and where there is association in crime, it arises more frequently from the excitement and recklessness of the licentious hour than from any preconcerted schemes of action. I have seen that wherever pertinacious delinquency shows itself in frequent recommittals, it is found, almost always, to be connected with the worst sort of profligacy, and producing offences such as make profligates injurious to each other, rather than dangerous to society at large. Looking, for example, at the names and character of 57 frequently-committed prisoners who have been in the House of Correction during the year, and whose respective committals vary between three times and twenty, I find that 40 of these 57 are female, and that 36 of the 40 females are certainly of the abandoned class. Thus it appears that if repeated imprisonments are to be taken as representing deeply-seated habits of crime, these latter can scarcely be said to exist in Mon-mouthshire but where they are nourished by deeply-seated habits of licentiousness, and that where they do exist, they are confined mostly to certain well-defined plague-spots, where they are little likely to be injurious to the moral and honest.

Digitized by Google

It is a fact worthy of notice, and one which I might every year report, that females are re-convicted in a very much larger proportion than the males. Thus the proportion of male prisoners this year to the female is 518 of the former to 198 of the latter; but the re-committals are 99 and 94 respectively: and the total convictions of these males are 295, and those against the females 325. The step which a woman has taken into crime is so much the more difficult to retrace than with the opposite sex, as, in the first instance, it was the more serious to take, and chiefly because in so many instances it is connected with a degradation, out of which to afford her a way of escape is one of the greatest difficulties a philanthropist has to deal with, relapse into immorality and liability to new crimes almost inevitably follow when one so fallen leaves the prison gates. In Newport alone, it is well known to the very vigilant police of that town, that nearly a hundred doors are open to welcome her back into the service of sin, while we look around, almost in vain, to find one single door by which she may escape that servitude. The consequence is the frequent re-committal of unhappy females, who, after the temporary seclusion of a prison, which is a mere holiday from vice, refreshing them for new service,—return as naturally and as necessarily to their old pursuits as the needle to its point. Entire and immediate removal from their haunts is the only step that offers the least prospect of a remedy. Till such can be provided for by measures far more effectual than any which now exist, these miserable beings must be left to sink themselves and each other into lower and utter ruin;—and counties must continue, as they now do, to expend large sums annually on punishments which are followed up by no opportunity of reform.

Juvenile Delinquents, who last year began to decline from 63 to 45, this year are 54; the girls being about a quarter of this number. All these (being 15 years old and under) were of a proper age for a Reformatory School, though all were not proper subjects. Out of this number, however, one boy and two girls have, during the year, been sentenced to Reformatory Schools: the boy has been sent to the school in Glamorganshire, and both the girls to Toxteth Park, Liverpool. One girl, though committed this year, was removed after the year had closed. If it had been better understood that these and other institutions were open to receive our delinquent children, I believe that many more would have been sent, for several who during the year have been committed and discharged under ordinary sentences, were exactly the proper objects for reformatory treatment. One boy, for example, aged 11, came here for the third time, two brothers for their eighth time, and their sister for her ninth time.

Our own Reformatory at "Ty Draw," which will be certified and opened very soon after the present sessions, will henceforth receive all the boys whom the judges or magistrates (in quarter or petty sessions) may sentence to it; and there are still openings for girls in other counties, of which we can, through the kindness of the managers, avail ourselves till we have a Reformatory for girls of our own. Of the two girls who have this year been sent to Toxteth Park one was an interesting orphan child, for whose rescue on a former imprisonment provision had been made; but being allowed to go unattended a few hundred yards between the Newport station and the house of her kind benefactress, she was met by a wicked old woman, who watched her opportunity and enticed her back. Nothing could be done for the child till a fresh offence led to her committal, when she was sent last April to the Reformatory at Liverpool; from this place, after about seven weeks, she ran away, taking the matron's purse, and returned to this county, where, in spite of every search, she remained concealed for another seven weeks till a new robbery brought her to light; that charge, however, not being pressed, she was sent back to Liverpool, where she now is. This case shows forcibly the importance of not intermitting for one moment our watchfulness over those children we wish to reclaim, and the special necessity of maintaining continued isolation from their former associates and connections.

It is a fact worth noticing of the other girl sent to a Reformatory, that her father was in prison for deserting his family at the same time as this daughter, who was continually thieving at the instigation of the mother. Nothing could be more needful or satisfactory than the temporary rescue of this girl (not naturally, I think, ill-disposed) from such parents.

While alluding to juveniles, and as affording another instance of the necessity of removing children in time from the pernicious influence of bad parents, I cannot refrain from recalling attention to the case of a boy mentioned in my report of 1853, whose mother had then been seven times in prison, and whose heartless father, though earning sixteen shillings a week, refused his children bread, and compelled his family to steal to supply their wants. The boy's account of his mother was, "I don't think a better mother than mine ever lived if she had fair play;" and of his father, "He has a cupboard, with a padlock (Journal, Oct. 22, 1853) on it; if a bit of bread as big as this, sir (his hand), is left, he locks it away from us." All that numerous imprisonments and whippings could do was done to reclaim this boy and his younger brother, but still they came to prison, till in December last the oldest robbed his miserly father of some hoarded gold, was tried (his own father being the principal witness), and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude; a few hours afterwards on his return to prison, he ended his miserable career by hanging himself in the prison-cell! The early history of this lad I had quoted, among others, five years ago, as an illustration of "how parents' vices make children's crimes almost compulsory;" the issue is now seen. With a criminal mother and a cruel father, a ruined character and injured health, every resource had failed him, every earthly hope perished. He was under twelve years old when first sent to prison, and about seventeen when he died. If taken in good time, the miserable boy-suicide might have been saved from his untimely end.

Prisoners' Pleas.—It seems almost presumption for me to make a suggestion on a subject so important and delicate as the plea which a prisoner makes at his trial; but, being sometimes asked by untried prisoners for advice as to whether they shall plead guilty or not, my attention has been drawn to the subject. Of course such a question cannot for a moment be entertained by a chaplain unless a prisoner has previously and spontaneously admitted his guilt, which I always discourage him from doing, and when my advice is asked, I do not feel, as a minister of religion, that my duty lies in deciding between the chances of a long and short imprisonment (which to a prisoner is often the real point of the question), but between telling the truth and telling a lie. As the question is now put, the guilty prisoner who wishes to stand his trial cannot do so without uttering a falsehood, which, of course, I cannot counsel him to do. The thought has often suggested itself to my mind that, if it were possible, when the prisoner is called upon to plead, to make a simple change of words, and present the question, instead of in the usual form, in some such form as this:—"Do you plead guilty, or do you not plead guilty?" The accused would then be able to decline self-crimination without denying his offence, and could proceed to trial without adding to his guilt the sin of a lie.

My intercourse with prisoners leads me to believe that a misconception often exists in their minds as to the nature and force of the plea they are called upon to make. It does not appear, from what they have informed me after trial, that they always understand that a plea of guilty includes the admission of the felony. I have notes of several instances in which, either through ignorance or ill advice, they have so pleaded, meaning to admit the possession, but not the intention to steal. In thus pleading, they often tell me they were advised by the police, especially since the extension of summary convictions. One instance is worthy of special notice. It is that of a woman now under sentence of five years' penal servitude, who constantly and solemnly declares her innocence of the particular offence laid to her charge, yet pleaded guilty both before the magistrates and at the Quarter Sessions. She did so on the first occasion (as she says) at the advice of the policeman, who told her that, being a ticket-of-leave woman, if taken up, she must be punished, and, should she be sent for trial, she was sure of penal servitude, but if summarily convicted on her own confession, of guilt, she would get off with a short imprisonment. "So (she says) I pleaded guilty, thinking to get a few weeks, and then go back to my children."

I now proceed to add a few words on the subject of religious and educational condition of prisoners. Great ignorance is to be expected where, as in most cases, early neglect issues in a life of immorality and crime; close inquiry, however, proves this ignorance to be far deeper than could have been surmised, or than any statistics could show. As far as the usual tests of education go, I find that one in thirty has had a good common education; one in three can read well, and one in three imperfectly; while the rest, or three in ten, are wholly unlettered. But reading and writing, which are the mere vehicles of knowledge (often unused—oftener abused), are very imperfect tests of knowledge. The Bible can sometimes be read whilst its most elementary truths are utterly unknown, and both those who read and those who do not often show that they have been brought up in complete ignorance of those first principles of right and wrong which the simplest form of good training would impart, and which it is too hastily assumed that all acquire somehow as a matter of course. From infancy to maturity many have received no education but such as directs them the wrong way; perverted notions are acquired at the first, and they have gone on acting upon them to the end. "From nine years old," said a collier, "I was put to work in a coal-pit, where I had to drag a cart on all-fours, through a passage two feet high, and I never had the least instruction till I came here; but (he added, on going out) I have now got hold of the plough, and I hope I shall keep on to it all along." The following remark is worthy of observation, as showing the necessity of some other instruction than mere earnest and exciting addresses:—"I have often heard the Ranters preach, but I never knew there was a God or a devil till you told us here." Another spontaneous remark from a man who could read, and who attended a place of worship, may be considered as very suggestive. "I have frequently (said he) heard the commandments referred to, but never knew what they meant till now. Don't you think, sir, if they were read in our chapels, and the meaning told, there would be much less crime done?" The thought which struck this prisoner contained, I believe, a world of truth, for I am sure that a vast number are punished for going astray who have never, either by precept or example, been shown the way in which they ought to walk. Prevention, by early instruction, is better than a late attempt at cure; nevertheless the latter resource is not without hope, and since the daily attendance at prison chapel offers a golden opportunity, I have endeavoured by this means, as well as by private intercourse, to sow later in life the seed that ought to have been sown long before; and to give from the scriptures some distinct information as to what ought to be believed and done.

Digitized by Google

Instruction in classes, which we do not adopt, would for this style of teaching be a most valuable help. A more familiar mode of instruction than any that can be admitted into what partakes of the character of a divine service is required for people so impervious to abstract notions and religious truths as most prisoners are. As an approximation to what I would desire to see admitted into the prison, I meet on Saturdays in the chapel only those who can read well and respond, and (without surplice) explain to them and exercise them in the use of the prayer book and catechism, enforcing especially Sabbath observance and an intelligent participation in the services. It is surprising what interest is taken in these simple explanations of the formularies, and I cannot but humbly hope (though we may never be able to trace the effects) they may be seen by others in the public house forsaken on the Lord's day, and the parish church frequented. A hopeful woman in Brixton prison, writing to me, says, "I hope, dear sir, you have not given up your Saturdays' teaching, for it may be a blessing to somebody the same as it has been to me, and may God open their hearts to listen to the words spoken by you, and make you the instrument in His hands to win precious souls for whom Christ died." Committing large portions of scripture to memory, I still find a most useful employment for prisoners, and one to which the solitude and leisure of a prison cell are peculiarly favourable. It occupies the thoughts with good instead of evil, it awakens the slumbering intelligence, and furnishes the void understanding with sacred truths for future use, enriching the soil of the heart with living seed which may spring up we know not how or when. It is pleasing to see how this occupation sometimes brightens up the purposeless life of a weary prisoner. Some have gone so far as to learn from fifty to ninety chapters; one aged man, in addition to large portions of the Bible, committed to memory several of Mr. Ryles' long tracts (from twenty to thirty pages each). This he did with the intention of repeating them to his family, and, in the leisure hour, to his "butties" in the coal pit.

While alluding to prison education, I feel it my duty to say that, though we have a schoolmaster whose chief duty is to teach mere reading, yet his duties have only been imperfectly carried on during the year. This is not owing to any inefficiency on his part, but to the great irregularity with which he is enabled to engage in his work as a teacher. He is at present little more than a supernumerary discipline officer, who is constantly liable for other service, and may be called away for days, weeks, and even months, when vacancies or absence of officers require it. At the commencement of the year the schoolmaster received another appointment in the prison, and there was none to fill his place for twenty-three weeks continuously, and, since the engagement of a successor in April last, other duties have required his services for various times, amounting in all (exclusive of Sundays and sessions) to forty-five days.

It will be easily understood that this irregularity and uncertainty is greatly injurious to all systematic teaching, and other educational arrangements, as well as highly prejudicial to the schoolmaster and the prisoner's interest in the work. It is disheartening to a learner, when his interest is newly awakened, to find the instruction suddenly cease. In previous reports I have alluded to the great want we have of an officer whose duties are strictly and solely those of a schoolmaster and chapel clerk. The subject has, I observe, attracted the attention of the Government Inspector of Prisons, who, in his last report to the Secretary of State, says, in allusion to this prison—"It would, I think, be a very useful thing to allow of the instruction of prisoners in classes, as the time of the schoolmaster is insufficient to allow of his giving adequate attention to so large a number in separate cells. This leads me (he proceeds) to speak of the duty of the schoolmaster, which is now performed by an individual who also officiates as a warder, and whose divided attention is not adequate to effect as much as is required in so large a prison."

These are Mr. Perry's words, which I can only respectfully commend to the attention of the magistrates, together with my own wishes on both the subjects to which the Inspector alludes.

Earnestly praying that our various efforts may be blessed, not only to the suppression of crime, but to the reformation and salvation of criminals,

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,
Your obedient, humble servant,

STEPHEN CATTLEY BAKER, B.A.,
Chaplain to the County House of Correction at Usk, Monmouthshire.

PUNISHMENT AND REFORMATION.

IN this department of the Social Science Conference, under the presidency of the Earl of Carlisle, several valuable papers were read. Among others, one by Mr. T. B. L. Baker, on "Adult Reformatories." Its object was to prove the necessity and advantage of such institutions, which would act on the criminals admitted into them much in the same way as Captain Crofton's "intermediate prisons." The writer, to guard himself from misconception, declared that he was no believer in reformatories in the light in which some considered them, namely, "as a sort of moral mill, into which whoever is put is, by a specified number of turns of the wheel, ground out an honest man." He considered them as places where a man, if he wished to do well, might have aid and opportunity to do so, and from which reclaimed criminals might be safely filtered into society. And he maintained that such institutions could be as easily and successfully conducted as juvenile reformatories.

A paper was read by Mr. G. W. Bell—"A Brief Account of the Boys' Home (London), certified under the Industrial Schools Act, 1857." In the course of his paper, Mr. Bell stated that he considered it a most unfortunate thing that the enforcement of parental responsibility had not been thrown by the law on the local boards of guardians; and that private benevolence alone would not suffice to support to any extent reformatories and industrial and ragged schools. In the course of the discussion which followed, the section generally seemed to concur in the views which the writer of the paper enunciated, and an opinion was expressed that a power of detention, in the case of unconvicted but vagrant children, should be granted by law to the proper authorities. Mr. Campbell, of Liverpool, ran a full tilt against the whole system of reformatories, and declared that the hot course which we were running on this subject was calculated to debase and demoralize the whole of the working classes of this country. He knew, he said, that he should be in a minority in an assembly of sentimental philanthropists such as the section was composed of, but, as a cold-blooded political economist, he came to the conclusion that all these attempts to elevate the lowest stratum of society, utterly disregarding the state immediately above it, which was about to take the last step and become criminal itself, must have eventually a most baneful effect. It was a premium on crime, and relieved vice and idleness of the punishment which it was ordained should attach to them. The tendency, besides, was to do everything in masses and by co-operation, and nothing by individual action, which is the best of all. The association itself was an illustration of this tendency, and was very aptly termed by a friend of his "a joint-stock thinking association." Mr. Campbell's views met with only one supporter, Mr. Elliott; the section, as a whole, totally dissented from them.

Mr. W. J. Garnett, M.P., read a paper on "The North Lancashire Reformatory School." In it he detailed the rise and progress of the school, and laid it down that hard work, combined with religion, is the best reformatory agent. As to the allegation that reformatories were a premium on crime, he considered that it was amply refuted by the fact that parents were compelled to contribute towards their support.

Captain Fenwick, R.N., on "The Akbar frigate, Liverpool." In illustration of the change which has been wrought in the character of the boys sent to this reformatory, the writer of the paper mentioned that last year only one attempted to escape. On the question of small or large reformatories, he considered that it would be better to have a few large in place of many small ones, as the expense of the staffs would thereby be reduced.

The Rev. J. S. Howson read a paper on "The Toxteth Girls' Reformatory School, Liverpool." In the course of his paper he expressed an opinion that large reformatories were objectionable, because the family principle could not be carried out in them, and because they would be wholly unsuited for girls.

Mr. W. Rathbone thought the section should consider what was to be done with children who were not committed by a magistrate, and who were without protection, and were being led into vice by the example of their parents. That was the great question, and it should be at once considered. As to Mr. Campbell's views, he differed entirely from them. As the penalty of crime, they had in Liverpool to pay £40,000 a year in its punishment and repression; but he considered that half the money wisely expended would wholly prevent it.

Mr. Campbell replied that he would repress and prevent crime by an efficient police, and not attempt to reform the criminals in the manner now attempted. He considered that in the long run it would be wiser and cheaper to pay £40 to punish the criminal than £30 to reform him.

The noble President, referring to Mr. Rathbone's question, said, that when they called in the aid of the State they were bound, in the first instance, in good faith, to take charge of the more hardened criminals; and then, if they had room, to look after the class alluded to.

Mr. Sidney Turner considered that the advocates of reformatories were bound to meet at once the "premium to crime" question, as raised by Mr. Campbell. It was an objection which he considered could be easily refuted; but before proceeding to do so he should like to ask one question—had they any evidence to show that reformatory schools had encouraged crime? He heard it said by gentlemen of Mr. Campbell's opinion that they had, but he wanted to have some evidence of it. He knew of none, but he knew of many facts to the contrary. In Norwich, since the reformatory was established there, the juvenile commitments had been reduced from 117 in 1855 to 31 this last year. In Birmingham, although the parental responsibility had not been strictly enforced, the commitments had been reduced from 788 in 1856 to 434 last year, and in Liverpool a like decrease had taken place, from 730 to 444. That did not show that crime had been encouraged, but discouraged. Redhill was situated in a very poor district, but had it encouraged crime there? Quite the contrary; there was not one belonging to the district in it. He admitted that the success of the system depended on the strict enforcement of the parental responsibility, but denied that in itself it was an encouragement to crime. But he would ask Mr. Campbell what he would do instead. They had resorted to reformatory treatment as an expedient, a dernier ressort; but what would Mr. Campbell do instead? When they had done nothing, crime had continuously increased. When they had simply punished, it had increased. What, then, should they do?

Digitized by Google

Mr. Campbell said that he would endeavour to answer the questions to the best of his ability. It seemed to him that Mr. Turner had fallen into a mistake very common with persons not much given to dry and abstract questions—that of applying the chemical method of induction to another science, and of looking only at particular, disregarding general, effects. Their arguments always were of the post hoc ergo propter hoc description. He was asked to account for the diminution of juvenile commitments. He might attribute it to many causes, and as some he would suggest abundant harvests and emigration; but, in fact, they could not apply the method of difference to these questions. The question for them to consider was what would be the ultimate effect on the working classes, and that, he contended, would be pernicious. Quondam criminals would be seen in good positions, and parents would, in consequence, feel little horror at their children committing offences, because they would know that they would be well cared for and well brought up. It would also lead to improvident marriages, and was on every ground objectionable.

Mr. Elliott supported Mr. Campbell's views, and stated that juvenile crime had increased 20 per cent., notwithstanding the number of reformatories there.

In reply to the President,

Mr. Turner said that within the past fifteen months the contributions from parents had increased from £50 to £288; and that of the 547 parents whose children were in reformatories, 476 were contributors.

The President.—Well, I think that will prevent the marriages Mr. Campbell so much dreads.

The Rev. Mr. Carter said that within the past year they had collected 60 per cent. of the orders made.

II.—Education.

This section met under the presidency of the Right Hon. W. F. Cowper.

A paper was read by Mr. Thomas Bazley, Manchester, entitled "National Education; what should it be?" Mr. Bazley very ably surveyed the difficulties which stand in the way of a scheme of national education, and at the same time dwelt upon the singular discrepancy that the principal measures of education to which a direct support was lent by the State were those which were rather of a reformatory than of a preventive character. He suggested that there should be a department of education, with a minister at its head. This department should provide for the secular education of the children of the poor, leaving the religious portion altogether in the hands of the clergy of all denominations. The State should, in other words, only authorize the secular instruction given in each public school, leaving to the voluntary efforts of the wealthier classes of each denomination to provide their clergy with the means of affording the more sacred portion of instruction. Mr. Bazley illustrated that portion of the scheme to which he referred by the example of a model secular school established in Manchester, in which children of all denominations are educated.

A somewhat lengthened discussion followed, which resolved itself mainly into the question whether it is possible to carry on any system of education in this country so far secular as to avoid what may be called the religious difficulty. Several gentlemen spoke strongly against a secular system, which had, however, several equally warm supporters. Mr. Monckton Milnes, Mr. Heywood, Mr. Akroyd, Mr. Wood, Mr. Ryland, and several other gentlemen, were among the speakers.

The Chairman remarked that it had been fairly admitted by one of the speakers that the secular system was a deficient system as compared with that of other schools, and was to be adopted merely as a matter of necessity. One of the advocates of the secular system stated that in secular schools morality was taught, but not religion. It would be found upon inquiry that these schools did not admit the Bible, did not mention Christianity, and he believed did not even mention natural religion. It seemed to him difficult to understand how morality was to be taught without religion, for he was not aware that there was anything religious which was not doctrinal. If there were any such thing he should be glad to hear it explained, for he was not aware of the existence of such a commodity. He could not understand how morality was to be taught without any allusion to divine revelation or to religion. He would rather, although he believed great mischief would arise from it, that they should teach Pantheism, if by that means they could elevate the mind of the child above the mere material objects which surrounded it, than that they should exclude everything spiritual, everything material. He supposed, for instance, that in teaching a child they would tell him "honesty is the best policy," and explain to him that if he acted with honesty he would probably get on well, be prosperous, and rise in the world. But the religious mode of teaching the same lesson would be to say, "You must be honest, because God, who made you, requires it of you, because it is your duty to God, because your Saviour has set you the example of being honest." This teaching would appeal to the higher faculties of nature, to the conscience, to all that was lovely and beautiful in the child's mind; whereas the moral teaching, not religious, could simply appeal to the child's self-interest. Such a mode of teaching seemed to him to be likely rather to degrade the child than to elevate him; and if that was the principle of secularism he thought it would not stand the test of accurate discussion.

The Rev. Francis Bishop said the distinction was between theology and religion. In an article on that very question by the Rev. Dean Milman, in the Edinburgh Review, it was shown that there was a great deal of religion held in common among all Christians, and that it was only when they came to the ground of theology that they arrived at the differences.

DEATH OF A VETERAN.

There died in this town on Monday, October 4, Abraham Bold, formerly sergeant in the 7th Fusiliers, a veteran soldier, who had seen much rough service, and had been in as many perilous encounters, and had as many hair-breadth escapes as rarely fall to the lot even of a soldier. Early in life he enlisted in the 7th Fusiliers, when he first served in Nova Scotia and Canada, and afterwards went through the Peninsular campaign under the Duke of Wellington. When in the army in Spain, his conduct was such as soon to acquire notice and distinction. He there learned to read and write, and became so proficient that he was in consequence promoted to be sergeant, and had to make the various official returns in connection with his regiment. He was next made sergeant in charge of the baggage, and while in this position he often came in contact with the Duke of Wellington. He loved to tell tales of the duke's industry in writing dispatches to so late as three o'clock in the morning, after which the duke would put out his lamp, retire to rest, and be up with the earliest. With the Prince of Orange Bold said he was an especial favourite, the prince frequently selecting him as a guide in visiting the prisoners, and would often familiarly tap him on the shoulder, and say, in broken English, "Come, Sergeant Bold, let us attend to the prisoners." At the final assault of Badajoz, the company to which Bold belonged went to the attack fifty strong, and at the muster-roll on the following morning only three of that company were alive to answer to the call. Bold himself had received a ball in his breast, which he carried to his grave, and another ball had entered his abdomen, but afterwards came away. At the battle of Salamanca he formed one of another company of fifty, of whom only eight or ten survived to tell of the terrific slaughter in which they had been engaged. Bold was present in thirteen of the Peninsular battles mentioned in history, and boasted that he had besides taken part in about one hundred skirmishes. He landed at Ostend the night before the battle of Waterloo, and marched with the victorious allies to Paris, and well remembered that they entered that city to the tune of "The Downfall of Paris." This concluded his experience as soldier. Soon after he returned to England, and received a retiring pension of a shilling per day. Being a native of Daw Green, near Dewsbury, he came into this locality, and in a short time obtained employment in Huddersfield at his old and more peaceful occupation of weaving, and subsequently he obtained the appointment of porter to the Huddersfield Banking Company—a situation which he filled for twenty-one years with the same discipline and credit that he had discharged his duties in the army. The excellence of his conduct was such as to endear him to all with whom he came into contact. The punctuality of his appearance at the door of the bank at ten o'clock in the morning became proverbial, and the estimation in which he was held was proved by the fact that about a year ago he received a retiring pension from the bank. When the Peninsular medals were granted in 1848 he wrote to Sir Edward Blakeney, his colonel, specifying eleven (forgetting two) of the battles in which he had been engaged, and the reply of the Colonel commenced, "My gallant and trusty old friend," proving that Bold was esteemed as something more than an ordinary soldier by his former commander. Bold received the medal with the following eleven clasps:—Busaco, Albuera, Ciudad Rodrigo, Badajoz, Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse. There was only one other soldier in the West Riding who could boast the possession of the same number of clasps, and he would have been thrown into the shade had Bold at the time of his application mentioned the two other battles in which he was engaged. Bold had five brothers, who all enlisted in the army, and all, after going through perils by land and sea, and battles oft, lived to return to their native land and end their days in peace. Nothing delighted Bold more in his later days than to get a few companions round him in an evening, to whom he would recount the story of his life. At such times his eye sparkled with all the vigour of youth, and his simple yet earnest delineation of the dangers he had encountered was sure to gain the undivided attention of his hearers. A mightier conqueror than any whom he had served has now laid him low, and his spirit has been gathered to those of his companions in arms who had gone before.—Huddersfield Chronicle.

Digitized by Google

CHAPLAINS' REPORTS.

THE following very proper remarks appeared in the Standard of Oct. 22nd :—

A gaol chaplain is a clergyman in magistrates' orders. At least, such is the position to which our modern justices wish to reduce these worthiest of our clergymen. All higher feelings of duty, the sacerdotal character and responsibilities, the Christian agency and ministration, the special functions of holy orders, are entirely to be ignored and forgotten in this servant of the sessions. If he acts up to his instructions, and keeps to the gaol rules, instead of the Gospel, he will pass commendably enough; the bench will praise him as a manageable man, and the repeated invitations to dinner and presents of fruit and game will convince him that he has done his duty, as it is understood by the worthy bench of magistrates. But it will happen that sterner realities often interfere with routine discipline. Criminals are of various classes and temperaments, and require different treatment. The chaplain becomes their adviser and friend; they unbosom to him their secrets; they impart their grievances; they confess their evil deeds. He seems to view many of them, not as the law regarded them, but as he is led to suppose God, in His mercy, surveys their conduct. His standard of judgment is conscience and equity, not the indiscriminating statute; and he can best tell how often and how gravely and sincerely the former differ from the latter. The offender in the eyes of the law is sometimes an entirely innocent man, and of this the chaplain is quite certain. Moreover the rev. gentleman is constantly on the spot; he sees things as they really are, without disguise, false appearance, or concealment. His ideas of the gaol and its inmates are quite up to the reality; unless, indeed, hypocrisy, as is at times the case, deceives him. A repentant convict is not always a contrite sinner; and a ticket of leave is frequently recommended where a more rigorous punishment would have been the righteous award. But we cannot see through men. The artful dodges of the streets are a match for the most astute social philosophers, even on the subjects they have best mastered. Those cunning practitioners can give forcible lessons and illustrate facts with a power and skill which beat mere book-scholars hollow. It is no wonder, then, that pious chaplains, who are ever on the alert to catch lost souls should sometimes fasten on a stray spirit touched with the old leaven, and above all things desirous of visiting its ancient haunts again. But if the gaol chaplain be sometimes deceived in a good cause, and from the highest of motives, he, nevertheless, is a true and enlightened witness to the actual state of things in the prison. He is the best of all visitors. He can most aptly view the inner as well as the outer man. He can best read the heart, because the heart is most frequently open to him. He comes neither as a gaoler to punish nor a justice to enforce, but in the light of a guide and comforter, where all is hardness and rigour. The testimony of such a man should not be readily slighted. Nor is it so. Among our reliable statistics on the condition of criminals and prison discipline the reports of gaol chaplains usually carry great weight and influence. They bear most directly on the moral and religious questions connected with the prisoners, and on those reformatory researches and schemes so characteristic of the social inquiries and science, so to name it, of the present day. Moreover, it is to be presumed that the recorded opinions of the clergy of our church on the condition and prospects of prisoners brought immediately under their own inspection and cognizance ought always to command a special attention, and produce the best practical effects on the administration and amendment of our criminal jurisprudence.

Whatever may be the general ideas of the utility of listening to the advice and suggestions of the gaol chaplain, it is quite clear that the Surrey magistrates are determined not to admit of either without a show of resistance. It is a perilous position, that of a justice of the peace. How often common sense, so rife and ready on plain ground, can never reach the majesty of the bench! Chaplains, governors, clerks, gaolers, and criminals, even the bar itself, are all reduced to nothing in the eyes of a bench of magistrates. Were it not for the reports of the press and the more regular and accurate summary of proceedings published in our day, the bench of country magistrates would come at last to supersede the judges of the land, and it might be the Government and Queen herself. The Surrey magistrates are quite up to this elevated notion of their own importance; they are determined to keep everybody in his place, from the gatekeeper to the chaplain. They met on the 19th inst., at the commencement of the Quarter Sessions, at the Court-house, Kingston-on-Thames, and had not proceeded far in their deliberations before they discovered that the Chaplain, Mr. JESSOP, was stepping out of the line of his regular business. We are told that the rev. gentleman, in making his annual report, particularly called the attention of the court to the manner in which the Criminal Justice Act is administered. He proved that the magistrates misapplied their powers under the Act in a very culpable manner. They let loose on society old offenders, ticket-of-leave men, and prisoners who had been several times convicted, and who, when out of prison, almost invariably committed further depredations; instead of applying its provisions, as it was intended, to the case of persons charged with a first offence, or who were young in crime, and likely to amend on their liberation from the horrors of a gaol. This plain statement of facts, which no one, not even the bench itself, pretended to deny, was anything but agreeable to their worships. Colonel CHALLONER, in the course of reading the report, interposed, and reminded the rev. gentleman that he had over-stepped his duty. The gallant officer's notion of the value of time to the magisterial bench is so great (we trust it was not near dinner hour) the he broadly declared that it was wasted by listening to any such recital. He did not deny the truth of the report; he only said the points indicated were not the business of a chaplain. Another gallant gentleman, Captain BEST, took the same exclusive and magisterial view; some more followed on the same side, and although the report finally passed muster, we are to infer from the proceedings that it had a very narrow chance of being rejected.

Now, we ask in plain terms, of what is the annual report of the chaplain to consist, if not of the facts which most affect the condition and career of the prisoners? If the easy and ready dismissal of old and hardened offenders be productive of serious evil, and vitiates the intentions of the Legislature, and if the evil effects of this careless system prominently meet the chaplain every day, is he to be silent or to speak out? Colonel CHALLONER, Captain BEST, and their magisterial colleagues, would enforce silence; but the entire British public and the spirit of the very Act in question are all for open information. Of what use is the gathering for Social Science at Liverpool, if some of the best data on which the entire system is to be founded, and from which all its varied conclusions are to be drawn, are to be held back because a bench of magistrates do not wish to criminate themselves? It is in vain that Captain CROFTON brings forward his elaborate statistics on the success of the reformatory system adopted in Ireland to a crowded meeting at St. George's Hall; and it is perfectly illusory for us in this country to aspire to or aim at the same collection of facts, if the most reliable sources of information as to prison discipline are to be uniformly suppressed. The moot question of the day is the reformation of our criminals, and whatever tends to throw any clear light on it ought to be received with the utmost alacrity. The reports of gaol chaplains have their just and stated value; they are regarded as fair evidence of the moral condition and prospects of the prisoners, and as such they are admitted in the records of all our authoritative publications and documents. Why Colonel CHALLONER and his colleagues of the Surrey bench should set themselves up against uniform public opinion and usage, by condemning the most useful and practical feature in the Rev. Mr. JESSOP's report, is a problem which can only be solved by admitting that a session of justices of the peace holds its quiet character only by a suppression of every fact tending to the public good.

WE have taken the prisoner under our protection insomuch that the pauper finds the gaol a more comfortable berth than the union. But even with this remarkable testimony to our prison regimen, we scarcely think enough has been done for the criminal. Why we should have thieves, strange as the assertion may appear, is an anomaly in a Christian country and in civilized society. The notions of property—the meum et tuum—are among the very first ideas children acquire, even in the worst of families. To break through this demands a bold and reckless character. The ban is soon set on the filch, and his nearest friends forsake him. On the other hand, the honest lad is praised and cheered on, and his life generally is, and always ought to be, more comfortable than that of the robber. Theft is an out-of-the-way game, not taught in our cradles, in our homes, in our schools, in our churches, in our trades, in business, in society. Why, then, is it practised? The fault, say what we will, must lie with those who have the care of the children. The parents are the most to blame, next the clergy, next employers of every kind, and, lastly, what is called our criminal system. If each authority did his duty we should have no thieves, or only a very few, and the other walks of vice would be equally diminished.

Digitized by Google

A paper has reached us from a rather distant quarter—the Annual Report of the Rev. Mr. Baker, Chaplain to the County House of Correction, Usk, Monmouthshire. These documents are generally valuable, because they reach the heart of the prison system; they not only give us a glimpse at the discipline, but a view of the effect produced by it on the criminal. Mr. Baker, in congratulating the justices on the diminution of criminals from 833 in 1857 to 770 this year, takes occasion to express his expectation of the beneficial effects of the vigorous methods now in force for the detection of crime since the introduction of the county constabulary. He very properly does not attach much importance to this useful body for preventing the commission of offences. He only states that the statistics of crime will be better determined and more regular under their supervision. The decrease of prisoners will be a fair indication of a diminution of crime. This is not a very hopeful view of the results of what is considered an effective police-system; but we fear it must be received as the only truthful one. The most vigilant police can do little to repress crime; they can only catch delinquents, deter from the open and flagrant commission of offences, and note down the actual captions, committals, and convictions. In fact, their business is to deal with criminals. What society requires is, to give them no criminals to deal with. The gaol chaplain, speaking even of his criminal county—one under the black flag of vice—says that his own experience never led him to believe that there is in it any very great amount of deliberate or determined criminality, or much that is of an organized or preconcerted character. He imputes the major part of the offences to sudden impulses or temptations, and especially to loss of self-control through intemperance; in other words, through errors of the head, not of the heart. Now, this is a very grave imputation upon somebody or some community. Of course, it would be next to impossible to extirpate the incentives to crime from any society of men, but that the entire crime of a county should emanate principally from these stimulants, whatever they may be, and not from any cool design or natural badness of heart or predisposition to theft and villany, shows a want of government somewhere—an absence of moral guidance and check in the proper quarters. Let it not be supposed that we are going to ride any high hobby, and to declare that Monmouthshire, rather notorious in our criminal annals, is to be morally healed by some special nostrum of our own or any one else's. We only say, that where intemperance and licentiousness are the imputed sources of evil the authorities of the shire have much in their power in the way of correction and repression. Mr. Baker goes on to say—"It is a fact worthy of notice, and one which I might every year report, that females are re-convicted in a very much larger proportion than the males. Thus the proportion of male prisoners this year to the female is 518 of the former to 198 of the latter; but the re-committals are 99 and 94 respectively; and the total convictions of these males are 295, and those against the females, 325. The step which a woman has taken into crime is so much the more difficult to retrace than with the opposite sex, as in the first instance it was the more serious to take, and chiefly because in so many instances it is connected with a degradation, out of which to afford her a way of escape is one of the greatest difficulties a philanthropist has to deal with, relapse into immorality and liability to new crimes almost inevitably follow when one so fallen leaves the prison gates. In Newport alone it is well known to the very vigilant police of that town that nearly a hundred doors are open to welcome her back into the service of sin, while we look around, almost in vain, to find one single door by which she may escape that servitude."

Now, this is the very root of the evil which we desire to expose—the utter hopelessness of the condition of fallen women. They who should find refuges in every country where the lord of the Magdalen is guide and master can only meet with a few stray asylums at a long and weary distance one from another. Virtue has its duties as well as its moralities, and the ladies of Monmouthshire are much to blame if they any longer suffer the crime of their county to be charged to the want of Magdalens for female outcasts. The good and pure have the reward of their chastity and honesty, and the thief and the prostitute have their punishment. The gaol chaplain tells the justices what in effect is true, that the wretched criminals are comparatively guiltless, because if the ladies of the county supported suitable refuges for fallen women the chief incentive to crime would be suppressed. We are at the commencement of the era of our criminal reformation—one which, we trust, will make the nineteenth century as famous as the sixteenth; but to do so it must be worked with the same earnestness and vigour. The correction of crime is something that can be accomplished; it is the work of the age, it has to be done. The task is for the upper and middle classes, and they should all be about it. The establishment of reformatories is the proper inauguration of the task; but a hard economy has driven Government to deny their countenance, encouragement, and aid, to some of the most useful of these institutions. It is, then, for the people themselves to step in and supply the deficiency. An honest man is a cheap article, and a thief costs a great deal and dips his hand into all our pockets. Society would gain millions by the extirpation of crime.

We could fill this argument with statistics; the facts and figures of crime actually blockade our library table. But, after all, the question is a moral one. It must reach the hearts of the people as a duty and necessity of their religion to assist in the prevention of crime, or the good deed will never be done. The Usk chaplain says:—"The Bible can sometimes be read whilst its most elementary truths are utterly unknown, and both those who read and those who do not often show that they have been brought up in complete ignorance of those first principles of right and wrong which the simplest form of good training would impart, and which, it is too hastily assumed that all acquire somehow as a matter of course. From infancy to maturity many have received no education but such as directs them the wrong way; perverted notions are acquired at the first, and they have gone on acting upon them to the end. 'From nine years' old,' said a collier, 'I was put to work in a coal-pit, where I had to drag a cart on all fours, through a passage two feet high, and I never had the least instruction till I came here;' 'but (he added on going out) I have now got hold of the plough, and I hope I shall keep on to it all along.'" Now, if this statement be true—and coming from such a source it cannot be well doubted—who are to blame but the reverend gentleman himself and his fellow ministers in the Church? We do not wish to bear hard on the clergy, but they are our moral police, and if intemperance and licentiousness prevail the public ought to turn to them for their suppression. We know there is a habit growing up of assigning to the clergy their peculiar sphere of duties, and men in authority, like the justices of the Surrey Sessions, take umbrage at any appearance of gaol chaplains intermeddling in affairs not strictly religious. Against this we must protest, as striking at the root of the pastoral character. Our clergy have the charge of souls, and are held responsible by society for neglecting in any way the condition of those souls. It is no light censure on the pastors of our Church to say that many of the poor who can read, and do read, the Bible are brought up, nevertheless, in complete ignorance of the first principles of right and wrong. We need scarcely say that no special imputation of neglect of duty was made or intended by the rev. gentleman; but the general observation is deserving of all praise for its outspeakingness and honesty. We are firmly persuaded that when the clergy of the Church of England set about this second reformation in right earnest it will be accomplished, and it will leave its consummation as the imperishable fact of the time. The task, after all, is not so difficult a one for the nineteenth century, with the press and public opinion to back it, and the regeneration of the abandoned and criminal of our fellow-men to give it Christian stamp and character.—From the Standard.

Digitized by Google

Notices to Correspondents.

Our correspondents are requested to observe that we cannot be answerable for the insertion of any Articles received after the 22nd of the month, or Advertisements after the 27th, though we shall always endeavour to meet their wishes.

N.B. As "The Philanthropist" will be published in future by Mr. Tweedie, 337, Strand, the Editor requests that all communications may be forwarded to him there, where they will receive immediate attention.

 Attention is called to the following scale of charges for Advertisements :—

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Five lines and under	0	2	6
Every additional line	0	0	4
A column	1	15	0
Half-page	2	5	0
A page	4	0	0

Charitable Institutions, 3*d.* per line.

N.B.—Advertisements in the first and last pages 1*d.* per line extra.

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE,

November 1, 1858.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE CONFERENCE.

It cannot be denied that one of the most cheering signs of the times is that seen in the fact that a large proportion of the most intelligent persons of the community are bestowing their time and attention on the best means of diminishing misery and multiplying happiness; and we point with satisfaction to the second annual meeting of the National Association for the Advancement of Social Science as a significant proof that such is the case. For many years societies have existed in the metropolis and other large towns for the investigation of the physical sciences and the accumulation of knowledge. We have had Royal Chemical Societies, Royal Astronomical Societies, Royal Geographical Societies, Royal Geological Societies, and a variety of others of a kindred character, and no doubt each society has so far fulfilled its mission by adding to our stores of information and advancing the intellectual civilization of the age and country. But whilst vast progress has been made in almost every branch of science, and whilst conquest after conquest has been made over matter, it cannot be denied that many things which vitally affect the innermost heart of the commonwealth have, to a very great extent, been neglected. Whilst ascertaining the different strata of the globe, measuring the distance of stars, and similar achievements, social evils have been gradually eating their way into the homes and hearts of the people. What great advantage is it if our learned men can penetrate into antiquity and explore the hidden lore of perished ages, or gather together into museums the most rare and curious antiquarian relics, if, at the same time, masses of our fellow-men at our very door are perishing for lack of knowledge? Let it not be imagined that we are averse in any way to the deepest research or the boldest speculations in the fields of science, or that we would for a moment discountenance any person in the pursuit of his favourite study or amusement. But we would call on our countrymen not to forget the weightier matters of the law, and neglect duties which demand performance toward our fellow-man. And we are glad to know that public apathy is at last broken, and that men foremost in the ranks of authorship, statesmanship, and science, are beginning to investigate the causes and consequences of social maladies, with a view to their abridgment, if not of their destruction. Let the same amount of attention be bestowed on the best means of elevating the condition of the ill-clad, ill-housed, and ill-fed portion of the population as there has hitherto been expended on philosophical inquiries and the pursuit of elegant amusements, and we need not fear the result. And if we may regard the Liverpool gathering as a sign of the times, it is not too much to expect that, ere long, public attention will be directed with system, energy, and enthusiasm, towards the extirpation of many preventible evils which now sojourn in our midst.

At the Liverpool Conference papers were read and attention was given to jurisprudence and the amendment of the law, to examination schemes, and their incidental effects on public education, on book-hawking societies, on colleges for the blind, on art education, on training colleges, and other educational facilities; also on the causes and prevention of crime, including the incentives to crime presented by marine-store dealers, and how to suppress them; on crime and its antidote, on criminal statistics, on emigration as a preventive agency, and on the treatment of discharged prisoners; also on social health, including such questions as the duties of the officers of health, on the influence of marriage on the population, and on disease among the lower animals and the sale of adulterated milk and decayed fruits as means of impairing the health of the people. We have not space, however, to refer to a tithe of the papers and questions discussed at Liverpool, and must refer to the public papers of that time. When once the British people become alive to the importance of a great work which should be done, or a great national duty which should be performed, they are not backward in service or in sacrifice. The great difficulty is in arousing them to the point of steady, determined action. We do not say that they have yet risen to the height of the argument involved in the vast question of social science, but we do maintain that they are evincing a disposition and putting forth an energy not hitherto displayed; and we augur much from the second annual meeting of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, both as a sign of progress and an indication of future principles.

PUBLIC DRINKING FOUNTAINS IN LONDON.

Mr. Samuel Gurney, M.P., of Lombard Street, has made an offer to the vestry of the parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn, to erect at his own cost a drinking fountain, to be placed on Holborn Hill, in such site as the rector and churchwardens may fix upon. Mr. S. Gurney has thereby conveyed an incalculable boon on the public, which will assuredly lead to the erection of others. While on this subject, it may not be amiss to insert the following extract from a correspondent of The Builder :—

"Drink in the Parks.—In reference to the very laudable movement in favour of 'public drinking fountains,' I trust amongst the many proposed sites for that great boon to the poor out-of door public, that the parks of the metropolis will not be overlooked. I, with my family of young children, lately visited that delightful retreat of the east-enders of London, Victoria Park (all honour to its promoters). We provided ourselves with biscuits, and repaired thither to enjoy our half-holiday, and the only drawback to our happiness was thirst, to satisfy which we were forced to go outside the park, and buy what we did not want, that we might beg what we did want, viz. water for our little ones and selves, besides shortening our half-holiday."

Digitized by Google

REFORMATORY AND REFUGE UNION.

In reference to "fallen women," the Committee of this Union have done great service by the preparation of a very valuable little handbook, containing an account of the Homes and Penitentiaries which already exist in the metropolis and in the provinces, so far as could be ascertained. In hundreds of cases where pity is excited towards an unhappy fellow-creature, ignorance of the mode by which deliverance may be effected, checks the humane effort. This little book well supplies this want, so far as relates to this particular class. It, however, brings before our mind one subject of deep regret, namely, the inconsiderable amount of accommodation afforded, compared with the known number of these wretched creatures. We find that in the metropolis there is accommodation for but 1080 in the well-known institutions, and in the provinces 1012; total, 2092; whereas, if we are to credit the statistical information already gathered from various sources, the number of fallen women in our metropolis, and in the large towns, amounts to very nearly 100,000.

This is a deplorable state of things, sufficient in our mind to justify a special organization of well disposed Christians to enter largely upon practical measures to remedy it. There is no want of money nor of will and disposition to come forward and supply the want. But the subject is too vast to be efficiently handled by small local societies. It demands the attention of a large body, a central focus, from which may emanate smaller institutions. It requires the undivided care of an association specially devoted to the subject, and we shall rejoice to see, and aid to the uttermost, any attempt at such an organization. Meanwhile the public are under a deep debt of obligation to the Reformatory and Refuge Union for the production of this little handbook. The Union has many important matters on hand, and, so far as we have seen, they are by no means disposed to sit idle, or waste much time in talk; to do is their adopted line of proceeding; and among them are many whose influence is great, and whose hearts are in the benefit of their fellow-creatures. Pending the formation of any special society for the purpose, we may fairly hope to see, as the result of their activity and energy, some alterations in the sad state of things to which we have alluded. Slow indeed it may be, and often almost imperceptible, but we are grossly mistaken if this little pamphlet will not, on the one hand, prove of important service to many, who know not how or where to apply in cases even now under their cognizance and pity; and, on the other hand, awaken in the minds of many who have not previously thought about it, a desire to do what good may be in their power in this particular phase of benevolence. We recommend the book very heartily to all the friends of this dangerous and endangered class. It will be found to give the terms of admission, ages preferred, accommodation provided, and such further particulars as would enable any person at a glance to ascertain which Institution would be most likely to answer the required purpose; and in fact, we may conscientiously announce its publication as a decided acquisition.

CONVICT HULKS.

Case of Rev. J. K. Walpole.

Our readers will be pleased to remember, that we have distinctly repudiated any private knowledge or personal bias in this matter. We are simply desirous that neither the weak should be oppressed by the strong, nor the weak vilify the strong with impunity. As we before stated, there is an important principle involved in the case. It is an Englishman's glory, that he may not be punished for fault or crime, without an opportunity given to him to answer the charges brought against him, with his accuser face to face. This in our eyes is the gravamen of the above case, which Colonel Jebb may be able to remove. If the statements made by Mr. Walpole, in reference to the Convict Hulks, be correct, they should be matter of inquiry elsewhere than in our pages; indeed, the public welfare is deeply involved in such an inquiry; and it would ill become us to do more than draw public attention; this we have ventured to do—and Colonel Jebb has sent his rejoinder, which appeared in our last number. This has drawn forth two letters, one from Mr. Walpole, and another from "one who knows the truth," who indeed appears to have had good opportunity for doing so, who, from his position and occupation, we are bound to believe, would only write what he conscientiously felt to be true, and who candidly and freely consents to his name being given to Colonel Jebb if required. To these two letters we feel compelled in fairness to give insertion; but we are by no means disposed to continue a correspondence which cannot possibly bring the matter to a conclusion; we can draw attention to the case—and this we have done; Colonel Jebb, if he pleases, is justly entitled to his answer; but there we must stop. We can hardly imagine that the right of an Englishman to a hearing before punishment, has been in this case outraged. If so, it were indeed a subject for grave consideration. Official power may unwittingly be exercised with severity; we can imagine that underlings may be afraid to speak the truth, which may take away their bread from them; but we repeat our former statement, that it vitally concerns every person engaged in the Civil Service, that he should be able fearlessly, and without subjecting himself to oppression, to bring before the proper authorities cases of abuse, which may come within his knowledge, whether his complaint be of those above or under him.

DISCHARGED PRISONERS' AID SOCIETY.

We regret to find that the "Surrey Society," formed so long ago as 1824, for assisting discharged prisoners, who may show any anxiety to escape from the life they have been leading, is in such want of funds, as to make it likely that some of those, who are now doing well in institutions, must be discharged again upon their own resources. Indeed, E. Penrhyn, Esq., Chairman at the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions, in his address to the Grand Jury, expressed his deep regret at the position of so valuable a Society, which might, unless better supported, cease to exist. Our readers will see in our advertising columns, that in the previous year a very large number were aided in various ways, from the funds of this Society; indeed the Annual Reports prove that, although there may be some disappointment, yet a very considerable portion are in reality restored to a fair position, and are well availing themselves of the opportunities held out to them. The Surrey Society is the Parent Society of this peculiar work, and as such deserves support; it is carefully and efficiently conducted, but cannot work as it ought without the funds which a benevolent public can place in the hands of the committee. The Society is the almoner of public charity, in a most interesting shape. We have no right to suppose that because a man has been a criminal, he must, as a consequence attach himself ever after to crime as a choice; many are driven to it as a necessity. We know not, in fact, a more pitiable object than a discharged prisoner anxious to escape from his own usual companions and old associations. He meets with distrust and contempt on all hands; whether he merit it or not. And a helping hand of encouragement is in no case more timely. The Surrey Society has deserved well of the public, not only for the good it has effected in its own county, but for the example it has set generally in the great cause of criminal reformation. We are glad to find that the committee as a rule avoid debt; but there is such a thing as suicidal economy; and we would ask, why has a Society of such age and importance, of such general value and usefulness, permitted itself to be so little known? We do not remember even to have seen it made known by the means of the great organs of the press. And if the merits of such a Society are not such as to commend it to the advocacy of the great and leading papers; at least it could have been made known by means of their advertising columns: there are many, who have both the means and will to aid such societies, but who have no knowledge of the various outlets for their charity but through the advertisements which appear in the papers; who, in fact, search for such objects. The committee will do well to consider this. Again, why was not such a Society represented at the first meeting at Liverpool? Several similar societies, established only very recently, sent their deputations, to convey to the public such information as their experience authorized; on the operation, benefits, mode of conduct, prospects of success, &c., of such societies. Had the Surrey Society, after so long an existence, and in so important a county, no valuable information to give to a mass of British people assembled specially to consider this very question, among others, "Criminal Reformation"? Surely it was due to the public at large, as well as to its own credit, that it should have taken a prominent part in the particular phase of this peculiar work which "Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies" have begun to assume. It is a good proof of the disposition of the public to support such societies, when they know of their existence, that the Surrey Society, notwithstanding its backwardness in this respect, has yet been very largely supported, and enabled to effect a great amount of actual good. We trust the advertisement which appears in our columns will awaken amongst our own readers a feeling of sympathy with its position, which shall show the committee that, while they very properly avoid debt, some portion of their funds might be well and advantageously applied in making the Society more widely known. The English public, as a general rule, are benevolent to an extraordinary degree; but they require, as a matter of course, to be made aware of any claim upon them, and to be satisfied of the reality of that claim. Let them but know what money is required, and for what purpose, and if the cause be good the money will very seldom be withheld. We have offered these remarks in hopes that they may be acted upon by a Society which claims and has our most cordial good wishes for its welfare and success. It will certainly be a sad conclusion to its valuable services if those who have, in institutions, given good promise of a change of life for the better are to be turned out again to despair; and, it may be, when too late, awaken a feeling of bitter remorse in the minds of the benevolent, should they experience a repetition of the fearful Frimley tragedy—the well-known result of a man driven to crime of the worst kind, to be expiated only on the scaffold, for want of a helping hand at what may be truly called a needful time of trouble.

Digitized by Google

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

The Congress which was held at Liverpool in the second week of October may be, in fact, considered as the first anniversary of this evidently important Society. It would require no assumption of prophetic foresight to pronounce an opinion that a body of gentlemen, of all ranks and of the highest degree of education, armed with practical and political experience, consenting to give their attention, on a collective and definite system, to the consideration and discussion of social questions, must have a most important influence on the well-being of the community at large. These thoughts naturally occurred to us when the Association was so successfully and satisfactorily inaugurated at Birmingham last year. At that time, however, the scheme was completely novel and untried. Though backed by the gigantic power of mind and talent of Lord Brougham and other noblemen who filled the various offices of the Society—the presidency of Lord Brougham alone being as a host in itself; and though its intrinsic value could scarcely be unseen by any who would think upon the subject, still it cannot be denied that it was an experiment. A good thing does not always at once take hold on the public mind. The British people have been on many occasions slow to accept a novelty when the boon is prospective; but once fairly convinced of the reality of the advantage, there is energy enough to be found in Britain to overcome any difficulties. The experiment for the social amelioration of the community may now, after its year of probation, be fairly considered as fact. The meeting at Liverpool will sufficiently testify to the truth of this assertion. Hundreds of those who quitted Birmingham at the close of the inaugural assembly of this Society doubtless felt that they had good and sufficient grounds to augur well of the ultimate progress and usefulness of the Association; but we doubt if the most sanguine could have anticipated a success more evident than was proved by the Liverpool meeting. We are given to understand that there were present at the time upwards of two thousand members and associates. The interest excited in several of the important subjects, the full discussion they underwent, and the talent brought to bear on them, testify incontestably that the public mind is fully ripe for the firm and permanent establishment of the Social Science Association. It is impossible but that it must henceforth exercise a very powerful influence on the social improvement of our country. It is, moreover, no insignificant sign of the wide-spread attraction of the Association, that at this second annual meeting, which is, in actual fact, as we have said, but the close of its first year of existence, there were thirty-seven public bodies there represented. These were not only such as existed in and about Liverpool, but scattered about over different parts of England, even to the sister isle. There were representatives from the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, Bradford Chamber of Commerce, Bristol Chamber of Commerce, British and Foreign School Society, British Temperance League, Liverpool Collegiate Institution, Edinburgh Chamber of Commerce, Halifax Mechanics' Institution, Historic Society of Lancashire and Cheshire, Hope Street Book Society, Hope Street Mutual Improvement Society, Huddersfield Chamber of Commerce, International Decimal Association, Law Amendment Society, Leeds Chamber of Commerce, Leith Chamber of Commerce, Literary and Philosophic Society, Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, Liverpool Co-operative Provident Association, Liverpool Financial Reform Association, Liverpool Guardian Society, Liverpool Institute, Liverpool Recreative Society, Liverpool Select Vestry, Liverpool Working Tailors' Industrial Association, Medical Institute, National Reformatory

Digitized by Google

Union, Northern Mechanics' Institution, Nottingham Sanitary Committee, Reformatory and Refuge Union, Statistical Society of Dublin, Statistical Society of London, United Kingdom Alliance, West-Riding Trades' Association, West-Riding Trade Protection Society, Wolverhampton Chamber of Commerce, and the Worcester Chamber of Commerce.

Several valuable papers were read and discussed in the five different sections, to which we may from time to time allude. It is gratifying to find that the publication of the Transactions has been already arranged for; the papers and documents have been placed in Mr. Parker's hands, and it is expected that they will be out at an early period, and issued to the members. It is no slight sign of the hold which this Association has taken on the public mind, that the press generally, headed by the great leader of the daily papers, devoted a considerable space, not only to the insertion of the addresses and papers, but even to editorial comments upon several of the subjects broached in them. Of its ultimate success, then, no shadow of doubt now remains on our mind; and if only the secretaries of the various sections continue to manifest the same activity and energy they have hitherto displayed, we may also fairly say, that the social impurities of our country will be rigorously dealt with, and the great difficulties which have hitherto encumbered the amelioration of society generally, whether legal or physical, moral or intellectual, will be manfully battled against, until they shall have yielded to the force of British character, energy, and perseverance.

THE METROPOLITAN REFORMATORY, GROVE HOUSE, BRIXTON-HILL.

The prospects of our reformatory efforts, though cheering to the highest degree, so far as the effect of those efforts on the inmates is concerned, are yet not so bright as regards outward appliances. Our institutions are not so numerous, nor are already existing establishments so flush of accommodation as to make the close of any well-appointed reformatory other than a matter to be largely felt. The announcement, therefore, of the close of the above Institution both takes us by surprise, and fills us with sincere regret. We need not now point out to those who are or have been interested in the reformatory movement that the Brixton Institution was effecting a large proportion of good. Its extent of ground, to be worked as a garden by the inmates, besides offering fair, and in some degree remunerating, employment for some hundreds of young men, and thus implanting in their minds habits of industry, had the additional advantage of being situated in a very healthy part of the suburbs of London, calculated to invigorate the frame while it refreshed the mind. It is some consolation to find that its close is not a matter of choice, but of absolute necessity, arising out of circumstances over which the Committee had no control. It is also gratifying to be able to state that, so far as the work itself is concerned, there is no diminution of interest on the part of the Committee, nor will there be any serious loss on the part of the inmates. Mr. Bowyer, the admirable founder and mainstay of the Institution in the Euston Road, has consented to receive the remaining inmates. There is one part of this affair which indeed fills us with sorrow, we mean the sad prospect which probably will await the instructors; the master shoemaker and bookbinder, gardener, &c. A winter season is opening before them, not unlikely to be unusually severe, and these men may possibly be thrown out by the sudden change of any means of supporting their families. We sincerely hope that this may not be so, but from a hint we have received we fear it is not unlikely.

Meanwhile, returning to the inmates, let us give a passing tribute of praise to Mr. Bowyer for his prompt offer of aid to this, his sister institution, in the hour of her dissolution. The supporters of the Metropolitan Reformatory may rest satisfied that their protégés will be well cared for in their new asylum, and we earnestly hope they will carry out the wishes expressed in the subjoined circular, and support Mr. Bowyer in this addition to his cares and expenses.

The circular is as follows:—

Grove House, Brixton Hill,
November, 1858.

The Committee of the Metropolitan Industrial Reformatory have to announce with much regret to their subscribers and friends, that they are under the necessity of closing the Institution and terminating its operations. This arises from no diminished interest in the work, nor from any doubt of the value and need of such institutions; but from the force of circumstances alike unexpected and irresistible.

A few weeks ago the Committee were startled by the information that the buildings appropriated to the inmates, viz. the dormitories and workshops, had shown signs of serious dilapidation. A surveyor was immediately requested to examine them in the hope that timely repair would place them in sufficient security. The following, however, was his report.

"On a careful survey of the premises, it is found that the large dormitory is so far decayed as to render it unfit for its present occupation for any long period.

"The fence and sheds abutting on the passage on the west side of the premises are also in an advanced state of decay, so as to render it necessary to take the whole down rather than make any outlay in the attempt to repair.

"Mr. Parris, Lady Grant's surveyor, has been over the premises with me, and agrees in the above recommendations.

"Chas. Reeves."

Under these circumstances the Committee have been obliged to consider the financial state and prospects of the Institution with a view to determine their course.

To raise a building adequate to the purposes required would involve an outlay of at least 1500*l*.

The Committee could hold out to their friends no hope of being able to raise such a sum; nor do they think the nature of their lease warrants the expenditure of so large an amount upon the premises.

The Committee were bound also to consider that, notwithstanding the large donations of a few individuals, and the liberal response made to their appeals by the inhabitants of Brixton and the neighbourhood, yet the public at large have given but a feeble support to the Institution, so that the ordinary income for the last two years has not been raised without very great difficulties. In addition to this the recent withdrawal of the Government grant, contrary to all anticipation, presented the prospect of a serious deficiency of resources for the coming year.

The only conclusion which the Committee could arrive at in the face of these difficulties was, that they had better terminate their labours while the finances were comparatively unembarrassed, rather than, by continuance, to incur the risk of being involved in serious liabilities.

In taking leave of those friends and supporters who have so kindly aided the work, the committee feel that it is some consolation that though thus brought to an abrupt termination, their past efforts have not been in vain.

Since the commencement, in the month of April, 1853:

879	young	men	have applied for admission.
325	„	„	have been admitted.
95	„	„	have emigrated.
54	„	„	have been sent to situations.
37	„	„	have enlisted.
14	„	„	have been sent to sea.
10	„	„	have been restored to their friends.
2	„	„	have been sent to Hospitals.
6	„	„	have been sent to other Reformatories.
53	„	„	have left of their own accord.
24	„	„	have been dismissed.
2	„	„	have died.
29	„	„	still remain in the Institution.

It is something to have been instrumental in rescuing so many fellow-creatures from the vice and misery into which they had fallen. It is to be hoped that in the great day of account some of these prodigals will be found to the praise and glory of the Saviour's redeeming love.

The Committee feel it especially due to the various clergymen who have aided in the work, to tender to them and to their respective congregations and to the residents in the neighbourhood generally, the expression of their respectful acknowledgments and thanks for the warm interest and assistance they have rendered to the Institution since its commencement. If any success has attended the work, no small share of it has been due to the sympathy thus extended to the Committee. Without this encouragement their operations would not have been sustained.

In taking leave of the Metropolitan Reformatory, the Committee have the satisfaction of knowing that the work itself will undergo no serious diminution. G. J. Bowyer, Esq., Hon. Governor of the North London Reformatory, has kindly made arrangements to admit all our remaining inmates. They will be transferred to his charge, and will go through their course in the same manner as if they had remained at Brixton.

Digitized by Google

The North London Reformatory is conducted upon the same principles, and admits inmates of the same description and age as the Metropolitan Reformatory, as will be seen by the accompanying report of the Institution.

The Committee earnestly hope that those friends who are interested in the cause will transfer their support to Mr. Bowyer, and thus enable that gentleman to permanently maintain that enlargement of his numbers which he has now commenced.

REFORMATORIES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS:

THEIR COMPARATIVE ECONOMY.

A PAPER read by Mr. Joseph Adshead, of Manchester, in the Punishment and Reformation Section of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, Liverpool, Thursday, October 14, 1858.

REFORMATORIES.—PART I.

Reformatories and Ragged and Industrial Schools have at length become national institutions, and are now recognised and carried on under parliamentary sanction and minutes of the Committee of the Privy Council on Education. Each year's experience gives an increased understanding of the question, "What is to be done with the dangerous and vagrant classes?" A large number of young persons also, for whom no suitable provision had formerly been made, are now brought within the range of Ragged and Industrial Schools' Regulations.

An enlarged development of the various agencies now in operation cannot fail in time to a diminishing of the number of our criminal classes—Reformatories and Industrial Schools being essentially preventive institutions.

It has been a subject of common observation, that the youthful criminal almost inevitably becomes an old and hardened offender. There is a criminal community within our population, acting as by natural laws, altogether antagonistic to well-ordered society.

It has been generally considered by jurists, that there is but little hope of reclaiming the hardened adult transgressor, whose very element of existence is dissipation, profligacy, and crime. How is the swelling current to be diminished in its volume and to be narrowed in its course? How is the sapling to be made to yield before it becomes the stubborn plant?

Our Reformatories and Industrial Schools are pre-eminently adapted to check the current of crime at its source; to bend the young sapling, and to train it to bring forth the fruits of industry and good conduct, instead of the noxious fruits of infamy and vice.

I have a lively recollection of the feeling of concern manifested upon the question of Houses of Refuge and Reformatories entertained by benevolent minds, twenty years ago. I had visited the Houses of Refuge in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and other parts of the United States, and had followed somewhat in the tract of the late estimable William Crawford, the inspector of prisons for the home district, and the inquiry then was—"What can be done to establish similar institutions in this country?" Parkhurst was the result of that consideration, as an experimental institution, promoted mainly by Mr. Crawford, in conjunction with the late Rev. Whitworth Russell, and (the then Captain) now Colonel Jebb. The work comparatively slumbered, so far as to practical results, for some years.

The old Philanthrophic Society, in St. George's Fields, London, was doing in a limited degree the work of reformation of juvenile delinquents; but youthful criminality kept annually increasing, and no salutary and renovating antidote was provided to arrest the moral malady.

A problem had to be solved; the subject had to be fully grappled with; benevolent minds gave themselves to the consideration of the question, and there will, I think, be but one opinion, that the interesting proceedings of the Birmingham Conference of 1851, with also the important inquiries instituted by the Parliamentary Committee of 1852, upon juvenile delinquency and neglected and vagrant children, gave a new and increased impulse and direction to those feelings of benevolent solicitude which had been cherished for the adoption and carrying out of plans for youthful reclamation.

The 17th & 18th Vict. cap. 86, of 1854, was the first general legislative enactment passed for the general advancement of Reformatory establishments, and which so importantly supplemented voluntary and benevolent efforts, and placed the institutions certified under its provisions upon a satisfactory basis.

It could scarcely be expected that in the first formation of Reformatory and Industrial Schools, there should be at once a completeness in their general economy. Bands of benevolent individuals determined upon establishing these preventive institutions. Funds had to be raised, buildings to be provided, suitable supervision and management to be procured, and thus the managers or boards would have gradually to feel their way, and by degrees to establish more efficiently their principles of action in carrying on these institutions; nor could a uniform principle of action be well adopted, as is evident—place and circumstance having their influence upon economical results.

As, however, there is now a number of institutions, reformatory and industrial, established, and which have the advantage of becoming acquainted with each other's operations, it may therefore not be unprofitable to make some inquiry into their general proceedings, or rather to make a few contrasts as to the comparative economy of several of the leading Reformatories, and also in relation to several Ragged Industrial Feeding Schools. Such inquiries may present views upon some points as to what to avoid, what to correct, or what to adopt—it being a most important element in the practical working of the institutions under review, to accomplish the largest amount of good at the smallest amount of cost, compatible with efficient working.

To develope more fully the subject of this paper, I propose to direct attention to the following topics in relation to Reformatories and Ragged Schools:—Their sources of income; expenditure for supervision; maintenance, and industrial results—with some suggestions and general reflections; and be it to the honour of our country, that so large an amount of benevolent and voluntary agency is employed in working out the salutary results of these institutions. To this voluntary supervising agency may be ascribed that large measure of success which has attended the means employed—a sympathy not purchaseable by money. Enlisted amongst those who have taken a foremost part in the promotion of such institutions are to be found peers of the realm, members of parliament, clergymen, ministers of religion of various denominations, the various classes of professional men, merchants, and other sections of the community; not passing by the devoted labours of many ladies, who have most earnestly aided in the good work;—all these marking with benevolent concern, the welfare of the institutions under notice, and uniting for their promotion and advancement.

Important results must attend such powerful and influential combinations.

With those who take a practical part in the working of Reformatory Institutions, expenditure is a natural subject of inquiry. What the cost per head of each inmate? What the amount per annum for superintendence, &c.? What towards self-support by labour results?

Such information can only be obtained by a reference to the published reports of the Institutions; with some of those documents it is not easy to come to a satisfactory conclusion. Regarding several establishments, inquiry is stopped at the very threshold—no average number being given of attendance through the year; and the various kinds of outlay are so mixed up, that distinctive classes of expenditure cannot be clearly defined for comparison with the expenditure of other institutions. Some of the annual accounts end in March, others in June, others at the end of the year. It would be highly desirable could a uniform system be adopted in the classification of the various kinds of expenditure, with the average number of attendances through the year. By these means, comparisons could be readily made as to the economical working of the institutions. Out of about eighty reports before me, not one-third have furnished their annual st tements in a manner to enable the writer to obtain information as to the cost per head of the inmates of the respective Reformatories.

There is, however, sufficient information contained in the periodical reports of some of the institutions to indicate their comparative economy.

The Red Hill Institution appears to present itself as the starting point. Since its altered constitution in 1850, it has become essentially a Reformatory establishment—is considered the Anglo-Mettray—has received unequalled patronage and support—and has had the advantage of the lengthened experience of its late resident chaplain and superintendent, the Rev. S. Turner.

Red Hill is presented to the public attention as the model Reformatory establishment. On this ground, and from its general operations, it is natural that it should come more especially under review, and from which important information should be obtainable for the guidance of the inexperienced as to the necessary outlay or expenditure in the commencing and also in the carrying on of similar institutions.

The classes of expenditure, for simplicity of arrangement, are brought out under the following heads:—Salaries, house incidentals, provisions, clothing, and miscellaneous charges. These respective items will indicate the pro rata charge per head—a plan adopted with much clearness in the Kingswood Reformatory report.

For this purpose, it is proposed to notice the following ten Institutions:—

1. Red Hill, Reigate.
2. Glasgow Reformatory.
3. Home in the East, London.
4. Castle Howard, near York.
5. Hardwicke, Gloucester.
6. Hampshire Reformatory.
7. Kingswood, Bristol.
8. North Eastern, Newcastle-on-Tyne.
9. Akbar Ship, Liverpool.
10. Red Lodge (Girls), Bristol.

The ordinary receipts and expenditure only are supplied. No particulars in details of farming or manufacturing operations are given, but credit for profit from labour when shown in the account.

To preserve the text of this paper in some degree of consecutive order without the interference of statistical and financial data, in the following ten Reformatories I have only presented the total net cost per inmate, and must refer for the particular classification of items of receipts and expenditure to note A, in which will be found the abstracts of annual statements, and also miscellaneous receipts and expenditure in detail—these furnishing an approximate view sufficiently near to indicate the comparative charges under similar headings, by which their economical relations may be readily contrasted. One example only, as an illustration of the classified form.

Digitized by Google

Red Hill Reformatory, Report, 1858. Average attendance in 1857, 277 boys.

ORDINARY RECEIPTS.

	£	s.	d.	Per head per annum. £	s.	d.
Subscriptions and donations*	433	18	11	1	11	3
Government grant for maintenance and emigration	7813	3	4	28	4	1
County Association	295	16	1	—
Parents and friends of inmates	173	1	0	0	12	3
Cr. "Surplus of Farm, &c."	274	16	1	0	19	10

EXPENDITURE.

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
House incidentals	994	6	3	3	11	5
Salaries, wages, and provisions	4129	14	0	16	6	3
Clothing, washing, and sewing	867	11	0	3	2	8
Miscellaneous charges	951	11	11	3	8	9

Net cost, £25 4*s*. 10*d*. per annum, or 9*s*. 8*d*. per week.

Provision was also made this year (1857) by the Redhill Reformatory for the emigration of 66 boys, at a cost of £1374 5*s*. 6*d*., or £20 16*s*. 4*d*. per head. £147 9*s*. 3*d*. was also expended in apprenticing lads, but no number is given.

No. 1. Red Lodge Bristol Reformatory. Report, 1857. Average attendance, 1856—56 girls. Net cost per head per annum, £14 5*s*. 9*d*., or 5*s*. 8*d*. per week.

No. 2. Glasgow Reformatory. Report, 1858. Average attendance, 1857—382 boys. Net cost per head per annum, £15 8*s*. 9*d*, or 5*s*. 11*d*. per week.

No. 3. Hampshire Reformatory. Report, 1858. Average attendance, 1857—35 boys. Net cost per head per annum £19 5*s*. 2*d*., or 7*s*. 3*d*. per week.

No. 4. Hardwicke (Gloucester) Reformatory. Report, 1858. Average attendance, 1857—35 boys. Net cost per head per annum, £20 14*s*. 3*d*.

No. 5. Home in the East, London. Report, 1858. Average attendance, 1857—47 boys. Net cost per head per annum, £21 11*s*. 6*d*., or 8*s*. 3*d*. per week.

No. 6. The School Frigate, "Akbar." Report, 1858. Average attendance, 1858—95 boys. Net cost per head per annum, £23 5*s*. 8*d*., or 9*s*. 1*d*. per week.

No. 7. North Eastern Reformatory. Report, 1858. Average attendance, 1857—64 boys. Net cost per head per annum, £23 6*s*. 10*d*., or 9*s*. 1*d*. per week.

No. 8. Kingswood (Bristol) Reformatory. Report, 1857. Average attendance, 1856—47 boys. Net cost per head per annum, £23 17*s*. 8*d*., or 9*s*. 2*d*. per week, deducting labour.

No. 9. Red Hill Reformatory. Report, 1858. Average attendance, 1857—277 boys. Net cost per head per annum, £25 4*s*. 10*d*., or 9*s*. 8*d*. per week.

No. 10. Castle Howard Reformatory. Report, 1858. Average attendance, 1856-7—35 boys. Net cost per head per annum, £25 6*s*. 3*d*., or 9*s*. 8*d*. per week.

The foregoing statements are the briefest references that could be given in showing the cost per head results of the ten Reformatories. The classified statements of the receipts and expenditure, with the miscellaneous details as shown in note A, will not be considered altogether as a perfect index of the nature of the entire working of the reformatory system. The accounts in the manner there supplied are the first which have been furnished in a collected and tabulated form, and are given more as examples, and as to their extent as an approximation to what may be deemed as the result of reformatory operations, and which may be briefly commented upon under various heads commencing with

SOURCES OF INCOME.—SUBSCRIPTIONS AND DONATIONS.

Hardwicke, 32*l*. 13*s*.; Red Lodge Girls' Reformatory, 160*l*. 15*s*.; Kingswood Bristol Reformatory, 206*l*. 11*s*.; Home in the East, 409*l*. 17*s*. 11*d*.; Red Hill, 433*l*. 8*s*. 11*d*.; Hampshire, 502*l*. 14*s*.; Castle Howard, 538*l*. 8*s*. 3*d*.; Eastern Sunderland, 632*l*. 15*s*. 7*d*.; Akbar School Frigate, 1163*l*. 0*s*. 6*d*.: total, 4080*l*. 4*s*. 2*d*.

SUBSCRIPTIONS AND DONATIONS PRO RATA PER HEAD FOR THE YEAR, AVERAGING AS UNDER.

Boys.	Per head for the Year. £	s.	d.	Boys.	Per head for the Year. £	s.	d.
Glasgow 382	nil			Home in the East . 47	8	14	0
Hardwicke 35	0	18	8	Akbar ship 95	12	4	10
Red Hill 277	1	11	3	Hampshire 35	14	7	3
Red Lodge Girls . 56	2	17	5	Castle Howard . . 35	15	16	6
Kingswood 47	4	7	10
North Eastern . . 64	6	15	3

It will be perceived there is a considerable difference in the amounts received, the lowest being at the rate of 18*s*. 8*d*. per head, the highest 15*l*. 16*s*. 6*d*. per head. The sum total of subscriptions and donations for the ten Reformatories is 4080*l*. 4*s*. 2*d*. or at the average rate of 3*l*. 16*s*. 1*d*. per head per annum, for 1075 inmates, as indicated in the table.

It may be urged that taking the reports for one year is scarcely a fair criterion as to the amount of benevolent contributions to the respective institutions noticed; but it will be admitted that the year quoted is as fair for one institution as another; and the same objection might be urged against the selection of any particular year. The principle adopted has been to give a transcript of the receipts and expenditure of the latest reports obtainable, whatever results they might show, either favourable or otherwise.

SOURCES OF INCOME.—THE TREASURY—THE COMMITTEE OF PRIVY COUNCIL ON EDUCATION.

From the Treasury.—Home in the East, 205*l*. 3*s*. 7*d*.; Hardwicke, 631*l*. 9*s*. 3*d*.; North Eastern, 1121*l*. 15*s*.; Hampshire, 438*l*. 19*s*. 3*d*.; Kingswood, 838*l*. 15*s*. 1*d*.; Akbar, Liverpool, 1995*l*. 2*s*. 9*d*.; Castle Howard, 627*l*. 11*s*. 9*d*.; Red Lodge, 874*l*. 10*s*.; Glasgow Reformatory, 4988*l*. 8*s*. 5*d*.; Red Hill, 7813*l*. 3*s*. 4*d*.

From the Committee of Privy Council on Education.—Hardwicke, 61*l*. 11*s*. 2*d*.; Castle Howard, 95*l*. 17*s*. 11*d*.; Home in the East, 322*l*. 9*s*. 3*d*.; Red Lodge, 76*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*.; Kingswood, 98*l*. 2*s*.; Glasgow Reformatory, 1792*l* 16*s*.; North Eastern, 95*l*.; Akbar ship, 273*l*. 7*s*. 6*d*.

TOTAL SUMS received from "The Treasury" and Committee of Privy Council on Education.

Boys.	Per head for the Year. £.	s.	d.	Boys.	Per head for the Year. £.	s.	d.
Home in the East . 47	11	14	3	Hardwicke 35	19	15	7
Hampshire Reformatory . 35	12	10	0	Kingswood 47	19	18	4
Red Lodge Girls . 56	16	9	4	Castle Howard . . 35	20	13	6
Glasgow 382	17	14	2	North Eastern . . 64	20	16	3
				Akbar ship 95	23	17	5
				Red Hill 277	28	4	1

The Treasury allowance is the main element of support to the reformatory system, and very properly so. It could never be expected that both the cost and the supervision of the youthful delinquents of the country were to be thrown upon the voluntary contributions and the voluntary agency of the benevolent portions of the community. Voluntary benevolence commenced, and has largely carried out, the long-needed operations of our reformatory institutions, and the Legislature both timely and wisely supplement their benevolent efforts by the provisions of the 17 & 18 Vict. cap. 86, under the power of which 7*s*. per week per inmate, or 18*l*. 4*s*. per annum, is paid by the State to duly-certified Reformatories.

The amount furnished by the government to the ten Reformatories was 19,534*l*. 13*s*. 9*d*. or at the rate of 18*l*. 4*s*. 1*d*. per institution (or a very near approximation in the average number of the treasury allowance) and 2815*l*. 10*s*. 6*d*., or 2*l*. 12*s*. 10*d*. per head from the Committee of the Privy Council on Education, making a total amount of 22,349*l*. 18*s*. 8*d*. or 20*l*. 16*s*. per head per annum. There is a great disparity in the amounts received from the sources referred to. The lowest amount received from the Treasury is 4*l*. 7*s*. 3*d*., ranging to 28*l*. 4*s*. 1*d*. per head per annum.

There are those who refer disparagingly to the operations of voluntary benevolence, because it has not been enabled to afford entire support to the preventive institutions under review. Without entering upon the general question as to what voluntary effort should do, or what may be considered as not coming within the scope of its operations, it might as well be expected that voluntary effort should supply the means to provide for the police of the country, or for the sustentation of our gaols. Reformatories are places of detention for youthful criminals; but their regime and discipline are better adapted than those of our gaols to accomplish the true intent of salutary punitive treament, viz.—the reclamation of the offender; and happily, under the reformatory system, there is a combination of influences peculiarly suited to the attainment of that object, which our common gaol system does not and cannot supply.

There is another subject under the head of "receipts," to which reference may be made. It is the quota contributed by parents of inmates of Reformatories, which appear under two classifications—voluntary and compulsory.

PARENTS AND FRIENDS.

	£	s.	d.
Red Hill, Reigate	£173	0	0
Home in the East	84	9	6
Hampshire	39	2	0
Kingswood	11	2	4
North Eastern	1	13	6
Red Lodge	18	1	9
	£327	9	1

PARENTS BY COMPULSORY PAYMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Red Lodge, per H. M., Inspector of Reformatories	£44	7	0
Akbar Ship School, per magistrates' order	35	2	6
	£79	9	6

Or a total of 406*l*. 18*s*. 7*d*., being, upon the entire number 1075, an average ratio of 7*s*. 7*d*. per head per annum, or less than 2*d*. per week.

The enforcement of parental obligations to support their own offspring is one of the most important elements in carrying out the reformatory system; and it is to be regretted that the pecuniary results of that enforcement, as shown above, are so excessively diminutive. There are profligate and abandoned parents (as may not be unfrequently seen by the police reports in the public prints), that appear to claim a right to send their neglected children to reformatory institutions; and it will well become the executive boards of

* This amount does not fairly indicate the average amount of subscriptions and donations. The two previous years they were as follows:—1855, £659 2*s*. 9*d*. 1856, annual subscriptions and donations, less expenses of public dinner, &c. £1585 19*s*. 5*d*. The report for 1857 refers to the very liberal donations of £1000 per William Gladstone, Esq., the respected treasurer of the institution, for the erection of another house for 40 inmates, upon the Mettray family principle.

Digitized by Google

managers of Reformatories to aid in every possible way the rigid enforcement of the following clause, in the 17 & 18 Vict. cap. 87, sec. 2, which runs as follows:—

"In every case in which any juvenile offender shall be detained in a Reformatory School under the said Act, the parent or step-parent, if of sufficient ability, shall be liable to contribute to his support and maintenance a sum not exceeding five shillings a week; and it shall be lawful in England and Wales for any two justices of the peace, upon the complaint of any person authorized by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of State, to take proceedings in that behalf, to summon the parent or step-parent, as the case may be, and examine into his or her ability, and (if, on consideration of all the circumstances of the case, they think fit) to make an order upon him or her for such weekly payment, not exceeding five shillings per week, as they shall think reasonable, during the whole or any part of the detention of such juvenile offender in such Reformatory School, such payment to be made at such times as by such order may be directed, to the person so authorized to take proceedings as aforesaid; or to such person as the Secretary of State may from time to time appoint to receive the same; and by him to be accounted for and paid as the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may direct."

In the return made to the House of Commons, there is shown the amounts compulsorily received by weekly payments from the parents of Reformatory inmates, by Mr. Turner, the Reformatory inspector, and previously by Mr. Morgan, of Birmingham:—

Number of parents against whom authority has been taken for proceeding, from 31st March, 1857, ending 31st March, 1858 605

Number of such parents under contribution the 31st March, 1858 292

Amount of contributions received during the twelve months ending 31st March... £629 12 8

Of the 605 persons against whom proceedings were authorized, 16 resided in London, 106 in Manchester, 47 in Birmingham, 24 in Leeds, 15 in Newcastle, 14 in Hull, and the remainder in Sheffield, Bolton, Huddersfield, Ashton, Stalybridge, Coventry, Bedford, Norwich, Bristol, Falmouth, &c.; in all 53 places.

The amount received is £629 12*s.* 8*d.*, at the rate of 5*d.* per week per head.

It is not so much the large amount (although profligate parents should not be spared) obtainable from the parents, as its being extensively known amongst the dissolute class that they are not with impunity to cast their children upon the public without being liable for their support—that either to pay or go to prison is before them. This, determinedly carried out, may have a deterring influence.

The items of expenditure under the various classifications shown in the statements given will not fail to receive attention. A discreet economy should pervade all institutions such as those under notice; but no specific rule can be laid down. There are general charges which are more or less incidental to locality and circumstance; but in the "maintenance" economy much depends upon the governor or matron of the institution as to a due regard to economise, both as to the purchase and consumption of the articles for maintenance. In the expenditure, "provisions" form a prominent feature, and under this head there will also be a considerable diversity in the amounts; but as some institutions board portions (or it may be the whole) of their officers and staffs, thus lessening in amount the salaries and wages' ratios, and proportionably increasing the "provisions'" expenses, it is therefore deemed more fair to take under a distinct head these twofold classes of expenditure, showing at the same time the relative ratios of each kind of expenditure of each respective institution:—

SALARIES, WAGES, AND PROVISIONS.

NAMES.	No. of Boys	Salaries and Wages.			Per Head, for the Year.			Provisions.			Per Head, for the Year.			Totals, for Salaries, Wages, and Provisions.			Per Head, for the Year.
		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Glasgow Reformatory ..	382	799	15	0	2	7	7	2169	14	4	5	5	11	2265	4	4	7	7	6
Red Lodge, Bristol (Girls)	56	155	16	6	2	15	7	312	10	6	5	11	7	468	7	0	8	7	2
Hampshire, Bristol	35	236	6	0	6	7	7	193	13	6	5	10	6	429	19	6	11	18	1
Hardwicke, Gloucester..	35	107	0	0	3	1	3	318	19	2	9	1	11	425	9	2	12	3	0
Kingswood, Bristol	47	285	1	0	6	1	4	379	9	5	8	1	4	665	10	5	14	2	8
Home in the East, London	47	408	17	11	8	14	0	320	16	8	6	16	6	729	14	7	15	10	6
North-Eastern, Newcastle-on-Tyne	64	441	17	5	6	17	11	578	17	1	9	0	9	1020	5	3	15	18	8
Red Hill, Reigate	277	1187	5	0	4	5	0	3342	9	2	12	1	3	4529	14	2	16	6	3
Akbar Frigate, Liverpool	95	711	18	2	7	9	10	899	12	3	9	9	4	1611	10	5	16	19	2
Castle Howard, near York	35	261	15	4	7	9	7	342	3	5	9	15	6	503	18	9	17	5	0

The preceding table, it will be perceived, ranges, for salaries and wages and provisions, from 7*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* to 17*l.* 5*s.* per head per inmate: the Glasgow Reformatory, an old-established one (1838), with its large number of 382; and the Castle Howard Reformatory, of recent establishment (1855), with only 35 inmates.

PROFIT FOR LABOUR.

A brief notice only need be taken of this item. The following are the results as drawn from the respective reports; and as there is somewhat of perplexity in defining with distinctness the labour profit of the field and the workshop, the following must be considered about as near an approximation as can be gathered from the statements furnished. The reports of succeeding years, it is hoped, will furnish these labour results with more clearness. The following are the amounts for the year of the respective institutions:—

Kingswood, 7*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*; Castle Howard, 10*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.*; Hampshire, 13*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*; Red Lodge, 30*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*; Home in the East, 54*l.* 16*s.* 7*d.*; Hardwicke, 55*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*; North Eastern, 56*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.*; Akbar Ship, Liverpool, 95*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*; Red Hill, 274*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.*; Glasgow Reformatory, 616*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

The following gives pro rata "profit from labour" results per head for the year:—

	Boys.	Per head for the year. £	s.	d.		Boys.	Per head for the year. £	s.	d.
Kingswood	47	0	2	11	Red Hill	277	0	18	9
Castle Howard	35	0	6	6	Akbar Ship	95	1	0	2
Hampshire	35	0	7	10	Home in the East	47	1	3	5
Red Lodge	56	0	11	0	Hardwicke	35	1	11	5
North Eastern	64	0	17	9	Glasgow	382	1	12	3

Some reformatories might be referred to showing a loss in the labour result. All the above, are on the credit side of the accounts in their respective degrees.

Industrial labour is a branch of reformatory economy, to be encouraged and promoted as much as possible; but it is not easy to determine the class of employment most likely to be useful to the reformatory détenu, or profitable to the institution. It should also be borne in mind the ages and peculiar class of children brought under the influence of reformatory discipline. In the Red Hill report, for 1858, is shown the ages of young persons admitted for 1857, and illustrates the class to be wrought upon:—

1	4	22	29	40	34	4
8	8 to 10	11 to 12	12 to 13	13 to 14	14 to 15	over 15

There is not only their morally degraded state, but also, with many, their physical condition has to be regarded. From the ages indicated, will it not appear that there must be combined in the Reformatory Institutions the moral training of the school, as well as the employment of the workshop and the farm? A régime truly calculated to promote the best intention of the promoters of the reformatory system in the reclamation of the youthful transgressor, and to fit him for obtaining by honest industry his own support, either in this country or in some distant region.

In reviewing the operations of the few Reformatory Institutions to which some attention has been directed, there is much to encourage; but there is a very material element in connection with their operations that must not be overlooked. It is the great importance of retaining in connection with such institutions the voluntary supervising agency, the value of which cannot be too highly appreciated. It is the vital influence which permeates throughout all the organizations and arrangements of Reformatory managements to a degree so salutary and advantageous. Withdraw the warm-hearted earnest zeal of the devoted voluntary friends from the supervision of our reformatories, and they would become mere places of detention, but little better than gaols for the youthful delinquent, instead of what they are pre-eminently proving to be—houses of reform—a blessing to their inmates—and an extended benefit to the community.

NEW LIGHTHOUSE AT THE SMALLS.—The seventeenth course of masonry of the new lighthouse at the Smalls, off Milford Haven, is now nearly completed, and will be the last of the work at the rocks for this season, the weather being henceforward too precarious to attempt another course until the spring. It is now visible from Solva, having attained a height of 35 feet.

A REMORSEFUL THIEF.—Late on Monday, Oct. 12, or early on Tuesday morning following, a couple of ducks, the property of Mrs. Saville, were stolen from her garden, in Beckett Square. On Wednesday morning a letter, enclosing 5*s.* in postage-stamps, was received through the post. The following is a verbatim copy of the letter:—"Oct. 5, 1858. i send you 5 sillins wich i hope will sattisfy you wich i will never do so no more i am verey sory i took your dux and i can not rest in my bed for thinkin about them.—Yours turly, BIL SIKES." The signature has suggested the possibility that the whole affair is a practical joke.—Sheffield Argus.

CITY OF LONDON HOSPITAL FOR DISEASES OF THE CHEST, VICTORIA PARK.—The quarterly meeting of the board of managers of this institution was held on Wednesday, Oct. 13. The medical report showed that the number of in-patients relieved during the present year had been 215, and the out-patients had amounted to 5517, being an increase of 532 over the corresponding period of last year; and the cases under treatment during the last quarter had averaged 933 each week. From the financial report it appeared that the balance in hand only amounted to 51*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.*, and there were accounts for current expenditure now due amounting to about 700*l.*, showing a deficiency of about 650*l.*

Digitized by Google

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

The second annual congress of this Association was opened on Monday, October 11th, at St. George's Hall, Liverpool. The object is to aid the development of social science, and to guide the public mind to the best practical means of promoting the amendment of the law, the advancement of education, the prevention and repression of crime, the reformation of criminals, the adoption of sanatory regulations, and the diffusion of sound principles on all questions of social economy.

The demand for tickets far exceeded that of last year, and at mid-day upwards of 3000 had been issued, nearly one-half of which were taken for lady associates. The number of papers submitted to the several sections exceeded 150, being an excess of 40 as compared with the Birmingham list of last year.

A letter from M. de Metz, director of the Mettray Institution, expressed gratitude at being named a foreign corresponding member, and regret that the duties of a lately-founded Reformatory institution of a special character prevented his attendance in Liverpool.

Miss Florence Nightingale was to have attended the congress, but was prevented by ill health. She, however, forwarded a paper.

Lady Russell and family arrived in Liverpool on the 9th, and were met at the Lime-street station by Mr. William Brown, M.P. Lord John Russell did not arrive until half-past nine o'clock. The noble lord sojourned at Richmond Hill, the residence of Mr. Brown, where Lord Brougham was also a guest.

The following noblemen and gentlemen attended the congress:—Lord Brougham, the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Earl of Carlisle, the Bishop of Chester, Lord Sandon, Viscount Ebrington, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, Mr. W. F. Cowper, M.P., Mr. Garnett, M.P., Mr. Akroyd, M.P., Sir John Pakington, Sir James Stephens, Mr. S. Whitbread, M.P., Mr. Bernard, M.P., Mr. J. P. Gassiot, Mr. Horace Mann, Mr. F. A. Smith, jun., the Right Hon. C. B. Adderley, Archdeacon Allen, and Mr. T. H. Bastard, &c., &c.

At half-past seven o'clock the general meeting of members and associates was held in St. George's Hall. The body and galleries of the spacious and magnificent chamber were filled in every part, and it was estimated that 3500 persons were present. The members of the council and the presidents of the several sections occupied seats on the platform. Lord John Russell was introduced to the meeting by the council, and was enthusiastically received. The noble lord, on taking the chair, delivered his "inaugural address," which occupied nearly a page of the daily papers of Tuesday. After discussing, in all their details, the questions of statute consolidation, education, public health, &c., Lord John Russell concluded as follows:—

A few words before I have done on the general objects of our Association. Our first meeting took place under the presidency of Lord Brougham, who unites in a singular degree the largest views of political and social science with the most laborious practical attention to all its details. While he can survey the whole field of knowledge with the quick and pervading glance of a master, he can work at the task before him with the patient industry of an apprentice. I wish that we may be able to imitate this spirit, if not attain this ability. We are not like some philosophers of the last century, enamoured of an age of reason which will never come to pass. Nor do we share in the dreams of the philanthropists, who ten years ago imagined that if property and capital and competition were put down by authority, the human race might sit down in happiness and contentment. Our task is more humble, but as we conceive more in accordance with the decrees of our Divine Creator. To mankind is allotted labour as its portion, and perpetual inheritance. If any think that he has nothing to do but to eat, drink, and be merry, in that very night as fearful a doom may fall upon him as it did upon the tyrant of old. If any suppose, like the masters of the Roman empire, that the sword has done its work, and that nothing remains for them but luxurious enjoyment, that very luxury may revenge the conquered world. If any imagine that to them belongs dominion, and that they may indulge in contempt of the unlettered and ill-fed multitude, that very multitude may overwhelm them in bloody and merciless retribution. It is for us to work as truly as the man who forges the iron bar, or the woman who works at the factory loom. It is for us to endeavour to improve the laws by which the community is governed. It is for us to show how education may be extended and diffused. It is for us to examine and record what has been done for the reformation and punishment of offenders. It is for us to confirm and animate the efforts which are being made to sustain the public health, and thereby preserve for this country her eminence as the home of a vigorous and independent race. It is for us to investigate the conditions of the great problems of political economy which may often admit of exceptions, but never of refutations. In so doing we shall but consult the welfare of the present and future generations; in so doing we shall follow the path traced out for us by Almighty benevolence and Almighty wisdom.

Wednesday's papers gave us an equally long address by Lord Brougham, devoted principally to comments on the progress of the cheap press since the days of the "Penny Magazine." The proceedings were diversified by

A VISIT TO THE AKBAR REFORMATORY SHIP, which lies moored in the river opposite the Rock Ferry. The party were conveyed in two steamers; one of them the Jackal pilot boat, belonging to the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, was appropriated to the most distinguished of the company, and the rest found ample accommodation in one of the river ferry-boats, which was chartered specially for the purpose. Amongst those on board the Jackal were the Earl of Carlisle, Lord John Russell, Lady John Russell and daughters, Sir John Pakington (in honour of whom the Admiralty flag was run up at the fore), Messrs. Adderley, W. Brown, Cowper, and Bernard, M.P.'s, &c. The Akbar is a two-decker, which was some time ago given to the corporation of Liverpool as a marine Reformatory, and on board of her are 150 boys, ranging between the ages of ten and sixteen, who have been convicted before the magistrates of theft, and who, being considered reclaimable and eligible in other respects, are, after a short term of imprisonment, sent to this Reformatory, where they are taught by efficient masters, all the duties of seamanship, and when thoroughly qualified are drafted off, voluntarily, to actual service, either in Her Majesty's navy or the mercantile marine. Although these boys are allowed an unusual amount of liberty under the circumstances, being permitted to go on shore, and trusted in other ways, the confidence reposed in them is very rarely abused. They almost invariably return to their river home uncontaminated by association with their former companions in crime, while instances of the return of these boys to their former criminal courses are all but unknown. When the steamers neared the Akbar the boys manned the yards of the ship, and afterwards went through all the usual evolutions of binding sails, lowering boats, and other ordinary ship duties, in which they exhibited considerable efficiency.

The Boys' Home Reformatory Institution, Bridge House, Wandsworth, has been certified by the Secretary of State as fit to be a Reformatory School, under the provisions of the statute 17th and 18th of Victoria, chap. 86.

ST. BOTOLPH, ALDERSGATE.—GOOD NEWS.

The minister, churchwardens, and overseers, of the parish of St. Botolph, have received the welcome intelligence that the late Mr. Harry Osborne Cureton, who died on the 23rd of August last, has bequeathed to them the sum of 2000*l.* in 3*l.* per cent. Consols. The following extract from Mr. Cureton's will, will explain the object of his gift:—

I give to the Ministers, Churchwardens, and Overseers, of the parish of St. Botolph, Aldersgate, in the city of London, for the time being, the sum of 2000*l.* 3 per cent. Consols, to be placed in the Government stock or stocks; and it is my will that the interest shall be applied to the purchase of coals every winter, to be given to poor housekeepers, and also to lodgers, but in each case they must have lived for two years in the parish at the least before they apply for the same, and they must be of sober and good habits. Is is, however, my wish that out of the interest the Minister shall have the sum of 40*s.* for his trouble in making it known in the Church, two or three Sundays before the coals are delivered, so that proper persons may apply, and that the Churchwardens and the Overseers for the time being shall have the sum of 5*l.* out of the said interest for their trouble, in seeing to the proper distribution of this my gift.

RAGGED SCHOOL TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The members and friends of this Association spent a most happy evening in the Field-lane Ragged School, on Tuesday, Oct. 19. A great number of the paid teachers of the various metropolitan ragged schools have formed themselves into an association for the purposes of mutual improvement; and a series of lectures have been delivered in connection with that movement.

After partaking of tea and coffee, Joseph Payne, Esq., assistant-judge for the county of Middlesex, whose constant and zealous exertions to promote this movement are so well-known, delivered a lecture upon music, which was very effectively illustrated by a choir of male and female singers connected with ragged schools. The lecture was divided into two parts. In the first Mr. Payne traced the origin and growth, and described the peculiar notation and character of Egyptian, Hebrew, Greek, and Roman music, and described the instruments used. Towards the close the various improvements effected in notation, counterpoint, and harmony, by modern improvements and the greater variety of instruments, were explained and illustrated; and Mr. Payne amused his audience by the almost inconceivable number of changes in bell-ringing which could be produced by bells ranging from five to twelve in number. The second part of the lecture was devoted to a history of music in connection with religion, the commencement of which he traced to the triumphal song of Miriam; and in reviewing its progress and development, brought to the illustration of the subject an ample store of antiquarian knowledge, quaint gossip, and amusing anecdote. The lecture, which was followed throughout by a running chorus of cheers and laughter, was loudly applauded at the conclusion, and a cordial vote of thanks was awarded to Mr. Payne for his invaluable services on that and many former occasions. Among those present, we observed Messrs. Locke, Mountstephen, Ferry, Gent, and other advocates of the cause.

A People's Park in Liverpool.—A movement has taken place for the establishment of a park for Liverpool, on a plot of land known as Parliament Fields; one gentleman in Liverpool, a large employer, having offered the sum of 1000*l.* for this object, on condition that twenty other gentlemen will put their names down for the like amount. The property in question belongs to the Earl of Sefton.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

Meliora; a Quarterly Review of Social Science, in its Ethical, Economical, Political, and Ameliorative Aspects. No. III. Oct., 1858. Partridge and Co.

THE third number, for October, keeps up the former promise of usefulness. It is not to be expected that, on subjects admitting a diversity of opinion, we should be prepared to subscribe all its propositions with our approval; we may, however, conscientiously say, that whatever argument is advanced, is done with a perspicuity and fairness, which entitle the work to attention, and which, moreover, carry with them considerable weight.

In the article headed "Life in Arcadia," the writer touches in a brief yet masterly manner, on the bearing of what may be termed the increasing concentration of landed proprietorship, on the moral and physical condition of the labourer; alluding, of course, to such subjects as the labourers' dwellings, the value of the labourer's garden as a school of industry, the wages of labourers, the evils of payment in kind, and last but not least, the all-important subject of the kind of education required for the labouring classes, and the want of proper places of recreation and exercise, to counteract the increasing evil influence of the beer-shop, cider-shop, &c., as the only present playgrounds of the labourer. We quite agree with him in thinking that there would be policy in endeavouring to re-establish some of those healthful, mirthful, innocent games, which once graced our village greens.

We shall be glad to hear more of the writer's views on the subject, the education of the labouring classes. He acknowledges that teaching by rote is but lost labour;—and that the art of the teacher mostly consists in mental discipline, and he adds an opinion, in which we quite coincide: "It would be well if our rural schools bore a closer relation to the farm than at present exists." Education and work, theory and practice, should go hand in hand. The great difficulty is the application of this correct principle to the actual business of education,—it is that which, we suspect, forms the main stumbling-block of the question, for we are much mistaken, if the religious difficulty would not cease in a great measure to agitate men's minds as it now does, were the training imparted in our rural schools of a really practical character. It is not that the religious element would sink in its intrinsic importance in their eyes,—it would still, as it ever must, form the one foundation of proper education;—but its comparative importance, as a subject of dissension, would very much decrease. People quarrel about the religious part of the present national education because their attention is specially drawn to it, as at present the only real part of education about which they do care; but were the training imparted such as to fit their sons for the practical business of life—the school executive would receive from the poorer classes credit for more common sense than they are disposed to acknowledge in them at present, and this would result in a corresponding trust to their good sense in the matter of religion. This truth is fairly presumable, from the fact that in commercial schools, where the education is adapted to the special requirements of the class to be trained; in which head knowledge forms an essential element; we rarely hear of quarrels on the score of religion; not that the commercial parents have one iota less regard for religion as the sole groundwork of good education than the poorer classes; but the education, as a whole, satisfies them, and is considered as a real boon to their sons, as fitting them for the station they are to occupy; whereas, the education of the poorer class, labourers especially, omits the essential element to fit them for the station they are to occupy, viz. industrial training. It should never be forgotten, that all that can be taught to a labourer may be of service to the higher classes, but much that can be taught to the latter may be completely useless to a labourer;—we long to see the day when the nation shall give, as a national education, to all who are in any way destitute of means, a training to adapt them to the station in which they are placed, grounded in that fear and love of God, and in knowledge of his Holy Scriptures, which can alone enable them to do their duty both towards God and man, in that station.

There are six other articles in the present number, each fraught with considerable interest: perhaps the two which charmed our attention most are, the Philosophy of Wages, and the Social Claims and Prospects of Science; in the former the importance of the early payment of wages is strongly urged, the usual day for payment, Saturday, being the worst of all; both for the employer and the employed. On the whole, the present number of "Meliora" is such as will repay very careful perusal, and is calculated to awaken very beneficial thoughts in the heart of every class of readers. It deserves success, and will, we presume, obtain it from an impartial and clear-judging public.

Metropolitan Drainage: "Pro amore Dei—pro rege, lege, grege, focis, et aris." A Letter addressed to the Right Hon. Lord J. Manners, M.P., First Commissioner of Works, &c. By John Hitchman, Esq., Leamington.

WHAT has to be effected in this matter is so completely beyond the teaching of experience, the scale in which it must be conducted is so extensive, that even the most experienced engineers may fail to propose the best plan, while it is quite possible that a comparatively unknown, yet practical, mind may hit upon the idea, as a groundwork, which, when well-worked out, shall best accomplish what is desired. Mr. Hitchman, in the above pamphlet, very ably propounds an original scheme of rendering the line of a canal a conduit to convey sewage, in iron tubes along or under it, so as to render sewage matter available for the improvement of the land. This, to many thoughtful minds, will suggest such advantages over any scheme hitherto proposed; and so likely to become actually profitable, that we are disposed to wonder that it has not received general sanction. Many a joint-stock company has started upon plans and schemes, holding out far less prospect of good return of investment, or ultimate benefit to the community. The letter in question bears date 17th July last, and another in the same pamphlet the 19th—of the results we know nothing. But we venture to say that no one can read the suggestion here made,—having in mind the long delay which has occurred before anything like a sensible scheme has been proposed, and the unquestionable difficulties which are involved in the solution of this great problem, which seem as yet insurmountable by our best engineers—without at once acknowledging that Mr. Hitchman's proposition is one which deserves consideration, for two reasons; first, because it appears, at least, more reasonable and easier of application, than the construction of completely new beds along the Thames or elsewhere; with its attendant expenses of purchasing the land, law expenses, valuation, &c. ad infinitum, or than carrying the sewage down the centre of the Thames, so losing the value of it as a fertilizer;—and, secondly, because it seems to suggest a profitable use of the canals, which must be very materially injured by the progress of railroads, which, while it would add to their revenues, would not apparently interfere with such traffic as they can even yet reserve from their mighty iron rivals. There is also a very material advantage accruing to this scheme, that it will be in principle applicable to almost the whole of the United Kingdom, both as an essential sanitary measure, and also as a source of national wealth and prosperity which can scarcely be estimated. We shall be glad to hear from Mr. Hitchman what progress, if any, his scheme appears to him to be making in the estimation of the public. He should have read a paper on it at the Liverpool gathering of Social Science advocates.

Bodily Exercise. Third of a Series of Plain and Simple Lectures on the Education of Man. By Thomas Hopley, F.S.S. London, Houlston and Wright, Paternoster Row. 1858.

NOT a whit inferior to the first two lectures. Mr. Hopley handles the subject of exercise and recreation in a manner peculiarly his own, striking and forcible. The portion which he dedicates to the causes of ill health among females is worthy of serious consideration; we strongly recommend it to mothers, who frequently inflict injuries upon their young through ignorance, and with the purest intentions. As a sort of appendix to the lecture, Mr. Hopley has concentrated into a very narrow space, a very thrilling collection of wrongs which cry for redress, gathered from various parliamentary and authentic reports, which would otherwise be incredible; which he winds up in these words: "It remains to see how long the thinking, feeling portion of our so-called 'Christian' country will endure the present terrible state of things."

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

To the Editor of The Philanthropist.

SIR,—As an impartial "Philanthropist," you have well maintained your name, for which I sincerely thank you, in bringing under public notice the frightfully excessive and unchristian punishment which has been inflicted on me, through my dismissal, Dec. 12, 1856, for having, as the Chaplain, "offended the superior officers" of the "Defence" Convict Hulk, at Woolwich, and which punishment, now prolonged to close upon 700 agonizing days and nights, it appears is to have no end. Having given the best years of my life to convicts, I had formed no connections beyond the convict employ, and thus now can neither support nor educate my family. I have no prospects upon earth. The Lord alone preserves my reason.

I am glad to see that Col. Jebb, in his letter to you in this month's "PHILANTHROPIST," very fairly allows that my "Statement," which you published in your September number, contains the truth: he contradicts nothing in it.

But he should not have inconsistently written to you farther on, speaking of me thus:—"the impression he conveys is, as you suspect, very far from being correct."

You never, Sir, in your remarks of Sept. 4, used the word "suspect," nor any word akin to it in meaning: your sentiments seemed to be quite contrary. What suspicion of incorrectness did you intimate in these your introductory words?—"We have received the following document from the above-named gentleman, and we beg distinctly to state that we do not hold ourselves answerable for the truth of the assertions made therein." You spoke here only as every impartial Editor would speak. I do not think there is such a man living as a suspicious Editor. Again, in your concluding words:—"We repeat, however, that we cannot answer for its truth, though it is not likely that Mr. Walpole would have printed and circulated it as he has done, had he not good grounds for his assertion." You intimate no suspicion here, Sir, that my statements are incorrect, rather the opposite, and Colonel Jebb himself allows that they are true, being, according to him, whatever their dimensions, "a part of the truth," to which he professes to add what is wanting. But let your readers judge, Sir, whether Colonel Jebb has added to my truth anything of value to throw light on the mysteriousness of this case of mine. He has passed by in silence my grave charges concerning Captain Gambier's secret inquiry at Woolwich, and the secret conference in London, in which Colonel Jebb, Captain O'Brien, and Captain Gambier, decided on my dismissal; in all which proceedings not the slightest chance was offered to me of escaping my doom before it was sealed.

It is a well-known fact that Colonel Jebb bore towards me a private ill feeling of long standing; and it was also in common circulation that there was an Assistant Chaplain to be provided for, who had been disappointed of the chaplaincy of a new Convict Prison, and that to my post that gentleman has been promoted, to upwards of £350 a year.

When Colonel Jebb speaks of "the discord that had prevailed for so long a time," he does not mention that Captain Warren, the Governor, was upheld in affronting and injuring me as he chose. He preferred against me a false charge in writing, that I had seriously neglected my duties on first coming to Woolwich, and which has been made, of course, to count against me, while to this day the Directors of Prisons have made no inquiry into it. By this and other wilful insults and aggressions made upon me, I would ask whether concord could be promoted, though, I solemnly assure you, the breach of becoming intercourse never arose on my side, nor did I show anything by words or demeanour to the offending parties. For the sake of peace, I acted too tame a part, and thus, perhaps, invited the assault which has consigned me and mine to temporal destruction.

When Colonel Jebb speaks of a certain amount of salary paid to me after my dismissal, he cannot take credit to himself for this, for it speaks in my favour; and he can never mean that money can compensate for the dishonour and mental anguish and destruction of character which I have suffered at his hands.

As regards the reference made by Colonel Jebb to Sir George Grey, I now solemnly assure Sir George that he does not, to this day, know the truth, or he never could have sanctioned my dismissal for "offending the superior officers" of the Hulk, an offence of which I was not guilty, into which there has never yet been any inquiry in my presence, and which vague charge I assert to be ridiculously untrue and incapable of proof. The contrary I can satisfactorily prove.

As to the two letters from which Colonel Jebb has given extracts, I wish he had given them in full. On what there is I have no particular observation to offer, except that I remember remarking when I received them, that I could see, with reference to passing events, that they were written with a view to the possibility of future publication.

Private ill feeling not only caused my dismissal, but, it will scarcely be credited, has pursued me since, of which the following is a specimen:—Eight months after my dismissal, when I was about to receive an appointment abroad, I was suddenly cut off from it, the secret source of which I know from proofs in my possession. While, at the same time, every effort was made to induce me and my family to embark for the place above referred to with an entirely free passage. Providence alone frustrated what would have been to us so irrecoverable a step.

Private ill feeling still pursues me to my injury under the calumnies of "violent temper," and "always interfering in matters with which I have no concern." I am said to be "of so violent a temper that none of the convict officers could exist with me." This vague charge is ridiculously untrue and incapable of proof, still one instance at least I know in which it has injured me. Colonel Jebb has uttered with his own lips to many that my "violent temper at Dartmoor kept the prison in confusion." Captain Gambier was Governor of Dartmoor Prison while I was there, and he and hundreds besides know that my voice was never heard there above the common tones of duty, but all know well who it was that did keep the prison in a ring through violence of temper. Captain Gambier sees Colonel Jebb daily, and nothing could have been easier or more Christianlike than to have summarily stopped this calumny, but it appears he did not.

With regard to my "always interfering," &c., I can give a fair sample of what has been called by this name. There was a convict, J—— E——, who was about to receive a ticket-of-leave, but two years before the usual time of it being due to him. On observing in the books, connected with his name, "Known to the police of S—— for twelve years as a bully to prostitutes," I thought such a character must have been overlooked by the authorities in London, and therefore wrote to them, pointing it out as a ground on which they might perhaps defer the man's liberation, he having been in prison, I believe, two years,—but I was answered that, as his ticket-of-leave was already issued by the Home Office, it could not be interfered with. I have known tickets-of-leave stopped the minute before a prisoner was about to leave the prison. J—— E—— went to his liberty, and before long rejoined his old companions, male and female, and, after being concerned in several ingenious and extensive burglaries, was taken, tried at C—— Assizes, and received a fresh heavy sentence. This I read in the newspapers, and have since received accounts from the mayor of the borough, and the governor of the gaol. Such is a specimen of the "interference," which, conceived in the best intentions, and conducted in the most respectful manner, helped to treasure up against me private prejudices and ill feelings, which caused my ruin. Still, I believe, that in such an instance as the preceding I was but discharging my duty, and in neglecting to do what I did, I should have been culpable. I discovered the other day that this calumny of "always interfering," &c., is current in a certain high quarter, where, under different circumstances, I might look for some substantial patronage.

I have to complain that, without my permission, Colonel Jebb has taken the liberty to recommend my family to public charity, in the conclusion of his letter to you, thus adding insult to injury. He speaks of their "misfortunes" as "undeserved," and I must say that no one knows better than Colonel Jebb that they are undeserved. There lived a man once, his name was Zaccheus, and of him we read, St. Luke xix. 8: "Zaccheus stood, and said unto the Lord; Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." This was a plain honest man, who acted up to what he professed. I have made no appeal myself to public charity, nor do I intend to make it; but I do ask all my Christian friends for their best prayers on our behalf, and their aid and co-operation in getting my case so brought forward into public, that I may obtain from the Home Secretary a fair, free, full, and public investigation into my wrongs. Very heavy damages are due to me for the mode of my dismissal, illegal, because brought about by a secret conspiracy, and for the injuries my character has received, so as to prevent me supporting and educating my large family.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

J. K. WALPOLE,
Late Chaplain in Her Majesty's Convict Service.

Plumstead, Kent, October 25, 1858.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

London, October 22, 1858.

SIR,—I have only this day seen the reply of Colonel Jebb to the statement of the Rev. J. K. Walpole, which you published last month. As a third party, knowing all the particulars which led to the dismissal of Mr. Walpole, and which Colonel Jebb from reasons most potent shrinks from publishing, I humbly request that you will allow me to make public, through your columns, what are the causes that led to the cruel dismissal of the Rev. J. K. Walpole. I shall found my statement upon my personal knowledge and upon documents now to be seen at the office of Colonel Jebb, and at the Home Office in Whitehall.

First, then, the Rev. J. K. Walpole complained to Colonel Jebb that he was compelled by him to fulfil all the duties of a Chaplain in a Convict Prison, while the style and salary of only an Assistant Chaplain was given him. Frequent and rather important correspondence passed between the two on this point, and Colonel Jebb, to silence the rev. gentleman on the troublesome point, hinted at his dismissal some years before it took place. Will Colonel Jebb send you that correspondence?

Second. The Rev. J. K. Walpole made disclosures before a Commission of Inquiry held in the Stirling Castle Convict Hulk in 1857, which commission was ordered by Sir G. Grey—those disclosures reflected very severely upon the management of Colonel Jebb, and brought home to him the responsibility of having allowed one of Her Majesty's Prisons to get into a most frightful state of anarchy and demoralization so late as the year 1856. Will Colonel Jebb publish those disclosures?

Digitized by Google

Third. The Rev. J. K. Walpole wrote to Sir G. Grey in 1856, to beg him to spare the life of Convict Thomas Jones, who murdered Surgeon Hope in the "Stirling Castle" Hulk, in February, 1856,—the rev. gentleman's plea for mercy was, that the state of the hulk had led Jones to murder Mr. Hope, and, therefore, his life he thought, ought to be spared. Mr. Walpole had a reply to that application from Colonel Jebb, attempting to throw upon Mr. Walpole the responsibility for the state of the hulk in which he was Chaplain. Mr. Walpole then replied, and by several letters showed Sir G. Grey that the fearful state of that hulk could not be charged upon him, but that the blame rested with Colonel Jebb and the Directors of Convict Prisons. Will Colonel Jebb send you that correspondence?

Fourth. The Rev. J. K. Walpole complained repeatedly of indignities which the office of the hulk heaped upon him—which indignities the writer has often witnessed with indignation and shame. The rev. gentleman proved the truths of his complaints, as the Directors themselves ordered the amendment of several. Will Colonel Jebb publish the correspondence that took place between him and the dismissed one on this point?

Fifth. The Rev. J. K. Walpole pointed out to Sir G. Grey how kindly Colonel Jebb had treated certain officers then and now in the Convict Service who had been proved guilty of extreme irregularities and most immoral crimes, in contrast to the treatment he himself had received. Will Colonel Jebb permit the public to see who was right in that correspondence?

Lastly. The Rev. J. K. Walpole was coolly asked by Colonel Jebb to acquiesce in a prospective dismissal, he having committed no crime, nor having been called upon to answer any charge. The rev. gentleman, as a man and a gentleman, refused to be a party to his own official death. Then came a fearful Drunken Riot in the prison in which Mr. Walpole was sleeping: he reported the same, and for so doing he was—as Colonel Jebb's own letter does not deny—discharged without a hearing. Such, briefly, are the facts which led to Mr. Walpole's most unjust, most cruel dismissal; but, Sir, while he was discharged, those whom Sir G. Grey dismissed upon the report of his Commissioner in 1856, Colonel Jebb has retained in the Convict Service, although proved guilty of repeated acts of drunkenness—some of embezzling their accounts, and one of deeds not falling short of manslaughter. I call upon Colonel Jebb to deny the above facts—he has all the records in his own hands, and the writer can supply him with names and dates if his memory fails him.

The fact is, Mr. Walpole was dismissed for daring to complain of the treatment he received from Colonel Jebb, and he is now suffering from the tyranny of a military despotism, which has reigned, and now reigns, in all our Convict Prisons. I am prepared to give the public other important facts connected with this most painful business, but await, before doing so, a further reply from Colonel Jebb. In conclusion, I will only say, that Sir G. Grey told a clergyman that Colonel Jebb urged him to the dismissal of Mr. Walpole, and Colonel Jebb told the same clergyman that Sir G. Grey forced him to the act!

I send you my card: and remain,

ONE WHO KNOWS THE TRUTH.

MEETING OF MIDDLESEX MAGISTRATES.

A MEETING of the magistracy of Middlesex was held on Thursday, October 14, 1858, at Clerkenwell—Mr. Pownall in the chair, to dispose of business relating to the county. There was a numerous body of justices present.

On the recommendation of the Committee of Accounts and General Purposes, the Court made an order upon the county treasurer for the payment of bills, salaries, and demands for the quarter, to the amount of 10,146*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.*

Mr. KEMSHEAD said it was very satisfactory that the Court had not voted so small a sum for a quarter for some time past.

An ordinary county rate of ½*d.* in the pound, and a lunatic asylum rate of ¼*d.* were ordered.

Mortgages upon the county rate for 40,000*l.* were executed, 20,000*l.* for Hanwell, 10,000*l.* for Colney-Hatch, and 10,000*l.* for the Industrial School (as previously voted). The money was lent by the Economic Assurance Society at 4 per cent. The last loan was 50,000*l.* at 4½ per cent., but half of that sum having been invested in Exchequer-bills, when the state of our money market was less favourable than at present, a considerable saving had been effected in favour of the county. The prison reports were very favourable. There had been a gradual decrease in the number of prisoners in Cold-bath-fields, so much so that the committee asked the Court to refer back to them the plans for the extension of the prison, and to carry out which 46,000*l.* had been voted by the Court, which was agreed to. There were in that prison 1284, in Westminster Bridewell 919 (males under seventeen years of age, 259, females, 660), and in the House of Detention 240, giving a total of 2443 persons under commitment in this county. During the year 8527 persons had been sent to the House of Detention, which was 688 less than in the preceding year, and the total number of commitments entered in the books, including remands, was 10,477. The number of persons who visited prisoners during the year was 26,408. On the motion of Mr. Kemshead, it was referred to a select committee to consider in what respect Mr. Charles Wright, clerk to the committees, &c., could be relieved of some portion of the duties he was required to perform at present, which he said were more than could be expected of one person, but all of which Mr. Wright had hitherto carried out greatly to the benefit of the county, but to the detriment of his own health. By a majority of 19 to 7, it was resolved that a permanent second court was necessary, and the consideration of the plans for the alteration of the session house was adjourned. A report was brought up from the committee appointed to consider the proposition of the Metropolitan Railway Company to tunnel under the House of Correction, Cold-bath-fields. After consulting eminent engineers, the committee recommended the company to alter their line so as to avoid the prison altogether; and the company had determined to do so, and to apply in the next session of parliament for further powers, in which they hoped to have the aid of the justices.

PADDINGTON RAGGED SCHOOLS.—On Thursday, October 21st, a public lecture in aid of the Church-place Ragged Schools, Paddington Green, took place at Lapworth's spacious carpet and floor-cloth factory, which had been kindly granted for the purpose, in the presence of the poor children and nearly 1000 spectators. The lecture was delivered by the Rev. W. G. Lewis, on the "Pilgrim's Progress," and was designated as "An Evening with John Bunyan." The various phases through which the pilgrim had to pass were illustrated with dissolving views, illuminated by oxy-hydrogen lime light, which elicited the marked attention of the poor little "ragged" children in whose behalf the entertainment was provided.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION for the PROMOTION of SOCIAL SCIENCE.

President.
The Right Hon. Lord JOHN RUSSELL.

Presidents of Departments.
I. Jurisprudence and Amendment of the Law.—The LORD CHANCELLOR of IRELAND.
II. Education.—The Right Hon. W. F. COWPER, M.P.
III. Punishment and Reformation.—The Right Hon. The EARL of CARLISLE, K.G.
IV. Public Health.—The Right Hon. The EARL of SHAFTESBURY.
V. Social Economy.—The Right Hon. Sir JAMES STEPHEN, K.C.B.

THE Association is established to aid the development of Social Science, and to guide the public mind to the best practical means of promoting the amendment of the law, the advancement of education, the prevention and repression of crime, the reformation of criminals, the adoption of sanitary regulations, and the diffusion of sound principles on all questions of social economy The Association aims to bring together the various societies and individuals who are engaged or interested in furthering these objects, and, without trenching upon independent exertions, seeks to elicit, by discussion, the real elements of truth, to clear up doubts, to harmonise discordant opinions, and to afford a common ground for the interchange of trustworthy information on the great social problems of the day.

SUBSCRIPTION AND MEMBERSHIP.

Any person becomes a Member of the Association by subscribing One Guinea annually, or Ten Guineas as a life payment. Every Member is entitled (without further payment) to attend all the Meetings of the Association, and to receive a copy of its Transactions.

The first Volume of Transactions, containing a report of the Birmingham Meeting, is now published by Messrs. PARKER and SONS, 445, West Strand, London.

All communications on the business of the Association to be addressed to the GENERAL SECRETARY, 3, Waterloo Place, Pall Mall, S.W.

CLERK or SECRETARY.—The services of a Gentleman (member of the Church of England) are required in one of the leading METROPOLITAN REFORMATORIES. His duties will be to act as Secretary and General Superintendent, and to receive orders for work. The most satisfactory testimonials will be required as to integrity, urbanity, and general knowledge of letter-writing and book-keeping. Salary about £150 per annum. Address, B., 237, Euston Road, N.W.

TO THE BENEVOLENT.—A Married Lady (the orphan daughter of a Clergyman) in very destitute circumstances, and now entirely dependent on charity for her support, seeks the aid of the benevolent to ASSIST her in obtaining a Light Business to keep herself and two young children from absolute want. The highest references can be given on application to the Rev. J. VALE MUMMERY, Warren Cottage, Dalston, N.E., and at 19, Paternoster Row, E.C.; or to the Editor of the "Philanthropist," care of Mr. Tweedie, 337, Strand, by either of whom any contributions will be thankfully received.

GLANVILLE'S HYDROSULPHATE of IRON MIXTURE, a certain and expeditious cure for Cholera, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, and Bowel Complaints, Spasms, Pains, Sickness, Cramp in the Limbs or Stomach, Weakness of the Chest, Stomach, and Bowels, General Debility, and Nervousness Hundreds of testimonials of its wonderful effects; recommended by eminent medical men.

Manufactured only by the Proprietor, 3, Clifton Terrace, West Brompton, London. Sold by all Chemists and Druggists. Price 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.

CROGGON'S PATENT ASPHALTE ROOFING FELT

Has been extensively used and pronounced efficient, and particularly applicable to warm climates. It is a non-conductor. It is portable, being packed in rolls, and not liable to damage by carriage. It effects a saving of half the timber usually required. It can be easily applied by any unpractised person. From its lightness, weighing only 42 lbs. to the square of 100 feet, the cost of carriage is small. Under slates, &c., in Church and other roofs, the Felt has been extensively used to regulate the temperature.

Inodorous Felt, for damp walls, and for damp floors under carpets and floor cloths; also for Lining Iron Houses, to equalize the temperature.

Price One Penny per Square Foot.

PATENT FELTED SHEATHING for Covering Ships' Bottoms, &c.

DRY HAIR FELT, for Deadening Sound, and Covering Steam Boilers, Pipes, &c., preventing the radiation of heat, thereby saving twenty-five per cent. of fuel.

Samples, testimonials, and full instructions, on application to CROGGON and Co., Dowgate Hill, London, E.C., and 2, Goree Piazza, Liverpool.

Digitized by Google

TRACTS PUBLISHED BY THE

LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION
(LONDON and BRIGHTON).

THE EVILS OF WET NURSING. A Warning to Mothers. 2d.
WHY DO NOT WOMEN SWIM? A Voice from Many Waters. 2d.

CHEAPER TRACTS FOR THE POOR.

HOW TO MANAGE A BABY. 1s. per Dozen.
THE HEALTH OF MOTHERS. 1s. per Dozen.
HOW TO FEED A BABY WITH THE BOTTLE. 6d. per Dozen.

GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, London. W. SIMPSON, Brighton.

Just Published, price 2d.,

THE EVILS OF WET-NURSING.
A WARNING TO MOTHERS.

Prepared under the direction of the Committee of the Ladies' National Association for the Diffusion of Sanitary Knowledge.

London: GROOMBRIDGE and SONS.
Brighton: W. SIMPSON.

No. III. (October), price 1s.,

MELIORA. CONTENTS:—I. Life in Arcadia. II. Recent Travels in Norway. III. The Philosophy of Wages. IV. Social Claims and Aspects of Science. V. Genius and Prospects of the Negro. VI. History of the Struggle in Maine. VII. Caste.

Loadon: PARTRIDGE and Co., Paternoster Row.

NICOLL'S NEW REGISTERED PALETOT has all those advantages which secured such general popularity to Messrs. Nicoll's original Paletot; that is to say, it avoids giving to the wearer an outré appearance, so that professional men, and all others, can use it during morning and afternoon in or out of doors. Secondly, there is an absence of unnecessary seams, well known to secure a more graceful outline, as well as to effect a great saving in wear; the latter advantage is considerably enhanced by the application of a peculiar and neatly-stitched binding, the mode of effecting which is patented. Great exertions are being made to supply Messrs. Nicoll's agents throughout the country and the colonies with an assortment of this new garment simultaneously with the display in London, but it is necessary to inform the public that all Messrs. Nicoll's manufactures may be distinguished by a trade mark, consisting of a silk label attached to each specimen; to copy this is fraud, and may be thus detected; if the garment is dark-coloured, the label has a black ground, with the firm's name and address woven by the Jacquard loom in gold-coloured silk; if the garment is light-coloured, the label has a pale drab ground, and red silk letters. Each Paletot is marked in plain figures, at a fixed moderate price, and is of the best materials. In London, the NEW REGISTERED PALETOT can alone be had of H. J. and D. NICOLL, 114, 116, 118, 120, REGENT STREET, and 22, CORNHILL.

A NEW DEPARTMENT FOR YOUTH, &c.

H. J. and D. NICOLL recommend for an outside Coat the Havelock; and for ordinary use the Cape Suit, such being well adapted for Young Gentlemen, as exhibiting considerable economy, with general excellence. Gentlemen at Eton, Harrow, Winchester, the Military and Naval Schools, waited on by appointment. A great variety of materials adapted for the Kilted or Highland Costume, as worn by the Royal Princes, may be seen at
WARWICK HOUSE, 142 and 144, REGENT STREET.

FOR LADIES.

NICOLL'S PATENT HIGHLAND CLOAK is a combination of utility, elegance, and comfort. No Lady having seen or used such in travelling, for morning wear or for covering full dress, would willingly be without one. It somewhat resembles the old Spanish Roquelaire, and has an elastic Capucine Hood. It is not cumbersome or heavy, and measures from twelve to sixteen yards round the outer edge, falling in graceful folds from the shoulders; but by a mechanical contrivance (such being a part of the Patent), the wearer can instantly form semi-sleeves, and thus leave the arms at liberty: at the same time the Cloak can be made as quickly to resume its original shape. The materials chiefly used are the soft neutral-coloured Showerproof Woollen Cloths manufactured by this firm. The price will be Two Guineas and a Half for each Cloak; but with the Mécanique and a lined Hood a few shillings more are charged. This department is attended to by Cutters, who prepare Mantles of all kinds, with Velvet, Fur, or Cloth Jackets, either for in or out-door use. These at all times—like this Firm's Riding Habit—are in good taste and fit well. Female attendants may also be seen for Pantalons de Dames à Cheval, partially composed of Chamois. As no measure is required, the Patent Highland Cloak can be sent at once to any part of the Country, and is thus well adapted for a gift.

H. J. and D. NICOLL, Warwick House, 142 and 144, REGENT-STREET, London.

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL ARTICLE EVER KNOWN in the GROWTH and IMPROVEMENT of the HUMAN HAIR, is proved beyond question by its successful results for more than half a century past, and when other specifics have failed.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL

It prevents hair from falling off or turning grey, strengthens weak hair, cleanses it from scurf and dandriff, and makes it beautifully soft, pliable, and glossy.

In the growth of the

BEARD, WHISKERS, AND MUSTACHIOS,

it is unfailing in its stimulative operation. For Children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of

A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR.

Its invaluable properties have obtained the patronage of Royalty, the Nobility, and the Aristocracy throughout Europe; while its introduction into the Nursery of Royalty, and the high esteem in which it is universally held, with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

WHITE AND SOUND TEETH

Are indispensable to PERSONAL ATTRACTION, and to health and longevity by the proper mastication of food.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO,
OR PEARL DENTIFRICE,

Compounded of Oriental ingredients, is of inestimable value in Improving and Beautifying the Teeth, Strengthening the Gums, and in rendering the Breath Sweet and Pure. It eradicates tartar from the Teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, and polishes and preserves the enamel, to which it imparts a Pearl-like Whiteness. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Sold by A. ROWLAND AND SONS,
20, Hatton Garden, London,

And by Chemists and Perfumers.

 BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!

THE PLAYGROUND and GENERAL RECREATION SOCIETY.

PATRONESSES.

The Duchess (D.) of Norfolk.
The Lady Noel Byron.
The Hon. Mrs. Ashley.

PATRONS.

The Marquis of Westminster.
The Earl of Shaftesbury.
The Lord Bishop of London.
The Lord Ebury.
The Lord Henry Cholmondeley.
The Hon. W. Ashley.
The Rev. Canon Dale.

COMMITTEE.

The Hon. Mrs. Charles Boothby.
John Cassell, Esq.
J. T. Clover, Esq.
The Rev. T. B. Coulson, M.A.
The Right Hon. W. F. Cowper, M.P.
Charles Dickens, Esq.
The Earl of Durham.
Mrs. De Morgan.
The Visct. Ebrington, M.P.
W. Ewart, Esq., M.P.
T. H. Farrer, Esq.
The Right Hon. H. Fitzroy, M.P.
The Rev. Edward Garbett, M.A.
Russell Gurney, Esq. (Recorder)
H. Harwood Harwood, Esq.
The Rev. H. J. Hatch, M.A.
Mrs. Howitt.
Herbert Ingram, Esq., M.P.
The Rev. Bennett Johns, M.A.
Bence Jones, Esq., M.D.
The Rev. D. Laing, M.A., F.R.S.
The Rev. Chas. Mackenzie, M.A.
The Rev. John Oliver, M.A.
The Lady Laura Palmer.
Miss Parkes.
J. H. Pepper, Esq.
C. Ratcliff, Esq.
M. Roth, Esq., M.D.
W. A. Rose, Esq., Ald.
Captain Smith.
The Earl Stanhope.
R. A. Slaney, Esq., M.P.
The Rev. Edwd. Spooner, M.A.
W. Jesse Street, Esq.
Miss Twining.

AUDITORS.

Henry A. Bathurst, Esq.
Samuel Tomkins, Esq. (Messrs. Willis, Percival, & Co.)

HONORARY PHYSICIAN.

Dr. Bence Jones.

HONORARY SURGEON.

J. T. Clover, Esq.

HONORARY SOLICITOR.

W. Jesse Street, Esq.

BANKERS.

Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co., Birchin Lane, Cornhill.

SECRETARY.

Edward West, Esq., 17, Bull and Mouth Street, St. Martin's le Grand.

The streets of London, and of other large towns throughout the Kingdom, are said to furnish victims for every variety of temptation; and the experience of daily life will evidence how great are the bodily evils which arise to the children of our poor, from the necessity which now exists for their playing in crowded thoroughfares, and play they must—somewhere.

The want of Public Playgrounds has long been felt: this movement arose with a London Clergyman, whose dense parish induced him to seek, in June, 1857, for the formation of an Association to effect so desirable an object.

The idea was most favourably received by many influential parties; and a meeting was called in the month of August following, at which the Playground Society was established.

The Committee feel assured, that for the sake of society at large, as well as for that of the thousands of children whose interests, both bodily and spiritual, are concerned, the Public will come forward to aid them liberally in their effort to achieve a great public good. Even in the most dense neighbourhoods it is possible to make arrangements for the present, with the hope that changes of site and transfers of property may afford better opportunities in the future. One school in St. Martin's-in-the-Fields recently afforded an example of a method of meeting the want, by forming the playground in an upper story; and although the experiment did not succeed there, the idea may be applied usefully elsewhere.

Refuges and Reformatories are the Christian care of our time. This society designs prevention, and trusts to obviate, in many cases, the necessity for reform.

Contributions for local objects will be gladly accepted, under strict limitations to the neighbourhood in their expenditure; and promises of support from the nobility and gentry with reference to the cities and towns contiguous to their estates will be gratefully acknowledged by the Committee, who will be prepared to assist and guide local efforts, and who earnestly invite grants of land, which can by legally conveyed for the purpose.

The Society consists of Subscribing and Honorary Members, who are entitled to vote upon all questions at the Annual General Meetings; the former are qualified by an annual subscription of One Guinea, or a life donation of Ten Guineas; the latter comprise donors of sites, or any parties who have gratuitously assisted to convey sites. The subscriptions become due on the 1st of January in each year.

Bequests, whether in money, lands, or houses, entitle executors to be Life Members, in the proportion of one Life Member for each £50 (the names being taken in the order in which they are named in the will); and if the value of the bequest exceeds £1000, each executor is entitled to the same privilege for each thousand pounds beyond the first.

Donations and Annual Subscriptions of any amount will be thankfully received by the Bankers, Messrs. Williams, Deacon and Co., Birchin Lane, Cornhill: and by Edward West, Esq., Secretary, 17, Bull and Mouth Street, St. Martin's Le Grand;—who will with pleasure send for any contribution, upon receiving a notification to that effect.

PROPOSED EXTENSION.—LONDON FEMALE PREVENTIVE and REFORMATORY INSTITUTION, 200, Euston Road, N.W.—President, Rev. Canon DALE, 31, Gordon Square, W.C.—97 poor young women have been admitted to the benefits of this Institution since September, 1857. Many distressing cases have been refused for want of greater accommodation and funds. The Committee have resolved to fit up another house for the reception of cases, if possible, before the coming winter. An industrial department will be attached, to make it partly self-supporting. 40 donations of £5 each will enable the Committee to proceed with this extension immediately, and provide a way of escape from vice to virtue to very many poor outcasts. Donations in aid of this special object will be thankfully received by the bankers, Messrs. Bosanquet and Co., 73, Lombard Street, E.C.; the Hon. Sec., Thos. Raikes, Esq., 14, Lower Berkeley Street, Portman Square, W.; or by the Secretary, Mr. Edward W. Thomas, at the Institution.

TO THE NOBILITY, GENTRY, & GARDENERS.

A. SHANKS and SON have made arrangements with Mr. THOMSON, of Dalkeith Park, to manufacture his powerful and economical BOILER, the simplest and the best in existence for the purpose of Heating by Hot Water.

A. SHANKS and SON continue to furnish Plans and Estimates for Heating Conservatories, Vineries, Halls, &c., by means of Hot Water, all complete. They have experienced workmen for this particular kind of work; and, in every case, guarantee a satisfactory working apparatus at a very moderate cost. A new plan is introduced of supplying the atmosphere of Vineries and Forcing Houses with moisture, in place of the ordinary Trough Pipe, to which it is vastly superior. The supply of moisture, which has a fine and healthy effect on the Vines and Plants, may be regulated to any extent.

A. SHANKS and SON, Arbroath, Forfarshire.

SHIP OAK LOGS for WINTER FIRES. Superior SHIP OAK TIMBER for Firewood, cut into suitable lengths, for grates of any size, is sold at the old-established Ship Breaker's Yard, Bridge Wharf, Battersea, at 20s. per cart load, delivered within four miles. It makes a warm, agreeable, and lasting fire, and having been patronised for many years, can with confidence be recommended. Address W. C. TARVER, Bridge Wharf, Battersea, S.W. Cash on delivery.

Digitized by Google

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.—Issue from the Depot until the present time Forty-two Millions of pages.

NEW TRACTS.

No.		Pages
262.	Job Brown's Two Glasses	4
263.	What is Port Wine?	4
264.	The Results of One Year's Drinking. By Joseph Livesey	4
265.	How liberally to Support a Church without Cost	2
266.	The British Workman's Home, what it too often is, and what it ought to be. By Rev. Stopford Ram	16
267.	The Public House. Is there not a spell on it?	8
268.	Five Shillings and Costs. By Hugh Stowell Brown.
269.	The Sabbath School Robbed. By J. P. Parker	2
270.	The Reclaimed Bricklayer; or, "Touch not the Drink." By J. P. Parker	4
271.	The Malt Liquor Delusion. By J. Livesey	2
272.	The Experience of a Hard-working "Navvie" from the Crimea. By J. P. Parker	4
273.	The Influence of Class upon Class in Supporting the Intemperance of our Country. By Samuel Bowley	12
274.	The Gold Piece. A Sketch from Life	4
275.	Sad Realities. Where does the Guilt lie? Who will remedy the Evil?	8
276.	An Awful Warning	2

All sold in Sixpenny Packets. Sent post free by remittance sent to RICHARD DYKES ALEXANDER, Ipswich. Fifty packets for a Guinea sent by train to London.

W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

The whole Series of Tracts and Juvenile Books post free for Nine Shillings.

THE GREAT SOCIAL EVIL.—Eighty out of every hundred poor young women on the streets belong to the class of domestic servants! We find this by reference to the reports of institutions for the reclamation of the "fallen."

One great cause of this is found to be the want of respectable lodgings, where, at a low charge, female servants out of place can resort. For instance, "A young woman from the country, who has been in London only for a short period, is thrown out of her place. She knows no one but the charwoman, of whom she can inquire for a lodging. She is recommended to some low place, where she is brought under the evil influence of other young women. She remains there until her money is spent. It is then suggested that she can pledge her clothes at the corner shop. The money goes to pay the landlady; and not being in a position now to seek a situation, the next idea insidiously proposed is to 'go out at night.' She is led to accompany some one, and becomes an outcast from society."

The "SERVANTS' HOME SOCIETY" has long been aware of this fact, but did not believe, until now, that female servants formed so large a proportion of "unfortunate" females. Twenty-two years ago, it proposed to form twenty "Homes" in the Metropolis, but was not able to establish more than two, which have been in operation many years. Another has recently been added to the number, and the Committee will not cease their exertions until additional Institutions of this kind have been established in London.

These Homes have afforded a safe lodging to more than 6,000 servants, and have allowed about 37,000, who have not been able to pay the fee, to register free of expense.

The whole expenses do not amount to more than £500, and about £300 of this is met by the rents and fees paid by servants and employers. For the three Homes only £200 is required in voluntary contributions. The Homes are in full operation; and by a recent liberal contribution from a clergyman they are happily free from debt. The Committee are now, therefore, desirous of establishing another "Home." A lady has just forwarded a donation of £35 towards this object, and when the remaining sum to complete the requisite amount shall have been given, together with a promise of £60 yearly for the rent, the Committee will take steps to open another "Home."

"Prevention is better than cure," and is there any cheaper means of prevention than this?

Earnestly do the Committee APPEAL to all who are interested in the repression of the "Great Social Evil." They appeal to employers of female servants—to heads of families—to fathers and mothers—to all who can pity the friendless and the orphan; for, alas, the majority of those who come under their care are orphans!

Any benevolent person wishing to do good amongst young women, at little permanent cost, should spend about £100 in furniture for the fittings of a Servants' Home, and pay the rent of a house. By this means hundreds of young persons might be saved from ruin. They might be brought, when out of place—and there are 10,000 servants in London always out of place, or changing places—under healthy religious influence, and stimulated, in an endless variety of ways, to act uprightly in the station in which God has placed them. What a check would be given to the almost universal practice of dishonesty, if every servant dreaded the affectionate reproval of a motherly superintendent at a Servants' Home!

By these considerations, and many others which suggest themselves to all right-thinking persons, the Committee appeal for assistance.

DANIEL COOPER, Hon. Secretary.
110, Hatton Garden, E.C.

LONDON REFORMATORY for ADULT MALE CRIMINALS,
9, Great Smith Street, Westminster.
Colonel HENRY STACE, Governor.

The Committee gratefully acknowledge the undermentioned sums, which have been received since the kind promise of Mr. R. Hanbury, M.P., to give £50, if others would make it up to £500.

Amount already advertised	£403	0	0
SINCE RECEIVED:—
Commander Bowerbank, R.N.	5	5	0
H. S., per Herries and Co.	5	0	0
Y. T.	10	0	0
The Misses F. & A., per Herries & Co.	5	0	0
Mrs. G. F.	20	0	0
E. H. B.	20	0	0
Robert B. Kaye, Esq.	5	0	0
Mrs. Robertson, per Earl of Shaftesbury	5	0	0
P. L. Hussey, Esq.	5	0	0
T. E. S., per Herries and Co.	5	0	0
Sums under £5	12	1	0
Robert Hanbury, Esq., M.P.	50	0	0

JOSEPH C. WOOD, Treasurer.
JOHN M. CLABON, Hon. Sec.

Donations and Subscriptions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer or the Governor, at the Institution.

Cast-off Clothes much wanted for the Inmates.

Extract from a Letter from a former Inmate of the London Reformatory, who was sent out as an emigrant, and is now steward on board a large ship:—

"I have been on board one month, and like her very well. My wages are £6 a month. We are loading for ———. Dear Sir,—I send my best regards to you and all the gentlemen of the Committee. I shall ever be thankful for what they have done for me, because had they not took care of me, and got me away from the country, why, I might have been a convict by this time, instead of what I am; and, Sir, I hope that the Institution will stand and be well supported, to do for others what it has done for me, for nobody knows what a useful Institution it is but those who make good use of it. I should, if God spares me, like to return to my native country. I shall not forget to call, and I hope to give you a trifle towards the support of such a place."

SPECIAL.—At a village named Morsang, about twenty-two miles from Paris, is a very interesting Institution for Orphan Children, not of French, but of English parentage. It was established some years ago by Mr. Argent, who, by private appeals to benevolent friends, has been able to procure funds for its subsistence. He has been in the actual labour of the Institution almost singlehanded.

Now, however, it is in great need of help. Several friends have feared that unless assistance be rendered, it will have to be given up; and they have determined to make the fact known at their own expense, by inserting this advertisement.

There are eighteen children in the Home. They are most interesting little girls—the orphans of clerks and others—a little above the position of servants, who have died on the Continent. They have been rescued from imminent peril. They were in danger of falling into the hands of the Jesuits, but were happily provided for.

Their cases are briefly as follows:—

F. and L. (sisters), aged 8 and 15. Both parents dead.
F. and M. (sisters), aged 9 and 12. Both parents dead.
A. and M. (sisters), aged 6 and 10. Both parents dead.
E., C., and A. (sisters), aged 7, 8, and 10. Fatherless.
M., W., and E. (sisters), aged 10, 12, and 15. Fatherless.
E. P., aged 9. Both parents dead.
E. S., aged 6. Both parents dead.
E. B., aged 12. Motherless.
E. R., aged 12. Fatherless.
L. F., aged 14. Both parents dead.
T. H., aged 7. Both parents dead.

To prevent the Institution being closed, and those dear children from being cast upon the world in a Popish land, a friend has proposed a gift of £20, conditionally, that an equal sum be given by four other persons.

May God dispose some benevolent hearts to come and assist in this contribution! Smaller sums will be gratefully received.

Please address Mrs. Buckmaster, 5, Bedford Square, London; Mrs. C. Streatfield, Cherts Edge, Westerham, Kent; or Mr. Daniel Cooper, 11, Poultry, London, E.C., Bankers to the Home; Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, and Co., 54, Lombard Street, London, E.C.; or the Editor of the Philanthropist, 337, Strand.

TRAINING INSTITUTION FOR MASTERS.

WANTED A YOUNG MAN between 25 and 30 years of age, to take the instruction of lads training as Masters and Assistants for Reformatory Industrial and Ragged Schools. Testimonials required; a liberal salary will be given. For further information, apply in the first place by letter addressed, G. J. Bowyer, Esq., Honorary Governor, North West London Prevention and Reformatory Institution, 237, Euston Road, near Gower Street.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted.

AT WESTERTON'S LIBRARY,
120,000 VOLUMES IN CIRCULATION.
 Books sent once a week to Wandsworth, Wimbledon, and its vicinity.
Single Subscription, One Guinea per Annum.
WESTERTON'S LIBRARY, HYDE-PARK-CORNER.

SOCIETY FOR IRISH CHURCH MISSION TO THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.

CHAIRMAN OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
J. C. Colquhoun, Esq.

CHAIRMAN OF FINANCE COMMITTEE.
Major-General Alexander.

TREASURERS.
Hon. Arthur Kinnaird.
John Labouchere, Esq.

HON. SECRETARIES.
The Rev. Alex. R. C. Dallas, M.A., for Missions.
The Hon. and Rev. F. N. Clements, M.A., Northern Division of England.
The Rev. Sir C. R. Lighton, Bart., M.A., for West Midland Division.
The Rev. Joshua Greaves, M.A., East Midland Division.
The Rev. J. B. Owen, M.A., for Southern Division.

The Committee of this Society desire to urge the importance of its object upon the earnest consideration of the Christian public; and to ask whether the Protestants of Great Britain are willing that, for lack of means, the Society's operations should be yet further curtailed, and the great Reformation movement thereby restrained.

The bold, yet kindly, aggressive system on which the Society has ever acted, has proved, by the blessing of God, most powerful in its effects. The results are not to be estimated merely by the numbers of conversions, the increase of Protestant congregations, where such previously existed, and the formation of them in many localities where, ten years ago, none were to be found; but also in the almost universal spirit of inquiry and demand for the Bible among Roman Catholics in Ireland, their altered feelings towards their priests, on the one hand, and the Missionary agents and Protestants generally, on the other; and the frequent and loud complaints of the priests that the people are neglecting their "duties"—forsaking the Confessional, and disregarding the claims of their Church.

The organized opposition against the Mission work, by the powers of Rome, in the use, not of arguments, but of violence and abuse, is an unmistakable evidence of the effect of the Mission operations. The priests are compelled to admit that their system is in danger, and to use every effort to counteract the influence they dread.

Surely, then, Protestants will not now withhold their help. By their liberality the early operations of this Society were rapidly extended. Experience and practice have rendered the agency much more efficient, and the opportunities for their labours far exceed the power of the Society to supply labourers, while the prosperity of the work is evident to all who have the opportunity of seeing its results. To this many valuable testimonies have been borne by independent witnesses, who have communicated their impressions to the Committee, some of which have been published in the Society's Occasional Papers.

The Committee therefore most earnestly solicit a continuance and increase of pecuniary support. They have had some months of trying anxiety; and enter upon another month with an empty treasury. 2200*l.* is required for the liabilities of the month of October; and they cannot but fear the probable necessity of reducing their Missions at the close of the year, unless a liberal response be given to their appeal, not merely in the way of present relief, but of a permanent increase of the Society's income.

The Committee employ at present 35 ordained missionaries, 166 lay-agents and scripture readers, 64 schoolmasters, 65 schoolmistresses, and 240 Irish teachers, besides paying for 21 agents, employed by Local Committees for Missions in parts of Ireland where no direct Mission is established.

GEORGE MAXWELL, Secretary

OFFICE OF THE SOCIETY.
11, Buckingham Street, Adelphi, London (W.C.)

BANKERS.
Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co., Pall Mall East.
Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co., Birchin Lane.

Money-Orders in favour of the Society's funds are requested to be made payable to Charles A. Johnson, Assistant Secretary, 11, Buckingham Street, Adelphi, to be drawn on "The Charing Cross" Money-Order Office.

Printed for the Proprietor by Messrs. WOODFALL and KINDER, Angel Court, Skinner Street, London; and Sold by W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.
November 1, 1858.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE.

December 1, 1858.

Index.

Reformatory Schools v. Prisons 265
The Working Classes at the Liverpool Conference 269
The North-West London Preventive and Reformatory Institution 272
The Mayor of Birmingham 273
County Rate for the New City Lunatic Asylum 273
Editorial Articles:
Profitable Employment of Prisoners 274
Results of Emigration 275
Reformatory Governors' Association 275
Government Aid to Refuges and Industrial Schools 276
School of Practical Art 276
Prison Discipline 278
Home for Females Discharged from Prison 279
Reformatories and Factories 280
Worthy of All Support 280
Correspondence:
The Proposed Coal Miners' Benefit Society 282
Fallen Characters and Unions 282
The New Cut Ragged School 283
Escape of Boys from a Reformatory 283

REFORMATORY SCHOOLS v. PRISONS.

By Thomas Hales, Head Master, King Edward VI. School, St. George's Road, Southwark.

The following paper was read, by special desire, to the Reformatory Governors' Association, at their monthly meeting in November. It was originally compiled for, and read, with some alterations, to the Metropolitan Church Schoolmasters' Association. The writer wishes to acknowledge, with thanks, the valuable assistance he obtained from the Rev. J. Kingsmill's work on "Prisons and Prisoners," Miss Carpenter's work on "Reformatory Schools," and a few publications issued by the Reformatory and Refuge Union. T. H.

I shall offer no apology, my friends, for thrusting myself before you this evening. I am in your hands, and upon your heads be the infliction. This paper was written for an Association whose members were comparatively ignorant of the subject; but here I am to read the same paper, with slight alterations, to those who know all about it! To make it more palatable to my present hearers, I have expunged many passages which I thought would be uninteresting to you, and inserted a few that may possibly be new to you. Whether you are all well acquainted with this subject or not, this much I will say,—that the wisest of us may learn something even from the meanest of our own scholars, and on matters, too, in which we are supposed to be well conversant.

Be assured, it is not mock modesty that compels me to assert that, practically, I know little or nothing of the Reformatory movement. It is true I am a Reformer in the proper acceptation of the term; but in a certain sense, I prefer the term "Radical," because it is our duty to go to the root of the matter, and eradicate as well as prevent. This subject requires an abler pen than mine to inform you what has been done in this matter; and a more experienced pencil than I can boast of, to picture out to you the vast field of crime and sin which is to be found in this great city.

Since I entered upon my present charge, I have endeavoured to make myself acquainted with the various Reformatory Institutions which are situated in and around the metropolis. With this view I became an (illegal) member of your Association; and, in "wise" conjunction with the Father of the true "Blues of the East," visited your several establishments, and the homes of many who are not here to-night. This enabled us to inspect your Institutions under the friendly guidance of the host himself; and by this means we gained a clearer insight into their working and management, than if we went as unknown, and therefore distinguished, visitors, when only the cream and essence of the place would be presented to our view. There are two sides to every picture, and it has always been my plan, in visiting schools of this kind, to hunt up the dark side, to endeavour to lay bare the pith and the core; for I know full well that we as mortals are only too prone to present the fair side to view, when challenged for results. Besides, the good works and the happy efforts of our many philanthropists are encircled with a halo of light, which, if not manifest to our mortal gaze, are not lost sight of by One whose eyes are ever open to the doings of the good Samaritan.

In giving a short account of the rise and progress of this movement, as it is called, I have necessarily consulted every work on which I could lay my hands, that bore at all on this subject. I have also visited, as many of you are aware, the principal reformatories and prisons in London, as well as many in the provinces, and by this means have gained a certain knowledge—though a limited one—of the practical working of these Institutions. The only difficulty I cannot surmount, is my inability to do justice to this all-important subject.

In looking back to the days when our fathers were little children, we see a picture before us which we of the present enlightened age can hardly realize. Criminals were strung up like sheep on the famous Tyburn. Jack Sheppard and Dick Turpin were the heroes of the day; and the more daring the deed, the more exalted would be the criminal in the eyes of a vast majority of the public. Some philanthropists raised the cry, "What shall we do with our criminals?" "Oh! hang them," was the response. And, without more ado, hanged they were. The murderer, the highwayman, the sheep-stealer, the forger, all suffered the same fate. It would not do. Crime was on the increase, and not on the wane. Something must be done to stem the torrent that was rolling along, carrying destruction in its headlong course. Transportation was invented, or rather revived; for the results of the American war were fatal to the establishment of penal settlements in the New World. At this juncture all eyes were turned towards Australia and its great resources, which had just been described by Capt. Cook. Without loss of time government determined to send their convicts to this newly discovered "Eldorado." It was so far from the mother country, they thought, as to render it almost impossible for the prisoners to find their way back again. It was also so rich in woods and forests that they were certain that the office of Commissioner to that department would not be a sinecure. In the year 1787, then, 757 convicts, male and female, were transported to Botany Bay, under an escort of 200 soldiers, commanded by Capt. Phillip, R.N., who was also to assume the Governorship of the new colony. Botany Bay was so called from the fact that its shores had supplied Sir Joseph Bankes, the naturalist who had accompanied Capt. Cook, with many new plants, which added considerably to his already extensive botanical collection. It would be superfluous in me, and tiresome to you, to follow step by step the progress of this newly-made penal colony. Let it be sufficient for my purpose to say that within a few miles of this settlement arose the now far-famed city of Sydney, whose history would fill a ponderous volume, which I am neither able nor willing to attempt. Neither can I do more than merely allude to the iniquities and shocking deeds that were committed by these convicts, almost with impunity. It is true they were flogged, they were chained in gangs, they were confined in noisome dungeons, and finally many, very many, were hanged. I say with impunity; for they thought nothing of these things. It was no punishment to them. It only made them the more hardened, the more determined to resist the "powers that be," and it put revengeful feelings in their breasts against all mankind, their immediate masters in particular; so that when they escaped into the bush—and escape they did by dozens—they became more dreaded and more noxious than the Australian savages themselves.

One specimen here will suffice of the condition, morally and otherwise, of these wretched beings:—A gentleman of the name of Martin writes home and says, "I saw and conversed with ten criminals in their condemned cells, on the eve of their execution. They had never heard the word of God preached since their childhood, some not even then. They had never been to a church or chapel in the colony, or attended a Sabbath service: and they had fled to the bush because their backs had been bared to the bone by repeated scourgings."

A long way to the east of New South Wales is situated a beautiful island, fertile and hilly, and well supplied with streams of good water, abounding in fine fat eels; and up to about the year 1820 was not polluted by the tread of civilised man. Since then, Norfolk Island has come under the distinguished patronage of our government, and, until very recently, a convict establishment existed under their auspices, in the place where now the peaceful Pitcairn Islanders are located. When the convicts made, perforce, this place their island home, this once charming spot was changed into a downright sink of iniquity. Prisoners who had only just escaped hanging were doomed to end their lives in a jail in this place. Criminals of the deepest dye were congregated here in chains under the most revolting circumstances. For ten years after its becoming a penal settlement, no clergyman, with two exceptions, set foot upon the island; consequently they were totally uncared for, as far as their souls were concerned! JudgeBurton, on reporting an official visit to Norfolk Island, says, "One of the prisoners, a man who displayed singular ability, and uncommon calmness and self-possession under circumstances so appalling to ordinary minds, represented it to be 'a hell upon earth!' And such it assuredly was, so far as the torment of that region is made up of the company of evil spirits glorying in evil deeds. 'Let a man's heart,' this prisoner said, 'be what it will when he comes here, his man's heart is taken from him and there is given to him the heart of a beast.' He represented, and others followed him in the same course, that the crimes which had brought them there were not of a kind which should condemn them to such a state—that many of them had been decent men, possessed of means of support, and had wives and families in the world; and these were sentenced to the same place of helplessness and despair with others, whose crimes were of the deepest dye. One of them said, 'Sentence has been passed upon us before, and we thought we should have been executed then. It was no mercy to send us to this place. I do not ask life—I do not want to be spared on condition of remaining here. Life is not worth having on such terms.' Another said, 'I pleaded guilty to the charge against me, because I knew I was guilty, and as the only expiation that I could make for my offence, which, however, I committed only to get clear of this accursed place.' Another said, and his statement was perfectly true, 'What is done, your honour, to make us better? Once a-week we are drawn up in the square, opposite the military barracks, and the soldiers are drawn up in front of us, with loaded muskets and fixed bayonets; and a young officer then comes to the fence, and reads part of the service, and that takes, maybe, about a quarter of an hour, and that is all the religion we see.'"

Digitized by Google

Let us now take one glance at the land where my bright blue orbs had the first peep of day—Tasmania, or as it was then erroneously called, Van Diemen's Land. The inhabitants were first blessed with their penal neighbours in 1803; but it was not till 1814 that the practice of bush-ranging began. You all know that these bushrangers were generally escaped convicts, or fellows who had become outlaws, with their own consent, as well as that of their neighbours. "These ruffians, hardened in wickedness by the demoralising process of the chain-gang and gaol, unchecked, as we have seen, by any influences of religion, were either let loose, or else escaped from their chains, to retaliate upon the peaceable inhabitants of the island in deeds of atrocious violence. Herding together in the bush, they burst every now and then from their secret lurking-places—often caves and dens of the earth, or depths of the primeval forest—and changed in a moment the happy and flourishing homestead of the industrious settler into a scene of rapine and bloody massacre, accompanied oftentimes with deeds of wanton cruelty, or, if women were seized, of indescribable brutality. One of them, named Michael Howe, was for years the terror of the whole island, ranging it in all directions, at the head of fourteen wretches like himself, and taking a diabolical delight in murdering all who came within his grasp."—(Mrs. Willis.) "In the year 1822, two convicts, named Pierce and Greenhill, made off with six others. After about ten days' travelling in the woods, being in want of food, these two agreed to murder one of their comrades and eat him." He was killed with an axe, and the body was consumed by the whole party. The narration is too horrible to proceed with. Suffice it to say, that they dropped off by disease and fatigue, or fell a sacrifice to their companions, until all had disappeared but the monster Pierce. After committing other atrocities, he was at last captured, and, having confessed his many crimes, he was executed.

These fearful and revolting occurrences compelled the colonists to petition the Home Government for a change in the law of transportation. They protested most strongly against the continuation of the system, and these remonstrances were in a great measure successful, the government being induced to make some provision for their convicts at home. Model prisons were erected in various places, and several modes tried, some of which were partially successful; others, entire failures. These model prisons I will not attempt to describe. From what I could gather at a few visits, I should say that, so far as adults are concerned, they are as perfect as you can make them. In the first place, the idea that suggests itself is that surely this place must be deserted. Only a few attendants can be seen, with their bright gilt buttons and bunches of keys glittering in the long and lofty corridors, as they pass from cell to cell. You tread softly yourself, as the sound of your own footstep falls unpleasantly on your ear. The attendant is explaining to you the hidden mysteries of this palace of cleanliness and order; but, instead of paying attention to his animated eloquence, your eyes are riveted upon a figure moving like an automaton along that gallery. This figure is habited in a suit of brown serge—jacket, waistcoat and trousers of the same material—for the sake of variety, I suppose. "There is nothing odd in that," suggests the attendant. "No, that is even enough, with a vengeance," you reply. "But he seems to have a kind of a helmet on his head. Is he not well? Or does he belong to the prison fire brigade?" "Excuse my laughing at you, sir; the man has a mask on. They all wear masks here, for the purpose of," &c. &c., and then your eyes are opened. The mask is lifted from your ignorant brain, and you are told that the prisoners leave this model place without the least chance of recognizing any of their old "pals," or of concocting any further villanous actions. It may be you sigh; but, oh! what a system of espionage and suspicion is carried on to bring this said desideratum about. What anxious moments, what straining at gnats, and swallowing of camels. What—suspicion—gnats—camels! You look pityingly at the wondering warder, and beg to ask him the following questions:—Do you not place an eyelet-hole in each door, that you may at any moment peer upon a luckless delinquent, in the privacy of his cell? Do you not encase your feet in the juice of a tree (Here the warder knits his brows, and wonders what you can mean by making such an elastic joke in such a place), and glide from corridor to corridor, so stealthily, that even the Last of the Mohicans might have learnt a lesson from you! Do you not make your prisoners, boys as well as men, keep at the distance of twelve paces from each other, in order to prevent one unfortunate from informing his neighbouring unfortunate the precise period at which he hopes to enjoy the free breath of Heaven once again? Do you not watch every glance of his eye, every motion of his lips, every nod of his head, every turn of his toes, every tone of his cough? Do you not place watchmen—I beg pardon, warders—in every conspicuous spot in chapel, in a light, airy gallery over their heads, on small tabular platforms in front of them; and do you not send officers through the passages which surround their sentry-box seats in chapel, with india-rubber shoes on, to detect the smallest indication of communication between any of the inmates? Do you not place the governor in a seat which puts to shame the loftiest pulpit in a cathedral, that he may watch the cats, while the cats watch the mice? Above all, do you not discard the voice of melody and harmony, and responding, from your services altogether, that no opportunity may be given to your wicked and never-to-be-trusted charge to exchange a passing thought? All this you do, and more; and is it to be wondered at that you are compared to a child trying with might and main to get into the centre of a maze? He stands on his tiptoes, and with some effort looks beyond the bushes, and sees the goal in the distance. He rushes forward, with half a dozen companions at his heels, as wild and thoughtless, and as eager as himself. They dash along, up one alley, down another. They separate, some taking this path, some that. Away they scamper, panting for breath, and shouting at times "This way! This way!" till at last a crash comes, four running against three, and three knocking down four. Here they roll one over the other, in high glee, and wasting a good deal of valuable perspiration, till they are called to their senses by some one in the secret, shouting out "Follow me!" and they follow him without hesitation, and in two minutes they stand in silent astonishment at the entry of the "poor gipsey's" tent, the goal of their wishes. And what was the secret, sir? Merely always following the right path. And I tell you and your masters that you are not following the right path, by having such a child as that in this place. He is only nine years of age, he tells you, and you watch that poor little innocent—for innocent to a certain extent he still is—as determinedly as you watch the hardened ticket-of-leave man, who is undergoing an odd six months or so, for a mere assault. How comes it, Sir Warder, that that youth of fourteen is now enjoying his sixth sojourn with you? What good did you do him while he was under your fostering care? Did one action of yours, generally speaking, give that boy the feeling that he was morally wrong in his actions, and lead him to live a life of honesty and industry for the time to come? If so, how comes he here for the sixth time? So will he go on, till some fine morning he finds himself a distinguished, but tongue-tied, inhabitant of Pentonville palace—I mean prison. Here his features will be entirely lost to the vulgar gaze of his species, by that same hideous mask which makes a novice believe that at last he has lost sight of "the great globe itself, and all which it inherit." Two visionary holes convince him that he is wrong; he can see, but his manner of countenance cannot be seen. Yours is a place of punishment I admit, and very properly so; otherwise that hardened fellow, who is eyeing us so intently from yonder balcony, would not have his deserts. "You make a slight mistake, sir, in supposing that that prisoner is, or ever was, a hardened fellow. He is B— the banker, who with his two partners, made so much noise in the world three years ago." I hear no more; for, oh! what a train of thought comes across my brain, as I gaze upon that man, who at one time of his life, moved in the first circles of society, and now see what he is! But I came not here to moralise. That can be done at my own fireside at home?

Digitized by Google

I have endeavoured to show you, my friends, that our juvenile criminals were not benefited, as a class, by their penal treatment. On the contrary, they became more hardened as age grew upon them; and finally, in many, too many cases, they expiated their offences on the scaffold. Again, in our model prisons at home what is our experience? Do not our more earnest-minded chaplains evince the greatest desire to prevent a promising boy from being thrown again upon the streets, by doing all in their power to obtain admission for him into some one or other of the Reformatories that are in their immediate neighbourhood? Does not this single fact alone prove to us that those chaplains feel that that boy is not reformed? They are conscious that, should he unfortunately go back into his old haunts, he will most assuredly "come again to grief." What good, then, arises from sending him to prison at all? Much every way. Crime is checked, but not eradicated. The flame is covered up and subdued, but not extinguished; for on its once more being brought into contact with the oxygen which keeps it alive, it revives, and becomes as bright, if not brighter than ever. Let the prison be ever so perfect in its details; let the system be ever so silent and marked; let the separation of the prisoners be carried out to its extreme capability; past experience teaches us, that with regard to the young, the prison plan is a failure. In these, our modern days of rapid improvement in social science and other learned matters, we cannot conceal from ourselves the disagreeable fact, that the word prison or gaol is a bar to many a kindly effort, and many a good deed of the chaplain and others interested in the well-being of souls. Kindliness of manner and good treatment will never root out the feeling that the building they are in is a prison. To many a hardened youngster the feeling is one of total indifference. He cares not what you call it, so long as his term of incarceration passes swiftly. But to a mind that is easily moulded for good or evil, to a lad not wholly given up to bad practices, the idea rankles in his bosom that he is a prisoner, not only in his own eyes, but in the eyes of the whole world.

Past events teach us, then, that severity, as a rule, will never reform the criminal class. We must touch their hearts as well as their bodies. We must not forget that they have souls to be saved, as well as bodies to be punished. In doing this, we must go to the root of the matter, and take the criminal while he is still young. We must bend the twig ere it become too tough for our kindly efforts. We must not content ourselves with merely straightening the crooked branch, but we must use a certain amount of parental watchfulness and force to keep it in its place. We must seek to bring the word of God to bear upon their consciences, looking to the Lord for his Holy Spirit to crown our efforts with success. Nothing has so sweet and constraining an influence on the hearts of the young, as the tale of God's love when brought home by the Holy Spirit. We must wait patiently for results, and these results may not be apparent in our days. One may sow, another may reap; and we should follow the example of the great, but ultimately, unfortunate, Capt. Cook, who used to scatter different kinds of seeds on the several islands he visited, under the hope that at some time or other the inhabitants or shipwrecked mariners might reap the benefit of his forethought. Surely this was casting his bread upon the waters, without the remotest hope of its ever returning to him. But Christians look not for their reward in this world, else would their disappointment be great indeed.

I shall not inflict upon you the pain of listening to the last act of the Legislature on Reformatory Schools. Most of you have it very painfully off by heart, and therefore a repetition of it here would be needless. I shall merely say that, in a pamphlet, published by the Reformatory and Refuge Union, I find the following information:—

		Accommodation.
7	Irish Industrial Schools and Refuges	728
25	Scotch ditto ditto and Reformatories	3428
55	English uncertified Industrial Schools, Refuges, and Reformatories	4032
45	English certified ditto	2623
132		10,811

Walking one summer's day from Cowes to Newport, in the Isle of Wight, I noticed an extensive building on my right, which, I was informed, was Parkhurst Prison. The very place I was anxious to see, thought I; so I went to the lodge, and asked to see the Governor, as I knew there was nothing like going to head-quarters at once. The gates flew open, and after crossing an open space of ground, bounded on three sides by buildings, I was ushered into the presence of Captain Hall, the Governor. I told him who I was, and my great desire to see the Schools. This was granted, and, calling one of the warders, he "gave me in charge," telling him to show me everything worth looking at. This being a Government prison for juveniles, I did not expect to find the boys treated as liberally, and with such confidence, as if it were a Reformatory; but I was not prepared to see the prison plan so exclusively carried out. The building was large and airy; the rooms lofty and commodious; and the officers numerous and attentive, as far as a casual observer could discern. According to the Governor's report to the Committee of the House of Lords, Parkhurst Prison was established for boys between 14 and 18, who have been sentenced to transportation. "Three qualifications are necessary," he says, "to admit a boy into this place: he must be 14 years of age, four feet six inches high, and of a character so depraved, that he would be sentenced by the Court to transportation if Parkhurst Prison did not exist." There are forty solitary cells, and every boy on his arrival is locked up in one of these for four months. I saw some of these penned sheep, and sad, solitary and silent they were, sure enough! I saw no sign of their being subdued; for their countenances indicated a sullen doggedness that seemed to defy all efforts to conciliate them. If their conduct be not satisfactory at the end of this probationary term, they are kept in till it is, and it frequently happens that a boy is obliged to be kept in for 12 months before his spirit is broken. It was hinted to me that many are compelled to be liberated before this is accomplished, otherwise their stay would be stretched out to an indefinite period. Their recreation is an occasional game at leap-frog, under superintendence of course. After leaving their cells, they are placed in a certain school, according to their acquirements, and are also obliged to learn a trade. They take their meals in their cells, and therefore all social enjoyment is denied them during mastication; because, I was reminded, this was a prison, and not a school. There is accommodation for 625, but their numbers rarely come up to that amount; the average being, I believe, about 500. They stay in Parkhurst for two or three years, sometimes longer, and at the end of that time they are supposed to be thoroughly reclaimed, and entirely weaned from the desire to return to their former haunts and habits. When this happy result is supposed to have taken place, they are drafted off to one of the Colonies, and in many places allowed to sink or swim as they can. I understand that Western Australia is the only place where there is a Government Agent to receive and look after these lads. The buildings are, perhaps, models of their kind, and the industrial work showed that the labours of the master tradesmen were not thrown away. The principal trades were shoe-making, tailoring, carpentering and gardening. The boys also washed their own clothes, and it appeared to me that many were quite adepts at the suds. Everything was clean, nothing was out of its place, all was orderly, quiet and subdued;—but one could not help leaving this so-called model place, without a feeling of pity for these poor criminal lads. I have since conversed with young men who have been masters in the school, and they have borne out my impression of the treatment to which these lads are subject. I may sum it up in three words—suspicion, distrust and severity. They show their suspicion by constantly watching the boys, and therefore they are watched in return and deceived: their distrust, by locking each boy up in a cell every night, and treating him in all respects as one who is not to be trusted out of sight for a moment, except under lock and key; their severity, in the manner in which the unfortunate delinquents are brought to a sense of their errors. I understand that every attention is paid by the Chaplains to their spiritual wants. They visit them frequently in their cells; kind, fatherly advice, is at hand when necessary; good and amusing books are plentifully supplied them at stated intervals; wholesome food is served out to them at regular hours. But one thing is wanting, and that is Confidence. Let but the boy see that he is trusted, and not watched, and my experience tells me that in nine cases out of ten he will be ashamed to deceive you. We must not wait till the boy proves his honesty, and watch him in the meantime; or we might soon exhaust our patience. I have known a schoolmaster many a time overcome and manage an almost incorrigible fellow, by taking him into a room by himself, and putting his hand on his shoulder, and saying to him, "My boy, I am sure you did not think of what you were doing when you did this. I know you are not a bad boy at the bottom, Now this must not be done again. Come and have a game at foot-ball," &c.

Digitized by Google

In pleasing contrast to the above Government Model Institution, is the Philanthrophic Farm School, at Red Hill. On my first visit to this healthy spot, some few years ago, I was hospitably received by the Rev. Sydney Turner, who was at that time at the head of the establishment. Here is no frowning janitor reconnoitering you at the barred gate. You see no high insurmountable walls which tell you plainly that the inmates will scamper off and make themselves scarce, when an opportunity offers. No! the guiding rule of the place is confidence. There are no suspicious eyes upon a poor boy in his play-hour, or at his work. No distrustfnl act on the part of the authorities retards the progress of reformation in his heart. In fact, although they are not better, as a class, than the poor caged criminal at Parkhurst, their training is exactly the reverse. The Philanthropic Society was formed in 1788, on the spot where now stands a nunnery and Roman Catholic Schools, in St. George's Road. In the year 1849, the Society removed to their present site, and at this moment there are seven different houses, each containing a family of about forty boys. Imagine a large farm of 230 acres, situated on a gentle slope, with the Dover railway running in the valley beneath. In different spots on this hill-side, one sees small well-built homesteads, surrounded by the necessary adjuncts of a moderate-sized industrial school. These are the several homes of the lads, where they live under the fostering care of their respective masters. Mr. Turner says, "The boys are provided with coarse wholesome food and clothing, and taught to be indifferent to weather, and to work just as the labourers who teach them, a short portion of each day being alloted to direct instruction. Strict moral discipline is enforced, with a constant stimulus to self-control. Thanks to the power of religious influence, to the attractive and subduing force of kindness, to the self-respect, thoughtfulness, and sense of personal responsibility, created (especially in the older lads), by their free position, and the confidence reposed in them, and last, not least, to the interest attaching to the varied and active occupations of agricultural life—the steadiness and industrial exertion of the boys have been greater, the faults and offences committed have been much fewer and of lighter caste, than during any corresponding period of the Society's operations on its former system of sedentary employment and restriction within walls and gates." Such is Mr. Turner's evidence before the House of Lords, and the truth of his remarks is borne out by the testimony of other gentlemen, who have visited and reported upon the institution. I have paid several visits myself to the schools, and the more intimately I become acquainted with their details, the more convinced I am of the fact, that we cannot convert a criminal and depraved boy into a good and useful member of society by the forcible means used in our Government Model Establishments. The main outlet for the Red Hill boys is emigration. An agent is stationed at the colonies where they are sent, and the result of this means of completing the reformation of these lads is most satisfactory. "I have been greatly struck," Mr. Turner goes on to say, "with the amount of obedience and regular attention to our rules and discipline the boys have yielded, especially as to not leaving the boundaries of our school farm. That 250 lads, many of them fresh inmates, or gathered from the class who by habits and early instruction are most full of independent action and license, should be here without a wall or barrier, except the regulation, 'No boy must leave the farm without a pass;' and that very few of them should have been guilty of breaking the regulation, is a remarkable circumstance. The few boys who ran away, are those who in an early period of their stay are unable to endure the restraint. On the whole, experience leads to the belief, that four-fifths of the boys yield to the influence of the school. A number of them are assisted to be free emigrants, and from these, very interesting letters are received, showing their deep sense of the value of the instruction they have had, and grateful affection to those who have given it."

We have often heard, my friends, of nervous jumping at conclusions. Now, I do not see what law of nature is to prevent us following the example of those astute lawyers, who defend indefensible clients, and make, or fancy they make, the gaping audience believe that it is possible—and extremely probable too—that the old woman in the nursery tale did really and actually travel through the breezy atmosphere on a broomstick. Jump up behind then, and hold on tightly, as we carry no inside passengers, and let us take an imaginative flight into Warwickshire. We pause for an instant and gaze upon Kenilworth and Stoneleigh Abbey, made more famous than ever by the late visit of Her most Gracious Majesty the Queen. Midway between Stoneleigh Abbey, the residence of Lord Leigh, and Leamington, is situated the quiet little village of Weston, now brought into notoriety, as containing the site of the Warwickshire Reformatory School. This is most ably superintended by a friend of my own, who very kindly entertained me for some days, allowing me every facility to find out the real motive power of the school, and to inspect minutely every detail. I had permission to go where I liked, to get information as I liked, and to peer into every corner and cupboard, if I thought proper.

I have since heard of the school from others, and my firm conviction is, that if any place is successful, this has been for the short period of its existence. Mr. Shaddock, the Superintendent, conducts his Establishment on christian principles, and in all his dealings with his boys, he never loses sight of the fact that the boy he is correcting or rewarding has an immortal soul. He feels the vast responsibility that is thrown upon him, and never fails to go to the Fountain Head for wisdom, when any difficulty comes across his path. Such an Institution, conducted on such principles, is sure to succeed. It was really encouraging to see great strapping fellows, head and shoulders taller than their master, completely subdued in this school. They all dine together, and by themselves—the masters dining in another room at the same time; and it took me quite by surprise to find that they were to be left alone. Although there was not perfect silence during the meal, still there was good order, and the total absence of that uproar which I have seen in certain large schools, in and near this metropolis, with a large staff of officers too at their command.

The Warwickshire Industrial Schools were opened in 1856, under the benevolent auspices of Lord Leigh, who is the mainstay of the place. They have ninety acres of land, a great portion of which is cultivated by the boys, under proper superintendence. They receive instruction in the schoolroom for two hours daily, and the rest of the time they are occupied in their industrial pursuits. Altogether, my visit to these schools was most satisfactory.

I have not selected this last school as being pre-eminently engaged in the work of reformation. My visits to your own schools, and others in the metropolis, prove to me that the reformatory movement is making slow but sure progress; but they also opened my eyes to the fact, that much more might be done. Indeed I am very much afraid if the Government, in their last Reformatory Act, have not given a considerable check to private benevolence in this quarter. I am not deeply versed in that branch of human learning to which wise men have given the name of politics. Neither do I think that I should earn for myself many laurel wreaths, as Her Majesty's representative at that chaotic and sickly kingdon of Turkey. But I feel that as a little ragged mudlark can cast her eyes on the gaudy state-barge of London's Lord Mayor, as it sails grandly past, and mutter to himself, that after all it's only made of wood and iron ; I feel, I say, quite competent to give my humble opinion as to passing events, let them be clothed in ever such bright and brilliant plumage. My opinion is this—but understand, I am open to conviction—that the Government are committing a grave error, in laying out thousands in the year for the maintenance (which of course is the punishment) of Palace prisons, while at the same time they do little or nothing towards preventing unfortunate beings from going there. They have, in addition, positively refused to aid those Institutions that stretch forth a helping hand to save human beings who are unfortunately over sixteen years of age. Why, men who have studied human physiology, as well as human nature, tell us that sixteen is the most dangerous period of a young person's life. I believe it, and now I have given you my opinion.

Digitized by Google

Once more on the broomstick, and away we speed across the Channel. This time our destination is near Tours in France, at a place called Mettray. So much has been said and written about the "Agricultural and Penitentiary Colony" at this place, that I shall not do more than make a passing note of the schools, and conclude. I shall merely say that it is a French penal school, established by M. de Metz, a man who is well known in every philanthropic circle in the kingdon. They have 550 boys, who are divided into about twelve homes, not isolated as at Red Hill, but connected in a group, with a chapel in the centre, a model of which I wish to introduce to your notice. They began with thirty acres, and now they cultivate upwards of five hundred. This will serve to show you that they are not idle on this point on the Continent, and if any of my friends should wish to know more concerning this admirable institution, I beg to refer them to a pamphlet, published in France, and translated by the Chaplain of Durham Gaol.

Our inmates, being of the semi-criminal or wholly destitute class, require treatment peculiar to themselves. This treatment is not to be acquired from books nor periodicals, though they render good assistance in certain emergencies. Experience is the only school where this knowledge is to be gained ; but those are not always successful who try to form a good manufactured article from (apparently) inferior stuff. No one can realise the amount of patience, perseverance, skill, and knowledge of human nature, required for the reformatory work. Nothing but the grace of God in their hearts can sustain in their daily labours those who have the management of this class of the community. I shall conclude this paper by reading an extract from a pamphlet by the Chaplain to the Wandsworth House of Correction, on this latter subject : "The man or woman who undertakes the management of a Reformatory for criminals—a Refuge for su as are in danger of becoming crimina—or an Industrial School for the children of the poor, the idle, and the dissolute, must bring to the work that tact and temper—that combination of firmness with kindness—that facility of managing wayward dispositions, which no amount of training can convey, apart from actual intercourse with the peculiar class with whom he will have to deal."

THE WORKING CLASSES AT THE LIVERPOOL CONFERENCE.

Not the least gratifying portion of the doings of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science at Liverpool, in October last, was the interest manifested by the working classes in what was going on there. On Friday, October the 15th, various papers had been read on the different sections, including an interesting paper by Miss Carpenter, on "The relation of Ragged and Industrial Schools to the Parliamentary Educational Grant;" one by Captain Crofton, on the proposition "Can intermediate prisons materially aid in solving the difficulties of the Convict question ;" one by Miss Florence Nightingale on "the Construction of Hospitals ;" and an exceedingly interesting discussion took place on the Social Evil, arising out of papers on "Prostitution, its aids and accessories," by Mr. N. Caine, and on "Illegitimacy, its consequences and remedies," by Dr. Acton. But the interest in all these matters was not to end with these discussions. In the evening, a meeting was held in the Amphitheatre, to which the working classes had been specially invited. The Association, it would seem, feeling the necessity of the co-operation of the working classes to insure the success of the greater part of the objects which it has in view, devised this meeting as a means for bringing themselves into communication with the working men of Liverpool on the subject of "Social Science," and for taking their opinion upon those branches of it which relate particularly to their improvement. In order that the gathering should be confined as exclusively as possible to those for whom it was designed, a small sum was charged for admission—6d. to the boxes, and 3d. to the pit and gallery—and the greater part of the tickets were intrusted for distribution to the officers of the different trades unions in the town. So great was the desire to be present, that a day or two before the meeting the tickets were selling readily among the working men themselves at a premium of 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. The large theatre, which is calculated to hold from 3000 to 4000 people, was filled in every part at least an hour before the chair was taken, and from the appearance of the audience it may be fairly stated that the means taken to insure the attendance of the working classes had been perfectly successful ; shirt-sleeves and corduroy-jackets were in the ascendant, and in many cases the men had brought their wives and children with them to listen to the advice of the great "Parliament orators." During the interval which elapsed between the opening of the doors and the commencement of the proceedings very good opportunities were afforded of ascertaining the estimation in which the leading men of Liverpool are held by their humble fellow-townsmen. For instance, Dr. Hugh M'Neile, who was one of the earliest arrivals on the stage which was set apart for the visitors, was received with great applause. On the other hand, the appearance of Major Gregg, the chief constable of the borough, provoked such a storm of disapprobation, that the gallant gentleman was forced to beat a speedy retreat behind the wing. Several of the leading aldermen and town-councillors whose names are identified with efforts for the improvement of the condition of the working classes were loudly cheered. The chief honours, however, were reserved for Lord Brougham and the other distinguished visitors, who made their appearance on the stage at 7 o'clock. Mr. Alderman Holme, the deputy-mayor, took the chair, and after a few prefatory remarks, called on Lord Brougham, who said,—That I should have a peculiar delight in coming once more among you is not to be wondered at ; for it is now, I fear, towards half-a-century—it is six-and-forty years—since my original connexion with Liverpool began, when I was candidate to represent it in Parliament. From my experience as a working man, I have derived that which is my conviction and unalterable opinion with respect to the value of labour, and with respect to the inexpressible value of hard work through life, in all its forms and in all stations ; but I have derived other lessons, of one or two of which I would remind you. Nothing is good in excess—not even hard work. Heaven forbid that I should say one single word in behalf of idleness ; but hard work, without any relaxation, I object to, upon the old principle, that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Hard work should be interrupted by fit and reasonable relaxation ; but that recreation ought to be of a kind which is not merely harmless, innocent, but of itself improving, as it may be. There is relaxation in reading even that which is in itself not meant to teach any science, or any art, or even history, or even biography. There is relaxation of an innocent, and it may be made of an innocent sort, by reading that which merely entertains and amuses. Far better pass your time in such relaxation, to avoid the listless vacuity of unoccupied hours while resting from your work ; far better that than even reading ghost stories, or stories of murder, which do no good whatever, except to harden the feelings. Far, infinitely far, better than to have recourse to other courses which I only name to abominate and abhor—drinking and dissipation. There is another great maxim which I have always inculcated upon my excellent friends of the working classes, to make your labour available by doing one thing at a time, and never beginning to do one thing until you have finished the other. Let me remind you of what was said by one of the greatest statesmen of a former age—one of the De Witts of Holland—a man who could go through such an enormous amount of work as a statesman, a philosopher, and a literary man, that nobody could tell how he found time for it all, as his day was but twenty-four hours like our own, and no more. They asked him how he did it, and his answer was, "I have only two rules—to do one thing at a time, and never to put off until to morrow what I can do to-day." But there is another thing to be very much considered by working men. Your time is your money. It is a common saying of political economy, "Take care of the pence, and the pounds will take care of themselves." So I say, as time is your money, "Take care of the minutes, and the hours will take care of themselves." These are the results of long and intimate acquaintance not only with labour by my own experience, but of labour by my observation of and communication with others; and those results I deemed it my duty to bring before you on the present occasion. We now are in a state of things which excludes the violence of parties, whether in the church or in the state. Let us improve that calm—that blessed calm—by promoting, to the best of our endeavours, to the utmost of our means, in all respects and in all its branches, the great cause of the improvement of the people.

Digitized by Google

Lord J. Russell, who was next called upon by the chairman, was received with loud and prolonged cheers. He said: Among other evils that we have suffered from in this country has been the very bad state of the dwellings of the working-classes. In many respects individual landlords and corporations have been able to do much to remedy that state of things, but it requires the diligence of the working-classes to further and complete that work; and I must say, not intending, as I have said, to flatter the working-classes, that it behoves them—those who are in the receipt of good wages—to make provision sufficient that they may be able to maintain their families in comfort, and to obtain dwellings where they can live decently in peace; for nothing I am sure concerns the welfare of the community more—nothing concerns the health of the community more—nothing concerns the morality of the community more, than that there should be good and wholesome dwellings for all the working-classes of this country. You will find, on a survey of this country, that there is much to be said that may fill us all with admiration. You see a sovereign reigning over a portion of the human race that may be counted at 200,000,000. You see the State here and in India in the enjoyment of 100,000,000*l.* of revenue. But placed opposite to that picture you see crowded dwellings, many people suffering from poverty, others suffering from their own vices; education but partially established; laws obsolete and imperfect, and sometimes ignorantly administered; much to reform and much to improve. It will be your duty, while you have this inheritance—while you are justly proud of this inheritance—to improve all those institutions, to amend the defects which exist in them. And allow me to say here, what I have said elsewhere, that if we are vigilant and careful, that if the richer classes and the working classes, and the whole community, put their shoulders to the wheel, in order to improve our society, I can see no reason to apprehend the decline of this great State. Lord Macaulay has given us the picture of a New Zealander, who is sitting upon a broken arch of London-bridge, and who is looking at the ruins of St. Paul's. Now, I beg to dispute this fancied picture altogether. I don't see why it ever should happen. I think that our citizens of London, if they found an arch of London-bridge out of repair, would be very apt to restore it; and if they found that St. Paul's was not in so good a state as it ought to be, they would be all ready, by funds which would be at their disposal, to restore the beauty and grandeur of that edifice. And so with regard to our political, our social, and our moral institutions. I believe that if we will but be vigilant, if we will but see that, while the imperfections of human nature in the very progress of civilization bring evil after evil upon us, if we take care to have a remedy against each of these evils, if we improve, as we have been doing, the health of the community, the education of the community, the general welfare and improvement of the community, this country, so far from decaying, has greater and brighter times to look to than she ever had before. It may be that those times may not be times of war. We may not have those laurels to gain in the field and on the sea which we have hitherto acquired. It may please God to give us times of peace; but, whether they be times of war or times of peace, I trust that this great nation—consisting as it does of its various classes, but mainly depending upon the basis of the working men of this country — may, with the blessing of God, go on and prosper, and carry to the latest generation the name of free England.

The Earl of Shaftesbury next addressed the meeting. The noble lord said, he would keep to the point for which he was invited to Liverpool, and having had assigned to him the presidency of the section of public health, he would give them the result of some years' experience and the result of some years' observation in that important matter. Sanitary science, as it was called, was related not only to their physical but to their spiritual and moral rights and advantages. Every man could best take care of his own life and his own house. But did the working classes do so? That they did not do so was manifest to every one who would perambulate the streets and the lanes and corners of the residences of many thousands of the working population. He wished to impress upon them the very serious consequences that were brought on by this state of things, which arose in great measure from the neglect of others, but occasionally from their own neglect. Ill health, on an average, would deprive them of thirty days' toil a-year, and estimating this at 2*s.* each day, there would be an average loss of 60*s.*, a sum more than sufficient to cover a hundred rates that might be levied in the town for the institution of many things that would be greatly to their advantage, which would cover any additional rent that might be demanded from them for a superior house in a more eligible situation. The besetting curse of an enormous body of the working population of the country was the habit of drinking. The sanitary condition, however, of many of the localities and dwelling-places in which they lived, the want of fresh air, water, and everything wholesome and refreshing to body and mind, was the main cause of the addiction to drink of hundreds of thousands of the working population. It was the duty of those who were in independence and power to alleviate those evils by all means within their reach; and it was the duty of the working men to co-operate with them in removing a state of things so utterly pernicious to themselves and their children in body and soul. Among the first of their demands should be a cleanly and wholesome house. If, then, they would have a tidy house to retire to after their toil, with everything that could charm and honour domestic life—if they would have their home their nest, their best refuge and sweetest joy—they must have each of them a wife who not only knew her duty, but was a keeper at home. They could have no cleanly and happy homes unless their homes were constantly watched by the superintending care, the thrifty supervision, and the deep and affectionate interest of the wives of their bosoms and the mothers of their children. One of the great moral effects arising out of this physical improvement would be, that they would have wives who would be keepers at home; who would institute within their houses every economy; who, by their care of the children, would save them an infinite sum year by year in doctors' bills; and who, above all, would do that which no system of national education, no system of private teaching, nothing but the superintending care and eye of the mother, could do—give to her children that solemn, serious, parental, domestic moral training, which was the foundation of every practical virtue here on earth, and which was the secondary and practical instrument and guide on their way to heaven. No doubt there were many things which the working classes could not do for themselves, but they must bear in mind that there were other things which they could do for themselves, and they must not be looking on all occasions to the law to assist them. They must not depend upon the law—they must depend upon their own exertions. The law could not do much, and the law ought not to do much, for the working classes. The law ought to go no further than remove obstacles and impediments in their way, but the working classes ought to do everything that they could to avail themselves of the advantages given them, to turn the information offered them to account, and to co-operate in rendering their town the abode of health. If they did not, all the energies of the authorities and benevolent men would be of no avail, and working men would remain in the condition in which they were to the end of time. He hoped that the advice which had been given would be received in the spirit in which it was given. He hoped that in all their pursuits the working classes would never cease their efforts to raise themselves in the scale of society. He cared not how high their aspirations might be. Let them be aspirations to rule their native city—aspirations to take part in the government of the country. The hereditary institutions of the land (said the noble earl in conclusion) were never so safe as when they were refreshed and strengthened by large importations from the working and the middle classes; and if there is anything that distinguishes the institutions of England, more especially the hereditary part of them, from surrounding nations, it is that you number now in the House of Lords as many descendants of men who have worked at the plough or the loom as those who count their descent from the Plantagenets, and quarter upon their arms I know not how many griffins, and I know not how many bald-tailed dogs. Then, let your aspirations be as high as they may—aspire to everything this world can give. God forbid I should attempt by any word of mine to repress your noble ambition. All I ask is this: that when you are endeavouring by every effort in your power—by all the development of your moral, physical, and intellectual energy—to raise yourselves and yours in the scale of society in which you were born, of the kingdom of which you are all subjects,—ever bear in mind that this is but a subordinate effort to that far greater, higher, and everlasting one before you; and that when you seek to be a great and honoured citizen of this mighty empire you must labour above all to attain unto the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

Digitized by Google

The Earl of Carlisle (who wore the star and riband of the Garter) was next called upon by the chairman, and, the applause with which he was greeted having subsided, he said:—We have all been made so much of working men this week that I am inclined to think that it is time for a little rest; and, as I am sure that my noble friend who has just addressed you with such true and earnest feeling thinks it one of the chief glories of his useful and honoured life to have passed the Ten Hours' Bill, I call to mind that it is more than ten hours ago since I took my seat to hear papers about schools and prisons, and I therefore feel inclined to come before you like an insolvent and claim "the benefit of the Act." My reason for not declining to come, as I might have wished, and (to adopt an expression natural to the place where I stand) to have made my exit rather than my entrance, was my desire to show the real respect I feel for the body of the working classes of the land. I think that it would be great flattery to any class or any set of men to assign to them an exclusive share of those acts and qualities which together make up the staple of our English greatness. We have a generous and manly gentry, we have liberal and princely merchants, we have a distinguished literature, deep thinkers, sparkling writers, graceful poets; we have eminent men in the learned professions, and we have the bravest of soldiers and sailors; but I still feel that it is the large, deep foundation of the working classes which is ever supplying the raw material of this costly fabric of our wealth, our enterprise, and our fame—which is all the time feeding all the other classes, and sending out its shoots and suckers among them. And so, whatever may be the lustre of our arms, whatever may be the brilliancy of our genius, whatever may be the enterprise of our capitalists, whatever may be the wealth of our nobles, whatever may be the reverence that surrounds all our institutions, and guards our throne, yet I should not feel easy as to their safety and their permanence if I did not think that there was at the same time beneath them and around them a sound, well-disposed, order-loving, working population. But, gentlemen, if it be true that the working classes hold so important a place, let them bear in mind that their duties are on a corresponding scale. I have told you how sincere my wish is to honour those who uphold our frame of society, and secure to me, among others, the many advantages which it gives me. But while I honour them, let them prove themselves worthy of that honour. The poet well says:—

"Honour and shame from no condition rise; and he adds as truly,—

"Act well your part, 'tis there true honour lies."

Now, every class and every man in this country has his part, which he may act well, and gain honour by so doing. You have already heard many to-night, and there are others around me, both among your visitors and among your townsmen, qualified to give you good advice, from platforms, from pulpits, from lecture-rooms, from daily converse and intercourse, by their wise precepts, by their bright example, still, feel more than anything that the chief part to be played in building up your own character, and making out your own destinies, rests with yourselves. I agree with my noble friend that what I should be inclined to say was, our besetting fault or crime as a nation is drunkenness; and what I feel to be the main source of discomfort and unhappiness to us all as men is the want of contentment with what we have and what we are. Therefore, if I were addressing any large body of my countrymen, I should be tempted to say,—"As you value your body's health and your mind's peace and your soul's good, be sober." But if I were speaking to any one of you as man to man, I should be tempted to say—"I do not suspect you, my honest friend, of any such degrading and besetting taste as the love of drink; but while you do your best to earn your bread and to improve your mind, and to raise yourself in the scale of life—for these, as my noble friend has told you, are proper and legitimate aims for every one—cast out at once and for ever from your breast the gnawings of envy and the restlessness of discontent." Few of us, I believe, have any notion how much happier we might all be if we would only let ourselves be so. The mind, the imperial mind of man, makes its own atmosphere; and life, that great responsible gift of our Creator, decides its own history. And as I have referred you to the many living oracles of advice open for your benefit, I will only, in conclusion, cite one dead oracle, our great moralist, Dr. Johnson, who has said in noble lines, which have always seemed to me to comprise all philosophy, all morality, and all religion:—

"Pour forth thy fervors for a healthful mind—
Obedient passions, and a will resigned—
For love, that scarce collective man can fill—
For patience, sovereign o'er transmuted ill—
For faith, that panting for a happier seat,
Counts Death kind Nature's signal for retreat.
These goods He grants, who nothing grants in vain—
These goods He grants, who grants the power to gain—
With these celestial wisdom calms the mind,
And makes the happiness she does not find."

Lord Sandon, M.P., also addressed the meeting, inculcating on the working men the expediency of co-operating in the objects of the association, since no real advantage could be expected from its labours until the opinion of the working classes had been first taken and their aid secured. To those who might ask what business the upper classes had to meddle with matters which perhaps more closely affected the interests of the working classes, his answer was that when the country had put the mark of a title upon some man who had exemplified the success of labour, in arms, at sea, at the bar, or in the senate, it was as much as to say, "The country knows you have talents and capacity; we will acknowledge that capacity; but in so doing we require that you shall consecrate your life and the life of your descendants, you shall consecrate the wealth which you have earned, to the good of all your countrymen; that you shall use that leisure, that you shall use those opportunities of instruction, of knowledge, which that wealth and that leisure give you, for your fellow-countrymen's good."

The Chairman then announced that a working man had requested permission to propose a vote of thanks to the noblemen and gentlemen who had addressed them that evening. It was not intended to have passed any resolutions, but as this was quite a spontaneous act on the part of the working man in question, and as it evinced so much good feeling, he thought that they must depart from their original design, and allow the motion to be proposed.

Daniel Guy then came forward, and was received with immense cheering by his fellow-workmen. His hard hands and somewhat swart appearance clearly indicated that he was what he professed to be—one of the sons of daily toil. He spoke with considerable fluency and animation, and in a rather broad Lancashire dialect. We give his speech nearly verbatim:—Brother workmen,—I am not one of these Parliament gentlemen, you know, but just out of the foundry; so you must excuse me if I am a little rough. I thank God for this night. I feel that we, as working men, have a great right—a duty incumbent on us to give our most hearty and grateful thanks to the five illustrious noblemen who have given to us so much of their services to-night. There's an old song among us men something after the following:—"There's a good time coming." I believe that the day has done more than dawn, that it's broad past twilight, and already the sun begins to light on us in full blaze. When the nobles of the land begin to stoop from their high position to give us of the working classes the hand to elevate and lift us up, I say that the day has more than dawned, and we have a good full view of the sun rising in his mighty power. Throughout the whole course of my life never have I sat and felt such emotions arising within my inner man as I have to-night. When I hear such men as the noble Lord Shaftesbury telling us—the toiling millions—where our great evils lie, and advising us as to the steps to be taken to remove those evils, I feel grateful and thankful and highly delighted. But, my working friends, with all the advice given, with all the counsel offered, unless we ourselves put our hands to the plough we shall never be any whit better. The reformation needed to raise and elevate the working man is the reformation of the homestead. Let it begin there; let every father begin, and let him determine henceforth that his aspirations shall be as high as his noble Lordship wishes them to be. I thank God in being an Englishman. Well and truly has it been said that we have privileges and benefits such as no other nation in the world possesses; and I ask my working friends to whom do we owe them? To the band of men, to a great extent, who have spoken from that platform to-night. Do not the early recollections of our boyhood bring to mind the names of Brougham, of Russell, of Morpeth, of Grey, of Ashley, and a host of others, and is it not to those men, to a great extent, that we owe the rights and privileges, and the large amount of freedom that we do enjoy? Now you know I must not intrude. I must be very brief, and must make way for greater men. But let me advise you—earnestly let me advise you, as one who knows the benefit of taking some of the advice at least that has been given us—let me advise every man, woman and child, boys and girls too—to follow up the precepts which have been laid down. If we do so, depend upon it we shall hail this night as being the great epoch in our happy lives for the future. I have great pleasure in proposing—

Digitized by Google

"That the best thanks of the meeting be given to the five noblemen who have addressed us to-night."

And I hope, fellow countrymen, and Liverpool men especially, that to-night you'll give it with all your hearts. Good night, and thank you.

Mr. R. Macfie, a large employer, seconded the motion, which was carried with loud and continued cheering.

Lord Brougham acknowledged the compliment, and proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, which was seconded by Lord J. Russell, and carried unanimously.

This terminated the proceedings.

There was also a soirée in the evening in the great hall of St. George's Hall, which was very numerously attended.

THE NORTH-WEST LONDON PREVENTIVE AND REFORMATORY INSTITUTION.

A meeting on behalf of this institution, founded in 1852, and to which a new feature is now added in the instruction of training masters, was held on Wednesday, Nov. 17, in the new hall of the building. The institution combines prevention and reformation. Here lads from 16 years of age, whose destitute condition exposes them peculiarly to temptation, and criminals when released from prison, receive an asylum, are provided with religious and secular instruction, and are taught such knowledge of a useful trade as will enable them, when started afresh in life, to earn their bread by honest industry. During the five years the institution has been open it has received 452 destitute and criminal youths, who are thus accounted for: — Emigrated, 63; established in trade, 67; in service, 34; in army and navy, 52; restored to friends, 18; labour master at a Reformatory, 1; in other reformatories with consent, 9; quitted prematurely from the strictness of the discipline, 84; dismissed for misconduct, 11; drowned, 1; died, 2; present inmates 112.

The chair was taken by the Earl of Shaftesbury; and among those on the platform were the Bishop of Oxford; Sir Stafford Northcote, M.P.: Mr. Sheffield Neave, governor of the Bank of England; Mr. William Cotton; Mr. Thomson Hankey, M.P.; Mr. Drummond, M.P.; Mr. J. A. Smith, M.P.; Mr. Hubbard; Mr. Hodgson, M.P.; Mr. Bowyer, honorary governor, &c.

The meeting having been opened with a prayer by the Vicar of Fulham,

The Chairman called upon the Bishop of Oxford to address the meeting. The right rev. prelate observed that the cause on behalf of which they were met was in all probability known to most of those present; but he would venture to say this reformatory attempt ranked in the very first place, and having a strong conviction that it was necessary to join in these attempts, it gave him great pleasure to aid this particular movement. It was commenced not with mature deliberation or with a great flourish, but was begun by the founder with the labour of his own hands, head, and time. It began from a desire to meet a pressing necessity, and it was commenced by the founder giving himself to the work under no ordinary circumstances of self-sacrifice. Commencing as the teacher of a ragged school, he gained great power over the minds of the youths. They told him there was no hope for them in the labour market, but that they would work the flesh off their bones to get honest bread if he could provide it for them. He could not resist the appeal, and with small means, except the grace of Christ, he set to work, throwing his large heart into the undertaking; and God had so blessed him in it, that within five years 452 poor lads had been received within its walls, the immense majority of whom had been placed in a position to earn their own livelihood. The object of the Institution was to restore those who had fallen into temptation and to lead them back to virtue and happiness. A great debt had been contracted for the first time in connection with the establishment; as heretofore no debt had been incurred. There was now a sum of 1,700*l.* to be liquidated, and that expenditure had been incurred in great part so that masters could be trained and the Government grant continued. The question was—Would the public now come forward and start the Institution free of debt? It was intended for 100 inmates, whose maintenance would cost 3,000*l.*, or 30*l.* a head. Mr. Bowyer, the founder, had devoted a great deal of his valuable time in collecting subscriptions, and thus the time (intended, no doubt, by Providence for higher and nobler purposes) was, so to speak, consumed in drudgery. If this 3,000*l.* a-year could be raised by subscriptions of 10*l.* each, he would cheerfully form one of 300 persons to unite for that purpose. This would relieve Mr. Bowyer from the drudgery of devoting his time to the collection of subscriptions, and enable him to devote to higher purposes the precious gift which Heaven had confided to him. The first recommendation of the Institute was the high character of the founder. There was no use in having fine principles and formularies in a case like this. What they wanted was an earnest, zealous, pious man, who would give himself up to the work of reformation, The Institute was also entitled to support on the ground that it was a handmaid of the Church of England, imbued with her spirit, and resolved to bring the message of Christ's salvation home to these lost spirits. The principles upon which reformatories rested were so well recognised as to require no arguments to enforce them. It was said sometimes that this was a morbid philanthropy, and that it would be better to make the position of the unfallen better than to upraise those who were down. Now, he held that these institutions did not in any way interfere with the efforts made to assist those who had not fallen; on the contrary, it would be found that those who were most anxious for reformatories were most willing to deny themselves for their poor brethren in virtue, while at the same time they held out the hand of mercy to the fallen. Mercy to the fallen was spoken in all the words of love of our blessed Lord. Were we not told that if a woman having ten pieces of silver, lost one, she swept the house, and searched until she found it, and that her joy was greater at the acquisition of that which she had lost than for the nine that remained; and was not the same principle indelibly stamped on the cross of our Lord on Calvary? What was the history of that stupendous sacrifice?—what was the sacrifice of the Eternal Son becoming man but the embodying of the same principle, not for unfallen angels, not for the bands of seraphs, for bright-robed cherubs, not for the ninety and nine who needed no repentance, but for the lonely and the outcast who repented. It was for this the great sacrifice was contemplated in Divine wisdom, and realised in Divine love. Well, then, he held that it would be to insult Christian souls to follow up the argument in favour of Reformatories; for to maintain that to restore the erring to hope, comfort, and religion, was not a noble end, would be to deny the merits of that broad, everlasting salvation which underlies the whole system of man's redemption. The noble chairman had lately told a large body of persons that it was useless to attempt to instil religion into the soul while the body was plunged in the moral degradation of crime. He quite agreed in that sentiment. It was the duty of Christians to direct their energies to both of those objects. It was the bounden duty of those who moved in a highly-cultivated state of society to see to this, for it was the natural concomitant of great wealth that there should be great temptation. There was in all communities a sort of superfluity, a description of fluff or scoria, which was knocked off the sound metal, and which would have to be provided for by a Christian country. It was not enough for a Christian man to say that he was straightforward in his transactions, and did nothing towards increasing the lower deposits of crime and evil around him. On the contrary, he was bound to go out into the highways and hedges of society to recover all who were capable of reclamation. In a great city like London the public were bound to bring Christian principles and exertion towards undoing the evil to which they imperceptibly contributed. The Christian should be continuously trying to prevent the extension of evils in the circles around him. This institution aimed at this kind of work. The blessing of God rested upon it, and the expense, compared with the result, was exceedingly small. He trusted the result of that evening's meeting would relieve the mind of the founder from its weight of pecuniary responsibility, and place the institution upon a firm basis, so that it might extend its influence and enlarge the sphere of its usefulness still more.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Neave, governor of the Bank of England, moved the first resolution—"That the increased experience of every year proves more and more the value of Reformatory Institutions and their beneficial effects morally upon the inmates themselves and the class to which they belong, and economically upon society in general. That the intended diminution of the Government grant will place all adult and uncertified institutions in great difficulty, and inevitably lead to the closing of some of them. That this institution has been tried for many years, and it is confidently hoped that its friends will not suffer that this should be its fate just at the very time when its buildings are complete, and it is capable of a larger sphere of usefulness than has yet been possible." The speaker referred at some length to the success which had attended Reformatories since their institution, and proceeded to state that, setting aside the Christian duty involved in the maintenance of such establishments, it was positively far cheaper to support them than gaols, while the public would save all the property now appropriated by felons. It seemed to him that the only way to meet the augmenting evil in the country was to stop the supply of criminals at its first source. With regard to the present institution, the greater portion of the grant of the Privy Council was about to be withdrawn, and unless the public made good the deficit, the doors would have to be closed, as in the case of the Brixton Reformatory.

Sir S. Northcote, M.P., seconded the resolution, and said that he would not enter at any length into the statistics of the reformatory system, as it was well known that the progress of the movement was steady, gradual, satisfactory, and beginning to tell upon the amount of juvenile crime in the country. The right rev. prelate who opened the proceedings, had referred to the allegation so often made, that those interested in the reformatory movement were fostering the bad and neglecting the good. The objection, however, fell to the ground, for the direct opposite was the case, as it was impossible to ameliorate the condition of the lowest class of society, without also ameliorating that of those in the upper classes. He had no apprehension that the movement would be starved for want of funds, although individual establishments might suffer by the very progress of which they were the authors. This was the case in the County Reformatory of Warwickshire, which was closed for want of funds, in the very year in which Reformatory Institutions were legalised and obtained an ascertained position in the country. The grant which the North-West London Reformatory Institution now received was only 5s. per head per annum; but small as it was, it was useful, and brought the society into connection with the Government. With regard to the training portion of the Institution, he entirely approved of it, as he considered it absolutely necessary that the persons intrusted with the care of young criminals should have experience of the proper treatment to be adopted towards them.

On the motion of Mr. Cotton, the thanks of the meeting were accorded to the Earl of Shaftesbury for presiding.

The Chairman, in acknowledging the compliment, stated how deeply he sympathised in the object which had brought them together, and observed that he knew of no institution of the class which deserved better at the hands of all reflecting persons, than the North-west London Reformatory.

The proceedings terminated with a collection in aid of the institution.

THE MAYOR OF BIRMINGHAM.

For the third time has Sir John Ratcliff been elected to fill the office of Mayor to the important borough of Birmingham. This is an honourable distinction, and has been very deservedly bestowed on one who has shown, in every way, his desire, regardless of cost or inconvenience, to promote the well-being of his fellow-townsmen, and the prosperity of his native place. On the memorable 9th November, the corporation resolved to mark the occasion by giving a banquet to Sir John, on his re-election to the office for the third year. The chair was taken by Alderman Hawkes, who, after the usual loyal toasts, proposed the health of the Mayor in a straightforward and manly appeal to his fellow-burgesses to do honour to the toast; expressing a hope that future generations might remember that in Sir John Ratcliff they had one who had added lustre to the name of good old Brummagen.

Sir John responded to the enthusiastic reception of this toast, in a manner which clearly evidenced his desire to identify his own success and prosperity with that of his native town, and that his utmost energies would be exercised in promoting the welfare and interests of Birmingham, which had so far recognized his endeavours in that direction, as to elect him for the third time to fill the high and proud position of chief magistrate of one of the greatest towns of the kingdom.

Sir John has been a staunch supporter of all the various efforts to elevate the ragged, the criminal, and the neglected; and scarcely a movement of any kind to promote the cause of charity and benevolence has lacked his generous aid. Hence it is that we rejoice to record his election for a third time to a post, which gives so much influence to his support of the various charitable and benevolent movements which our own columns are devoted to advance.

COUNTY RATE FOR THE NEW CITY LUNATIC ASYLUM.

The county rate proposed to be levied on the various City parishes for the building of a lunatic asylum for the reception of insane paupers, which has caused a considerable sensation in the City, appears to have a precedent in the county rate which was levied on the City in the year 1818, to compensate the sufferers from damages sustained through the violence and riotous conduct of a mob in their endeavours to sack the City on their return from a Parliamentary reform meeting which had been held in Spafield, Clerkenwell. The sum assessed on that occasion was 1,269*l.*; and in the year 1822, a further assessment was made in respect of the damages sustained through the corn-law riots, in addition to which, and antecedent to the above, are on record a series of assessments which took place to indemnify the sufferers by the "No Popery" or "Gordon" riots in 1780. The amounts so assessed were, in 1780, 28,299*l.*; in 1781, 8,033*l.*, and 3,979*l.*; in 1783, 1,623*l.*; and in 1785, 949*l.* There was also a rate made for the recovery of 758*l.* for damage done in Cripplegate ward by a riotous mob; and as far back even as 1630 a sum of money was levied by the Common Council upon the inhabitants for repairing the "City's gate, the gaol of Newgate, and for bringing water to the City." These facts in themselves are relied upon as ample evidence of no want of precedent for the levying of a county rate where the object is for the common good of the whole of the inhabitants; but the chief difficulty with the ratepayer seems to be an impression, that the Corporation of London are in possession of sufficient funds for all the purposes for which the amount of the rate in question is required. The proceedings taken by the committee of justices for raising the necessary funds is gradually attracting the notice of the vestries of the several parishes, and meetings are now held with the view to oppose the assessment.

Digitized by Google

Notices to Correspondents.

Our correspondents are requested to observe that we cannot be answerable for the insertion of any articles received after the 22nd of the month, or Advertisements after the 27th, though we shall always endeavour to meet their wishes.

N.B.—As "The Philanthropist" will be published in future by Mr. Tweedie, 337, Strand, the Editor requests that all communications may be forwarded to him there, where they will receive immediate attention.

* Attention is called to the following scale of charges for Advertisements :—

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Five lines and under	0	2	6
Every additional line	0	0	4
A column	1	15	0
Half-page	2	5	0
A page	4	0	0

Charitable Institutions, 3d. per line.

N.B.—Advertisements in the first and last pages 1d. per line extra.

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE,

December 1, 1858.

PROFITABLE EMPLOYMENT OF PRISONERS.

Our readers will remember that at the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions for Surrey, in the year 1857, the magistrates had under their consideration both the advisability and the practicability of introducing the element of remuneration in the hard labour of the prisoners at the Wandsworth House of Correction. Singular as it may appear, the very principle itself of rendering the labour of prisoners profitable had its opponents. There were some who thought it likely to interfere with free labour, already too plentifully supplied. In this respect, however, good sense prevailed, and it was resolved to carry out the experiment; and the scheme which was suggested by Mr. Tilson held forth great promise of enabling every prisoner who was employed in accordance with it, not only to earn sufficient to defray the cost of his own subsistence, but to give a small surplus, to which extent the county rates would of course have been actually benefited. It appeared that a very extensive paper manufacturer at Wandsworth had made a proposition to the county authorities to employ a large number of prisoners in picking rags for the purpose of manufacturing paper, and he undertook to supply all the materials, and in addition to pay a certain amount of wages per week for each prisoner so employed; the effect of which arrangement, if carried out, would have been as above stated. The scheme was discussed, as we have said, on the ground of its being unadvisable to endeavour to obtain a profit from the labour of criminals. There was, however, a more palpable objection and difficulty, which arose out of the nature of the employment proposed; the occupation of rag-picking being of a filthy and disgusting character, was calculated to affect the health of the prisoners, and to introduce infectious disease; and on this ground the medical officer of the prison refused to give his sanction. After a long discussion, however, the Court by a considerable majority passed a resolution that the proposition be accepted, and a sum of £2,000 was at the same time voted for the erection of sheds in which the prisoners were to be employed. It appears that since this, upon the county authorities entering into the details of the matter, and the manner in which the scheme was to be carried out, some disagreement arose, which prevented them from completing the arrangement, and the result has been that the project is now abandoned, without any further attempt being made elsewhere. This we are disposed to regret: because, though we could not altogether set aside some anxiety, as regards the opinion of the medical authorities, we so strongly approve the principle of the introduction of remunerating labour that we would willingly have submitted to some problematical physical danger to secure it. The first instance of infection as a result, would perhaps have led to the abolition of the kind of labour; but the substitution of some other kind would have been then more probable. To us, we confess, it seems marvellous that reasonable men, who have to pay so largely to support our prison establishments, have not long ago endeavoured to make these establishments as nearly as may be self-supporting. We hope to return to this subject, which involves matters of considerable importance, and the proper discussion of which would, in our estimation tend to remove much of the difficulty, in which our penal discipline is involved. Meanwhile we may remind our readers, that the real object of punishment, is not reformation of the criminal but to prevent him from committing an offence again; by reforming him, if possible, but at any rate by showing to him, and others by his example, that he is not to expect to commit crimes without a proportionate penalty. And clearly this punishment, while it should be as prompt and as efficient as possible, ought to be put in force at the least possible expense to rate-payers, and with the smallest possible indulgence to the prisoner, and the best possible prospects of amending his character. Hence all should be compelled to labour, on the ground that "he that will not work neither shall he eat;" and surely skilled labour of all sorts should be made to produce as much as possible, so as to reduce the demands upon rate-payers for their support; and unskilled labour should, where possible, be employed on the ground which would seem to be its legitimate outlet.

Before closing this subject, we may say that the Wandsworth manufacturer before referred to, has since made arrangements with the certified Reformatory at Bridge House, Wandsworth, where sheds have been erected, and that which was to have been done by prisoners is now done by the lads in that Reformatory. Rag-picking is going on in full force. We confess to some anxiety as to the result; because, while we quite recognise the prudence of making hard, or even disagreeable labour, a test of sincerity, we should fear, so far as the voluntary inmates are concerned, that it might be the means of driving many away and keeping others out.

Since penning the above remarks, we have been led to understand that the idea of remunerative labour from prisoners is not abandoned by the Surrey magistrates, and that an attempt is being made of a different nature. The principle involved is too important to be lightly passed over, and, as we said, we may return to its consideration at a future period. The subject is beginning to take hold of the public mind, and we shall be glad to receive any hints from such as are pondering it. It must be borne in mind that one great difficulty is to introduce a description of employment which shall not interfere with the discipline of the separate system, and, consequently, shall adapt itself, without occupying too much room, to each separate cell, and have some index of the labour and force applied. These are essential requisites, so long as the present system shall obtain; but we cannot think that they carry with them any obstacles which, in these days of advanced science, will not yield to the skill and perseverance of practical and mechanical genius.

Digitized by Google

RESULTS OF EMIGRATION.

It has always appeared to us that the best efforts of Reformatories and Refuges would be rendered null and almost useless, unless proper care be taken that the inmates, on their discharge, be placed not only where they may have a chance of gaining an honest living, but also where there shall be a reasonable prospect of the good impressions implanted in the Institutions being fostered and cherished. In short, that there should be some who, without unnecessarily prying into their secrets, shall yet keep a watch over them, and, if needs be, put in "the word in due season." It is folly to suppose that the best of training will make the hearts of the inmates impregnable to the seduction of temptation. It may be that experience of the misery attendant on vice and crime, and the comparative ease of conscience enjoyed while under the reformatory influence of a well established Institution, may have the effect of strengthening some very considerably against the inroads of future crime. But the influence of memory, unless backed by present encouragements, may not always be trusted. There can be no doubt that the emigrants, whom we annually dismiss from our institutions, to break as it were new ground in distant countries, will require still the eye of kindness, the voice of reproof, and the message of encouragement, to preserve them in the way. True the emigrants write most grateful letters, frequently detailing the whereabouts and doings of their companions; butare we so sure that, while they are glad to give such news as may encourage, they will always as conscientiously report the failures? That Institution which hears nothing but success of its former inmates, must either be deceived, or have been blessed with a very peculiar class. We do not say that any reflection must be made upon an Institution whose inmates do not so uniformly turn out well as another; but we are fully prepared to expect that there shall be in all, those who, when released from the good influences which surrounded them, and kept them in the straight path while in the Reformatory, shall again return like the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire. The importance of ascertaining how and what the emigrants are doing, seemed in the eyes of the Committee of the Reformatory and Refuge Union so great, that during the vacation they have deputed a very earnest-minded and intelligent member of their body to proceed to America, for the express purpose of ascertaining, as far as may be, the results of this kind of emigration. This gentleman followed up, as we are led to understand, all the cases he could hear of. He found thirty-three cases from English Institutions; one unsuccessful, one doubtful. He heard bad accounts of several boys from one Reformatory, a very large one, in the County of Surrey. He found seven girls and one boy from the St. Giles' Refuge, all doing well, and several men from the London Reformatory. Should such a step be again contemplated, it might be well that the enquirer should be previously furnished with a list, as accurately made out as possible, of those who have left each Institution, and their supposed whereabouts. Of course, much judgment would be necessary in the enquiries made, so as not to do injury to the emigrants; but much valuable information might and ought to be elicited. This gentleman thinks that much confidence may be placed in the Government emigration agents, who have consented specially to care for those sent with recommendations from the Reformatory and Refuge Union.

As regards the class of boys sent, it appeared to him that they were often sent too young and weak; and he gives it as his opinion, that they should be worked hard and fed well, to fit them for hard out-of-door employment. It is waste of time to give much book knowledge, beyond ability to read and write properly, and a little arithmetic. The best way of communicating with the lads is by letters sent under cover to the emigration agents.

The agents appear to differ very considerably as to the desirability of a Home in Canada for finishing the boys' training; one of them being of opinion that it would be self-supporting. We have ourselves great scruples on this point. We do not think any should be sent out whose training is not considered as finished, i. e., who is not considered fit to enter at once upon employment. Even with the great advantage of a home on first landing, to which they might resort, under the surveillance of the Government agent, until provided with employment, we should doubt the prudence of extending more than is absolutely necessary the knowledge of their English antecedents. We think the prejudice thereby created would far overbalance the favour of the well-meaning. The enquiry made has been necessarily on a small scale, and for a short period; but the gentleman is thereby fully impressed with the desirability of some responsible and judicious person being sent on a six months' search, to make report on the success or failure of the three or four hundred cases which have been sent from England, both male and female; and it is extremely gratifying to be able to add, that, from his own limited search, he feels that so many would be found to have done well, and so comparatively few to have failed and sunk back into their old condition, that a very great stimulus would be created in favour of the cause.

REFORMATORY GOVERNORS' ASSOCIATION.

Quot homines tot sententiæ. Although there may be one object the reformation of the inmates, in the minds of the different Governors of the Reformatories and Refuges, there will not be two among them who will not endeavour to accomplish that object in a somewhat different manner. Local associations and influences must needs vary, and difference in disposition, age, and sex, cannot fail to call forth different ideas of management. There will be none who may not derive a lesson from the experience of others—none who cannot convey information of an important character to his fellow-labourers in the same Christian work. We can conceive no one thing more calculated to advance the great cause of the reformation of criminals and prevention of crime, than the frequent communion of those who are engaged prominently in the work one with the other; so that their trials and encouragements, their hopes and fears, may be mutually discussed, and good-fellowship established. We have received with pleasure the card of the rules of the above Association, which is the more satisfactory, as it is clearly under the patronage of, and in connection with, the Reformatory and Refuge Union, 118, Pall Mall, a body to whom we always look forward as holding an important position, and exercising a most beneficial influence on this movement; whereby we may feel in some degree secure that Reformatories or Refuges are not likely to be started by private speculators, but will be, so far as is consistent with every Englishman's liberty of action, watched and cared for. The Rules and Regulations of the Reformatory Governors' Association are as follows:—

1.—The name of the Society shall be the Reformatory Governors Association.

2.—The officers of the Society shall consist of a Treasurer and Secretary.

Digitized by Google

3.—The objects of the Society shall be to form and cultivate Christian friendship amongst those who are engaged in the Reformatory work.

4.—The means for obtaining these objects shall be monthly meetings by special permission, at the rooms of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, 118, Pall Mall, for exchange of opinions and mutual edification. A plain tea to be provided, for which every member present shall pay sixpence, and if at any time there should not be twelve present, the deficiency to that number shall be made up out of the funds of the Association. Tea at five o'clock.

5.—That being a Governor, Matron, or any officer connected with a Reformatory Institution, and paying in advance not less than four shillings per annum, shall constitute membership in this association.

6.—That any member may introduce a friend (who must be somewhat connected with the work) at any of the monthly meetings. Each friend so admitted must pay one shilling for their tea.

7.—That all meetings of the association shall be opened and closed with a devotional exercise.

8.—That none of the above rules shall be altered or repealed without a special meeting being called for that purpose.

S. Wise, Treasurer.
J. Wood, Hon. Sec.

We hope from time to time to transfer to our pages some account of their doings, and their papers and discussions. It may be that occasionally polished scholarship may be missed; but we apprehend the earnest good feeling, practical truths, and the results of experience in what is, after all, frequently an almost hopeless task—the management of criminals—will at all times have weight with our readers, even though clothed in homely language. We give insertion to an account of a paper which was read by Miss Hargrave, just as it has been sent to us, because we feel that the subject treated is very important: "The removal of the inmates of our institutions to work in factories." We can understand that the visit paid by Miss Hargrave must have affected her, and given a tone to her thoughts on the subject, and we cannot of course wonder that such an establishment should soon be at an end. We should be deeply grieved to think that the larger part of the factories were in a condition even approaching to that of the one she visited. We do not think it. We believe that very much is done in many to remedy the evils attached to the working of so large bodies of children, girls and women, who must be perpetually brought into contact, with very little surveillance. Still we cannot but allow that there are evils connected with all factories, such as to render it unadvisable to transfer our Reformatory girls to them, where it can be avoided. As a general rule, no child should be sent to work of any kind without a prospect, a reasonable hope, that the reformatory influence over her will be in some degree kept up. It should be a great object with all Reformatories and Refuges to secure the co-operation of those good Christians, who are to be found in every locality, and who, without obtrusively interfering, will yet, in goodwill and fellowship, endeavour to fan and cherish the good feelings instilled in the Institutions, but not unfrequently endangered very much by subsequent contact with the world and its temptations.

GOVERNMENT AID TO REFUGES AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

Again has the Reformatory and Refuge Union placed the public under an obligation. We have previously reported in our columns a correspondence which took place between the Committee of that Union and the Committee of Council on Education, on the subject of the injustice done to several existing institutions, and the bar to further efforts, by the revocation on December 31, 1857, of the minutes of the 2nd of June, 1856. This correspondence has, however, together with valuable information on the said minutes, been published by the Union in a concise form, and the Committee having done all in their power to bring about a reconsideration of the decision, have come to the determination of appealing to the various institutions to exert themselves. Accordingly the following letter has been sent to thirty-two different institutions, together with the pamphlet in question:—

The Committee of the Union have done their utmost to induce Her Majesty's Government to reconsider the matter, and they must now leave it in the hands of the different Institutions affected by the rescinding of the minute of the 2nd of June, 1856. I am, dear Sir, very faithfully yours,

Charles Gwillim.

The Committee seem to have felt a delicacy in so far even appearing to dictate to the institutions, as to suggest separate appeals from each to the Committee of Council. For our part we have no such scruples; and we strongly urge such a step, because we feel that the persevering endeavours of so strong a body as the Reformatory and Refuge Union, backed by separate appeals from the various Refuges and Industrial Schools now established, will probably have the effect of causing a movement to be made in Parliament; in which case we may firmly hope for the earnest and cordial support of Lord John Russell. As a ground for this hope we here append an extract from his lordship's speech at the opening of the Manchester Industrial School:—

"It appeared to him that the support of institutions of this kind was a duty incumbent on the nation. He was, therefore, sorry to see that the grant of Committee of Council for Education, which in 1856 was fixed at 50*s.* for each inmate, was diminished by a Minute of December, 1857, to 5*s.* Whether the former grant was too great he would not discuss. But he would say that the diminution that had been effected was most injurious to institutions of this kind. There was no manner in which the public money, derived as it was from the incomes of all, or at least that part of it which was given to education, could be better applied than in the support and maintenance of Ragged Schools. He did not at all wish that such schools should be entirely supported by the State. Yet, seeing the thousands of children in such a city as Manchester who needed such schools, a further contribution by the State than the small sum he had mentioned ought to be asked for and granted. In many instances, in which handsome schoolrooms had been erected, the State had granted as much as £300 to £400 at a time, when, in fact, the contributors to those schools would have erected the buildings at their own cost, if the grants had not been made. But, for the destitute children in our great cities, it was hardly to be expected that schools should be provided in sufficient number unless the State contributed towards the expenses. The consequence of having such schools would be, that the institutions which had been established of late years for criminal children who had been convicted, would not be supplied to a greater extent than it was possible for the State and for individuals to maintain them. He need not say how much better it was that a child who was exposed to temptations to crime should be taken into an institution where he would be taught and led into an honest way of life, than that he should afterwards be reclaimed after he had suffered the degradation and evils of a prison."

The exertions of the Reformatory and Refuge Union in this good cause have been continual and spirited. We shall do our utmost to second them, and only regret to find that their funds are still very inadequate to their requirements. When will the general public be wise enough to recognise their value, and support them as they deserve?

SCHOOL OF PRACTICAL ART.

A laudable effort has been made to establish a Brighton and Sussex School of Practical Art, in connection with the Government Department of Science and Art, South Kensington, under the patronage of His Grace the Duke of Richmond, The Most Noble the Marquis of Bristol, The Right Hon. the Earl of Chichester, and the Lord Bishop of Chichester, with a large and influential body of Vice-presidents and Committee.

Digitized by Google

We shall perhaps best convey to our readers the plans and objects in view, by transferring to our pages the following Address from the Committee :—

"It is now seventeen years since the earliest provincial Schools of Art (originally known as Schools of Design) were constituted. They were at first established in our principal manufacturing towns, but other places soon found the advantage of possessing them; and accordingly they are now in full operation at Bath, Cheltenham, and Southampton, and even in such comparatively small towns as Tavistock, Reading, Torquay, and Petersfield. The south-eastern portion of England, however,—comprising the counties of Kent, Surrey, and Sussex,—was, until the formation of the present school, entirely without such institutions, the nearest being those established at Southampton and Petersfield, or in the Metropolis.

"An intimation having been received in the past summer, that it was proposed to establish a School of Practical Art in Sussex, it was considered that Brighton was the place best adapted for locating the central school. Besides being the most populous town in Sussex, its central situation and ready means of access from the surrounding country appeared to enable it at once to give assistance, through the agency of its school and master, in the art education of other parts of the county, and perhaps to prepare the way for, or aid in the formation at a future time, of similar institutions, either as branches or independent establishments, in the neighbouring towns. A resolution in favour of establishing a School of Practical Art at Brighton was accordingly unanimously passed at a public meeting, held in the Town Hall, on the 31st August; and a Committee was appointed for the purpose of organising and establishing the school.

"The importance of art instruction as a branch of general education is, probably, now too generally admitted to require advocacy. It is known to give precision to the eye and firmness to the hand, so as even greatly to facilitate the acquisition of writing; it enables the employer to describe, and the mechanic readily to comprehend and execute, his work; it gives to its possessor the command of a language of singular accuracy, understood all over the world; it enables the artisan to render his work complete, by investing the useful with the beautiful; and it developes in all to whom it is imparted, that sense of beauty, which seems one of the appointed means for softening the asperities of life.

"The instruction proposed to be given is of three kinds :—

"1. Elementary, for all classes. This will include practical geometry, linear perspective, free-hand drawing and shading, model-drawing, figure from the flat, and elementary colour.

"2. Advanced, including drawing the figure from casts, painting, ornaments, flowers, still-life, landscape, &c.

"3. Special or Technical, as artistic anatomy, elementary design, modelling, architectural and mechanical drawing, &c.

"The manner of imparting this instruction will be as follows :—

"1. At the School of Art, by a master certified as competent by the Department of Science and Art, South Kensington.

A. Day Classes; for all ranks.
B. Evening Classes; for artizans, &c., at a low rate.
C. Classes for Schoolmasters and Pupil Teachers of Public Schools, at a still lower rate.

"2. At the various Public Schools,* by one or more lessons a week in the elementary courses, given by the master of the School of Art; assisted by lessons given in the intervals, concurrently with writing, to the less advanced pupils, by the master or mistress of the public school;—the master of the School of Art receiving from the public school an extremely small annual payment.

"A branch to be attended by our master, one day in the week, is being established at Chichester, which otherwise would probably not have had the services of an art master, as the Government will not appoint one, unless a fair prospect of remunerative employment is offered.

"A prospectus, containing detailed information for the use of students, schoolmasters, and pupil teachers, as to the hours of attendance, terms of instruction, &c., is in preparation, and will shortly be published.

"Although dependent chiefly on the fees received for instruction, important aid is rendered to the School of Art, by the Government Department of Science and Art. The department secures the appointment of a master certified to be properly qualified, and by its certificate allowances, as well as the pecuniary prizes to which he becomes entitled upon any of his pupils obtaining prizes, contributes towards his salary; it supplies to the central schools, and to schools for the poor, models, drawing materials, &c., at a reduced price, fixed for the present at 40 per cent. under the net cost; it lends valuable books, engravings, and other works of art; it sends from time to time properly qualified Inspectors, to examine and report on the state of the school; and it offers studentships and prizes to all students, (including schoolmasters and pupil teachers, and the children of schools for the poor); besides which, the School of Art receives valuable pecuniary and other prizes upon any of the students attaining certain grades of proficiency.

All fees, whether for public or private tuition, are collected by the Committee, who are responsible for the master's salary, dependent on the amount of the receipts, and for the expenses of management. There is reason to hope that, in time, the school will become entirely, as it is from the first largely, self-supporting; but this cannot at once be the case, and subscriptions are, therefore essential to its establishment. Besides this, it is absolutely necessary to have a fund of not less than £100 for providing the necessary fittings, paying the reduced price of the models, &c., and meeting the other expenses inseparable from a new undertaking."

PRIVILEGES OF SUBSCRIBERS.

"A subscriber of 5s. per annum may introduce a pupil free to the evening class for one quarter, (or half-session.)

"A subscriber of 10s. per annum, for two quarters, (or one session.)

"A subscriber of 20s. per annum, one year, or two pupils for two quarters each.

"And so on, in proportion to the amount of the subscription."

Here let us remark that it is not intended to teach accomplishments to the poor. Nothing of the sort is aimed at. The grand object is to instruct working people to do their work better by turning it out of hand neatly and handsomely as well as usefully, and thus enable them to command the best price for their labour, and to compete more successfully than at present with the foreign workmen, who, in these days, when the public require some sort of ornament and elegance about the commonest articles, in many cases beat the English workmen out of the market. Of the practical value of such a preparation for entering upon ordinary work none can doubt. If beauty is a legitimate object of human aspiration—and our instincts seem to settle that question in the affirmative—it is certainly desirable to point out the path by which it may most hopefully be pursued; a path especially pleasant to the labouring man, for whom so few innocent enjoyments present themselves. We cannot do better than close these remarks with the following extracts from the papers which the Committee have circulated.

The Committee of Council on Education, in the Directory of the Science and Art department, state that "it has been found by experience, with reference to instruction in drawing, that it greatly facilitates the acquisition of writing, geography, and other branches of knowledge,* and that even among the working classes parents are ready to contribute a small additional sum weekly for the additional advantages offered; moreover, they are willing to leave their children longer at school, perceiving that they learn something, the direct use of which they can at once understand."

In reference to the details of the scheme in question, a room in a central situation in Brighton, we believe, will be appro-

* By public schools are meant, schools for the poor, National schools, &c.

* It was stated publicly, at a large meeting of schoolmasters at Marlborough House, and assented to, that if of five hours a week devoted to writing, two were given to drawing, more progress would be made in writing in the remaining three, than in the five hours previously, and the general power of drawing would be a clear gain.

Digitized by Google

priated as a School of Art, where evening classes for artisans, at the rate of about a penny an hour, and day classes for all ranks, on a higher scale of charge, will be conducted by the Art-master, Mr. White, (late head-master of the Leeds School of Art); who will also give elementary art-instruction, at national and other Schools for the poor, at the rate of £5 per annum from each school, however numerous the children taught.

The Government offers important aid on certain conditions. To obtain this aid it is necessary to raise a capital of at least £100, for the expense of fittings, purchase of models, &c. Besides this, annual subscriptions are required, as the school cannot at first be self-supporting.

The Committee appeal to the public, and we hope not in vain, to supply them with the means of establishing an institution of so much consequence to the town and county. They are desirous of opening the school at an early date, and with an adequate supply of models, &c., to insure its thorough efficiency.

As the Government provides materials at half-price, every guinea subscribed will purchase two guineas' worth of models.

All persons desirous of more detailed information, are requested to communicate with the honorary secretary, Mr. Frederick Merrifield, 4, Dorset Gardens, Brighton.

PRISON DISCIPLINE.

THE JEBB AND CROFTON CONTROVERSY.

It will be remembered that at the Social Science Conference held in Birmingham twelve months back, our Recorder succeeded in drawing the earnest attention of those present to the system by which Irish convicts are, to a great extent, so trained and instructed as to be able to resist temptation after they leave gaol. Mr. Hill's opinion was that by means chiefly of what is known as the "intermediate" period of probation, the Directors of Convict Prisons in Ireland had practically solved the problem which has so long perplexed Government and the Legislature—what shall we do with our convicts? The interest thus excited in the minds of the noblemen and gentlemen present in the Town Hall on the occasion to which we refer, seems to have borne good fruit. The possibility of the application of the principle to English convict prisons has in the interim been pressed upon the attention of the authorities in London. We at least presume this to have been the origin of a report lately published by Colonel Jebb, Inspector General of English Prisons, and which has been largely discussed, chiefly from an affirmative point of view, in the columns of the metropolitan press. Colonel Jebb's ostensible object is to show that the intermediate system is not applicable to England; but as he states that he considers the movement a retrograde one, analogous, indeed, to the hulk system, and gives his reasons for forming this opinion, Captain Crofton, the chairman of the Irish Prison Board, has entered the field in behalf of those views of which he is probably the ablest exponent. Without attempting to decide which of these gentlemen has the balance of the argument in his favour—for each may be regarded as the very highest authority in the two countries—we may usefully give a summary of the chief opinions and facts brought out in the controversy.

As the Recorder explained in his paper, the chief novelty of the Irish system is this: After the man sentenced to transportation or penal servitude has spent nine months of solitary confinement in Mountjoy prison, he is sent (according to his fitness for out or in-door work,) either to Philipstown Prison, or to Spike Island, in the Cove of Cork, where fortification works are in progress. Here he is no longer in solitary confinement, but has to work hard. So far the system is similar to that pursued in England in connection with the convict establishments at Portland, Portsmouth, Dartmoor, &c. At Phillipstown and Spike Island, however, the character of the convict is tested in various ways, until he reaches a class which entitles him, during the last one-fifth part of his sentence, to be transferred to certain "intermediate prisons." Here he is gradually inured to freedom by being allowed to go about the neighbourhood on errands, and to provident habits by being allowed to spend or save sixpence a week out of his earnings. The best behaved and most industrious are permitted to live together in association in iron huts; and without any of that "coddling" which used to tend to make rascals hypocrites, and gave rise to the axiom, "the worse the man the better the prisoner," everything is done to make the intermediate prison a half-way house betwixt the prison and the world. Colonel Jebb is strongly opposed to association for the purpose of training convicts for liberty, and fortifies his opinion by reference to an experiment tried at Portland. He says—

"What first raised a doubt on the subject was, that the best men asked leave to go back to their small and comparatively confined sleeping cells, giving up the increased liberty of taking their meals together, and reading and conversing during the evenings. This was not thought much of at first, but when the embarkations ceased, and the men were located in these rooms for a longer period previous to their discharge, the demoralising effect of association, even to a limited extent and carefully regulated, was unequivocally manifested."

Captain Crofton regards this case as showing the necessity of some further change in treating convicts before they are liberated; and he fairly argues that if, notwithstanding the discipline of the early stages, the tone of the associated room of first-class prisoners was so bad as to induce the more exemplary to request removal to the cells, how was it possible to suppose that these first-class men were well prepared for discharge, or that they could do well after liberation? "This result," he says, "is a further proof of the fallacy of an ordinary prison character, and is in accordance with the experience of the community; directly the first-class prisoner is placed in temptation, id est, in association, his real character comes forth. Hence the low appreciation of characters earned in prison, hence the difficulty experienced by convicts in getting employment through them." Captain Crofton asks whether it would not be wiser to retain the more exemplary men in association, and remove the offending members to the cells? He says that under proper training the tone of the association will be what it is desirable to attain, and of such a nature as to improve those removed to it; and he affirms as the result of thirty-two more observations, that this is, and has been, the case with several hundred prisoners, whose conduct will favourably compare with any association of labourers whatever.

Captain Crofton quotes later statistics than any yet published, to show that the results of the intermediate system still continue more satisfactory than could have been anticipated. Since January, 1856, there had been discharged from the intermediate prisons 1327, of which number 511 were discharged with commuted sentences unconditionally, and 816 on license. Of the 511 unconditionally discharged, only five have been reconsigned to the convict prisons. Of the 816 discharged on license, forty-five have had their licenses revoked, fifteen of these being for keeping bad company, drunkenness, failing to report themselves, &c. The reconvictions, amounting to only thirty, not four per cent., though 467 of the 816 are reported on, and the information is in their cases positive, and therefore reliable. Captain Crofton adds:

"When I further state that from fifty to sixty discharged convicts are under constant notice in this city (Dublin), and that amongst them are those whose evil and daring deeds have formerly made them but too notorious to the police—that many of these have for upwards of two years been in daily work; that I am in the habit of constantly and regularly communicating with the police, for the purpose of checking and correcting any report I may receive—it will, I think, be evident how much the Intermediate System and its training have accomplished, not alone, but in conjunction with the power of prevention, the firm, judicious, and not inquisitorial use of the police."

The conclusions which Colonel Jebb draws may be briefly stated. In the first place he says that the character of the convicts in this country and the circumstances differ so much from those in Ireland, that any plan for congregating them together under less control than is at present exercised, would not be calculated to render them more fit for discharge, or give the officers to whose care they might be consigned better, or even the same opportunities of judging of their character as those which exist at present. Captain Crofton denies that the character of the convicts and circumstances of the two countries are essentially different; draws attention to the assumption that knowledge of character may be desirable in Ireland, but that it is unnecessary and inapplicable to England; and says the assertion, that officers have a better opportunity of judging the character of men in large masses than in the smaller number located in intermediate prisons, is contrary to all experience. Secondly, Colonel Jebb is of opinion that even if the objects he mentioned could be promoted by removing selected convicts into separate small intermediate establishments, with diminished control and more voluntary action, the exhibition of convict discipline in such a form would impair the exemplary character and deterrent effects of a sentence of penal servitude, which, on all accounts, it is most essential to preserve as the most formidable of our secondary punishments. Captain Crofton shows that this objection has no applicability to intermediate prisons as they ought to be established, inasmuch as no prison dietary or system, seen or unseen, should be of a character to sacrifice the deterring element of punishments. The third conclusion drawn by Colonel Jebb is, that however desirable it may be in a penal colony, and however successful in Ireland, it would be impossible in this country to carry out any general superintendence over discharged prisoners by the police without interfering with the means of their obtaining employment, and thus a greater evil would be created than any good which could possibly follow. Captain Crofton on this important point urges that supervision not having been even tried in England, it is premature to conclude a failure, if inaugurated under a well-considered system; and he asks why statements of convicts who have again been convicted, and are endeavouring to excuse their idleness and crime, are to be assumed to be correct, when there is reliable evidence to the contrary. It is in evidence, he says, before the House of Commons Committee, that the police did not properly distinguish between ticket-of-leave men and other discharged convicts. He has the experience of Ireland to prove that the system has worked well under precisely similar circumstances to England.

Digitized by Google

We cannot enter more fully into the details of the controversy, but the impression on our mind, after reading the arguments pro and con., is that Captain Crofton has successfully defended his own position, and shown that the introduction of the intermediate system into England is far from being an impossibility. It is worthy of notice, also, that the Board on whom has devolved the working out of the system comprises two gentlemen, (Captain Whitty and Captain Knight), who are acknowledged by Colonel Jebb to have very great practical experience of the English convict system.

HOME FOR FEMALES DISCHARGED FROM PRISON.

The urgent want of a place of temporary refuge for females convicted of slight offences, and discharged from prison after undergoing punishment, with perhaps a shilling in their possession, but no home of any kind to proceed to, whereby they are of necessity compelled to fall back upon evil practices, had long been felt in Kent as in other counties; but no steps were taken to remedy the crying evil up to within a recent period, when the respected governor of the county prisons at Maidstone, Mr. G. W. Hillyard, set on foot a movement which was speedily taken up by the Lord-Lieutenant and by other noblemen and gentlemen of influence in the county, and an establishment, necessarily at present limited in its operation, was formed, under the rules of which females, after a first conviction, having been under the zealous religious ministrations of the chaplain, are received and instructed, and put in the way to retrieve their characters, to obtain good situations, and to become useful domestics and worthy members of society. This philanthropic measure has, we are happy to say, worked remarkably well, and it is sincerely to be hoped that its sphere of usefulness will be largely increased by the erection, at an early date, of a building somewhat similar to that known as the Refuge for Female Convicts, at Fulham. Of this admirable institution, a London contemporary writes thus:—

"The Refuge at Fulham is a new and very interesting establishment for the reception of female convicts during the last twelve or fifteen months of their sentences of penal servitude. They are here placed in an intermediate stage of discipline, in which, though apparently left very much at liberty, they are still under that degree of superintendence which, while it ensures regularity, does not manifest itself in control.

"We have never seen so happy a combination of these and other elements of training, nor a more striking instance of their effect in the spirit of cheerful industry and good order which is observable throughout.

"The establishment consists of a large old mansion and certain new buildings. The former has been converted into offices, stores, &c., as far as was required, and into dormitories for about forty or fifty prisoners.

"The buildings, however, most deserving of attention are those which have been added, namely, the chapel, a new wing containing the separate sleeping places, and a laundry, all connected together by an arched corridor, and each conveniently adapted for its purpose. The main building contains on the ground floor four large rooms, two of which are workrooms, a third is for school purposes, and the fourth for taking meals, &c. The centre is occupied by stairs and offices; and the dormitories which are on the first floor, are ranged in two stages or storeys on each side of a corridor, the upper one opening on galleries. The sleeping places, divided by corrugated iron partitions and open railings, are nine feet long by five feet six inches broad, each with a small window and a flue for ventilation. They contain a bed, washing stand, table and stool, shelves, pegs, &c.

"These buildings are disposed round three sides of a square, a portion of which is divided off by iron railings as a drying ground, the remainder being laid down in grass and gravel for exercise.

"The inmates, amounting to about 180, are, as already explained, sentenced to long terms of of confinement, few being for less than four or five years; and the discipline under which they are brought is the last of the progressive stages applicable to female convicts under such sentences.

"Varied and continuous industrial employment, combined with religious, moral, and school instruction, and great liberty of action, are the leading features of the discipline, rising at a quarter before six, and going to bed at nine. The daily routine comprises prayers, morning and evening, of about half an hour's duration, washing, laundrywork, cooking, baking, house and needlework, employment in the garden and grounds, &c. A portion of the women are at school, or under the Scripture reader, daily; and during the evening, when all have the privilege of working for themselves, the matrons read to them.

"We learn that 173 prisoners have been discharged since the first was liberated, in August, 1856, the establishment having been opened on the 8th of May preceding. To those who are practically acquainted with the class of women under consideration, and are aware of the difficulties with which they are surrounded on discharge, liable, as they are, to meet the scorn of the world on the one hand, and its still more dangerous allurements on the other, it will be a matter of astonishment that so many are doing well, either with their own families, or in service, or otherwise gaining an honest livelihood.

"The following is the carefully digested account of the Chaplain, in reference to them up to the present time:—Total discharged 173, of whom 129 on expiration of sentence, forty-one on license, two on free pardon, one on medical grounds. Of these during the period of two years and a quarter there have been re-convicted one, awaiting trial one, licenses revoked three, unfavourable accounts received fourteen, doubtful cases (about one-half of which may be reckoned favourable) thirty-five, favourable cases recommended to and taken in hand by the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society twenty-five, good reports received as decidedly hopeful cases ninety-two, have died since discharged two.

"In the attainment of this result, the authorities speak most gratefully of the effective assistance they have received from the Prisoners' Aid Society, and Elizabeth Fry Refuge, the clergy generally, and other benevolent persons, without which many of the women who are now living respectably would, doubtless, have been unable to put into practice the good resolutions they might have formed, and all the care bestowed upon them would thus have been thrown away.

"We may conscientiously say, in conclusion, that we do not believe there is an institution in this or any other country which will, in the minutest detail, bear a closer examination, and in which the management in all its essentials is more admirably carried out."

An institution like the above, but upon a smaller scale, would be of immense benefit in this county, and we heartily trust that we shall soon witness its establishment.

Digitized by Google

REFORMATORIES AND FACTORIES.

The following is a brief account of a paper read at the monthly meeting of the Reformatory Governors' Association, held at the rooms of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, 118, Pall Mall, on Wednesday, the 13th October, by Miss Hargrave, on the question, "Is it desirable to send the inmates of our institutions to labour in factories?" The paper was a very interesting one, containing, among other matters, an account of the treatment which some of the girls had been subjected to, while in a factory near Manchester. In the course of her paper she made the following remarks:—

"I never was in a more miserable place in my life, than the mill in which these girls worked. At my request they were brought to me for inspection, and those that came under my notice looked thin and ill. One had been there four years, and was employed in the winding room. Said she had been frequently beaten by the master for not satisfying him as to the quantity of work she had done. Was occasionally kept without food; but, according to the master's account, being a better behaved girl than the others, she was better treated than they. She did not know what she earned; but at the fair held in the summer, she received five shillings to spend, as a reward for a year's work, if there were no stoppages! The next had been there the same time, and worked in the winding room. Her treatment was more unkind than that of the others, perhaps from having had a bad temper. She received a smaller sum to spend at the fair than her companion. The third was much more depressed, and it was evident she was not a favourite. She weighed out the cotton to the hands, and I afterwerds found that it was no unusual thing for her to lose three, and sometimes four dinners a week, because it was said she wasted the cotton. I next saw the overseer, who had been there three months. He, it appeared, had improved the condition of the inmates; and, had all power been given to him, he would have cleared the mill of all objectionable characters, that had probably been there for years. It would not be necessary, neither would it be profitable, to relate all the facts brought before me by this overseer. He said great dissatisfaction prevailed generally among the hands, and that they frequently ran away. He complained of the food as being of a very inferior quality, consisting of brown bread, frequently sour; boiled lights, &c. They worked in the mill from six in the morning till six in the evening, and after that they did the washing, mending, cleaning, &c., in the house. They were not allowed out of the grounds, except when going to church, where they were frequently sent without stockings. They never went to school, and the only instruction these poor neglected girls received was an occasional hour's reading on Sundays. At last the mill was closed, the master declaring himself bankrupt; and at the end of four years' labour, 11 girls, from 15 to 19 years of age, were sent from the factory with two and sixpence, and two loaves of bread, amongst them, to make their way to London or elsewhere, if they felt disposed. After begging by day, and sleeping in barns or under trees by night, a few of these poor girls arrived in London, after being eight weary days on the road. The others, not being able to endure the hardships of a "tramp" to London, were compelled to return in a day or two. A week or eight days again passed, and the only remaining children at the mill were two girls, 13 and 14 years of age. These two were sent, like the others, to find their way to London, as best they could, with one loaf, some meat, and a shilling, amongst them, to carry them on their way to the metropolis, where they arrived in 14 days. Such cruelty to unprotected children, it is hoped, is seldom heard of, and the fact of these things taking place under any circumstances, should make us very particular as to the situations we provide for our girls; and it is my firm opinion, based upon past experience, that it is not advisable to send any of them to factories which are not in the immediate vicinity of London. There must, surely, be vacancies nearer home, where one would have some kind of moral control over them, after they had left our institutions."

WORTHY OF ALL SUPPORT.

A new local effort is being made at Hastings to aid in the important work of domestic education. A "School Kitchen" is about to be opened in St. Mary's-in-the-Castle in this town, having for its objects the instruction of girls in plain cooking, It is for this object that we specially commend the undertaking and wish it success. The following prospectus will explain the movement in its details:—

A kitchen has been built, with rooms for a manager, fitted up with everything requisite for cooking for the sick and poor of the parish of St. Mary-in-the-Castle.

The objects proposed are two, namely:—

1st. To instruct some of the elder girls in the St. Mary's Parochial Schools in plain cooking.

2nd. To provide well-prepared food for the sick, poor, and aged, especially the sick poor.

A large outlay has been made in the building and fitting up of the kitchen, &c. Though some kind friends have very liberally assisted in donations to this object, yet a further considerable sum is required to set the whole in operation, as speedily as possible, before the winter sets in. Annual subscriptions will also be required to pay the salary of the manager, for coals, &c.

Tickets will be issued at two prices, 6d. and 9d., the 6d. ticket entitling the holder to broth or pudding—the 9d. ticket to a plate of meat and vegetables, or good beef tea. The holders of tickets must bring them to the manager before three o'clock in the day, and come to receive their portions on the following day, at twelve o'clock (Sundays excepted).

The manager (Mrs. Payne) will be under the direction of a committee consisting of the following ladies:—Mrs. Davis, West Hill Lodge; Mrs. Mackness, 22, Wellington-square: Misses Sayer, Marine-parade; Miss Loft and Miss J. Loft, 3, Castle-place.

Donations and subscriptions, either to the general fund or for tickets, will be received by any of the ladies of the committee, or by Miss Thatcher, at the Pelham Baths.

The Clergy of St. Mary's—the Rev. Thomas Vores and the Rev. H. Geldart, under whose sanction the whole of the arrangements have been made—will gladly undertake to distribute tickets for any subscribers who may desire them to do so.

The News in reference to the movement, says:—Many a drunkard has been made what he is by bad cooking and a slovenly home, and by a scolding or a lazy wife—one hardly knows which of the two latter qualities is the worst! A frugal and tidy wife, with brains enough to be otherwise attractive, is the surest thing in the world to make a man love his home better than the tap-room and the "free and easy."

One great defect in the early education of poor people's children—the girls who are to become the wives of our artizans and mechanics—is seen in the want of ability to manage a home with tidiness and economy. Why should one woman always have her meals properly cooked, and her house cleaned up at the proper time (that is the time at which her husband comes home tired and perhaps vexed in temper from his work)—whilst another of the same means has bad dinners and an untidy house, a poor entertainment and a cheerless welcome? Difference in temperament has much to do with it, doubtless: for an energetic woman will soon discover her defects and set about rectifying them; but the main reason is the want of a right early training. Anything that helps to supply this want is to be hailed as a good to society, come in what shape it may; and will do much towards removing the causes of drunkenness from our land.

Recordership of Newcastle-under-Lyne.—We have much satisfaction, says Aris's Birmingham Gazette, in announcing that our respected stipendary magistrate, Mr. Kynnersley, has been appointed by the Crown to the recordership of Newcastle-under-Lyne. Although we cannot congratulate Mr. Kynnersley on the emolument of the appointment, we are sure that it cannot be otherwise than gratifying to him to be thus connected by responsible office with the county in which his family has been seated for so long a period. The duties of the recordership, we may add, are so light that the learned gentleman will not be called upon to make any considerable sacrifice of time in discharging them.

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

To the Editor of The Philanthropist.

SIR,—I beg to offer you my hearty thanks for having inserted my letter of October 25th in your November number, and, while I would not attempt to encroach upon your columns, I would beseech you to give a place to this letter in your next issue for December. It is true I have found by sad experience that letter-writing will never settle this painful business of mine; still, Sir, by your aid in granting me this additional favour, the matter may be brought into that channel that at last a fair public investigation shall become unavoidable.

I have before this stated over and over again that I court a public investigation: I now demand it. In this, I think, I shall have the support of all my brethren, the prison chaplains, indeed, of all members of her Majesty's civil service. To every one of them I could say, as Horace said, after giving the anecdote of his Athenian miser—"Mutato nomine, de te," &c.

The following copy of a note, which I have recently received, will show the position to which I am reduced, as a subject of the Queen in her world-wide empire, where the sound of Christ's blessed gospel is never unheard as the revolving sun carries round the rolling hours of each day. You shall know by it, and by what I shall besides tell you, that my punishment is carried to the bounds of endurance,—that my "name is cast out as evil,"—that in fact I am cast out with those with whom "no man might buy or sell," &c. (Rev. xiii. 17.)

I have already given you to understand that, since my unrighteous dismissal, I have been pursued with the most unfounded calumnies, which have cut me off from the hopes of church livings, and even curacies.

The note to which I refer is from the patron of a living, who, from the great age of the incumbent, was looking out for a curate. It is as follows:—

"C——, Nov. 9th, 1858.

"Rev. Sir,—Under the circumstances of your case, I much regret that I am about to disappoint you; but I feel so sure that —— (the rector) would agree with me in considering you ineligible for the curacy, that I have no other course to take.—I am, &c., ——."

You may suppose, Sir, that this was a heavy blow to me, as I had looked forward to this curacy as a haven for the winter. Now I know not what step to take, nor whither to turn. It is only He who is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and was in all points tempted like as we are," who can guide me, and dispose the hearts of His followers to look into my wrongs. After being in holy orders close upon a quarter of a century, and now turned adrift upon the world, with every avenue closed against me through the calumnies which are sown broadcast, as I have found, through England, I think you, and every dispassionate judge, will decide that I have been punished with a vengeance for having "offended the superior officers" of the convict hulk, "Defence," at Woolwich. It is above twenty-one years since I commenced my first duties with her Majesty's convicts, and I challenge all the governors and officers that I have worked with, anywhere in the world, to come forward, and state upon oath, that my conduct was not invariably that of a gentleman. All the schoolmasters and Scripture-readers of prisons with whom I have worked would affirm what I state; and I know that the hundreds upon hundreds of convicts with whom I have had dealings would say the same. I feel sure, Sir, therefore, you will give me all the aid in your power towards clearing my name from the cruel dishonour and falsehood which has been cast upon it.

I beg, Sir, you will allow me to add to the remarks which, by your favour, I have already made public, on Col. Jebb's letter in your October number, that Col. Jebb in that letter does but give a farther description than I had done of the weapons by which I was destroyed, although he professed to inform you of the truth. I would remind Col. Jebb that the roots of the real truth date much farther back than the two or three letters to which he made allusion merely by their dates. He did not tell you that when, feeling my heavy responsibilities to my God, my queen, and my fellow-countrymen, I made a certain communication to Sir George Grey (March 20, 1856), he took offence at that communication, and wrote to me in such a strain, that I saw his object was to pick a quarrel with me, and mark me, the chaplain, as the scapegoat for the amazing sins and iniquities of the convict establishment. I would only ask Col. Jebb whether I did not tell him in my answer, that I saw he intended me for the "scapegoat," and whether in about eight months thereafter he did not bring his designs to pass.

I advance nothing, nor ever have, nor will, but what I can prove in public; and then the public will see how their interests have been sacrificed. But who, Sir, can the public know anything of these matters, until some one devoted to destruction through them shall bring them to the light?

The public know absolutely nothing, nor can know, nor ever will, concerning our dark, secret, and mysterious prison system, until they demand an open explanation. It may be all very well for a time for a wealthy and luxurious community to content themselves with "fiant experimenta in corporibus vilibus;" but——I will say no more.

The whole of the correspondence which I have carried on will be published in due time.

I must beg your permission to remark that, when Col. Jebb says my dismissal was the only remedy remaining to allay the "discord" which prevailed; he could not have remembered how differently he treated my predecessor. He was charged with the same alleged offence as myself, and by all accounts "discord" raged; still the above-named gentleman was only removed elsewhere by Col. Jebb, and he is chaplain of a convict prison to this day.

I perceive that "One who knows the Truth" has addressed you, and of this I knew nothing until, meeting him, he told me he had written to you. His letter speaks for itself, and requires no comment from me, except just to say that I should hope Col. Jebb will candidly and straightforwardly reply to all his heads seriatim. Sir G. Grey's Commissioners, to whom he alludes, were Messrs. Perry and Arnott,—in February, 1856; and I would most respectfully call upon the Right Hon. the Home Secretary, as he tenders the Queen's honour and his own, to publish the evidence taken by Messrs. Perry and Arnott, and their Report to the Home Secretary; also, the evidence taken by Capt. O'Brien, Capt. Whitty, and Capt. Gambier, in April, 1856 (just previous to the Governor's absconding), with their Report. And lastly, the evidence given before Mr. Hall, of Bow-street, in November, 1857, with his Report.

You may believe me, Sir, when I assure you that your correspondent, "One who knows the Truth," is a man of truth, and is so known and respected by his circle of friends, some of them in high positions.

I call upon you to witness, Sir, whether you cannot perceive by my letters that I am most anxiously desirous for a public investigation; while, on the contrary, what you have as yet seen in reply evidently deprecate any farther publicity.

By inserting the above, as an impartial and christian "philanthropist," you will deeply oblige

Sir,
Your faithful servant,
J. K. WALPOLE,
Late Chaplain in Her Majesty's Convict Service.

Plumstead, Kent,
November 24, 1858.

Digitized by Google

THE PROPOSED COAL MINERS' BENEFIT SOCIETY.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

SIR,—I regret to state that the conflict between the coal masters and their miners of this district, relative to the proposed 15 per cent. reduction of wages, still continues, without any prospect of a speedy settlement of the question, as both parties appear to be as firm as ever: the masters having twice refused the proposed arbitration of the men, as well as another offer. My great object ever since the struggle commenced, now more than seven months ago, has been to encourage the miners to persevere in their just claims, in order to secure funds to carry out the proposed Coal Miners' Benefit Society, the first draft of which I now lay before your readers, in order that they may see the necessity of supporting our cause, and of correcting my proposed payments if they consider that they are either more or less than they ought to be to obtain the objects proposed. I have just consulted a venerable and pious old miner, who has worked sixty years in the coal pits, as to the allowance which he could wish to have provided for his brother workmen who have to follow that dangerous calling, and which, from his own premature old age and broken down constitution, he is no longer able to endure.

I have not had the benefit of any person's advice or suggestion as to the proposed payments—they are entirely my own; and, therefore, I should esteem it as a favour if parties taking an interest in these matters would be kind enough to write to me on the subject, with such suggestions and amendments as they think proper to make.

In conclusion, I would beg to observe that, should my calculations be nearly correct, it appears quite clear that if the coal masters are successful in their reduction of 15 per cent. of the money wages, and which can only be effected by starving out the men, there will be an end of the eight hours' blessing, as well as the proposed Miners' Benefit Society, and all its advantages; for, supposing the miners' age average forty years, and they commence paying 3s. per week in order to obtain the advantages hereafter alluded to, it is just the sum per week of 15 per cent. off their old wages. I hope, therefore, the coal masters will perceive this fact, and at once come to amicable arrangements with their workmen. And should the masters still stand out, surely the public at large, and all rate-payers, will insist, in a voice and manner which cannot be resisted, that the poor fellows shall have such a remuneration in wages paid to them as shall secure to themselves and families a comfortable maintenance, as well as to provide funds for sickness, and for those accidents and deaths to which the dangerous nature of their employment renders them peculiarly liable, and which, if not provided for out of their wages, will have to be made up sooner or later out of the poor rates of the country at large

To show the necessity of allowing the men employed in coal mines sufficient wages to provide for the maintenance of themselves and their families in a proper manner, as well as to form an union to raise funds for their sick, disabled, and widows, it may be stated, that according to a parliamentary document lately issued, there are no less than 230,000 persons employed in the coal mines of Great Britain; whilst the lives lost during the following years were as under:—

984	lives lost in	1851	963	lives lost in	1855
986	do.	1852	1027	do.	1856
957	do.	1853	1119	do.	1857
1045	do.	1854

7081 lives lost in seven years! Who can refuse to sympathise with that portion of our hard-toiling population subject to such lamentable visitations? But these awful figures tell only part of their tale of misery. Only consider the numerous accidents of which there is no account, the number of widows and fatherless children thrown on the wide world for want of a proper provision being previously provided to meet their wants; to say nothing of that deep distress arising from the loss of the younger unmarried men, who during their lifetime are either partially or wholly maintaining their widowed mothers, whose husbands had lost their lives in the pits on previous explosions.

THE PROPOSED COAL MINERS' BENEFIT SOCIETY.

1st. Miners not under fifteen years, nor above fifty years of age, may become members by paying a contribution of from 1s. 6d. to 6s. per week, varying with the age they entered the society, will entitle them to receive the following allowances:—2nd. An allowance of 10s. per week to be paid to the members during sickness or temporary incapability of labour. 3rd. An allowance of 5s. per week to be paid to every member from the 60th birthday to the close of life, or during permanent incapability of labour until death, and 4s. per week during the widowhood of any member's wife. 4th. An allowance of £5 to be paid on the death of any member, and £4 on the death of any member's wife or widow.

If a miner be forty years of age, he will have to pay 3s. per week in order to reap the advantages alluded to.

RICHARD BAYLDON,
Treasurer to the Wakefield and Methley Miners' Association.

Methley, near Wakefield,
Nov. 8th, 1858.

FALLEN CHARACTERS AND UNIONS.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

SIR,—May I hope for a corner in your December number of the Philanthropist, to state a few thoughts which have arisen in my own mind since reading one of the leading articles in the Times of November 12th, where the editor suggests thoughtful enquiry as to the future occupancy of the unoccupied wards of our English workhouses? It seems to me—and I speak from the experience of ten years' visiting in workhouses and among the poor—that great moral good might be effected, and with very slight increase of poor-rates, if we would now think of how to benefit one particular class of our land, for whom nothing is now provided by parochial charity but the dreaded "foul ward" of our Unions, where hope cannot enter. The editor of the Times honoured me last winter by inserting a letter of mine on the present hopelessness of the unfortunate women who have once fallen in seeking recovery. I there said, "Why not have a reformatory-ward in every Union-house, where, when relieved from the first pressure of bodily illness which brought them in, they might be trained to earn their bread when they left?—a simple reformatory ward, where those weary of their former lives might learn to live decently and seek situations from thence?"

Now, sir, recalling the recent agitation on the subject of the existing 'social evil of our land," and thinking of the difficulty (till Diocesan Penitentiaries are established) of laying any chance of amelioration before these unhappy ones, except in a few isolated cases,—and what are they among so many?—and, then, falling back on the statement in the Times of the inadequately filled workhouses—could not the attention of the Poor Law Board be roused,—of Poor Law Guardians (the very word suggests kindly supervision over those who wish to reform!) and of our magistrates as ex officio guardians, to give the matter due consideration, and thus see if in every large county town there might not be organised a sort of Home or Refuge in the workhouse, where these poor girls, placed under the sole care of a tried and judicious matron, might be led to "arise and come to their Father," and so once more struggle upwards to newness of life.

I speak advisedly when I state that, under the present state of things, scarcely one poor degraded girl in a hundred who is sent to gaol for disorderly conduct, and there begins to consider her ways, and to long for an opening to escape from the often abhorred life, scarcely one will return to the workhouse, where the diet is inferior to the prison fare; the oakum picking, to which she is at once put, is a degrading unwomanly employment, and very hard work too to fingers which have perhaps been unused to such rough occupation; and life is so dull, so hopeless, that she leaves the Union and goes back to her miserable life. Oh! how different would it be could those interested in such matters meet the subdued girl, as she steps over the threshold of the goal into the world again, and say to her, "Come back to the workhouse, but not to the 'black ward,' and you will find shelter there, and be taught a business of washing, ironing, needlework, &c., and if you are sincere in your wish for reformation, and remain there, where ladies may visit you, and kind discipline may protect you, till you have become sobered, altered, humanised, and then that the guardians will do their best to get you a place of service, and you have once more an honest walk in life opened to you."

Digitized by Google

I offer these few "yeasty" observations, only deserving insertion—if you so honour them—as emanating from one who deeply mourns over the present hopeless condition of such fallen sisters.

Yours obediently,

AN ENGLISH LADY.

Nov. 20th, 1858.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

SIR,—In your article in the last number of the Philanthropist, on the "Reformatory and Refuge Union," you notice and lament the want of "a large body, a central focus," for the promotion of the cause of Homes and Penitentiaries for women. I should have thought that the existence of such a society as that of the "Church Penitentiary Association," established in ———, must have been widely known by this time. But as it seems to supply exactly the need you point out, I may mention that its objects are precisely those which you desire to see carried out. It is "a special society" for the purpose of organising help for the class of persons you allude to; "for promoting and aiding the establishment and maintenance of Penitentiaries and Houses of Refuge for fallen women throughout the country." The office is at 35, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, where information may be obtained about the Refuges and Penitentiaries already established.

Your obedient servant,

L.

Nov. 25th.

THE NEW-CUT RAGGED SCHOOL.

THE annual meeting of subscribers and those interested in ragged schools was held on Tuesday, Nov. 23rd, at the St. Thomas School room, Waterloo-road; the Lord Mayor presiding. A report was read by the Secretary containing an account of the progress of the New-Cut Ragged School since its commencement. During the past year 210 boys had been admitted, and the average daily attendance 89, of whom a great proportion could not read or write when they joined the school. From the financial account it appeared that a small balance was due to the treasurer. The Lord Mayor made some observations in favour of ragged schools. He said that if education of a wholesome character were not offered to the poor children of the metropolis, they must obtain that cheap but pernicious education of the streets, where they soon learned to thieve, and finally got confirmed in their evil habits by the deteriorating influence of a prison residence. It was to prevent crime rather than to punish it among those unfortunate children that the duty of society lay, and there was no means half so efficacious for attaining that end as that of ragged schools. It was impossible to believe how many had been saved from the streets and from the gaols by the beneficial operations of such cheap and humble institutions. Mr. W. Locke, in moving the adoption of the report, also spoke of the advantages derived from ragged schools, and said that there were not now so many idle, neglected children in the streets, as 20,000 of them last year attended these schools. The Rev. R. Robertson, Mr. G. Cruikshank, and other gentlemen addressed the meeting in further advocacy of these schools, upon the behalf of which a collection was made. A vote of thanks to the Lord Mayor concluded the proceedings.

ESCAPE OF BOYS FROM A REFORMATORY.

On Monday, November 15th, at the Leeds Court-house, four boys, respectively named Samuel Seaman, Samuel Parratt, Samuel Mason, and James Wilson, were charged with absconding from Adel Reformatory, near Leeds, and Martin Weatherill and Sarah Weatherill, and Eliza Collins and Mary Ann Rowan, and Francis Fallan and James Haley, two well-known thieves, were charged with harbouring them. The lads escaped from the Reformatory at Adel on the previous Sunday morning, and came to Leeds, and went to a house of ill fame in Templar Lane, kept by Collins and Rowan, and there changed their reformatory dress. They then arranged to go to York fair on the following day, for the purpose of picking pockets, the money for their journey being found by Fallan and Haley. Mason and Wilson then left the house, and went to see Mr. and Mrs. Weatherill, the latter of whom was Mason's sister. Here they were found by the police concealed in the coal cellar, both Weatherill and his wife having previously denied all knowledge of them. The other two lads were taken in Lady-lane by the police. Weatherill and his wife were discharged upon their pleading that they intended to return the boys to the school, and all the prisoners were remanded.

STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society was held on Friday, November 19th, at Exeter Hall—Mr. Burchett in the chair. The report of the committee, after alluding to the great increase in the pauperism of the metropolis, caused by the commercial crisis and the consequent increase of the parochial rates, in some cases to the extent of 56 per cent., proceeded to say that such a state of things pressed heavily upon the society, as it not only added to the number to be relieved, but also crippled the means of those who might feel inclined to contribute towards its funds, so that to meet the expenditure of the year it had become necessary to sell out £500 stock. The general income of the society, including donations and subscriptions, was £1703 16s., and the extraordinary income £91 11s. 11d.; making in all £1795 7s. 11d., or £39 less than in the previous year. For the purposes of the society the committee have divided the metropolis into 21 districts, which are under the care of 370 visitors, who, during the past year, relieved 6340 cases of destitution, or about 30,000 persons. In administering this relief they paid 29,290 visits, and expended £1620 4s. 3d. This report was adopted and some routine business transacted, when the proceedings terminated in the usual manner.

OUR readers will be glad to hear that Mr. Charles Ratcliff, brother of Sir J. Ratcliff, Mayor of Birmingham, and who is so intimately connected with the Saltley Reformatory, and indeed almost all charitable institutions, was called to the bar, on Wednesday. Nov. 17th. Mr. Ratcliff and his brother are two gentlemen ever ready to assist a good cause, and it is no inconsiderable honour and compliment which has been paid to Sir J. Ratcliff that he has been elected for the third year to fill the honourable office of Mayor of Birmingham.

AT WESTERTON'S LIBRARY,
120,000 VOLUMES IN CIRCULATION.

 Books sent once a week to Wandsworth, Wimbledon, and its vicinity.

Single Subscription, One Guinea per Annum.

WESTERTON'S LIBRARY, HYDE-PARK-CORNER.

HOMES for SERVANTS OUT of PLACE:
21, Nutford-place, Edgeware-road, W.; Superintendent, Mrs. Butcher.
110, Hatton-garden, Holborn, E.C.: Superintendent, Mrs. Peake.
52, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-rd., S.: Superintendent, Mrs. Garrard.
Lodgings, &c., at 1s. 6d. per week.
FUNDS are needed from the benevolent public. These Homes have been established many years, and have sheltered more than 6000 young women; 31,000, unable to pay, have registered free. Of the 100,000 servants in London, 10,000 are always out of place and changing places.
Treasurer—R. C. L. Bevan, Esq.
Bankers—Messrs. Barclay and Co.
DANIEL COOPER, Hon. Sec.

SHIP OAK LOGS for WINTER FIRES.
Superior SHIP OAK TIMBER for Firewood, cut into suitable lengths, for grates of any size, is sold at the old-established Ship Breaker's Yard, Bridge Wharf, Battersea, at 20s. per cart load, delivered within four miles. It makes a warm, agreeable, and lasting fire, and having been patronized for many years, can with confidence be recommended. Address W. C. TARVER, Bridge Wharf, Battersea, S.W. Cash on delivery.

Digitized by Google

SPECIAL AND URGENT APPEAL.

SURREY SOCIETY for the EMPLOYMENT and REFORMATION of DISCHARGED PRISONERS. Established in 1824.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester.
His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.
The Most Noble the Marquis of Bristol.
The Right Honourable the Earl of Egmont.
The Right Honourable the Earl Somers.
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Winchester.
The High Sheriff.
H. Drummond, Esq., M.P. } Members for the County.
J. I. Briscoe, Esq., M.P.
Hon. J. P. Locke King, M.P.
Thomas Alcock, Esq., M.P.
Lord Lovaine, } Chairmen of Quarter Sessions.
Edward Penrhyn, Esq.
J. W. Freshfield, Esq.
J. E. Johnson, Esq.
T. Tilson, Esq.

COMMITTEE.

Charles Baldwin, Esq., 28, Sussex Square, Hyde Park Gardens.
A. K. Barclay, Esq., Bury Hill, Dorking.
Rev. G. W. Cockerell, St. John's Lodge, Battersea.
The Hon. Sydney Roper Curzon, Grove House, Tooting.
Rev. H. A. Dixon, Trinity Square, Southwark.
S. Elyard, Esq., Balham Hill, Tooting.
C. Francis, Esq., Belgrave House, Wandsworth Road East.
J. C. Fyler, Esq., Woodlands, Bagshot.
J. H. Goodhart, Esq., Upper Tooting.
H. Gosse, Esq., Epsom.
J. Jeffery, Esq., 10, Weymouth Street.
J. E. Johnson, Esq., 14, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars.
J. Ledger, Esq., Back Street, Horselydown.
J. More Molyneux, Esq., Losely Park, Guildford.
R. Onslow, Esq., Wandsworth Common.
Capt. Leycester Penrhyn, East Sheen.
T. Puckle, Esq., Clapham Common.
R. Ricardo, Esq., 10, Park Sq. East, Regent's Park.
Charles Nelson Wilkinson, Esq., Wandsworth Common.

TREASURER.

Charles Curling, Esq., Clapham Common.

SECRETARY.

Rev. H. J. Hatch, Wandsworth Common.
F. Gould, Esq., Local Hon. Secretary, Kingston.

BANKERS.

Dimsdale and Co., 50, Cornhill.

The funded property has been completely sold out. The Committee at their last meeting were unable to meet the whole of the accounts. Those placed in institutions are paid for, generally, at 5s. per head per week, between £60 and £70 per month, besides aid given to others not adapted for institutions, in tools, clothes, emigration, or otherwise. The Committee have hitherto paid all accounts monthly, and as a rule avoid debt; so that unless some assistance be granted immediately, they will be compelled, however reluctantly, to discharge some of those now doing well in institutions. It is grievous enough to be unable to aid the many now entreating to be snatched from a life of wretchedness; but to discharge back on the world those who are doing well in institutions, seems very shocking; like driving them upon desperation and a return to prison, for those whom it is desired to aid are generally without home, friends, money, or character, and, however willing, can seldom or never get employment; and the result may be easily imagined.

The Committee, in behalf of a very pitiable class of our fellow-creatures, entreat the kind support of the public, especially of the county of Surrey.

ITS OPERATIONS DURING THE YEAR 1857.

Prisoners on their discharge—

Sent to Reformatory Institutions	252
Restored to friends after correspondence	85
Sent home by train or steamer	45
Supplied with stock for sale, &c.	63
Provided with employment	32
Supplied with tools and clothing	25
Provided with temporary lodgings	4
Presented with small grants of money	552
Supplied with Bibles, prayer books, and tracts	53
Applied for help, but rejected for want of funds	39

PAYMENTS MADE DURING THE YEAR 1857.

	£	s.	d.
North-West London Institution	99	3	7
Brixton Reformatory	79	4	6
Home in the East	57	19	0
Gun Street Refuge	28	19	0
Philanthropic Society	34	19	8
Eastern Refuge	22	0	0
Rescue Society	15	14	0
Wandsworth Reformatory	265	13	11
Lock Hospital	10	10	0
Paid to and for prisoners on discharge	54	19	10

Donations and Subscriptions will be thankfully received by Charles Curling, Esq., Treasurer, Clapham Common; Rev. Henry J. Hatch, Secretary, Wandsworth Common; or any of the Committee.

Annual Reports will be sent on application to the Secretary, the Rev. H. J. Hatch, Wandsworth Common.

BRITISH PROVIDENT LIFE AND FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

4, Chatham Place, Blackfriars, London.

Established 1850.

Incorporated by Act of Parliament 7th and 8th Vict. cap. 110.

Capital £100,000, with power to increase to £1,000,000.

Trustees.

Sir Edward Bindloss Perrot, Bart., Plumstead, Kent.
The Rev. John Wood, Addington-place, Camberwell.

Directors.

Captain Thomas Malkin, Sandhurst Lodge, Queen's-road, Gloucester-gate, Regent's-park, Chairman.
John Britten, Esq., 21, Basinghall-street, and Collingtree, Northamptonshire.
G. Lane, Esq., Finchley-road, St. John's Wood.
William Burchett, Esq., Cheapside and Hammersmith.
Joseph Gimson, Esq., 1, Harewood-place, Harewood-sq.
John Sheridan, Esq., (Managing), Laburnum House, Brompton.
James Goad, Esq., Islington.

Auditors.

H. Brinsley Sheridan, Esq. (Manager of the "Times Life and Guarantee Company"), 32, Ludgate-hill, and Belfield House, Parson's Green, Fulham.
T. Wilson, Esq., 103, 104, and 105, Cheapside, and 7, York-terrace, Peckham.
Alexander Webber, Esq., Davies-street, Berkeley-square, and 47, Upper Baker-street, (Director of the "Times Life and Fire Assurance Company.)
J. Britten, jun Esq., 11, Basinghall-street.

Bankers.—

Physician.—William Grove Grady, M.D., F.R.C.S.E., M.R.C.S.I.
Surgeon.—William Harding, Esq., 4, Percy-street, Bedford-square.
Standing Counsel.—Henry P. Hinde, Esq., Hall Staircase, Inner-temple.
Solicitor—Henry Empson, Esq., 61, Moorgate-street.
Manager.—J. Sheridan, Esq.

LIFE POLICIES indisputable and not liable to forfeiture through inability to keep up the payments. Assurances on single, joint, and survivorship lives. Annuities—immediate, deferred, or survivorship. Endowments for Children. Assurances against accidents. Saving Fund Policies. Profits divided. Yearly, half-yearly, and quarterly payments taken.

EXAMPLE.

Single Life, with Profits, for 100l. at Death.

Age.	Yearly.	Half-yearly.	Quarterly.
30	2l. 5s. 3d.	1l. 2s. 8d.	11s. 4d.

THE GIRLS' REFUGE.—The KING EDWARD RAGGED & INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS and EASTERN REFUGE, Albert Street, Buxton Street, Brick Lane, Spitalfields.—The objects of this Institution are to educate and train in habits of industry that class of children who, for want of clothing, or the means of paying for instruction, are unable to attend other schools, and to gather in the vicious and depraved who swarm in our streets, and endeavour to civilize and instruct them, and, as far as the funds permit, to provide food, clothing, and shelter for the most destitute.

In the erection of this Institution, provision has been made for about seventy inmates, while accommodation exists for the daily instruction of more than 400 poor children. The number of Refuges which have of late years been opened for the reception of houseless and destitute boys induced the Committee to depart from their original intention, and make this a Refuge for girls. In addition to the large number of children under daily instruction, thirty-five destitute girls are now enjoying the benefits of the Refuge, and the Committee are desirous of extending the sphere of their usefulness, and to afford food, shelter, and clothing to at least thirty-five more.

The varied operations of such an Institution necessarily involve a large annual expenditure, to meet which, and to carry out to the full extent the objects contemplated in its erection, subscriptions and donations are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Samuel Gurney, Esq., M.P., Treasurer, Lombard Street; Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths, Bankers, 1, Lombard Street; and by the Hon. Sec., 2, Penbury Grove, Hackney.

H. R. WILLIAMS, Hon. Sec.

Just Published, price 3s. 6d., bound in cloth, Second Edition.

THE NIGHT-SIDE OF LONDON.

By J. EWING RITCHIE.

Seeing a Man Hanged—Catherine Street—The Bal Masque—Up the Haymarket—Ratcliff Highway—Judge and Jury Clubs—The Cave of Harmony—Discussion Clubs—Cider Cellars—Leicester Square Night Houses—Boxing Night—Caldwell's—Cremorne—The Costermonger's Free and Easy, &c.

W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

Just Published, price Sixpence,

THE REFORMATORY MOVEMENT: A PAPER

Read before the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, at Birmingham, October 15th, 1857,

By the Rev. HENRY J. HATCH, M.A., Magdalene College, Cambridge, Chaplain of the House of Correction, Wandsworth,

As the Representative of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, 118, Pall Mall.

London: Printed at the Preventive and Reformatory Institution, 237, Euston Road, N.W., near Gower-street North.

Will be forwarded on application, with seven postage stamps, to Rev. H. J. HATCH, Wandsworth.

ACCOUNT BOOKS, first-class.—Ledgers, Journals, Cash and Bill Books, Accounts Current, &c. Foreign Bills, English, French, German, and Spanish, in Books of 100 sets.—Copying Machines, Stamping Presses, Bankers' Cheques and Foreign Bank Notes Engraved; Overland Papers, the new "Bankers' Envelope."

NISSEN and PARKER, Printers and Exporting Stationers, 43, Mark Lane, London.

Now ready, Postage free,

A LIST of the Principal NEW and CHOICE BOOKS recently added to MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Also,

A LIST of SURPLUS COPIES of RECENT WORKS

Withdrawn from Circulation, and offered at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES FOR CASH.

CHARLES EDWARD MUDIE, New Oxford Street, London; and Cross Street, Manchester.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—HOME FOR OUTCAST BOYS, AND RAGGED FACTORY, Belvedere Crescent, near Hungerford Bridge, Lambeth.

An Exhibition and Sale of Ornamental Boxes for Gloves, Envelopes, Handkerchiefs, Trinkets, Knitting, &c., will be opened the week before Christmas.

These Boxes are the manufacture of the Boys in the Home, and will be sold for their benefit.

Visitors, whether purchasers or not, will be kindly welcomed.

A GUINEA PRAYER-BOOK for 6s. 6d.—The PICTORIAL BOOK of COMMON PRAYER, large type, with 600 beautiful Engravings, and bound in antique style, only 6s. 6d., or post-free for 7s. Copies should be secured immediately. Only to be had at Field's great bible warehouse, 65, Regent-street-quadrant, corner of Air-street.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.—Issue from the Depot until the present time Forty-two Millions of pages.

NEW TRACTS.

No.		Pages
262.	Job Brown's Two Glasses	4
263.	What is Port Wine?	4
264.	The Results of One Year's Drinking. By Joseph Livesey	4
265.	How liberally to Support a Church without Cost	2
266.	The British Workman's Home, what it too often is, and what it ought to be. By Rev. Stopford Ram	16
267.	The Public House. Is there not a spell on it?	8
268.	Five Shillings and Costs. By Hugh Stowell Brown.
269.	The Sabbath School Robbed. By J. P. Parker	2
270.	The Reclaimed Bricklayer; or, "Touch not the Drink." By J. P. Parker	4
271.	The Malt Liquor Delusion. By J. Livesey	2
272.	The Experience of a Hard-working "Navvie" from the Crimea. By J. P. Parker	4
273.	The Influence of Class upon Class in Supporting the Intemperance of our Country. By Samuel Bowly	12
274.	The Gold Piece. A Sketch from Life	4
275.	Sad Realities. Where does the Guilt lie? Who will remedy the Evil?	8
276.	An Awful Warning	1

All sold in Sixpenny Packets. Sent post free by remittance sent to RICHARD DYKES ALEXANDER, Ipswich. Fifty packets for a Guinea sent by train to London.

W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

The whole Series of Tracts and Juvenile Books post free for Nine Shillings.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,

SEE THAT YOU GET IT,

As inferior kinds are often substituted.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE.

January 1, 1859.

Index.

The Girls' Laundry and Training Institution for Young Servants 285
Adult Reformation 286
Refuge for Females at Fulham 286
Treatment of Criminals in Germany 287
Reformatory School for the County of Monmouth . 290
The Great Wen 294
Editorial Articles:
The Past Year 295
Reformatory and Refuge Union 296
St. Mark's School, Windsor 297
Cottage Improvement 298
Home for Convalescent Children 299
The Playground Society 300
Charles Street, Drury Lane, Ragged Schools 300
Correspondence:
Medical Charity 300
Jebb and Crofton Controversy 301
Profitable Employment of Prisoners and Paupers 302
Schools of Cookery 303
Reformatories and Ragged Schools—Their Comparative Economy 3

THE GIRLS' LAUNDRY AND TRAINING INSTITUTION FOR YOUNG SERVANTS.—West End House, near Hampstead, N.W.

This institution, which has been got up by the Reformatory and Refuge Union, was opened in July last, and now has fair promise of great usefulness.

The object is to receive girls of the age of fifteen and upwards, in order to afford them protection, to give them employment, and to prepare them for future service.

It is important that it should be clearly understood that this Institution is neither a Refuge nor a Reformatory, but an Industrial Home, under the protection of which young women may work for their own maintenance, instead of encountering the dangers and temptations of small places at an early age.

The inmates are treated in every way as young servants, and it is hoped will so be rendered fit to take good situations in gentlemen's families.

Each case for admission will be decided upon by the Ladies' Managing Committee.

The sum of £10 per annum is required for the admission of a girl, except under some peculiar circumstances, or where there has been previous training in a Laundry. Payments to be made quarterly in advance, on the first days of January, April, July, and October.

Considerable difficulty was experienced in finding a suitable locality for the Girls' Laundry. It was desired to have country air on account of the health of the inmates as well as for the laundry work, while it was important that the institution should not be too far from London, in order to secure the services of those ladies interested in its establishment both for management and visiting. After six months of unavoidable delay, West End House, between Kilburn and Hampstead, in the West End Lane, was decided upon as most eligible, on account of its airy situation, distance from surrounding buildings, and capability of accommodation in the house. The rent was higher than had been originally intended, viz., £150 per annum, but on all other considerations it was determined by the Committee to secure it, and the lease was signed at the beginning of July, by the Treasurer, Robert Hanbury, Esq., M.P., and by Robert Smith, Esq., and A. D. Chapman, Esq., members of the finance Committee.

On the 5th July last, the Matron took possession of the house, and the building of the washhouse was immediately commenced.

On the 12th July, the first three girls were admitted. Their number has gradually risen to seven, which it has not been desirable to increase until the completion of the washhouse and the other arrangements necessary for a public laundry.

The Rev. E. H. Bickersteth, of Hampstead, kindly met some of the friends of the Institution on the 9th of July, and conducted a meeting for prayer to God for His blessing on the work about to be commenced.

The girls with their Matrons have since then attended his ministry on Sunday mornings; but, as he is unable to provide them with permanent sittings in his church, or give them constant pastoral supervision, on account of his numerous duties, the Committee are anxious to make some other arrangements by which these advantages can be secured to the inmates of their Institution.

The thanks of the Committee are due to the Reformatory and Refuge Union for a grant of books for a Library, and for the valuable advice and assistance rendered by them at the commencement of the Institution. The services of their Secretary, Mr. Gwillim, are gratefully acknowledged.

The Committee have further to tender their thanks for a grant of Bibles from the Bible Society; also for a present of Bibles and Prayer Books from F. M. White, Esq.

The legal business connected with the lease of West End House was most kindly undertaken and carried out by Robert Holmes White, Esq., who volunteered his gratuitous services to the Committee.

The great kindness and attention of R. C. Greatorex, Esq, architect, who drew the plans of the building, and has since superintended the whole work entirely free of expense, also call for the grateful thanks of the Committee. Without this generous aid they could not have carried out their undertaking. Mr. Greatorex has during the whole year laboured most diligently and unremitingly for the Institution, which may truly be said to owe its establishment to his valuable co-operation.

The Committee have issued the following appeal to the public generally:—

The idea of establishing the "Girls' Laundry" was first entertained at the beginning of 1857, by some ladies of considerable experience in the work of female reformation, who have for many years conducted homes for the reception and training of female children. They felt the necessity of a longer period of protection and supervision for many of their inmates, who, by the degradation of their relatives, or their own peculiar characters, were especially liable to fall into temptation.

"Prevention is better than cure." This is peculiarly the case with young females. The almost hopelessness of permanently reclaiming those who have once left the path of virtue is painfully felt by all who have been engaged in the attempt.

The plan of this Institution has commended itself to the judgment of many of those self-denying labourers in this most difficult and trying path of Christian philanthropy.

It is hoped that, by God's blessing, young women may be induced to benefit by the shelter and home provided for them at West End House, before they encounter the temptations to which they must be exposed in future service. The training and instruction they will there receive will enable them to take better situations than could have been provided for them at an earlier period.

For this important object, which must be peculiarly felt in these days when the number and condition of our fallen sisters is exciting the grief and sympathy of so many, the support of the public is earnestly solicited.

It will be seen by the statement of accounts that the sum which was generously contributed last year is entirely exhausted. It has been expended with great care and economy in the building and fitting up of a washhouse, and the furnishing of the Institution, which is now ready for the reception of forty girls.

No orders for washing have as yet been executed, as the necessary arrangements are only just completed. The seven inmates, who have resided since July last on the premises, have been employed in the needlework necessary for the house and laundry.

Digitized by Google

The Institution cannot be expected to be self-supporting for two or three years. Pecuniary help is therefore required to enable the Committee to commence and carry on their important work.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurers, Secretaries, and any member of the Committee, as well as by the Bankers, Messrs. Ransom and Co., 1, Pall Mall East, and Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Co., 1, Lombard Street; also by Messrs. Nisbet and Co., 21, Berners Street, Oxford Street; and by the Matron, Miss Sarah Woodhams, to whom Post-office Orders may be made payable.

The Reformatory and Refuge Union have published a little book, from which we have gathered these particulars; which also gives many further facts, as the Rules of admission, the price of washing, the dietary, &c., as well as a statement of accounts, from which it appears that the donations and subscriptions have amounted to £941 13s., the expenditure to £782 2s. 6d., leaving a balance of £159 10s. 6d., which will, we trust, be augmented by the benevolent, until such time as the Laundry may be expected to be self-supporting.

ADULT REFORMATION.

An Industrial Training School for Adults at No. 14, Park-row, Bristol, was established by Mrs. Reynolds, in April, 1855.

Adult Reformation has not been sufficiently attended to, and yet it is in every respect of extreme importance. The Institution at Bristol was commenced, and has been maintained, by the exertions and private means of a very few individuals, whose wish has been to extend a helping hand to a numerous class of young men, who are too old for admission to the ordinary Reformatories, and who are destitute and exposed at an age the most liable to temptation. Certified Reformatory Schools take youths when committed by the magistrates, but some of these schools limit the age of admission to thirteen or fourteen years, and none can receive inmates above sixteen. Hence has arisen the desire to maintain some place of refuge for young men in more advanced life, who, either when leaving prison, or otherwise determining to quit a course of dishonesty, will come voluntarily to ask for help to regain their characters and the means of earning an honest maintenance.

Excepting in London, there is no other English Reformatory Institution for adults who will strive thus to work out their own improvement. When such seek aid, is it not the duty of society to help these repentant ones, and not to "to thrust them back into crime by hard treatment and exposure to such temptations as we may in vain expect men of established rectitude to withstand?" What is the condition of youths discharged from prison? Some have no home—some have bad homes. Without friends, without work, and without character, they are thrown almost necessarily among the most depraved associates, who always wait ready at hand to allure discharged prisoners back into their evil courses. It is to save young men, who would wish to do well, from this terrible necessity of continuing in vice that the Bristol Industrial Training School has been maintained. It is to be looked on as a House of Industry. The inmates are kept at constant labour, and their steadiness at work afford a test of their sincerity. Those who are destitute by their own idleness can find no advantageous shelter in this Institution. When an inmate has shown, by good conduct and industry, that he can be recommended to a master, the managers do their best to find him suitable employment, and, when placed in work, continue to give careful attention to his subsequent conduct and welfare. During the last two years and a half thirty-five young men have received the assistance of the Institution. Of these, seventeen have either been placed in situations, sent to sea, or have emigrated by the assistance of the managers, who have the satisfaction of knowing that many of these are likely to continue doing well in life. Two inmates have been placed on board the Akbar Reformatory School Frigate at Liverpool. One died in the Bristol Infirmary. Five left, being unable to conform to the rules. Two only are known to have relapsed into vice. Eight are now in the Institution, and of these most give promise of an amended life. All inmates receive evening instruction from a competent schoolmaster, and every opportunity is taken of bringing the influence of moral and religious instruction to bear on their daily life.

Having thus for more than two years maintained this establishment in a small house, which has had many disadvantages, the managers have now removed it to much larger premises, where they hope to extend their operations, and by taking an increased number of inmates, to add materially to the usefulness of the Institution. How far they may be able to do so will depend on the extent to which they may be assisted with additional funds. They think they have much claim for co-operation, if only on the ground of the benefit done to society by withdrawing those who, uncared for, become every day more dangerous to the community. In improving those persons we shall ourselves share the benefit. Let us remember, also, that notwithstanding their guilt, all are children of the same Heavenly Father, and that in helping them we do but "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

Subscriptions and donations will be thankfully received by either of the following managers:—Mrs. Reynolds (late of Shirehampton), Liverpool; Mrs. Charles Thomas, Woodcote, Stoke Bishop, near Bristol; Mr. Christopher J. Thomas, Clifton, Bristol, Treasurer; or Mr. Samuel Woolcott Browne, Clifton, Bristol, Correspondent, to whom all inquiries should be addressed.

The Bristol Industrial Training School is under the periodical inspection of the Government officer. H.M. Inspector made the following report to the Committee of Council on Education, after inspecting the School, on the 4th December last:—

"The premises are roomy, airy, and excellent. Mr. Skinner manages the Industrial Department, and the lads live with him and his family. The teaching, as regards reading, writing, cyphering, and religious instruction, is excellent. It is most essential to provide a passage into and preparation for respectable employment for young discharged convicts, and not only is this Institution now well organized for such a purpose, but the managers have incurred great pecuniary liabilities in rendering it so. I have thoroughly inspected the school premises at three separate visits.

(Signed) "Jelinger C. Symonds,
"H.M. Inspector."

REFUGE FOR FEMALES AT FULHAM.

The description which is given in our last impression of the Refuge for Female Convicts at Fulham will be still further elucidated by the following letter, in which one of the objects of that institution is more fully explained.

It is satisfactory to learn that much success has attended the means of disposal of the women referred to, which is well-known to be the great difficulty.

The Refuge, Fulham,
London, S.W.

Sir,—I beg permission to mention to you that an establishment under the above title has recently been opened by Government, with a view to promote the reformation and industrial training of female convicts, who are transferred hither after a considerable period of discipline and instruction in other prisons; and I would earnestly solicit any aid that you may be able to give towards providing employment for the women on discharge.

The particular way in which assistance can be afforded by the clergy in their parishes, or by gentlemen in town or country districts, is by recommending the "Refuge" to the attention of any who may be in want of servants, and by requesting them to communicate on the subject with the Lady Superintendent.

The women are specially trained for domestic service, and acquire active and industrious habits, a knowledge of baking, cookery, laundry, and house work. Care will be taken not to recommend any but such as appear to have resolved to gain an honest livelihood.

The most suitable places for the women would appear to be those where only one servant is kept; many also would be well adapted for farm servants.

Digitized by Google

This effort on the part of Government in behalf of female convicts is one of public importance, in which all are more or less interested; for without employment, and in many cases without friends, what can they do, if turned loose upon the world?

On this account it is that they need assistance in finding respectable homes and honest occupation, so that the resolutions of amendment, which in almost every case they are led to form, may be strengthened and confirmed when they obtain their liberty.

I appeal then confidently to your sympathies on behalf of this unhappy and much to be pitied class of our fellow-subjects, trusting that you will be good enough to make known in your neighbourhood the Refuge at Fulham, and the objects in view.

Believe me to remain, truly yours,

(Signed) JAMES INNES, Chaplain.

TREATMENT OF CRIMINALS IN GERMANY.

THE following paper and remarks will be read with interest by those who had not the good fortune to be present on the occasion.

In the section of the National Social Science Association, on Thursday, October 14th, at Liverpool, a paper, by Matthew Davenport Hill, Esq., on the treatment of criminals in certain States of Germany was read, in his absence, by Lord Brougham, who prefaced the reading as follows:—

Before proceeding to read Mr. Commissioner Hill's important Paper, it is fit I should mention that he occasionally refers to his work on "Repression of Crime," which I presume is in the hands of most of our colleagues. It is one of the most valuable works that have ever appeared on this subject,—this all-important subject,—and contains not only the opinions and the reasonings of the learned author, but the results of his long and varied experience, both professional and general,—as an advocate and a judge.

I may add, that the great interest felt in the present paper, both by myself and others, has induced me to leave the Section of Jurisprudence, where I preside in the absence of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, in order to read this paper and attend at the discussion of it.

During a short visit to Germany, made in the summer of the present year, I had some opportunities of acquiring information respecting the treatment of criminals in that country, which I proceed to lay before the Section.

Communications from Mr. Baillie Cochrane,* the Rev. Chauncy Hare Townsend, and the late Mr. George Combe,* have called public attention to the system of discipline pursued now for many years by Governor Obermaier at the State Prison at Munich; all speaking of it in the highest terms. To this testimony in its favour I was able, two years ago, to add a very important document, consisting of answers to various queries which I had sent, through the intervention of Sir John Millbanke, our envoy at the Court of Bavaria, to the Minister of the Interior for that kingdom. These answers supported, in the main, the statements of the three travellers.† Some months ago, however, I found that the success of Governor Obermaier's treatment was controverted by no less an authority than Dr. Mittermaier, the celebrated professor of criminal law in the University of Heidelberg; whose opinions on prison discipline are very much in unison with those entertained by our noble president, Lord Brougham, and reduced to practice in their highest perfection by Captain Crofton [Lord B.—I have the pleasure of knowing that we have here the great benefit of Captain Crofton's presence; he now sits by me‡] and the Directors of the convict prisons in Ireland. The professor's work, published in May last, and entitled "Prison Improvement," contains a passage on the gaols of Bavaria, a translation of which will be found in the Appendix to this paper.

Being desirous to ascertain upon what proofs the facts rest which had led Dr. Mittermaier to unfavourable conclusions, I proceeded to Heidelberg, and obtained the advantage of personal intercourse with him. I found that he had not been able to visit the prison himself, but had relied on information collected from the debates and reports in the Bavarian Legislature, and from other highly respectable sources. Still, however, this evidence, being dissected, resolves itself pretty much into hearsay.

From Heidelberg I went to Munich, to investigate for myself, so far as time and opportunity (both much limited) should permit, Governor Obermaier's plans, and the results of them; and to enquire upon the spot into the charges to which they had become obnoxious. At Munich I found that the impressions under which Dr. Mittermaier wrote had had their effect in quarters deserving of all deference; but I failed to obtain any reliable data in support of them. Having received from the Minister of the Interior the requisite authority to inspect the prison, I waited upon Governor Obermaier, who accompanied me through the establishment, and kindly devoted many hours to my enquiries; which were as strict and searching as I was able to make them.

I feel that I lay myself open to the charge of presumption when I venture to decide between Germans of great eminence and unquestioned ability, on the subject of one of their own prisons; and even if I had gone so far as to form my present opinion very decidedly, I should not have been bold enough to give it public utterance had I not the best grounds for belief that the adverse criticisms which have been passed on the discipline of the Munich gaol are founded, not on ascertained facts, but are deductions drawn from what the reasoners consider the inevitable consequences of a system which they believe to be unsound in principle.

As an ample notice of the Munich prison is contained in the Appendix to the Reports on Transportation, made by a Committee of the House of Commons in the year 1856, I shall say little more of the system in this paper than is necessary to explain the points in dispute.

The great end which the Governor pursues with unwearied assiduity is the reformation of his prisoners. To effect this object, he engages them in manual labour, applied to various arts and manufactures; so as to employ each individual according to his previous habits of life, or his capacity, mental and bodily. The prisoners are urged to industry and good conduct by rewards and punishments. So far as the law permits, their treatment is mild, and the Governor aims to act more by encouragement than by severity. Kindness, as distinguished from indulgence, is the characteristic of his regulations. Indeed, the law in Bavaria is sufficiently harsh. The terms of imprisonment are of enormous length. Two prisoners were brought in from a distant gaol while I was present. One had been twenty years in confinement, the other twenty-four. To come under the care of Obermaier must, if I may judge from their appearance, be a happy change for them. Their countenance and bearing were those of men from whom life had been almost crushed out by a routine of gloomy and monotonous existence. Much to the Governor's regret, his prisoners wear chains; his power of rewarding exemplary conduct being limited to a diminution of the weight of these revolting appendages. In rare instances, however, as a reward for good conduct long continued, individuals are relieved of their chains by Royal command.

His prison answers in some respects to the convict prisons of England and Ireland. None of the inmates remain for a less term than six years. After that period, a certain limited discretion is allowed to him of recommending well-conducted prisoners for pardon, which recommendations are always acted upon by the authorities. Notwithstanding the rigors imposed by law, many of the prisoners appeared healthy, and a large proportion of them had lost that repulsive expression which marks the face of the criminal in the lower stages of discipline.

So far, there is nothing in the conduct of the gaol, as dependant on the Governor, from which Professor Mittermaier would dissent; but he, in common with many members of the Legislature and certain authorities in the government, have formed a very exalted opinion of the separate system, to which Obermaier is opposed. True it is, that even if the Governor were

---

* Transportation Committee, H. C., 1856, Second Report, Appendix, page 160. See, also, "Suggestions for the Repression of Crime," page 543.

* "Suggestions for the Repression of Crime," page 578.

† "Transportation Committee Reports," H. C. App. 169. See, also, "Repression of Crime," p. 564.

‡ Lord Brougham had come into the room after Capt. Crofton sat down, and was therefore not aware of his having been already presented to the Section.

Digitized by Google

ts partisan, he could not carry it into operation, as the Ministry, however they may think it desirable, have avowed the inability of the finances to bear the great expense of introducing cellular separation into the prisons of Bavaria. For myself, I cannot but think that the truth lies between the two extremes.

To separate the prisoner from his fellows at the commencement of his incarceration is, I hold, most desirable; nor would I give him associates until both he and they had manifested a steady desire for self-improvement, and a capacity for acting, to some extent, on their better aspirations. But looking upon him as hereafter to be returned to society, I cannot believe it wise—and herein Dr. Mittermaier agrees with me—to deprive him of companions up to the moment when he is again launched into the world,—a period at which he will be called upon all at once to resist, by his own strength, influences from which he has been artifically guarded for years, and to resume the fulfilment of social duties so long suspended.

On the whole, I must think it fortunate that the zeal of Governor Obermaier, who had no alternative but to keep his prisoners in association, was not damped by the conviction that he was deprived of an expedient deemed essential, by himself, to the success of his reformatory labours; for that he has been successful to a very considerable degree I found no reason to disbelieve. From the answers furnished to me by the Minister of the Interior, it would appear that the average of reformed prisoners cannot be much less than from 70 to 80 per cent., perhaps even more. And, without pinning my faith to figures, I am strongly persuaded that in this instance they do not materially differ from the truth. Assuming, then, that the success which is officially claimed for the training of the Munich prison has been established, we may look upon the Governor's practice as a long series of experiments in reformatory training, of great value in aiding us to separate the essential conditions of reformation from those which are either merely accidental or at best only auxiliary, or what are demanded by some peculiarity arising out of the race, or nation, or class, to which the prisoners may belong.

The possibility of reforming criminals while in association does not, however, rest entirely on the experience of Governor Obermaier. Colonel Montesinos, at Valencia in Spain, appears without any concert with Governor Obermaier, and (so far as I know) without the slightest knowledge of his proceedings, to have pursued much the same course, and to have equally attained his object.* And other instances might be cited in proof of the proposition.

But the disapprobation of Governor Obermaier's system is not confined to the absence of separation, although I am very much inclined to the opinion that this defect predisposes the minds of his critics to look unfavourably on his whole scheme of discipline. He is accused of having recourse to the spy system, and thus subverting the moral sentiment of the prisoners where it exists, or of preventing its growth where (as in the majority of cases, perhaps,) it is yet to be inspired. The circumstances which have led to this grave charge are these:—The Governor inculcates it as a duty on the prisoners to inform him of any misconduct on the part of their companions. Such information being given, he proceeds to a public examination of the case in the nature of a trial, and the accused is convicted or acquitted, according to the evidence; no benefit whatever accruing to the accuser for executing his invidious office.

Does such a regulation prove the employment of a spy system? The practice has been followed, say the critics, by the usual consequence of employing spies. Three instances have occurred in which the individual charged has risen upon his accuser and murdered him. This is true; but when it is known that the regulation has been in force for upwards of fourteen years, and that the prison contains from 550 to 600 inmates, it will seem too much to condemn the practice without carefully examining whether any system of discipline applied to criminals, who, like those at Munich, have been convicted of grave offences (deeds of violence for the most part), has been able effectually to restrain outbursts of revenge against officers or comrades, through whom prison offences have been brought under the notice of the authorities.* For myself, I am not acquainted with any device, short of suffering such offences to be committed with impunity, which either has stood, or can reasonably be expected to stand, between the accused and his accuser as an absolute safeguard. But here, the essential criterion of a spy-system seems absent; that is, advantage operating by way of bribe upon the accuser, whereby a motive is created to inveigle the accused into the commission of an offence, or to fabricate evidence against him in order to sustain a false charge. I enquired most anxiously as to the possibility of such motive being in action among the prisoners, and was assured that neither directly nor indirectly could the informing prisoner be a gainer by fulfilling the duty which the injunctions of the Governor had cast upon him.

[Lord Brougham.—In this important particular, the difference between Mr. Commissioner Hill's inquiries and those of Professor Mittermaier, is very remarkable; the former being a direct observation and examination on the spot; the latter being chiefly upon hearsay. It would be difficult to conceive any course of questioning more likely to give different answers according as the questioner came nearer or was less near the parties whom he examined, or on whose cases he made his observations.]

In the absence, then, of any sinister motive, it is hardly possible to believe that false or frivolous charges will be preferred, except where the parties may have quarrelled, a contingency which has nothing to do with the spy-system, but which is necessarily incident to association. The natural order of things must be, that the comrades of the offending prisoner will have tried the effect of admonition and exhortation, before they proceed to the extremity of reporting their companions for punishment.

That such a regulation does not become a dead letter, furnishes to my mind cogent evidence that the moral tone of the prison is high. To suppose that an individual prisoner unbribed, and yet not impelled by a sense of duty, he having no other possible motive, personal spite excepted, would step out from the throng to denounce a comrade, is to suppose that he would encounter the scorn and hatred of the community to which he belongs, without any motive. Before he moves he will require the support of public opinion, which will be against, and not with him, unless the moral sentiment of the general body is in favour of the proceeding which he is about to commence; his public being composed of his fellow-prisoners. If this be the true light in which to regard the regulation in question, it should be looked upon, not as an objection to the Governor's discipline, but as an invaluable test of efficiency in the moral training of the prisoners. And I cannot but believe that the first indication of the tone having become relaxed would be that the Governor and his officers were left to find out delinquents by their own unaided efforts.

I also visited the State Prison of the Grand Duchy of Baden, at Bruchsal; which is under the zealous and humane superintendence of an intelligent physician, Governor Fissling. The prisoners are, with few exceptions, in a state of permanent separation; not only during the hours of labour and of rest, but at all other times,—at school, at church, and on the exercise ground. The cell is larger than is customary in England. It is lighted by gas, and in the winter is supplied with warm air. The prisoner has the full command of his own window; which gives him the means of complete ventilation. The cell contains a work-bench or loom: the prisoner being employed in various handicrafts, at which many are adepts. Each inmate has books furnished to him from the prison library. He has materials for writing and for drawing. He receives visits from the Governor and Chaplain, and other official persons. I went into many of the cells; and was pleased with the appearance of health, and the absence of evil passions and stolidity, observable in the countenances of the prisoners. As in Bavaria, and indeed throughout Germany, the terms of imprisonment are very long. They are, however, mitigated by pardons granted for good conduct, but not until after a dreary length of confinement. At the expiration of six years a well-conducted prisoner has the option of passing into association with others who have gone through a similar probation; but the Governor informed me that comparatively few availed themselves of the privilege. My surprise at this announcement was somewhat lessened when I went into the quarter of the associated criminals and found among them a considerable proportion of idiots and harmless lunatics; who were considered unfit to be left alone, and who had, therefore, not been confined in cells. Still, however, there is much which requires investigation in this unnatural

* Transportation Reports, App. p. 163 et seq. and p. 171. See, also, "Repression of Crime," p. 555 et seq. and p. 571.

* In June, 1858, the number of prisoners was 620.

Digitized by Google

preference for a life almost solitary; and for an entire separation from those with whom the prisoner stands upon an equality. Captain Maconochie states that he has found a long course of separation so to foster all the self-regarding desires of the individual, and so to weaken all his sympathies, as to have made even well-disposed men very unfit to bear the little trials of domestic life on their return to their homes.

In England, as we all know, the disposal of the prisoner on his discharge is our main difficulty. Unless we are content that he shall be all but forced to return again to crime, from the impediments which stand in the way of a liberated criminal, who is abandoned at the prison gates and thrown on his own resources, or, what is far worse, exposed to the temptations offered to him by his former partners in crime, we must take upon ourselves the onerous task of aiding him to find honest employment by which he may procure a maintenance. In Baden and in Bavaria little or no difficulty of this kind is felt. Neither of those countries, I am assured, suffers under that organization of capital and labour among criminals out of prison, which so prevails at home, as to make the criminal classes a distinct and potent order in the community, composed of whole families addicted to dishonest pursuits. It seldom happens, I was told both by Obermaier and Fissling, that a criminal on his discharge is entirely destitute of honest relatives willing to receive him; and, in any event, there is a demand for labour sufficient to render it comparatively easy for him to find employment.

One consequence of this state of things is, that the Patronage Societies have fallen into disuse; the want which they imply not being sufficiently urgent to keep them in activity. It would be both interesting and useful to ascertain what share long imprisonments may have in preventing the formation of a criminal order. My own impression is, that they must be very effectual to this end. Long terms of imprisonment certainly enable each individual to become expert in some calling by which he makes himself acceptable to employers. They completely break up his old evil companionships; and give him time for maturing principles and confirming habits in direct antagonism to those of his past life. Doubtless, however, the paucity of large cities in the German States ought not to be disregarded while investigating the causes of the superiority which most of them, perhaps all, may claim over England, as to this important ingredient in social comfort. Let me observe, in passing, that the prisoner's faculty of contribution towards the expenses of the gaol must of necessity increase with his progress in the art or manufacture to which his labour is applied.

Bruchsal has been under its present system for some years. Hitherto, no tables showing its reformary effects, as indicated by the permanent well-doing of its discharged inmates, have been published, but as experience of sufficient length is now considered to have been attained, statistical information on this most essential point will shortly be given to the world. With regard to the cause of crime in Baden and Bavaria, each of the Governors whom I have mentioned assured me that it was wine in the one country and beer in the other which filled their gaols.

[Lord Brougham.—Nothing can be more important than this statement; for although the proportion of crimes of violence to other offences is very great in the Bavarian prison, that proportion is not said to exist also in the Baden; and even supposing both prisons to have the same proportion, and that intoxication has not as much to answer for in producing crimes of a different description, still it is no small addition to the evidence in favour of temperance if drunkenness is found to be the main cause of violent crimes. But, in leading to all crimes, it must have a direct and powerful operation. Intemperance affects the whole character, as well as the whole comforts, of the working man; makes his labour more painful, his gains less considerable, diverts them to unworthy purposes, and lessens the means of satisfying his wants, while it increases their number and intensity. It is the especial curse of the working classes.]

Although I had no opportunity of visiting other prisons, I had the great advantage of two long interviews with Dr. Wichern, the distinguished founder of the Rauhe Haus, near Hamburgh, whom the King of Prussia has lately appointed Chief Inspectors of Gaols throughout his dominions. The difficulties in Prussia, arising out of the laws which regulate punishments and prisons, and the present state of opinion among official men, are such as to offer very serious obstacles to improvement. Dr. Wichern, however, has struck out a most happy expedient for gradually introducing the required changes. At the Rauhe Haus, in addition to the juvenile outcasts of both sexes who are cherished in this establishment, Dr. Wichern opens its doors to earnest and disinterested young men, who seek him with the intention of devoting their lives to the good of others. Members of this body, who feel a vocation to Reformatory labours, he sends, after a training of three years, to the Prussian gaols, to fill the inferior offices within their walls as vacancies occur. They reject no duties, however servile, attached to the post to which they may be appointed. They are instructed to act on the minds and hearts of the prisoners; but rather by kindliness of manner, and by the example of self-sacrifice and unsullied moral conduct, than by precept or exhortation, which might be deemed an encroachment on offices filled by others.

Dr. Wichern has a lively and, I trust, a well-founded belief, that the unassuming labours of these devoted men, all acting under the impulse of strong religious convictions, will work a silent amelioration in the prevailing spirit of the intercourse between the prisoner and those under whose control he is placed, by proving the superior efficacy of gentle treatment as compared with harshness of demeanour; and thus a foundation will be laid for a gradually arising superstructure, combining all which a wise benevolence can desire. It is impossible to contemplate so noble an enterprise without emotion. Doubtless it will have the cordial wishes of this audience for its triumphant success!

Lord Brougham having expressed very strongly the feelings which the concluding portion of this paper occasioned, and the extreme gratification in which he entirely joined Mr. Commissioner Hill at viewing the admirable labours of these young men, was induced, at a subsequent part of the sitting, to advert again to the topic, in consequence of a member stating that without other inducements than their own the services of these young persons could not be relied upon. Lord Brougham said he was very far from denying that they should have held out to them the prospect of promotion in consequence of their pious labours, at first gratuitous; and it should seem that the promotion of Dr. Wichern gave room to expect such a course to be taken by the Government, and by himself.*

APPENDIX.

Extract from "Prison Improvement" by Dr. Mittermaier, Professor of Criminal Law in the University of Heidelberg, pp. 57, 58, and 59.†

In a critical examination of the state of the Bavarian prisons, valuable assistance might be derived from a comparison of the Reports of the Bavarian Chamber, of 1846,‡ upon prisons, with the Reports of the Legislation Committee of 1857, mentioned in section 2.

Whilst in 1846 all the members of the Bavarian Chamber (with few exceptions) spoke of separation as an impracticable system, and could not find words to laud sufficiently Obermaier's proceedings in the Munich prison, in 1857 even those who did not think separation should be continued for a long period, voted, at least, that each prisoner should be isolated on his entrance into the prison. The majority of the members of the Committee were impressed with the high importance of separation by a visit to the prison of Bruchsal, and even the Minister of Justice admitted that the system in force there did, at least, return the prisoners to the world not worse than on their entrance into the prison;§ but he remarked, that as there were at this present time 4,000 prisoners in the Bavarian prisons, the introduction of the system of solitary confinement would make an expenditure of at least 8,000,000 florins necessary. It is enough for our purpose that the unanimous decision of the Committee was to the effect,‖ that it ought to be considered whether or not the system of solitary confinement should be introduced as one species of punishment.¶

Upon the present state of Bavarian pri-

---

* Not quite gratuitous, unless I misunderstood Dr. Wichern; but remunerated only by the small stipends attached to the offices when filled by the very inferior class of persons, who alone can be expected to accept them, in the absence of the higher motives which influence the young men from the Rauhe Haus.—M. D. H.

† Die Gefangnissverbesserung Erlangen, 1858.

‡ See thereon "The Year-book of Prison Facts," vol. ix., p. 285.

§ The Minister remarked that the Governor of Bruchsal himself had admitted, that sufficient experience was wanting to show how many had left the prison really reformed.

‖ See note in the original.

¶ Reprts, p. 104.

Digitized by Google

sons, official statistics* state that there are five prisons and two compulsory labour-houses on this side of the Rhine. We may see from the tables that indeed several kinds of employment are carried on in them, but that many of these are not adapted to teach the prisoners trades which can support them after their liberation. In these establishments the system is still in force† which was attacked as early as 1846 in the Second Chamber, and according to which into one prison only Catholics, and in the other only Protestants, are confined, and Obermaier's system fundamentally regulates the discipline. Every unprejudiced visitor to the prison in Munich must acknowledge that, to outward view, it is governed by a spirit of order and industry which gains favourable opinions for this institution; that Herr Obermaier, whose character, though firm and austere, is at the same time benevolent, awards to industrious prisoners many a coveted privilege;‡ and that, being gifted with great powers of observation, he inspires the convicts with respect; and that his efforts are directed to their reformation; but it is just as certain that the Director labours under self-delusion, inasmuch as he regards the diligence of the prisoner as a principal element in the means of his reformation, and from the silent subjection of the prisoners draws the conclusion of their good disposition, without suspecting the hazardous mutual understanding which exists among them. Of the most important elements of reformation, moral and religious training by conversation and instruction, none, or only the most limited use is made.§

Highly injurious is the use which the Governor makes of the spy-system, thereby corrupting the morality of the prisoners, and allowing the feeling of revenge to grow in their minds, till it results in the murder of the spy; but he is deceived when he believes himself to have been so successful as to have had but few relapses.|| Distinguished members of the Committee of the Bavarian Chamber lately declared¶ that it was high time to change the present distressing state of prisons, inasmuch as it was known, upon the testimony of the Governors of the prisons themselves, that they are not able to reform even one prisoner, and that the spy-system is productive of the most pernicious consequences, —such a declaration sufficiently pourtrays the present state of the Bavarian gaols.

As to recent improvements, it should be mentioned that two special institutions have been erected for juvenile criminals, and that at the house for compulsory labour at Kaisheim, the following system has been successfully introduced. Prisoners who have behaved well, and whose term of imprisonment will expire in from four to ten months, are put to agricultural labour with the use of the spade; and again, about fifty prisoners have, for the last four years, been employed in the manufacture of agricultural machines and implements; this system has so good an effect upon the health, and also upon the morals of the prisoners, that in the whole of the country around, such prisoners as have been employed either in agricultural labours, or in the manufacture of machines, are gladly taken into service, and confidence rises so much the higher, as but few instances of relapse occur.*

[As Professor Mittermaier has frequently honored me by citing my book on "The Repression of Crime" in the course of his work, I am surprised at his omitting all notice of the evidence which it contains in favour of the Munich prison. Even if it were permissible to pass by the testimony of respectable English travellers like Mr. Cochrane, Mr. Townsend, and Mr. Combe, it is difficult to understand why the explicit information of the Bavarian Minister of the Interior should be withheld. The high character of the learned Professor is, nevertheless, a perfect guarantee that from whatever cause the omission occurred, it did not arise from any sinister motive.—M. D. H.]

REFORMATORY SCHOOL FOR THE COUNTY OF MONMOUTH.

THE FIRST ANNIVERSARY

Of this institution was held in the Pontypool Town-hall assembly-room, on Wednesday. The chair was occupied at the first meeting by Mr. Octavius Morgan, M.P., and among those in attendance were Mr. Bosanquet, Chairman of Quarter Sessions; Mr. Hort, Hardwick; Mr. Charles Prothero, clerk of the peace, and one of the honorary secretaries to the reformatory committee; Mr. Chas. H. Williams, Mr. W. W. Phillips, Mr. W. W. Phillips, jun., and Mr. E. B. Edwards, Pontypool; the Rev. S. C. Baker, Usk, one of the honorary secretaries of the reformatory; the Rev. Edward Hawkins, M.A., vicar of St. Woolos; the Rev. Thomas Prothero, Malpas; the Rev. W. Horwood, Pontypool; the Rev. Dr. James Panteague; the Rev. Thomas Davies, Trevethin; the Rev. Thomas Evans, Goitre; the Rev. Dr. Thomas, Pontypool; the Rev. — Baker, Newport; the Rev. — Morgan, Pontnewynydd; the Rev. — Hooper, &c., &c.

The Chairman observed that the meeting might be said to partake somewhat of a religious character, inasmuch as its object was the suppression of vice, and the promotion and encouragement of virtue, and called upon the Rev. S. C. Baker to invoke the divine blessing.

The Rev. Gentleman having offered up prayer,

The Hon. Member said he was very happy to have the pleasure of meeting them there that day. He had received a letter from Sir Charles Morgan, who expressed his anxiety to be present, but stated that he was compelled to be in London, it being the day of the Smithfield Club cattle show, which, as a member of the committee, he was bound to attend. Mr. Rodney, Mr. Williams, of Llangibby, Mr. Williams, jun., Mr. Gratrex, Mr. Homfray, Mr. Cordes, the Mayor of Newport, and Mr. Levick were unavoidably absent. He (the chairman) had said he was glad to meet them. His gladness arose from being able to officially announce to them the completion of the work sometime since taken in hand. It was now his pleasing duty to announce to them that the work was completed—the establishment and preparation of a reformatory school for the reception of the juvenile part of the population, who now and then, too frequently, he was sorry to say, were led into the commission of acts contrary to good manners —contrary to the laws of God and man. It would be in the recollection of some present that in August, 1856, a meeting was held in Newport, when it was proposed to establish a reformatory for this county. That meeting was numerously attended. The subject was taken up with great zeal; and a committee was formed for the purpose of carrying into effect the resolutions then adopted. They were fortunate to secure a site, and everything, it was thought, was going on very well. But, unfortunately, objections were raised by the residents of the neighbourhood to the presence of the proposed reformatory. On account of the people being unfavourable to, and combining in opposition against it, the committee came to the conclusion that it would not be desirable to establish such an institution in the vicinity of persons who entertained objections to it. For himself, he confessed he could not enter into their objections. He could not see anything tangible that could be advanced against a Reformatory for children of the description in question. He did not think it was likely to encourage vice. He did not think it was likely to have a prejudicial effect upon the neighbourhood. He believed

* "Contributions to the Statistics of Bavaria," vol. iv, edited by Von Hermann, Munich, 1855.

† "The Year-book of Prison Facts," vol. ix, p. 285.

‡ For example, in some divisions [of prisoners] to cultivate flowers for themselves.

§ The most detailed and impartial description of the Munich Prison is by an experienced Governor of a prison, in the "St. Gall Zeitung," 1855, Nos. 84 to 88. An entirely favourable picture of Obermaier's views is to be found in "Fischer on Prisons,"—Ratisbon, 1852, p. 164.

|| Herr Von Hermann, in his preface to the "Contributions to Statistics," declares that out of 965 penitents liberated from the prison at Munich, nearly 800 showed themselves completely reformed. In the Essay mentioned in the last note it is stated that no proof whatever is given of the correctness of this statement. The Criminal Statistics of Bavaria show a greater number of relapses. [I could find, on my late visit, no criminal statistics subsequent to the year 1854; for that and the four preceding years the account stands thus,—Discharged prisoners 298, Reformed 206, Doubtful 48, Relapsed 26.—"Repression of Crime," p. 566.—M. H. D.]

¶ Reports, 1857, pp. 101-103.

 It makes one shudder to find that at Kaisheim, in the years from 1852-54, 544 prisoners died; that at Munich mortality amounts annually to 15 per cent., nay, in 1851, to 20 per cent.; and at Amberg to 10 per cent. It must however be added, that according to Obermaier's statement, the prisoners arrived in the very worst state of health, owing most likely to the circumstance that those awaiting their trials suffered seriously in health in the many bad prisons from which they came to Munich.

It is quite true, that according to the statements which are made, there occur in the Munich prison neither cases of suicide nor of insanity. Accounts of the state of the prison at St. Georgen, by Fischer, the physician of the prison, are contained in the work mentioned in note †, at page 228. Another work, lauding Obermaier's treatment, after quite an ideal view of it, is by Pfeufer (a most able physician), bearing the title,—"The Reform System of Obermaier," Heidelberg, 1848.

[Governor Obermaier informed me that, excluding the prisoners who came to him in bad health, the mortality of the prison was not greater than that of the city of Munich, in which, however, from the want of drainage and other causes, the rate is very high. As well as I could ascertain, it was nearly twice as great as that of London.—M. D. H.]

* Special notices on this subject are contained in the "Allgemeine Zeitung," in the Supplement, No. 325, Nov. 19, 1856, and in No. 29, Jan. 29, 1857. For more detailed accounts, the author of the present volume is indebted to Baron von Gaisberg, those labours for the institution are highly meritorious.

Digitized by Google

that if the school were properly managed the children would, so far from committing depredations or other unlawful acts, only furnish examples of good order and conduct. As to mischief, they would not be allowed to go out, and would therefore have no opportunity of trespassing or trampling upon the lands of their neighbours; or if any should escape, the immediate vicinity would be the last place where they would commit any depredation. They would make their way off as soon as possible. He must say that, so far as his opinion went, a reformatory was less to be dreaded than a boarding-school of young gentlemen. They were not kept under the strict surveillance attaching to the other, and were more likely to get into one's gardens and orchards, and trample over the grounds. The committee, then, found themselves thrown upon the wide world. At last, however, they succeeded in obtaining another site, which seemed to be a convenient and desirable one, being close to the railway station at Little Mill, and of easy access by rail to all parts of the country. The site had been secured and paid for, and the necessary buildings had been erected, and were in a state of completion. It was now no longer a question in the abstract as to the benefits to be conferred by a Reformatory. That had been settled by the steps taken. All that remained was to carry into effect the objects in view, and bring into use the building which had been completed. But certain furniture, fittings and implements, remained deficient. To provide those necessary appliances for the proper organization of the establishment was the object of the meeting, which he hoped it would consider and sanction. Nobody could doubt for one moment the advantages arising to all communities from keeping young people in a proper moral condition, and, where they wandered out of the paths of right and virtue, in bringing them back again, and restoring them to the position from which they had strayed. He regretted to say that in this county there were a great number of children, especially in Newport and among the hills, who were perhaps not altogether of an innate bad disposition, but from improper training and the bad example set before them, perhaps by their parents, were encouraged and induced to commit offences. When a child committed an offence, it was not hardened, unless it were one of those remarkable dispositions, of which, though a few—thank God, but a few—were sometimes to be met with; but it might with care and attention be brought back and made a useful member of society. When a child was made to see—when any person was made to see—the error of their ways, they became better individuals, better subjects, and better members of society than those who remained in a position unconscious of pursuing a course that might be wrong. The Hon. Member concluded by calling upon

Mr. Charles Prothero, who read the Report of the Committee.

"The Committee for the promotion of a Reformatory School for the county of Monmouth, in meeting their friends and supporters at the first anniversary, have the satisfaction to say that though they have had to encounter, since their first formation, various delays and discouragements, such as almost unavoidably arise on the introduction of a new and important principle before its details can be well understood, they are enabled now to report the completion of the necessary outbuildings on the site purchased at Ty Draw, and that the institution will be ready for opening as soon as the furniture and implements are provided, and the certificate from the Home Office obtained.

"It will be remembered that at the general meeting held at Newport in August of last year, it was stated that the attention of the committee had been directed to a spot possessing greater advantages than any that had previously come under their notice. The site referred to was described as a small farm in the parish of Mamhilad, comprising twenty-two acres of good dry land, capable of spade cultivation, with a small dwelling and a large barn upon it, open and salubrious in situation, with an excellent spring of water running through it, and in a position most central, accessible by all the country railways, sufficiently retired to prevent too much publicity, and sufficiently prominent to invite observation.

"This eligible spot the committee have since purchased, and the conveyance of it for the purposes of the Reformatory School has been made to the following gentlemen as trustees, viz:—Octavius Morgan, Esq., M.P., Colonel Clifford, M.P., and the Chairman of Quarter Sessions. The sum asked for Ty Draw was £1,020, but the committee having resold to Mr. Morgan (of the Little Mill), the detached portion of land south of the railway, have thus come into possession of about thirteen acres, at a cost of £570.

"The sums promised and announced in August of last year were—Donations £640, annual subscriptions £194, of which £550 had then been paid up on both accounts. The promised donations have since been augmented to £808, (including about £12 from collecting books) and the annual subscriptions to £208. Of these amounts £775 donations, and £161 annual subscriptions, have been paid into the hands of the treasurer.

"The purchase of the land and other previous expenses having amounted to £627, there remained but £148 of the sums received as donations applicable to the purposes of building; the subscribers were therefore requested to permit the first annual subscriptions to be applied to this use; by which means a sufficient fund was raised for proceeding with the work. The buildings on the farm having been found, after careful inspection, capable of adaptation to the requirements of the Reformatory School, the committee ordered plans to be prepared for their conversion; and the work, having been put up to competition was placed in the hands of Mr. David Lewis, of Raglan, for execution.

"The total expense, with additions ordered in the course of the work, has amounted to £297. For this sum, the committee have been enabled to complete a substantial school-house (with dormitories, lavatory, cells, and offices) capable of accommodating from twenty to twenty-five boys; and to provide separate residences for a married superintendent and for a labour-master. To meet this outlay the committee had on hand (inclusive of the subscriptions paid) £309 7s. 9d., from which, after the expense of the building is defrayed, a balance is left of about £13, the use of which will be more than required for the purposes of fencing, draining, clearing, and other expenses incurred in finishing off the work.

"The Reformatory School and masters' dwellings being thus completed with the funds already received, the committee have now to consider the subject of furnishing and providing implements, agricultural stock, and materials. They consider that thus to put the school in full working order will entail an additional expense of at least £150, and to raise this amount without trenching on the second year's annual subscriptions, they are desirous of forming a special fund.

"When the Reformatory School is in full operation its annual cost of maintaining, clothing, instructing, and disposing of about twenty-five boys, (a number which the committee cannot expect for some time to exceed) is estimated, from a careful inspection of the balance sheets of several existing reformatories, at £575, independently of farming outlay and profits.

"A part of this expenditure will be of a permanent character, and a part variable: the former being independent of the number of inmates, and the latter entirely regulated by it. The superintending staff, with certain general school expenses, will form the permanent outlay of about £200 per annum.

"The maintenance, clothing, and other individual costs incurred by the boys will constitute the variable portion which, with twenty-five boys, would amount to at least £375 per annum.

"The government allowance of seven shillings a week for each boy, will probably cover these variable expenditures, leaving the permanent charge of about £200 a year to be met by the annual subscriptions.

"The committee are happy to say that they hope sufficient means will be found to meet this demand in the annual subscriptions already promised, if all are continued and realised. As, however the school advances other expenses will arise, in providing for the disposal of boys who have passed well through the institution, and who will have to be placed in service, or otherwise assisted: an expenditure which must be undertaken if the reformation commenced, as it is to be hoped, in the school, is to be permanently carried out, and which will then probably call for some additions to the sums annually contributed.

At present the only further requirement of the committee is the sum above mentioned, of £150, to supply furniture, implements, and farming materials, and towards raising this sum they now invite the contributions of the friends of the institution.

"The committee would, in concluding their report, congratulate the friends of social order and morality in this county on their having been enabled thus to advance by one material step in the task of seeking to reclaim as well as punish the depraved; and though this work, especially as it respects the young, is still in its infancy both in this county and the kingdom at large, yet the committee feel sure that by God's blessing on the efforts employed, Monmouthshire will not fail to contribute its share towards the important undertaking, in which twenty-five other counties are already engaged, of checking crime at its source, and attempting, ere too late, to rescue juvenile delinquents."

STATEMENT OF ACCOUNT.

Receipts.—Donations, £763 2s.; first annual subscriptions, £161; collecting books, £12 6s. 6d. Total receipts, £936 8s. 6d.

Expenditure.—Purchase of land at Tyrdaw, and law charges, £576 9s.; cost of buildings, £296 2s. 2d.; cost of plans for proposed building at Abergwelfane, £12 15s. 9d.; other expenses for sites abandoned, £3 16s.; printing, postages, stationery, and miscellaneous expenses, £33 17s. 11d. Total expenditure, £923 0s. 10d.

Balance in hand, £13 7s. 8d.

Mr. Fenton Hort proposed the first resolution:—

"That the report now presented be received and adopted; and this meeting, feeling assured of the advantage of well directed efforts to reclaim the young persons depraved by neglect and bad example, and to prevent them from becoming confirmed criminals, views with approbation the progress that has been made in establishing a Reformatory School in this county."

Digitized by Google

He remarked that he ought perhaps to apologise for assuming such an office and bringing forward a resolution of that kind; but agreeing as he did with Mr. Barwick Baker, who at their last meeting laid before them so many interesting details, that a good committee could be formed of three persons, two of whom did nothing but assent to the arrangements of the third, he felt he owed something to the committee, who had carried into effect the object, and of whom he was a member. And in the first place he must express his firm adhesion to the principles of the great cause in which they were all engaged; secondly, he would state that he would give it the utmost support of which his feeble voice was capable; and, thirdly, he would call upon those whom God had blessed with the means of doing so to bring to completion and a permanent foundation the work so well begun. He could not conceive an object so worthy the notice of the Christian and the philanthropist. An evil was growing upon and threatening to overwhelm us. It had made such progress that it was almost impossible for us to grapple with it. Yet some effort must be made to arrest its progress. And in doing so, they had the comfort of knowing that the experiment was not made for the first time, and that where experiments had been made the effects were somewhat marvellous. They must, however, remember that not only in man's work but in God's also, in seeking his glory, and to carry out his objects, they must ever look for his blessing. They would then be sure of success. But if God worked with them, they must not leave Him to work for them. He worked through human agency. Paul must plant, and Apollos must water; and, with a humble reliance upon the divine goodness, they might be sure that success would crown their efforts to the blessing of a large and interesting portion of our race. When they spoke of reforming criminals, it must be remembered that they did not undertake to deal with the great mass. With adult criminals they did not seek to have anything to do, leaving them to the law against which they had offended. They had a more hopeful and pleasing task in dealing with youthful minds, and in seeking to reclaim and rescue those not yet hardened in the ways of vice. There was nothing so impressive as the heart of a child—nothing more joyous and open; and while it was grievous to see them turned aside, it was a comfort to feel that if they were given fair play, remembering the circumstances under which they were brought up, every hope existed that with the benefits of religious assistance, a change of great advantage would result in their minds. Let them look at the manner in which such children were reared. They were born in misery, amidst the very dregs of the population, and from their infancy made to be familiar with scenes of every vice and profligacy. What chance, then, had they of anything like religion? What could they be, with the impressibility to which he had referred? They could not but be affected by the things around them. But might it not also be expected that on being taken from those scenes, they would also be impressed with the teachings of which they were made the objects. To go further; they were not only found young, but possessed of active and quick perceptions, many of them being most useful in assisting older pickpockets and criminals in their nefarious proceedings. Were those children—children of such parts—to be left to the control of wicked men, and no effort made for their rescue, to place them in a position where their qualifications might become a benefit to the community? He, therefore, thought there was no reason to fear that with God's blessing they would succeed. It was a most useful and hopeful course to have to pursue. It was one that might be looked forward to with the greatest hope and interest; and he trusted England, and this county in particular, would have to bless the effort now being made to lead the juvenile classes out of the evils surrounding them into a course more beneficial to themselves and those around them. To suppose that all would be reclaimed were expecting too much. But as the happiest scholars were those in well disciplined schools, so with a regiment of soldiers, that officer was the best served, and the men most cheerful, where a proper and wholesome supervision was exercised. Why should that not apply to boys in their institution? When they found they were not hunted, and harshly and rigorously treated, but held up and taught to feel that an interest was taken in them, why should they not discover that the ways of religion were the ways of peace, and be brought to show the fruits of the training afforded them? They must not forget the number of deserted orphans cast upon the world, and what hope could there be that they would be rescued from a course of profligacy and vice but in the establishment of institutions such as that they were now asked to provide? He called upon them to remember what was the great object sought to be accomplished;—not only to make the community more happy; but it was also the work of God they were called upon to carry out. And as it was with that feeling they were actuated, so he trusted they would obtain happiness from their efforts. They could not estimate the value of the soul; and who could tell the awful result if some steps were not taken to rescue so many poor children from sin and degradation? Might He from whom all good counsels and all just works do proceed, look down and guide them in the work, so that there may be an improvement in the rising generation, and an increase of happiness to the kingdom at large, but especially that county in which they felt the most peculiar interest.

Mr. W. W. Phillips alluded to the interest he had felt and taken in the establishment of the institution, on behalf of which he should always be happy to render any assistance, supported, as he was, by Mr. and Mrs. Hanbury Leigh, who fully recognized the importance and benovolent nature of the work. An idea had obtained abroad that the movement was not so successful as it ought to be—that reformatories were partial failures, and that in many instances the results had not been in accordance with expectation. But to show the fallacy of such a belief he mentioned the report of Mr. Macgregor, the associate of Lord Shaftesbury, upon whom Mr. Phillips en passant conferred a high eulogium. From that document it appeared that out of the 20,000 ragged school children in London 200 had been sent to Canada and the United States. "Out of those 200," he says, "I have a pretty fair view of 100; and I can bear my testimony that only four have in any way disgraced their characters." One, it seemed, was a waiter at a large hotel in New York. The poor fellow was placed in circumstances of temptation, laid hands upon £400, and was at present suffering in prison for it. Many young women who were sent out had married, and occupied a respectable position; while many young men were in possession of land, and pursuing a satisfactory course of life. Those facts, he (Mr. Phillips) considered were sufficient to show that the work in which they were engaged was productive of good. Might God bless it, and might they do their utmost to carry it out. It was a valuable work. They wanted to do the bodies of those unfortunate children good,—they wanted to do their souls good; and it would always afford him great pleasure to do anything that lay in his power to further such objects. He begged to second the resolution.

This was put to the meeting from the chair, and adopted.

Mr. Bosanquet said he had been asked to move the second resolution. It was to this effect:—

"That this meeting hearing, with satisfaction, that the Reformatory School buildings have been completed, and that furniture and implements only are now required, recognises the necessity for raising a special fund by donation, to meet the expenditure necessary for placing the school in full working order."

That was the resolution he had to submit to them, and he trusted the meeting would recognise the propriety of appealing to the county generally to make efficient those means at present in hand. They had heard from the report read to what the committee had arrived. The building had been completed after considerable difficulties, and was now ready for occupation and use, with the exception of furniture and implements, which latter was no small item as affecting the success and efficiency of the institution. When those should be provided, he trusted that, with the annual subscriptions, shortly due, and which he hoped would be soon received, they would be able to put the reformatory in process of working, and that in the beginning of the coming year it would be found in full work. In asking them to support the resolution, and to confirm it by contributing the means sought for, he would draw their attention to the state of the individuals for whom the building was provided. Their aid was solicited on behalf of a most unhappy, and hitherto most neglected class of society. For the children of most classes institutions had in past years been provided. For the children of soldiers, of sailors, of clergymen,—for children who had no parents, schools had been provided; but he was about to speak for those who had worse than no parents, inasmuch as they had vicious parents to tempt them into or incite them to crime. Perhaps a more dreadful situation could hardly be imagined than that of those inured, brought up to, and nurtured in crime. It was probably the most affecting—the most lamentable consideration that could be presented to the human mind, that of persons not only uneducated, but those whose faculties had been actually perverted to wicked purposes—who were, in fact, apprenticed in crime. The system of apprenticeship was one of the most beautiful and important that could be conceived in the social relations of life. After children had received an education, it was necessary that they should become independent and be taught to rely upon their own resources, and by the beautiful system of apprenticeship, they became the adopted children of persons who were conversant with business, and instructed them in the way to gain their own livelihood by honest and respectable means. Now, those for whom he pleaded were in a manner apprenticed to crime. From their childhood, they were cleverly taught, all the abilities they possessed being applied to wicked purposes and an evil course of life. They were apprenticed in sin. Even those who were not taught in that way—whose parents merely employed them to assist in furnishing the means of subsistence of the family—were in a condition much to be pitied. They knew that in that neighbourhood how lamentable an evil it was when children were placed to endeavour to render some support to their homes by honest means. They were introduced into the works, and the mines underground, obliged, when they should be at school, to be earning money honestly for their parents. Look, however, at the position of those children who were taught to support themselves by dishonest means. He would not use words of his own to express the effect of such early training, preferring to quote the graphic language of Mr. Baines in a lecture delivered by him in the course of a lecture at the Leeds Mechanics' Institute, and who, after describing the miserable condition of those children from the earliest period of existence, exclaimed that by a miracle only could they be good. Yet they were born to form part of society and were destined for eternity. A still more painful picture was presented in a little work having reference to the girls' reformatory at Birmingham. This was a description of the state of the children when first brought there:—"When first taken in charge at the institution, several of the elder girls frequently broke out into violent bursts of passion, lasting sometimes as much as five hours. They sang, screamed, tore their hair and clothes, and destroyed everything that came in their way. This, after a time, entirely disappeared. They became docile, obedient, and industrious; and although there are occasionally outbreaks, no scenes of violence take place, and they soon pass away." This is the work, continued Mr. Bosanquet, we have in hand and hope to accomplish. "Many of them," the report went on to state, "glory in their shame. One girl was heard to say to another, 'You have not been in prison so many times as I have, —you are not so wicked as I am,—you have not done half the things I have;' and then laughed excessively after taunting the other with not having committed so much crime." Again, it was remarked—"Left as they have been to themselves, with violent temperaments, and surrounded by temptation, it could not be matter for wonder that they had committed crimes. Which of us can say he has not done the same?" He would not trouble them with farther extracts, but would ask them to consider the work done. Might not such persons as those described upon their entrance into the institution be described as demoniacs? And how were they to be conquered? By the love and power of God. It had been done,—it would be done; and by the love and power of God they hoped to do it—to take those demoniacs—those frantic beings—by the hand and present them calm and undefiled as an offering to society. That was the work they had undertaken. That was at least their hope and endeavour. He asked their aid in the work. He was sure they would not be backward in rendering it. Every offering made on behalf those individuals—those poor neglected children of Christ—was an offering made to the Lord himself, who had placed the poor and neglected, the friendless, the orphan, and the destitute, in the keeping of their more fortunate brethren. He knew the benevolence existing in that town and neighbourhood, but he wished to address himself more particularly to the ladies, asking their especial assistance and co-operation. Of all the discoveries made in the advancement of civilization and social science, none were so great as the discovery respecting the beneficial results of female influence upon society. In many good works they had been the means of doubling the contributions. Look at what had been done by Mrs. Fry in the prison, by Miss Nightingale in the hospital and in the camp, by Mrs. Chisholm in the convict emigrant ship, and by Miss Carpenter and Miss Sawyer in the reformatory. Was it possible to say what they might not do? He appealed to the ladies of Pontypool. The institution was placed in the neighbourhood, within easy reach; and he asked them for an occasional visit—a kindly visit—not of curiosity, amusement, or flattery, but a kindly visit to the orphan and the friendless, which they might feel as healing balm to their minds, having never experienced a kindly word or action before. He asked them for a visit which might produce a ray of light in the darkness where a ray of happiness and goodness had never shone before. He asked them, too, for the tender and sympathising tear. It might apparently be upon dry and barren ground, but a shower from heaven might convert it into a kindly soil, of goodliness, loveliness, and holiness. The ladies might exercise kindly and beneficial influences such as those he had mentioned; and he trusted all would consider the resolution now submitted to them to furnish the funds necessary to provide furniture and fittings for the institution. Mr. Bosanquet, who was frequently greeted with marks of approval, resumed his seat amid applause.

Digitized by Google

The Rev. Thomas Davies, in seconding the resolution, observed that, although the meeting was small, he was pleased to see several present who could not conveniently attend in the evening. The subscribers to the funds had manifested much liberality, but the subscriptions had been nearly exhausted by what had been accomplished. It would, perhaps, be discouraging to think that a house had been prepared, and that the committee now lacked the means to furnish it. The object of that special meeting was to furnish those means. While he hoped that much success might follow all that had been done, there was one greater object still in view—the real improvement of the children placed in the house. He entertained no doubt of success, because it had been realised in other institutions; and he was sure that brought into operation under their auspices would attain all the ends and accomplish all the designs in view. He trusted the meeting would be productive of much fruit, not exactly by means of the audience, but that the report of their proceedings would be widely disseminated, and that a more extended feeling of interest, with additional pecuniary aid, would result. He should always feel a personal interest in the institution, and should occasionally visit it, that, perhaps, being a task to be discharged with the greatest propriety by clergymen, who, if they could not give much money, might do something by visiting the institution, giving kindly advice to, and showing their heartfelt sympathy for, the poor children confined there. He trusted the blessing of God would rest upon the efforts of the subscribers, and that much praise would ascend to God.

The motion was agreed to.

The third resolution was moved by the Rev. Thomas Prothero. It read as follows:—

"That the thanks of the meeting be given to the General and Managing Committee, and that they be requested to continue their labours."

Resolutions of that nature were generally of a formal character, but he thought they would agree with him that it was not a mere formal proposition to give thanks to those who took part in such a matter. Unfortunately so few came forward to take their part in ameliorating the condition of the class under consideration, that it was the more incumbent upon them to express their earnest sympathy with those who really did share in the work. The gentlemen who acted upon the committee were generally the most anxious to forward measures for the public benefit, and could not but be deserving of their warm thanks. Connected as he was with the neighbourhood, and being acquainted with its requirements, he could not but feel satisfaction at the movement, and hope for its success. The experience of the Governor of Parkhurst, in the Isle of Wight, with which part of the country, they were aware, he (the Rev. Gentleman) was associated, was that a large number of children remained as they went in, but a large number became useful members of society. After the very beautiful and truthful addresses they had heard, he had little to add but to express his own earnest wish that this county would look, more than it had hitherto looked, to the necessity for a scheme of the kind in question, and that a far larger number of persons would come forward, and take part in it.

Dr. James seconded the resolution, declining to detain the meeting except to state his cordial approbation of the steps that had been taken in order to carry those beneficial effects produced by civilization in the country to a class of persons that heretofore had been neglected and left, as it were, in a very uncivilized condition. At the commencement of the proceedings the Chairman read a number of notes from parties, excusing their attendance; and as he (the Rev. Doctor) listened to the mention of one name after another, it struck him after all that those gentlemen were men of deeds rather than of words—that they had helped and would again help the good cause. He was not himself in the parish of Trevethin, or connected with Pontypool; but living adjacent, perhaps he might be allowed to say a few words in vindication of the town. That meeting, if small, was influential, and he saw a great many present who could do much by their suggestions and exertions. In Liverpool he remembered the morning meetings were thinly attended, but in the evening large numbers assembled. He had no doubt it would be so that evening. Upon several occasions he had attended evening meetings in that room for charitable and other purposes, and the experience he had gained led him to anticipate a numerous gathering in the after part of the day. He thought it right to say this, that the reporters, who probably would not be present at the subsequent meeting, might not leave the town under the impression that there was a lack of interest concerning the institution in that neighbourhood. As to the partial failure which might have occurred in some establishments, he was not disposed to take a gloomy view of the matter, inasmuch as time was required before they could be properly organised, and the arrangements and discipline properly perfected and understood. But as time rolled on, the best principles for the conduct of reformatory schools would be arrived at, and the results achieved be much more satisfactory. The human heart had to be dealt with. There was no child, however hardened his past conduct, who had not a conscience; and an appeal to that upon the principles of Divine Revelation could not fail to induce a good effect. If the individuals, therefore, who were to conduct the institution had not been selected, he trusted great care would be taken that they should be filled with love, sympathy, kindness, and condescension, willing to take to the poor unfortunate children as well under their care as on a par with themselves, not treating them as a degraded set of children, for without such qualifications on the part of the conductors, no good result could be expected at all. They might look at the bad character of one and another of these children, and imagine that every effort to reclaim them would be unsuccessful; and they might feel inclined to give them up. But he, for one, would never give up a child. They should try again and again, and when once they made way into the affections and heart of the child, and obtained his ear, they must ultimately attain his confidence, touch his sensibility and his reformation must be the result The Rev. Doctor concluded by offering his congratulations upon the part taken by the magistrates in the Christian work.

Digitized by Google

The resolution having been agreed to, Mr. Charles H. Williams moved the usual complimentary vote to the chairman; and it was carried by acclamation, having been seconded by Mr. W. W. Phillips, jun.

The Hon. Member briefly expressed his acknowledgments.

The meeting then separated.

A meeting was also held in the evening, when the chair was occupied by Mr. Chas. H. Williams. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. S. C. Baker, the Rev. Dr. Thomas, Mr. Bosanquet, the Rev. T. Davies, Mr. W. W. Phillips, the Rev. Dr. James, Mr. W. W. Phillips, jun. The first named reverend gentleman spoke of the great necessity of a reformatory school from the number and character of juvenile delinquents, and showed the unsuitability of a prison for their punishment and reformation. He described the nature of a reformatory school, its operation and probable results; and related several striking incidents illustrative of the evils of parental misrule, from cruelty, drunkenness, and over-indulgence. In the course of his address Mr. Baker described the former state of the prisons in England, and the miserable condition of the prisoners, illustrating the description by an account of the prisons at Monmouth and Usk when visited by John Howard the Philanthropist, in 1770-80, which presented a striking contrast to the present condition of the two establishments. Out of the £150 required, £83 18s. 7d. has been raised, among the contributors being Mr. Hanbury Leigh, £10; Mr. Hanbury Leigh, £5; Mr. Octavius Morgan, M.P., £5; Mr. S. R. Bosanquet, £10; Mr. John Lawrence, £10; Mr. J. Rennie, £5; Pontypool Iron Co., £5; and Mr. T. T. Cordes, £5.

"THE GREAT WEN."—Cobbett.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

Dear Sir,—I am about to leave my woods and pastures to take a survey of "the great wen," as Cobbett emphatically called it. I wonder what he would think of it now—to reduce this "great wen," without injuring the health of the subject, requires all the science of the ablest practitioner; my remarks, therefore, I would insert with a note of interrogation. Some years ago, in conversation with a Brighton Railway Director, I observed that if a suburban village were built upon a waste, within a few miles of the London Terminus, that the daily traffic to and fro might be the means of increasing their revenue; and we now know by experience, that it is the million that furnish the dividends. The plan was laid before the board, and approved, nem. con., but the £100,000 more or less required was not forthcoming. 1000 labourers might be brought up daily by train, and put down nearer to their work than they are at present, and taken back to their clean, healthy, comfortable homes every evening. The vexed question of Sunday excursion travelling would be in a great measure set at rest, for a suburban village might be attached to all the railway termini, consequently, many engineers, stokers, and porters, would enjoy a day of rest. The suburban village should be built in a square, with a Chapel, Schoolrooms, Reading-rooms, Bake and Washhouses, Souphouses, Brewery, and an Emporium for every article of food and raiment; in short, the habitation of one great family, governed by rules and regulations, and raising a fund by a trifling weekly payment against sickness, in short an Imperium in Imperio.

Utopian as this scheme may appear to many, yet I am convinced it might be carried out advantageously to all parties, But I have not quite done with "the wen!" We all know that our great thoroughfares are choked up by the immense traffic. Suppose that an Iron Tunnel be laid down on the London side of the Thames, catching all the sewers from the extreme west, and disgorging its vile, but valuable refuse, into a capacious cesspool, conveniently situate below Blackwall, there to be deodorized for agricultural purposes. Upon this cloaca maxima, two lines of rail might be laid, and the immense city traffic would thus be diverted. The sale of the manure and the traffic on the rail, would, I imagine balance the outlay.

I here subjoin a rough estimate of capital and revenue, as regards the suburban village.

20 acres of land at £100 an acre	£2000
1000 cottages at £80 each	80,000
Chapel, Brewery, Washhouses, Bakery, Reading-room, Gasometer, &c., ...	18,000
	£100,000

£100,000 raised at 4 per cent	£4000	℔ ann.
Rates and repairs.....	1000
	£5000
1000 cottages let at £5	£5000

Dormitories for single men may be made over all these buildings, except the Chapel and Brewhouse, which would increase the revenue.

Each family to pay 5s. yearly for Church purposes	£250
A Priest and Deacon, holding two full services on Sunday and a lecture on week days and Sunday evening	£250

Schooling, voluntary and self-supporting.
Do. Reading-room.
Do. Provident Society.

The expenses of each family would run thus:

	£	s.	d.
Cottage with use of washhouse per ann.	5	0	0
Church	0	5	0
School, say	0	5	0
Provident Society, and Reading-room	1	0	0
Railway, to and fro	5	0	0
	11	10	0

Beer to be sold at cost prices.

Thus each family would pay for these benefits, weekly, 4s. 6d.

I send you this off-hand statement to induce a more able correspondent to render it practicable.

I remain, yours truly

John Gurdon.

Assington Hall, December 8th, 1858.

Digitized by Google

Notices to Correspondents.

Our correspondents are requested to observe that we cannot be answerable for the insertion of any articles received after the 22nd of the month, or Advertisements after the 27th, though we shall always endeavour to meet their wishes.

N.B.—As "The Philanthropist" will be published in future by Mr. Tweedie, 337, Strand, the Editor requests that all communications may be forwarded to him there, where they will receive immediate attention.

Notice.—All sums due to "The Philanthropist" for Advertisements, and for Subscriptions from this date, to be paid to W. Tweedie, 337, Strand. No other person is authorised to give Receipts.

Jan. 1st, 1859.

* Attention is called to the following scale of charges for Advertisements :—*

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Five lines and under	0	2	6
Every additional line	0	0	4
A column	1	15	0
Half-page	2	5	0
A page	4	0	0

Charitable Institutions, 3*d.* per line.

N.B.—Advertisements in the first and last pages 1*d.* per line extra.

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE,

January 1, 1859.

THE PAST YEAR.

ANOTHER year has rolled over our heads and is buried in the irrevocable past; full of deep importance, as well to nations as to individuals. Like our betters, we feel it a wholesome duty to call into exercise the wonderful gift of memory, and in a mirror of her framing to cast the eye of thought over the events it brings to mind, which have intermingled with the general account, but which bear more especially upon our own peculiar sphere of action. Looking back over the twelve months which have fled for ever, we find but little difference from the ordinary retrospect of mortal man. Some few pleasurable spots there are upon which the eye may rest awhile, if not with boasting, at least with hope of ultimate good fruitage; but more, far more, to fill us with sorrow, to make us acknowledge, in spite of many noble and spirited efforts both of individual and collective charity, to stem the torrent of vice and crime, to ameliorate the condition of the poor, and to generate "more sympathy" between the different members of the body social, that at the close of 1858, society, whether as respects mutual sympathy and forbearance, or its general prosperity manifests but little, if any, real symptoms of a healthy condition. Let us not be thought to undervalue the progress, which in some respects has been very decided. What we look for as the only true source of national greatness, is the progress made in the one thing needful. Were social prosperity dependent upon growth in scientific enlightenment or the spread of taste for the arts and sciences; were mercantile stability, manufacturing skill, or even political steadiness, the true foundation of national glory: were proximity of nations and the rapidity of galvanic intercommunication the proper element of true peace; were the victorious arm of power wielded by the few over the many, yet with unvarying success, a guarantee of a people's fitness to claim the name of Christian; we could perhaps look back with pleasure, and feel that England has indeed advanced during the past year. But it is impossible to overlook the fact, that permanent greatness cannot be founded on any one of these elements of success, nor on any others of a kindred nature, nor indeed on a combination of the whole. They may indeed elevate the mind—they may even in some instances generate a proper feeling of humility. But this is rare. The tendency of worldly success is far more generally to weaken the feeling of dependence upon a higher power, and wrap the mind in contemplation of self. Nations proud and prosperous as our own, have in the very midst of their prosperity sunk into oblivion, until the traveller scarcely finds the place where their power and magnificence were known. Seats of empires have been changed; and nations, raised for a brief period above the ordinary level, nay, even to the highest pinnacle of glory, have fallen back again and sunk into the mass from whence they rose. But if we look back to history we shall observe that it is not the hand of nature, nor the destruction of pestilence, the earthquake, or the storm; no, nor even the conquering arms of an avenging people, that have brought ruin in their train: these are but the instruments in the hands of a mighty Ruler; not the causes of natural decay. We must trace the fall of nations to other influences—to national sins, to corruption of private manners, resulting too often from prosperity unacknowledged as to its source—to injustice or oppression of internal government—to ambition or avarice in national policy.

We have ever repudiated political discussion. We have dismissed the very word "party" from our vocabulary. Our eyes and thoughts have ever been occupied in an endeavour to check the leading sources of social disorganization, and to point out how these may be best met and eradicated from the system. It is but folly to try to hide from ourselves that the leading national sins of England are drunkenness and Sabbath-breaking. Good and true men are striving with energy and fair success to battle with those evils. It is well that large and noble attempts are made to reach the people in their own homes and alleys, and teach them how rightly to appreciate the day of rest—not simply as a physical boon, as any other holiday; but a great levee day, when all may freely carry their petitions to a monarch who can give them rest far above that of the mere body—a peace totally independent of the world in which they are doomed to labour. It is well that associated bodies, as well as individuals, strive to deal with the deadly evil of intoxication; it may be gratefully acknowledged that these labours have been attended with very evident success. Still it must be patent to every thinking mind that the nation is too regardless of the sacredness of the Sabbath, and that the facilities and legalized encouragement to drunkenness are too powerful for a thoughtless people; that drunkenness still maintains an awful sway over a very large portion of a so-called Christian people; eating like a poisonous canker into their very life-blood, and putting a frightful blot and blemish on their otherwise fair renown.

As a necessary consequence, crime and poverty stare us in the face in every direction: with these we have to battle, as the fruits of our own neglect; and when we look back on the efforts made during the past year to carry on this battle, we think we see much to comfort and encourage. So far as the Reformatory Schools Act is concerned, we never permitted ourselves to be alarmed, as many were, with the idea that the schools would ever be looked upon by the masses as a premium to crime, that the number of juvenile criminals would soon greatly exceed the probable accommodation, and entail an almost incredible and increasing expense on the country. We ever felt that, though at first they might be filled to the utmost limit of their accommodation, the very manner in which they would deal with their first inmates would in a short period greatly diminish the class for whom they were intended. This result has followed in a most marked manner the judicious efforts of Mr. Barwick Baker, whose views on the subject are, we are glad to find, gaining ground; and we may say generally that the Reformatory system has worked well. Bad boys are being gradually disposed of under the Act, their evil influence removed, and already a very sensible diminution is everywhere observable in this class. In the course of a few years we may fairly hope that a thoroughly criminal boy will scarcely be found at large. But there are yet hundreds that have what may be termed the makings of criminal boys; the ragged, poor, and untaught little creatures who live by begging. To deal with these—mainly such as are forced into their habits by drunken and abandoned parents—a legislative weapon exists, which we can only regret has not yet been wielded. We look anxiously to the only body that appears to us likely to bring the Industrious Schools Act into active and useful operation. We mean the spirited committee of the Reformatory and Refuge Union. Great is the debt of gratitude which the public owe to that Association, and we hope it will be properly and substantially acknowledged.

Digitized by Google

The well-being of society being now acknowledged as a science, Birmingham and Liverpool having witnessed with marked effect the birth and progress of an associatiation expressly formed to promote and encourage it as such, we certainly feel justified in hoping that those subjects to which we have from the first devoted our humble pages, as connected with the social improvement of our fellow-men, have fallen into able hands, and will be well canvassed and considered, and that we may in all sincerity, in hope—nay, almost in confidence—wish our readers a happy new year.

REFORMATORY AND REFUGE UNION.

As we have more than once said, this Union richly deserves the warm support of the public, especially such as feel it incumbent on them to aid in the Christian work of restoring the wandering to a sense of their duty and their privileges; and it deserves this support because of its practical character; little time is occupied in debating—a good object is found to be feasible in connection with their sphere of action, and straightway measures are vigorously set on foot to carry that object into effect. We make no apology for drawing attention to some of their doings during the past twelve months, and for the greater convenience of reference we will divide the work under several heads.

The Social Evil.—Ninety-two young women have been rescued from the streets of London, and placed in penitentiaries, &c., through the agency of two female missionaries, who have been visiting fallen women in the streets and in their own homes during the past nine months, under the supervision of a sub-committee appointed by the Reformatory and Refuge Union.

This success encourages the Committee to appeal to the Christian public for further funds, to enable them to carry on the work with efficiency. The money already subscribed has been nearly expended in payment of missionaries, and donations with cases sent to institutions.

A handbook, containing separate accounts of fifty Penitentiaries and Homes for Females, with the terms of admission, &c., has been published, and can be had at the office of the Union; also tracts and handbills for the special use of missionaries to fallen women.

Contributions will be received for this object by the bankers, Messrs. Smith, Payne and Co., 1, Lombard-street; and Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie and Co., 1, Pall Mall East; also by the Secretary of the Union, Mr. Charles Gwillim, to whom post-office orders should be made payable.

The following contributions since the last advertisement are thankfully acknowledged:—T. Fowell Buxton, Esq., 25*l.*; R. C.L. Bevan, Esq., 10*l.*; Lord Radstock, 10*l.*; C. S., 10*l.*; Charles Ratcliff, Esq. (an.) 1*l.* 1*s.*; William Robinson, Esq., 3*l.*; George Arbuthnot, Esq., 3*l.*; G. W. Bell, Esq. (an.) 10*s.* 6*d.*; A Friend, per W. J. Maxwell, Esq., 1*l.*; A Sailor, per Ransom and Co., 1*l.*

The School Ship.—We know not that we can better aid this cause than by giving a copy of the circular which is ready for issue. It is under the patronage of the Prince Consort; and the president, vice-presidents, and committee are composed of names of the best description.

It is proposed to establish a Reformatory School Ship for London and the Southern Counties, on the plan of the Akbar School Frigate, which has proved so successful at Liverpool.

The "School Ship" will receive and train as sailors such boys of the vagrant and criminal class as are fitted by their love of danger and adventure, and by their more active and unmanageable tempers, for the risks and hardships of a seaman's life. Lads of this class are to be found in all Reformatory Schools and Refuges; and the want of such a training ship as is now contemplated, has been long felt and strongly represented by almost every manager of such institutions.

It is proposed to certify the "School Ship" under the "Youthful Offenders" Act (17, 18 Vict. 86). By this means the Treasury allowance for the care and maintenance of the boys received under a magistrate's order will be applicable to its support. The parents of such boys will be liable to contribute towards their maintenance; and the boys themselves will be retained under religious instruction and practical training for such a period as may fairly ensure their moral improvement and their acquaintance with a sailor's duties.

By this means also the "School Ship" will be available for that large class of cases which the regulations of the Marine Society exclude, and for the admission of boys, anxious and suited for the sea, from other certified Reformatories.

The Admiralty have granted the Cornwall, a 50-gun frigate, no longer required for active service, and have promised considerable aid towards rigging and fitting the vessel.

H. R. H. the Prince Consort, as Master of the Trinity House, has kindly consented to become the patron of the Institution.

The ship will be moored in the Thames, sufficiently far from London to ensure that the boys will have full opportunity for boat exercise, and be out of reach of interference from their relatives and former companions. It will be commanded by a naval officer, and the whole of its management and regulations will be arranged as far as possible on the model of a man-of-war.

The sum of about 3000*l.* will be requisite for the fitting, furnishing, and initial expenses. The subsequent expenditure will be mainly provided for by the Treasury allowances for the inmates.

The Committee would respectfully ask your aid in raising the necessary funds, trusting that the importance and practical utility of the object will ensure your co-operation with their efforts.

The following donations have been made:—Messrs. Baring, Brothers and Co., 100*l.*; Cavan, Brothers and Co., 100*l.*; Daniel Thomas and Co., 100*l.*; Finlay, Hodgson and Co., 100*l.*; Overend, Gurney and Co.; 100*l.*; Rothschild and Sons, 100*l.*; Smith, Payne and Co.; 100*l.*; Truman, Hanbury and Co., 100*l.*; Williams, Deacon and Co., 100*l.*; Barclay, Bevan and Co., 50*l.*; Boddington and Davis, 50*l.*; H. E. Gurney, Esq., 50*l.*; Robert Hanbury, Esq., M.P., 50*l.*; H. T. Hope, Esq., 50*l.*; Jones, Loyd, and Co., 50*l.*; Masterman and Co., 50*l.*; Prescott, Grote and Co., 50*l.*; Thomson, Bonar and Co., 50*l.*; Reformatory and Refuge Union, 50*l.*; Wood, Field and Co., 30*l.*; Thos. Baring, Esq., M.P., 25*l.*; Bosanquet and Co., 25*l.*; Stephen Cave, Esq., 25*l.*; G. H. Chambers, Esq., 25*l.*; Charles Coles, Esq., jun., 25*l.*; A. Gibbs and Sons, 25*l.*; J. S. Gilliatt, Esq., 25*l.*; R. and H. Green, 25*l.*; Thomas D. Hill, Esq., 25*l.*; Lockwood, Randall and Co., 25*l.*; Ransom, Bouverie and Co., 25*l.*; Robarts and Co., 25*l.*; James Thomson and Co., 25*l.*; Hankeys and Co., 21*l.*; Thomson Hankey and Co., 21*l.*; W. B. Hume and Co., 21*l.*; Joseph Marryat and Sons, 20*l.*; E. H. Chapman, Esq., 10*l.* 10*s.*; J. B. Chapman, Esq., 10*l.* 10*s.*; Finnis and Fisher, 10*l.* 10*s.*; G. Lyall, Esq., M.P., 10*l.* 10*s.*; Scrutton, Sons and Co., 10*l.* 10*s.*; Oliver Farrer, Esq., 10*l.*; J. Gurney Hoare, Esq., 10*l.*; Mayo and Man, 10*l.*; Lord Radstock, 10*l.*; Rev. W. Smyth, 10*l.*; Joseph Tucker, Esq., 10*l.*; Captain A. Boyle, R.N., 5*l.* 5*s.*; the Hon. G. Denman, 5*l.* 5*s.*; T. A. Shuter and Co., 5*l.* 5*s.*; E. Charrington, Esq., 5*l.*; J. C. Mansel, Esq., 5*l.*; G. Melly, Esq., 5*l.*; Reed, Louch and Co., 5*l.*; Rev. W. Tyler, 5*l.*; Johnson and Sons, 1*l.* 1*s.*; S. Wimbush, Esq. (ann.) 1*l.* 1*s.*; A Friend, 10*s.* 6*d.* Making a total of 1993*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

Digitized by Google

Grants to Institutions.—The Union have resolved to endeavour to meet the difficulties caused by the last alterations in the minutes of Council; and at a full general meeting, the following resolutions were proposed by Rev. Sydney Turner, Government Inspector of Reformatories, and unanimously carried:—

1. The Committee of Council having intimated their intention to withdraw a large portion of the assistance hitherto given to uncertified Reformatories and Refuges, it is expedient that grants be made in aid of the efficient management and support of such Institutions by the Reformatory and Refuge Union, and that a Fund be raised for that purpose.

2. That in connection with such grants, and as a means of promoting their efficiency and good management, all uncertified Reformatories and Refuges so assisted be regularly visited and reported on by Inspectors appointed by the Union.

Cases for certified Reformatories.—Much assistance has been given to London Magistrates and others in obtaining entrances to Institutions. Not less than twenty-two have been thus provided for, and we understand that there are now vacancies in several Schools for both boys and girls.

Cases for Refuges.—Of forty applications, thirty have been secured admittance, mostly with some payments, varying from 1*s.* to 5*s.* per week, from parents or friends.

Certified Industrial School.—Mr. Adderley having sent about a boy whom Mr. Selfe wished to commit under the Industrial Schools Act; admission was obtained for him into the Boys' House, 44, Euston Road. This is the second case under the Act; and, as we have elsewhere remarked, we look to the Union to bring this Act into knowledge and operation.

Exchange of Inmates has been effected for several Institutions. Managers of institutions should send particulars of any inmates they wish to exchange.

Conducting boys through London.—This has been done several times with boys sent from Somersetshire to join H.M. navy at Sheerness. Others from the country have been conveyed to institutions.

Notice of inmates absconding or dismissed.—Forms are prepared and have been used in several instances.

Articles sold and orders received for Institutions.—This has been done to a very considerable extent, and great satisfaction has been expressed.

Books for Libraries have been granted to several Institutions, forming, in many cases, the nucleus of very good Libraries.

Applications for Employment.—Nearly a hundred have been on the list during the year, and many have, on good and careful examination, been found worthy of recommendation, and have been appointed to situations.

We need hardly say that all this has caused an immense amount of correspondence, activity and energy, and has not been accomplished without an outlay of money; yet we are ashamed to record that, excepting of course the special funds, as for the Laundry, the Social Evil, and the Ship School, there are but 164 Subscribers, amounting in all to £130; the donations averaging about £300; while the unavoidable expenditure in connection with the working of the office amounts to £580, or £150 in excess of the income. That a society so eminently practical, and which has conferred such benefits on the public in so many various ways, should be so little supported, is a positive disgrace to the rich benevolence of this country. All societies should be judged by their actual deeds, and we challenge our readers to name one which, with so little public support, has effected such a varied amount of good. What has been the cause? The Committee exerted themselves at its commencement, and collected upwards of £2000 for the Metropolitan Institutions; they have collected another £2000 towards the School Ship; they have collected large sums also for the Social Evil purposes, and £1000 for the Laundry. Perhaps they feel ashamed to ask for themselves. It is a natural feeling, but it should not be permitted to prove an hindrance to them in their labours. Let the generous public acknowledge their exertions, by legacies or otherwise. For what the Committee have done with their little, is surely a fair earnest of what they would do, were they not labouring under the embarrassing feeling that their necessary office expenditure exceeds their income, but supported as they so fully deserve.

ST. MARK'S SCHOOL, WINDSOR.

We have been favoured by the founder and promoter of this school, the Rev. Stephen Hawtrey, with the printed account of its operation and system, and can only express our regret that his feeling of modesty confines it to private circulation among the writer's friends who may be interested in the subject of education. We say regret; we would even go further,—to express an opinion, that, as there are so many who may not be personally acquainted with the rev. gentleman, but yet are deeply interested in the subject he has so well treated; as there are so many thousands springing into life to whom proper education is a point of the deepest moment; and as, moreover, anything tending to throw even the faintest light on this professedly difficult subject must be hailed as a boon, we think this is a case in which modesty should give way to patriotism, and Mr. Hawtrey should permit the circulation of his book far and wide. The system on which this school is founded and sustained is so unique, so contrary to the usually received notion, that many might be disposed to cavil and find fault; and, so long as the enterprise was merely in a state of experiment, we can understand an unwillingness to enter upon public contest, supported merely by theory, however excellent and promising. But this school is of ten years' standing, and has apparently borne such fruits as fully to justify a hope, that when the bushel is removed from the candle all may see the light. Many similar schools might spring up, and Windsor tactics become a foundation for a really sound system of education. Considering that the whole of the debates on National Education, whether in parliament, in congress under the presidency of the Prince Consort, or in the educational department of the Social Science Association, have resolved themselves into an acknowledgment that scholars leave school too soon, and then shake off further control, it is no slight triumph for Mr. Hawtrey to be able to assert, "We have gained the two points that promoters of schools have most at heart. We retain the children at school quite as long as can be expected, and we keep up a connexion with them after they have left the school."

We feel that we can hardly do justice to St. Mark's School by anything we could write. Let those who ponder on what National Education should be, visit the schools, or apply to Mr. Hawtrey for his book: we can only say the book should be published. It is very true, that even yet there are a large number of heads of families and employers of labour who think that we are over-educating at our National Schools. They affirm that servants were more conscientious when they knew less; that apprentices were more obedient and tractable when boys did not learn so many things. It may therefore be startling to find that Mr. Hawtrey not only advocates, but proves by experience, the advantage of a still higher and more intellectual teaching than that at present in vogue. The whole system, however, seems to be founded on such true principles, and such a perfect knowledge of human nature, and there is such a judicious cultivation of sympathy between master and scholar, that success is hardly to be wondered at, and we would not have our readers condemn the plans until they know them. Mr. Hawtrey observes, very justly, that the business of a school is to teach our scholars how to learn. That school will not be best from which the scholars go forth with the largest stock of information, however valuable and practical it may be. The best school will be the one where the training has been such as to fit them for carrying on self-education after they leave the school. And while the intellectual and moral training is under admirable order, we confess to no less approbation of the system of physical training adopted. Had we permission we should extract much of the valuable hints given in this part of the private book. Suffice it to observe, that whether in the school-room or the playground, the great endeavour is to call out all that is good, to generate a love of truth and brotherly kindness, and invigorate the frame, while the tone of the mind is preserved.

Digitized by Google

One thing more and we have done. For nearly ten years this school has been carried on in the only buildings attainable for the purpose. These buildings have been condemned in the last minutes of the Privy Council, and, such as they are, have been rented from year to year by the Rev. gentleman so often alluded to ; and should it please God to remove him, the whole might come to an end. To remedy this it is contemplated to erect suitable buildings, when Mr. Hawtrey trusts to make the school self-supporting. The estimated cost, including master's house, &c., is £4,500. A grant of course may be expected from the Privy Council ; a site valued at £600. has been given by A. Vansittart ; Esq., and it appears that an appeal made to his friends, by Mr. Hawtrey,—himself a donor of £200.—has already resulted in donations of £700. He will find more friends if only he permit his endeavours to be more widely known. There is such a general feeling prevalent, that our educational efforts are inadequate to the requirements of the age, that we should have no fear for the result of a general appeal to the friends of education at large. The principles adopted at St. Mark's appear to be the true ones, and if in addition such a school can be found to be self-supporting, the satisfaction will be all but universal. The walls of the new schools will not, we trust, be long before they rear their heads, and the generous promoter have the comfort of witnessing the accomplishment of his desire, and we trust he may live to see other schools flourish, conducted on the principles of our great public schools, yet adapted to the condition and requirements of the poor.

(T.)

COTTAGE IMPROVEMENT.

It is not impossible sometimes to combine a decided boon to the poor with an advantageous investment. Our readers will hear with pleasure that this has been done in a society formed at Hastings, for the purpose of improving the cottages, and so the comforts, of their poorer brethren. We have pleasure in inserting the following half-yearly report of their operations for the six months ending October 7th, 1858 ; the very commencement of which has a satisfactory sound.

On the occasion of paying to the shareholders of the Hastings Cottage-Improvement Society their third half-yearly dividend, the Committee think it will not be unfitting to give a very brief account of the progress and proceedings of the Society during the last six months.

In April, five houses were purchased in Gibbon Square, (in St. Clement's parish,) accommodating seven families. One set of rooms was vacant when the property was purchased. Three of the houses were overcrowded, there being only four bedrooms for twenty-two persons of all ages. These three families, therefore, had notice to quit, and two of them (who behaved very well on the occasion) received a small gratuity from the Benevolent Fund.

In September, the three Portland Cottages were purchased, (in the parish of St. Mary-in-the Castle,) occupied by three tenants, who will remain.

In the same month the Society purchased four tenements in East-hill Passage, in the parish of All Saints. These are calculated to accommodate six families, but are so much out of repair, that they have been unoccupied for many months, except by one family, who live in a single room, at the rent of one shilling per week. The necessary repairs and improvements will be commenced immediately.

The loss of rent from empty houses, during the past six months, among the Society's habitable property, has been about £6 8s. 6d., and would have been less if the Committee, in the case of each empty house had always accepted as a tenant the first applicant. They have, however, continued to make inquiries into the chaaacter of each person who applies for any of their houses, and are determined, as far as possible, that all their tenants shall be persons of respectability. For the last two months, all the Society's houses that are fit for habitation have been occupied, which is the best proof that the tenants are satisfied with their position.

The Committee have agreed to purchase two small tenements in Church Street, in St. Clement's parish ; and they are also in treaty for several other properties varying in price from about £40 to £600.

The Society has hitherto suffered no loss from bad debts ; but in two instances the Committee has been obliged to resort to the County Court, in order to procure the payment of the arrears of rent that were due. In both cases the tenants were persons of very indifferent character ; and it was mere folly and obstinacy (not poverty,) that induced them to persist in refusing to pay their rent.

The arrears of rent due to the Society are gradually diminishing, as most of the new tenants pay weekly, and in advance, with considerable regularity. The old tenants (most of whom, however, are very respectable persons,) have not yet been induced to conform to the wishes of the Committee, by paying their rent punctually, though they are aware of the rule, that no one, whose rent is in arrear, can receive any assistance from the Benevolent Fund.

This fund which was originally founded by a contribution from the Society's revenue), has been supported by voluntary donations from the Shareholders, and other persons who took this mode of testifying their sympathy and approbation of the objects and operations of the Society. The Committee continue to regard it as a valuable and efficient part of the Society's plan of assisting the labouring classes.

The Penny Savings' Bank (which was alluded to in the Society's last report) has since been established, and has succeeded as well as could have been expected in the commencement. The number of depositors has been five, and the amount deposited is £2 2s. 4d. Nothing has yet been withdrawn. The Committee commenced the Penny Bank as an experiment ; they are now sufficiently persuaded of its usefulness, and have no doubt but that, by degrees, a greater number of their tenants will take advantage of it.

The Capital stock of the Society has been increased to £3,500 by the issue of thirteen and a half new shares of £100 each, all fully paid up. Only about half of this new capital has been expended, as follows, viz.:—

	£	s.	d.
Purchase of property	555	0	0
Expense of conveyance.....	13	2	2
Repairs & improvements, &c.	51	12	9
Surveyor	4	3	0
Sundries.....	0	2	0
	620	19	11
Balance remaining	778	5	9
	£1402	5	8

The balance is much larger than the Committee wish, in ordinary cases, to keep lying idle ; but in the present instance it was considered prudent to take the money when it was offered, and it is expected that it will all be wanted, in the course of a few weeks.

Digitized by Google

At the beginning of August the Committee determined to raise the price of shares to £101, and to give the premiums to the Reserve Fund. In doing this they had a threefold object in view: 1st, to increase the Reserve Fund more rapidly than could be done by maintaining it entirely out of the Society's revenue; 2ndly, to test the amount of confidence in the stability and management of the Society entertained by its friends and the public; 3rdly, to check, as far as possible, any future tendency to private speculation in the shares, by making the Society itself the gainer by the premiums arising from the confidence of the public, instead of letting them go to the benefit of any individual Shareholder. The experiment has succeeded even better than could have been expected, as no less than £1000 has been raised on shares issued at the increased price. For the next six months the price of the shares has been fixed at £102.

The Reserve Fund has been augmented by £21 16s. 3d. during the past half-year, and now amounts to £36 16s. 3d. This is but a small sum in itself, but it is expected that it will increase in a greater proportion as the Society is more and more extended.

The net Revenue has amounted to £118 16s. 9d., and has been appropriated as follows, viz.—

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Dividend.....	74	4	3
Interest on Money advanced by Bankers	0	6	1
				74	10	4
Officers' Salaries ...	35	0	0
Deduct fees returned	4	0	0
				31	0	0
Reserve Fund				10	2	11
Sundries				3	3	6
				£118	16	9

The Shareholders have again received a half-yearly dividend at the rate of six per cent. per annum, clear of income-tax.

The accounts of the Society are now audited in such a manner as to render it almost impossible for any error (whether arising from fraud or negligence,) to escape immediate detection. The Treasurer prepares a monthly Balance-sheet previous to each meeting of the Committee, which shows at one view, 1—the Society's total present balance; 2—how much of this balance belongs to capital and how much to revenue; and 3—how much is at the Banker's, and how much in the hands of the Treasurer. This balance-sheet is examined by the Auditors, who also present a report, specifying, 1—What payments (ordered to be made at the last monthly meeting of the Committee,) have been made during the past month; 2—What sums are still unpaid; and 3—What bills they have examined, and recommend the Committee to order to be paid.

The monthly appointment of Visitors has been continued, and has been found a very efficient mode of inspecting the Society's different properties, and also of managing many trifling but necessary matters, and thereby saving the time of the Committee at their monthly meetings.

The Committee think they cannot better conclude, than by bringing before the notice of the Shareholders the following extract from the last Annual Report of the "Society for Improving the Condition of the Labouring Classes." After mentioning some other provincial Societies, the Report states that "At Hastings the Local Society has met with great success, having purchased a third" [now a sixth] "property for the purpose of renovation. This Society has already been found to afford a profitable and benevolent mode of investment."

HOME FOR CONVALESCENT CHILDREN,

Cleveland Cottage, Millhill, Hendon, N.W.

It is rarely that any establishment of a really beneficial nature long exists in its solitude. Others of a like or kindred nature are sure to follow. Thus the admirable establishment for the reception of convalescents, at Walton-on-Thames, has not been without its offspring. It seemed but natural to ask the question, whether the class received at Walton were the only one for whom such an establishment were required. Some may have perhaps thought that children should be admitted to similar benefits; some may have rested contented with such establishments as the Margate Sea-bathing Infirmary. Lady Harding, however, not only thought but acted, and opened her own "Home," in April last, as an experiment; nor did she appeal to the public until authorized by beneficial results of her own private endeavours to hope that the public would lend their aid to enlarge her sphere of usefulness. Cleveland Cottage, Millhill, Hendon, where she has carried on her Christian work, is only adapted to receive twelve at a time, but upwards of eighty children have been admitted. All have left it much benefited, and the medical men have assured her that many have been permanently improved in health; the parents are much pleased with it, and it is a trait much to the credit of the London poor, that many of them have walked in heat and dust upwards of ten miles to see their children, during the month that they have been at Millhill. Lady Harding hopes, if properly aided, to move to a larger house, and in a more accessible situation, in the coming spring. Her objects and feelings will be best explained by the following extracts from the papers which she kindly submitted for our perusal:—

Fifty thousand persons die annually in London, of these no less than twenty-one thousand are children under ten years of age.

All those who have ever been familiar with the homes of the London poor, know well the numbers of children who pine away and die, merely from the combined effects of bad air and indifferent food; the former being much the most fatal evil.

Even children nurtured with the greatest care, and in the most healthy part of London, droop after a protracted residence in town: every mother is but too well aware of this. Parents who have watched the fading cheek of their own child, and then have experienced the delight of seeing the glow of renovated health and strength, produced by timely change of air, will sympathize with, and endeavour to assist, those less fortunate than themselves, who have to endure the agony of witnessing their children wasting away hourly, and of feeling themselves powerless to give them the only efficacious relief. The object of "The Home for Convalescent Children," is to afford this relief, by enabling the children of the London poor to enjoy the simplest, yet greatest of God's blessings, the blessing of fresh pure air, for a few weeks in the year.

This, united with other comforts, is found permanently to invigorate the constitutions of the little sufferers, who have never known any change from the ill-ventilated rooms and close courts and alleys inhabited by their parents.

"Good air, good food, and good water, at the moment when the health is failing, may be the means, with God's blessing, of transforming sickly helpless objects into blooming children, likely to grow up into strong men and women.

"While their bodily health is carefully tended, and is necessarily made the chief object, their spiritual and intellectual culture will not be neglected. The rudiments of an Infant School system of training will be attempted as far as circumstances will allow, and though little of actual teaching can be effected with children so young, and who are only received for a limited period, perhaps a short prayer, a text of Scripture, a hymn, or a proverb, learned here in their infancy, may return to them in after years, and be a support and comfort in the trials and temptations of life. The utter helplessness of those for whose immediate benefit this charity is intended, must call forth the sympathy of all who have the privilege of being able to give to their poorer brethren. To parents and others who have the guardianship of children, this good work must specially commend itself.

"Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me."—Matt. xviii. 5.

Cleveland Cottage, Millhill, Hendon, N.W., has been taken, furnished, and is now opened for the reception of twelve children, in the earnest hope and prayer that it may prove the germ of a larger institution of the same nature.

Those who may be disposed to assist in this undertaking are requested to communicate with Lady Harding, 30, St. James's Place, S.W.

Digitized by Google

THE PLAYGROUND SOCIETY.

This Society is still actively engaged in its laudable endeavours to afford to the rising generation of the metropolis and large towns the means and appliances for healthy play. No one can for a single moment doubt the evil effects of a large body of poor children, having no place but the public streets whereon to enter upon the amusements and gambols so natural to, and indeed so necessary for, children. Every one must object to it, and the Playground Society is formed to meet the evil; but everyone does not see how it can be avoided, where wretched hovels are so crowded, and vacant space so valuable. It is possible that some may consider the expense of carrying out the Society's plans, on account of the value of the ground, more than the gain might be worth. These are, however, but shortsighted individuals, who look only to the present: the Society, on the contrary, looks into futurity. It is impossible to conceive the valuable influence on future generations, of rearing up our present young in such a way as to give vigour and tone both to body and mind. At any rate no one can deny that the object is purely philanthropic; and in the highest degree Christian; and while money to almost any amount may be collected for the spiritual improvement of the poor, or indeed for any object once clearly admitted to be good, surely both individuals and bodies of men will be found to lend a hand to give to the young that which is of the very deepest importance to them—the means of proper recreation. Especially when it is considered that the health and tone of the mind are influenced in an almost incredible degree by the physical tone of the body. We cannot deny that there are obstacles, especially in the metropolis; yet are there plots of land which might well be appropriated to so benevolent a purpose. With a view to obtaining the sanction and co-operation of the first magistrate in the realm, a deputation waited on the Lord Mayor on Friday, December 3, to bring the subject before him. The deputation was composed of the following gentlemen:—Mr. Alderman Rose, Mr. Harwood Harwood, Rev. Ed. Spooner, Rev. John Oliver, Rev. T. B. Coulson, Mr. J. T. Clover, Mr. Charles Ratcliff, of Birmingham, and Mr. Edward West.

Mr. Alderman Rose introduced the deputation, and spoke in strong terms of the benevolent and useful objects of the Society, and he was ably followed by the Rev. Mr. Spooner, and Mr. West, strongly soliciting his Lordship's patronage and support. The Lord Mayor received the deputation with every attention, listened with evident interest to the statements made, and concluded by promising to give the matter his best consideration, and then report to Alderman Rose. Unhappily, on the very same evening his Lordship was struck with paralysis, and lost the use of his right side. It is hoped, however, that the matter will again be brought before the corporation, and receive, as it undoubtedly should, their co-operation and support. If it be objected that children have hitherto done well without it, that the streets have hitherto answered the purpose, and may continue to do so, the answer is obvious: that the density of population increases year by year; that with that density grows also the amount of crime; and that one among many, and perhaps the best, means of obviating the contaminating influence of bad children will be to provide for them all healthful places of recreation and exercise, under proper control, as is the aim of the Playground Society.

CHARLES STREET, DRURY LANE, RAGGED SCHOOLS.

With the hope of aiding in some degree, schools of which we can, from personal knowledge, speak in the most favourable terms, we insert the following circular, to the inhabitants of the neighbourhood of Charles Street, Drury Lane, and to all friends of Ragged Schools, which has been issued by the Committee:—

The Committeeof Charles Street Ragged School having at a considerable outlay taken and fitted up an additional schoolroom, and having now accommodation for between 200 and 300 children, have recently engaged (in addition to the mistresses of the girls' and infants' day-schools, a master for the boys' school. The Committee appeal to you to help them in defraying the increased expenditure thus incurred, and enable them to continue the important work which has been growing up at this school for nine years. The operations of the school have been conducted in an unsectarian spirit, and it is desirable that this spirit should be maintained, for we fear that it may be said of thousands, who live and perish in this locality, that they are without hope, and without Christ, in the world. Those Christians who have been into the neighbourhood feel that here all minor differences must be laid aside, so that nothing may interfere to hinder them in feeding Christ's starving lambs. Besides appealing to you as Christians, we would speak to you as citizens and countrymen, and remind you, that if not taken by the hand of sympathy and Christian love, the young who live in Charles Street are, from the nature of their associations, likely to become the curse of our land. Those who officially know the criminal character of many with whom the children must mix, will more than confirm this statement. Surely, if you can do anything, either by personal assistance or giving a portion of the silver and gold which God may have entrusted to your care, we fondly hope this help will not be denied.

The fact that very large Roman Catholic Reformatory Schools have been lately opened in Charles Street, largely assisted both in the building and in its income by the Government, will perhaps induce some readers to assist the labours of this Committee, who rely under God's blessing on the unaided subscriptions of the charitable, in their efforts to instruct the young in the simple truths of the Gospel. Further information concerning the school may be obtained by a visit to the school, by perusing the Report; or on reference to the Rev. Samuel Garrett, 29, Burton Crescent; or to the Treasurer, Charles Corbin, Esq., 30, Great Queen Street.

Correspondence.

MEDICAL CHARITY.

The following two letters, under the head of "Medical Reform," have been extracted from the Standard, and appear to be worthy of consideration.

"Sickness is one to the poor, and one to the rich; or if not so, the poor, because of his poverty, needs the more in his sickness."—Acland's Memoirs on the Cholera at Oxford.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir,—Of all the questions which the subject of medical reform can raise, medical charity is one which is most deeply interesting, inasmuch as it concerns so many persons. It would not be too much to say, that it concerns every one to see that medical charity is rightly administered; but especially are the social economist, the philanthropist, and the medical man, interested in the solution of this confessedly difficult problem.

A dispensary or a hospital is the form in which the public gives expression to its medical charity. Each dispensary and hospital should be a model to the neighbourhood in which it is placed, both as a medical institution and as an exhibition of what charity should be; and, looking at the numbers which frequent these institutions, their social influence should bear the closest investigation. Socially, morally and medically, they should be unexceptionable in principle.

It may seem superfluous to say, that a medical institution should be medically unexceptionable in principle. But it is not so; a very little consideration will convince the most sceptical that the medical aid which is provided for others is a very different thing from that which is thought necessary for ourselves.

The very first element in a satisfactory provision for ourselves is the security that we derive from the competition which arises from the liberty we have to choose our own medical attendant. This is denied to the pauper, and if the recipient of alms attempt to choose from among the limited staff of a medical charity, he does so at the risk of great increase of suffering, as he may have to wait days, or even weeks, before he can do so.

Digitized by Google

Intimately connected with this first medical defect, the being unable to choose his own medical attendant, is a second—the delay which is inseparable from admission of patients by letters of recommendation. This, though less evident to the public, is of momentous import. There is delay in obtaining a letter; there is delay in the crowded "waiting" room; delay arises from limiting the attendance to certain hours of certain days in the week; much more when there is but one day in the week for admission of new cases, and even when great care is taken to lessen this evil, by giving permission to the patients to call at other times at the houses of the medical officers. I do not speak in figurative language when I say DELAY IS DEATH.

I purposely avoid more than a passing reference to the complaints that we hear occasionally against nurses, and possibly against doctors, because I believe that real cause for complaint against individuals is very rare. But it is the suffering which necessarily arises from the principles, or the want of principle, on which our medical charities are established that I desire to see removed.

Miss Nightingale's able paper, read at Liverpool, on the construction of hospitals, will do its work, and may serve as a warning to those who think that nothing remains to be done in the machinery, so to speak, to which patients themselves, abstractedly considered as so many isolated pieces of clay or other material, are submitted to be manufactured into healthy wholesome vessels for future use.

To the mind of the same noble woman we look with almost breathless suspense for a scheme for training and employing nurses; and if I should speak on this point, as I must, let me not be understood to be wedded to any pet scheme, but only to be striving to meet a crying want so far as I am able.

But the construction of an hospital and the training of nurses are matters of detail, and must not be confounded with matters of principle, such as is delay in seeking medical aid. In my former letters I have made special provision against delay, and chiefly on this ground have recommended the profession and the public to make "the fee the exception, not the rule," and to pay the family doctor a definite sum per annum. Now, principles in medicine, as in other sciences, are not limited to classes. That which is good for one is good for all; that which is necessary for the rich is necessary for the poor.

But now, besides the medical, we have social and charitable aspects, which demand attention. It is most encouraging to observe, that in proportion as the principles of the moralist and of the social economist are preserved, in the same degree does the character of the institution for medical efficiency improve. Nay, the unity of truth is so striking that, not unfrequently, the neglect of a principle which has been ignored from considerations of economy, or which has been judged unimportant because not obviously connected with medical aid, is found practically to be at the root of some medical defect which had previously passed unobserved.

Of this unity of truth I have already given one illustration; another is furnished by that "insuperable" difficulty the payment of the medical officers. The social—may I not say moral?—principle of "the labourer is worthy of his hire," is set aside. It is thought sufficient to reply, "There are always plenty of medical men ready to accept office;" but the consequence to the patients of accepting services on such terms is not considered; nay, so blind are we to the meaning of our words, that when a young medical man is obliged to resign office we congratulate him that he "has something better to do." Far be it from me to advocate that the officers of our medical charities should be paid so long as they are on their present footing. This proposition will no doubt be fathered upon me, but I reject it as one of those short-sighted solutions which, because they do not go to the root of the matter, only add to the confusion. We are paid indirectly. Our indirect advantage is gained at the expense of others who are not parties to the agreement. The advantage to the medical officers of a local charity is at the expense of the other medical men in the neighbourhood, and, worst of all, at the expense of the patients themselves, who lose the advantage of competition, and must submit to such an increase of suffering, disease, and even death, as makes in some cases the term "gratuitous advice" a sad misnomer.

The remedy for these defects will be found in the maintenance of the social principles of providence and self-dependence, and in the conservation of the essential features of genuine charity. The principles of providence and independence require a man to provide against that which is inevitable, and that he should do his utmost to help himself. And the first characteristic of charity is that it should be unostentatious; the second that it never fails; the wants of others is its only limit, and it ceases to exist when the right hand knoweth what the left hand doth. These principles are inseparable as they are incontrovertible. Let any one of them, be it moral, social, or medical, be fairly and fearlessly applied, and the rest will follow; it is base to say "we cannot" when conscience says "we ought." Having proved that that which is socially or morally wrong cannot be medically right, I shall, in my next letter, show that these principles of morality and of social economy may be successfully combined with medical efforts, and how in their rigid application every man who needs assistance, may provide for himself that which he cannot now be said to have—efficient medical aid in time of sickness; and this is medical charity.

Your admirable leading article a few days ago, exposing the sentimentalism of much that goes by the name of charity, makes me hope that you will pardon the length of this communication.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

National Club, Nov. 18. X. P.

TO THE EDITOR.

"The rich and the poor meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all."

SIR,—In fulfilment of my promise I proceed to show how that, by preserving inviolate the principles of true charity and of social economy, every man who needs assistance may be put into the way of providing for himself and his family efficient medical aid in time of sickness.

Let me first remind you of the numbers who require this sort of assistance. The pauper being provided for by the state, we have in circles gradually widened every gradation of inability, or, to take a more healthy, because not paralysing view, we have various degrees of ability to make the necessary provision. Not only the labourer, the mechanic, the small tradesman, and in many cases the servant, the clerk, the dressmaker, but, must I not also say, the governess, the half-pay officer, and other ladies and gentlemen of limited means, who, having perhaps seen better days, are subjects of deepest commiseration in time of sickness. The very difficulty of meeting the requirements of such cases without wounding their feelings will prove a safeguard to their companions in poverty. In dealing with our equals our charity must be unostentatious, our medical aid must be efficient; we must allow them to preserve their self-respect, and let them help themselves.

We begin, therefore, by asking those whose charity never fails to assist this numerous class by forming themselves into a Provident Medical Association. All persons, lay and medical, who have time, talent, or money, may unite for the purpose, and we shall speak of them as associates.

Let there be a medical committee, with power to make suggestions, and with a will to carry out the regulations which have been affirmed by a council consisting chiefly of lay members.

The council to be elected by the medical associates, who place their character—their all—in its hands; to meet at least once a quarter, for the purpose of receiving a full report from the medical committee of all the work that has been done by the association. A certain proportion only of the lay and medical elements respectively to retire every year.

The medical committee to consist of the medical element of the council, with other medical associates, in number at least equal to the lay element of the council, and to be elected by the council. The committee to elect its own president, and one or more vice-presidents; to meet weekly, for the purpose of recording all the work that is being done by the association.

In the periodical reports, and other such authoritative documents, the names of the council to be printed alphabetically, and, immediately following, the names of the medical associates, as registered according to the Medical Act of last session, with only letters added, P., V.P., C., distinctive of their official character for the time being.

Members who wish to commit their own health and that of their families to the keeping of the association, must apply, in time of health, for enrolment to any medical associate in the district. They are to make their own terms, and thus a separate associate becomes himself responsible to each member separately that he will act according to the rules of the association. All monies to be paid to the account of the association.

Digitized by Google

It would greatly facilitate, by lessening the working expenses of such and of kindred charities, if a provident institution, a savings' bank, or a penny bank, open every day, were established. This would form a healthy financial basis for all the local charities, whether for the provision of food, clothing, coals, rent, or medical aid. Subscriptions might then be solicited for the general encouragement of principles of providence and independence, and it would be left to the circumstances of the time to decide the proportion of assistance which each different charity would require.

Not only would the expense and trouble of a separate organisation for the collection of weekly subscriptions be saved, but in the present case the very great difficulty of introducing a scale of payment graduated so as to include all who needed assistance would be much diminished. It is obvious that, unless the principle of a graduated scale of payment be adopted, the scope of charity must be restricted; and as may be seen by examination of the reports of the otherwise admirable institutions at Coventry and Northampton—the first-fruits of the philanthropy of Mr. Smith, of Southam—when charity is restricted, it is found necessary to restrict the numbers on the medical staff, and therefore the liberty of the members to choose their own medical attendant. There is also room for the imputation of unworthy motives to the privileged few medical men who are employed to the exclusion of the rest, and then arises the difficulty of excluding improper cases, and the evils of the crowded waiting-room spring up; and it becomes "impossible" to secure the co-operation of the druggists, which is desirable, and which is only right, for we are aiming a direct blow at the system of "counter practice," to which further reference will be made when I speak of the "Bill for the Restriction of the Sale of Poisons."

On the other hand, with a graduated scale, our charity is unrestricted both in its application and in its exercise: charity ceases where payment in full begins. The limit can be assigned only by the medical man concerned; it will vary according to circumstances, according to the estimate that he puts upon his services, according to his ability to make a pecuniary sacrifice, and according to his willingness to do so. These particulars ought only to be known by himself; he therefore should make his own graduated scale, and the member has the alternative of accepting or declining the offer.

Let it further be noted that the transaction is a private one, and that it takes place prior to the time of sickness; herein it differs essentially from the mode which theoretically obtains in all our hospitals and dispensaries. I say theoretically, because, happily, it is practically impossible, being abhorent to one's sense of propriety, to investigate a man's circumstances when he comes before you sick and suffering. This it is which is the practical objection in private practice, to the decision at the time of a visit whether or no to take a fee; the chances are that you will take it from the person least able to afford to give it.

The guarantee that one man will not undersell another is to be found in making each associate accountable to the rest for the work that he professes to undertake: and in this wholesome provision against mere self-seeking, of which there must not be room for even a suspicion, we have the machinery for securing a complete system of registration of those many little facts which, so important in themselves, are in the aggregate so valuable.

The contributions of the members are to be paid to the association, a certain proportion only being due for medical advice. If, therefore, three-fourths of the contribution of each member be received by the associate who takes charge of his health, the medical advice is highly estimated; the principle of payment in proportion to the service rendered is preserved; it is not to the interest of the medical man to order medicine, little or much; and withal his charity is unostentatious. The charity in his case, as that of every other associate, consists in accounting the effort made by the member as payment in full, and so establishing for the member a right to that which he needs.

The remaining fourth would be available under the direction of the council, with the assistance of the medical committee, for procuring the adjuvantia, viz. drugs, nursing, and aids to convalescence, including even change of air. That the latter is within compass, as it is within the province of a self-reliant medical institution, I can speak from recent experience.

Last summer, having received answer that a patient could be admitted into a seaside infirmary not sooner than three months (!) from the time of application, I did not appeal to the public to enlarge that hospital or to build another, but placed myself in communication with a clergyman at the sea-side, and, with the kind co-operation of one of his district visitors, procured all that was wanted at the trifing expense of 2s. per week, in addition to the effort that the patient herself was willing to make, and which did not exceed that which the seaside infirmary would have required.

A second case is that of an omnibus conductor, who, by a singular coincidence, is of the same name as the cab-driver who threw himself into the river, and received £70 reward. My poor friend was but a few weeks previously to that occurrence paying 6s. a week that his child might have the benefit of country air at Battersea; he was, I fear, ultimately obliged to apply to the parish, for his child died. But those who know the poor need not be informed that there are many who will make a considerable effort to be independent of charity as it is offered to them, and that the same persons are greatly encouraged when their own attempts are seconded by any one who is willing to help without paralysing such endeavours. But to return to the management of a Provident Medical Institution, certain regulations will be required to secure to each member proper advice and attendance in time of sickness.

To this end members must have the right of consulting, without injurious delay, their own medical attendants at their houses, or, when necessary, of sending a message, in which case they would be visited at home, provided only that the call should be made or the message sent before (one) o'clock in the day. This would be sufficient for all ordinary cases of illness.

Attendance at the time of lying in, and at such times as from accident or emergency are exceptional, must be specially provided for by agreement either with the ordinary medical attendant, and making, if need be, a proportionate reduction of the annual payment, or with some other medical man selected by the member, as recommended on public grounds in Letter IV., or with some associate residing near the member, selected and adequately paid by the association for every such special act of service.

Each member to have a card and a book, with a number corresponding. The number would be useful in all cases of the registration of facts, which lose none of their public value when recorded without the name of the member, e. g., the registration of a case of sickness, though the number of such facts would in itself be some guarantee of privacy. All prescriptions to be written in the book, with the initials of the writer, and, if possible, prescriptions to be made up by druggists. The book to be returned to the medical man by the druggist or by the patient if requested.

A registration, according to a prescribed and uniform plan, of all cases of sickness, and of visits paid, and of all other work done, to be presented to the medical committee week by week, and to the council once a quarter. A special register to be kept of all members admitted in a time of sickness and of the terms under which they are admitted. The terms should, as a general rule, be not less than one year's subscription, quarterly, during the illness for the first time; and two, three, four, &c., times the amount for future occasions. A record also should be kept of those who, having once joined, leave the association, and of the reasons assigned. There should be every encouragement given to persons to join in time of health, and every possible guarantee that real causes for dissatisfaction should be removed.

I will now as briefly as possible point out the relations which might exist between such a provident medical association and existing medical charities.

Sound principles, like acorns, are of slow growth; so that, however favourably these suggestions may be received (and I rejoice to say they have in the main been favourably received by persons of unquestionable authority), yet existing institutions have a place, and must not be hastily removed. So long, for instance, as the present mode of medical relief obtains under the poor law, dispensaries, not to say hospitals also, are required to supply, though they should not be allowed to hide, its defects. The sooner it is made evident that a large portion of the work of dispensaries is that which ought to be performed by the parish the better will it be for the poor. The truest charity to them should be to investigate the causes why the poor prefer the dispensary to the parish. Every pauper case relieved by a dispensary conceals, and indirectly encourages, parish neglect. The sooner this tax upon our charity is removed the better will it be for the paupers, and, consequently, for dispensary patients, if any should eventually remain unprovided for by the Provident Medical Association.

Digitized by Google

As to hospitals, which, supported by voluntary contributions, are one of the glories of England, we would only ask them to encourage, to put a premium upon sound principles. They might at once lop off the out-patient department, or at least restrict it to those who have been in-patients, for to many others it is a system of refined cruelty.

Last year I travelled from Brighton more than once with a poor fellow from close by, the subject of phthisis, who was allowed to attend as an out-patient at —— Hospital. This, however, is only an exaggerated instance of an evil of every day occurrence. It would be altogether inexcusable if proper attendance could be guaranteed at home.

With regard to in-patients, we would ask that the members of a Provident Medical Association residing in the district round about an hospital should be admitted on their own right, when recommended by their own medical attendant, and under certain regulations he might be allowed to continue his attendance. The hospital staff would in such cases stand in the relation that consulting physicians and surgeons and specialists hold with respect to the wealthy. See Letters V. and VII.

Other in-patients, and in particular those which are sent from the country, should pay, or be paid for, so much a week. It is not right to allow subscribers to send patients from the country on the chance of there being room for them, for in that case the man from the country must often be admitted to the exclusion of cases of greater severity nearer home.

To hospitals also we look for the training of nurses, who might go forth with certificates, and be ready to be employed in home service. They should receive instruction in the lying-in hospitals, as well as in the general hospitals, and should afterwards be employed in the sick-room and in the lying-in chamber, under strict regulations, to prevent infection (see Letter IV.), and as nurses, but on no account as midwives. Providentially, the lower orders require less care than the higher; but the consequences of ignorance are sometimes so frightful that the possibility of suffering on that account ought not to be countenanced for an instant by any maternity charity whatsoever. The midwives are not to blame, but the persons who employ them.

Nevertheless, the nurse has her proper and honourable place. The lying-in chamber is the best possible field for the instruction and employment of nurses. The quiet demeanour, the gentle firmness, the unofficious watchfulness, the confidence without rashness, the power to exercise woman's good sense without presumption, the subordination to order, the tact of managing, the readiness for emergency, are all to be learnt in the lying-in chamber. But on no account let the nurse go beyond her province. The expense of employing a legally qualified medical man is no excuse, least of all when that first law of nature, which requires the mother to care for her offspring, is disregarded.

These suggestions on medical charity are made at the close of nearly five years' experience of what may be done by a charity, which I believe stands second to none in London in the endeavours of the committee and medical officers to make the medical aid efficient. It was in the endeavour to meet one evil, in the removal of which I myself had no personal interest, that my attention was directed to the defective principles on which our medical charities are founded. During the last two years I have examined carefully the reports for a series of years of all the provident medical institutions with which I am acquainted, and gradually have I become impressed with the extensive bearing of the subject on the whole question of the duties of the medical profession to the community at large.

Though I am far from thinking that the plan proposed is not capable of improvement (and suggestions addressed by your kind permission to the care of the editor of the Standard will be received most thankfully), yet I am sanguine enough to hope that my face is set in the right direction; first, because my suggestions are each of them founded upon some principle which in the abstract is unquestionably right; and next, because I am able, with the slightest possible modification, according to the variety of circumstance, to offer a similar course of action to every one, from the peer to the pauper, who wishes "to secure to himself and his family efficient medical aid in time of sickness."

The importance and comprehensiveness of this phase of the subject must again be my apology for the length of my communication.

I am your obedient servant,
National Club, Dec. 2. X. P.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

SIR,—I am extremely glad to see that you have in your December number alluded to "The Jebb and Crofton Controversy." I believe that most of those engaged, even though in different parts of the same work—the Repression of Crime—will feel as I do, that this is one of the most, nay, the most important branch of our question. It is a good thing to check a beginner in a course of crime, or rather to aid him in checking himself; but so long as it is known and evident that there are many accomplished and expert and habitual thieves, carrying on what may be termed the higher branches of the profession, you will have many aspiring youths entering a career of crime in the hope of attaining the same bad eminence, and you may check 50 beginners without making so much impression on the mass of crime as would be done by the checking, in any way, of one really hardened old offender. But it is especially with this class of hardened old offenders that the convict system is required to deal, and accordingly upon its mode of dealing the greater or less amount of our national crime must depend. I have always believed that this subject has merited far more attention than it has usually received from the public, few of whom have ever marked the great and important changes which have been made of late years, or considered the many alterations which are still required.

For many years, our only idea in the treatment of criminals was, how to get rid of them. What became of them: whether they were made better or worse, or hanged, or made wealthy men, or condemned to a life far worse than death, was no affair of ours. If we got rid of them for the time, we were satisfied. But although we apparently got rid of shoals, yet the number left went on increasing to a most unpleasant degree. Then came a new phase. We found that, as we English always manage to do, we had glutted the market with crime as with manufactures, and our colonies would take no more. This induced Col. Jebb to commence a new system, which has certainly hitherto advanced with steady and satisfactory progress, and has gradually given our efforts an entirely new aim. Our former endeavours were limited to getting rid of our criminals. We have now adopted at least the attempt to make them good for something. Of course we have not attained, of course we never shall attain, to perfection in this attempt; still, very many improvements, (thank God) have been made, and many more we may hope to see. Col. Jebb found nearly all our establishments in this country as unfit for his new aim as they could well be. There was little, indeed, beyond the old form of convict hulk, which no one, (except an official now and then) ever pretended to be otherwise than execrable. But there was one ray of light in the darkness. Capt. Maconochie and Col. Reid had made a new experiment, and established a new system of treatment on the Isle of Portland. Its success had been great, and Col. Jebb adopted it as his model. The new prison at Pentonville was also in operation, and, having corrected some of the errors incident to a new experiment, was at this time in good working order.

On finding that our colonies refused to receive our convicts—that we could not continue our old, comfortable, easy plan of merely throwing our nuisances over the wall on to our neighbour's land—that we were obliged to consume our own crime, as we now are trying to oblige millowners to consume their own smoke. Colonel Jebb brought into practice the system of sending convicts first to the rigorous separate confinement at Pentonville, and then to the steady hard labour of Portland, Gibraltar, or the Bermudas, in the hope that the first would act as a severe punishment, and, by giving time for reflection and meditation, would soften the heart (and in truth this commencement for reformation, though from its entire seclusion it is the worst possible preparation for immediate contact with the world) while the second stage would, by its steady hard labour, association, and increase of trust and trial, prepare a man to mix again with society. This admirably conceived plan, which had it gone a little farther would have been as perfect as anything we could as yet imagine, was not indeed carried out in a moment, as some of its ardent admirers wished. Colonel Jebb did not at once burn all the hulks, and build New Portlands over the face of the land, but he went on with a steady, regular progress, probably as fast as was consistent with prudence. He established prisons, more or less on the Portland system, at Dartmoor and Portsmouth, Chatham, &c, ; and by a steady progress their increase has enabled him to dispense with all the old horrors of convict hulks, with the exception, I think, of one, the Stirling Castle, merely used "for the reception of convicts sent from Gibraltar and Bermuda for release in this country." We may now boast that all our convicts are treated on the system of Pentonville and Portland, and that the disgrace incurred by our hulk system is at an end, and we may thank Colonel Jebb for it.

Digitized by Google

Nay, he did more, for he showed us the way to a further improvement still. He saw that at the Female Prison at Brixton (which may be said to comprise in itself the equivalent of Pentonville and Portland), consisting of "a preliminary stage of separation as a period of probation, and afterwards of advancement into successive stages of discipline ; each having superior advantages to the one which preceded it," that even here in the very last and freest stage, there must still be too strict a discipline entirely to fit a prisoner to be turned adrift on the world. The change was too sudden. Accordingly he established a refuge at Fulham, where more liberty can be given—more trust reposed—more trials to the strength of good resolutions permitted, than was compatible with a regular prison ; and here the female convicts are gradually prepared for their return to full liberty. Such a system appears all that we can desire. We only hope to see Col. Jebb's system entirely carried out with men as with women.

Here begins the difference of opinion between Colonel Jebb and Captain Crofton. The latter gentleman, after serving for a certain time in the English convict department, and receiving Colonel Jebb's strongest testimonials of thorough efficiency and knowledge of the subject, went to Ireland, where he now holds the position of Director of Convict Prisons, nearly equivalent to that which Colonel Jebb holds in England. He has adopted Colonel Jebb's system, and only carried it out a little farther. The prison at Mountjoy (sadly inappropriate in name) is the equivalent to Pentonville ; that at Spike Island, in the Cove of Cork, much resembles those of Portland, Portsmouth, &c. ; but the Irish system for men includes (as an equivalent for the female establishment at Fulham) a refuge in Dublin called Smithfield, and sundry moveable iron houses, which may be shifted from place to place wherever Government works are required, and where may be located a large number of convicts, who just before they return to the world may have their sincerity tested, and be gradually accustomed to freedom. But there is another difference between the English and Irish systems. Both Colonel Jebb and Captain Crofton determined to try the effect of the ticket of leave, or letter of license (no matter what it is called), but they appear each by his own account to have tried it in a very different manner. Colonel Jebb gave to each man who had spent a certain portion of his sentence in prison without having committed any breach of discipline, a nominal ticket of leave, which, on account of his future conduct not being watched, except when the ticket holder specially desired it, became in fact simply equivalent to a free pardon ; while Captain Crofton granted his licenses only to such as he thought he could trust (at first a very small number, but now increasing) ; furthermore he had constant reports made of their conduct by the police till the term of the original sentence had expired, enabling him to keep a most salutary check on the newly-released man in the hour of his greatest temptation, preventing him from falling into those habits of idleness or dissipation which lead to crime, and thus establishing him in the very work and position in which he is to live when thoroughly free, and before the law has lost all power of gently guiding him for his good.

Colonel Jebb finds great fault both with the refuge or intermediate prison system, and with the supervision of the police. To the first he objects that he has tried it and failed. Some men at Portland were placed in associated rooms and treated much like those in Captain Crofton's intermediate prisons ; but the behaviour of many was so bad that, as Colonel Jebb tells us, the steadiest of the men begged to be sent back to their separate cells in order to avoid the association with such a set. Now, we must hold here, that although Colonel Jeb shews clearly that his own attempt unquestionably failed, inasmuch as the men on whom it was tried were not at all fit to be treated with this modified liberty of association ; yet it does not exactly prove that the same plan would not succeed with men who were fit to be so treated. But Colonel Jebb says that these were "the best men and nearest to discharge" who were the subjects of the experiment. If so, the question is irresistible—if they were not then fit to be trusted with the very modified liberty of association, how were they fit to be trusted with unconditional, unwatched liberty, such as Colonel Jebb recommends on their receiving a nominal Ticket of Leave ? By the way, this very question of entire freedom or partial surveillance to a ticket-holder is rather difficult to understand clearly, but I flatter myself that I have now made it out.

Colonel Jebb having given his opinion very strongly that any supervision by the Police must prevent discharged convicts from gaining employment, I quoted this in a letter to the Standard some months back. I was replied to by "A Convict Official," I know not who, but apparently a person of much experience in the work, as well as much talent and good feeling—who assured me that all such men were discharged in England or on the strict conditions of their respective licenses, and were necessarily under surveillance for some time after." I begged hard for a long time for an explanation of what this surveillance consisted, and at length I made out that there were two modes of watching them. One, that they often wrote letters to the Chaplain, doubtless telling him of their good conduct and prosperity, but probably omitting any little unfavourable circumstance ; and for the other, each man had earned a gratuity while in prison, the greater part of which was retained in hand and only paid upon the convict's application through the police at six weeks, three months, and five months after his release. If this be right, it would be a most interesting thing could we get the principle explained. To us it appears firstly, that those who intend to do ill, and who therefore require surveillance so that their tickets may be withdrawn, will probably not apply to the Police ; and will remain devising and doing evil without check or hindrance, while those who endeavour and hope to do well are obliged to go to the police, who must enquire all about them before they can give them a certificate of good conduct to enable them to procure their money. Yet if this system works well, as we are told it does, it shews that policemen do not always "hunt the convicts back to crime," and therefore might be trusted to watch the bad as well as the good. However, the present system is one which evidently wants explanation. Till we can have more light thrown upon the matter, Captain Crofton's system certainly appears to have an enormous advantage.

I regret to see that the extraordinary charges brought against Colonel Jebb by some person who signs himself "One who knows the Truth" in your November number have not been answered. Most probably Colonel Jebb may prefer to answer them in a more official form than the columns of a newspaper. If so, I trust you will give us his answer, or inform us where it can be procured,

I remain, Sir, you obedient servant,

T. B. Ll. Baker.

PROFITABLE EMPLOYMENT OF PRISONERS AND PAUPERS.

Sir,—I beg to offer a few remarks and suggestions, with reference to the Employment of Prisoners, which subject was discussed in one of the leading articles of the Philanthropist for December.

The Rag-picking plan seems to be objected to by the Medical officer of the Wandsworth House of Correction—and not without reason—on account of the occupation being of a nature likely to injure the health of the prisoners.

Now, there are many other means of employment available, which are free from any such objection ; I would name wool-picking, horsehair-dressing, mat and basket-making, skewer-cutting, &c., some of which would be suitable for the hands of female prisoners ; but for the latter, we might add sack-making, and a variety of coarse needle-work of a similar description, also netting of various kinds.

The work need not be uniform, and as the inmates would in some instances be occupied in separate cells, it could be selected according to the requirements of individual cases.

It is not necessary, I think, for the industrial occupation to form any part of the punitive element of the sentence, the work therefore need be neither hard nor repulsive, better that it should not be so; the imprisonment alone—i. e. the loss of liberty for the term, with the accompanying regulations, rigorous in proportion to the extent of the offence, and carried out strictly in accordance with the sentence—ought to be considered punishment enough; employment really being a privilege, it should be regarded by the prisoners in that light, and if judiciously managed, it might be made use of, as a means of reformation; the hitherto vicious—because idle—offender, whilst receiving the proper punishment of his misdeeds, might during the same time learn how to get his own living honestly, and his exit from prison might be the starting point of an industrious and a respectable career. As civilization advances, it is natural to expect that even the criminal will receive his share of the advantages resulting from the general progress—advantages not in any way arising out of his criminality, but I speak of those circumstances by which he may be surrounded, those influences which may be brought to bear upon him beneficially for the future. There may be some persons who are ready to quarrel with such suggestions as indicating a morbid sympathy, rather prejudicial than otherwise to the class for whose benefit they are proposed; but to those who have misgivings on that score, let me say, that an undue amount of severity tends to brutalize rather than to humanize, and every atom of harshness in the treatment of malefactors, over and above the righteous (and therefore merciful) amount of punishment for their guilt, does but harden their nature, and will render them more incorrigible, and less amenable to the laws of their country, when they have again the opportunity of transgressing them.

Digitized by Google

I have thrown out the foregoing suggestive ideas as to different kinds of employment, with the hope that they can be turned to some practical use; it is not for me to propose the manner of carrying out any plan. Doubtless, wherever the governors of Prisons decide upon giving the inmates remunerative employment and make such decision public, numerous manufacturers will come forward with offers of material for the purpose. Some of those occupations I have named, however, could be supplied by the Prison authorities at a very small cost in the outlay, and would soon return a good profit. It is not to be expected that all the prisoners of any one Gaol could defray the cost of their subsistence, but if they could but partly support themselves, a good principle would be set up, which might act beneficially in more ways than one.

Many of these suggestions as to employment, apply equally well to paupers; but I would name one kind of occupation especially suitable for the female inmates of Workhouses at this time of year, the making of warm clothing with the grey selvage of flannel, which is most frequently, because thoughtlessly, thrown away.

When it is recollected that at this season many many yards of flannel are cut up in families for winter use, it can be readily understood to what a great extent the simple commodity just named could be employed in making various articles of comfort for the poor, by sending it to the Workhouses in the respective localities; and as in a short time, much more would be made than the inmates could possibly require, the out-door poor might be supplied in this way, the articles either sold to them at a cheap rate, or given away by charitable ladies, according to the circumstances of the several cases, which would be known upon investigation. Should any of your readers feel interested in this plan and wish to know the method of making these articles, I shall be very happy to reply to any questions addressed to me on the subject, and enclosing a stamped envelope to M. A. B., care of Messrs. Simpson, booksellers, King's Road, Brighton.

Dear Sir, yours very truly,
M. A. B.

REFORMATORIES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.

THEIR COMPARATIVE ECONOMY.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

SIR,—In the paper, inserted in The Philanthropist for November, on Reformatories and Ragged Schools, their comparative economy,—there is a numerical error, relating to the "Hampshire Reformatory." It is stated to have an average of 35 inmates in attendance for 1837, instead of 25; which renders all the calculations inaccurate.

For subscriptions per head, for £14 7s. should read £20 2s. 2d.; for salaries and wages, for £6 7s. 7d. should be £8. 18s. 3d. Provisions, for £193 13s. 6d. should read £228 4s. 0d. Per head for the year, for £5 10s. 6d. read £9 2s. 6d. Total salaries, wages, and provisions, for £429 19s. 6d. read £451 10s. 0d. Cost per head for the year, salaries, wages, and provisions, for £11 18s. 1d. read £18 1s. 0d. In labour results, for £15 0s. 7d. should read £25 10s. 7d. per head for the year. Total cost per head per inmate for 25 through the year, for £19 5s. 2d. should read £27 3s. 1d.

I am sorry I have to trouble you; but it arises as I have stated; 35 being estimated for, instead of 25.

The insertion of these corrections will oblige,

Sir,
Yours obediently,
JOSEPH ADSHEAD.

Manchester, Dec. 28th, 1858.

To the Nobility, Gentry, and Gardeners.

A. SHANKS and SON have made arrangements with Mr. THOMSON, of Dalkeith Park, to manufacture his powerful and economical BOILER, the simplest and the best in existence for the purpose of Heating by Hot Water.

A. SHANKS and SON continue to furnish Plans and Estimates for Heating Conservatories, Vineries, Halls, &c., by means of Hot Water, all complete. They have experienced workmen for this particular kind of work; and, in every case, guarantee a satisfactory working apparatus at a very moderate cost. A new plan is introduced of supplying the atmosphere of Vineries and Forcing Houses with moisture, in place of the ordinary Trough Pipe, to which it is vastly superior. The supply of moisture, which has a fine and healthy effect on the Vines and Plants, may be regulated to any extent.

A. SHANKS and SON, Arbroath, Forfarshire.

GLANVILLE'S HYDROSULPHATE of IRON MIXTURE, a certain and expeditious cure for Cholera, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, and Bowel Complaints, Spasms, Pains, Sickness, Cramp in the Limbs or Stomach, Weakness of the Chest, Stomach, and Bowels, General Debility and Nervousness. Hundreds of testimonials of its wonderful effects: recommended by eminent medical men.

Manufactured only by the Proprietor, 3, Clifton Terrace, West Brompton, London. Sold by all Chemists and Druggists. Price 1s. 1½. and 2s. 9d.

THE HAIR.

THE BEST MEANS to ADORN it is to use CHURCHER'S TOILET CREAM, which imparts fragrance, softness, and beauty to it, and is admitted to be the most economical article for the purpose extant. Price 1s., 1s. 6d., and 6s.

Decidedly the best Hair Dye is BATCHELOR'S INSTANTANEOUS COLUMBION, in the New York Original Packets. Price 4s. 6d., 7s., and 14s.

Sold by Hairdressers, and by R. HOVENDEN, Wholesale Perfumer, &c., No. 5, Great Marlborough Street, (Three Doors East of the Pantheon), W., and 57 and 58, Crown Street, Finsbury Square, London, E.C.

D'ALTENBURG'S ORIENTAL OIL is the finest and most agreeable remedy ever used for Baldness. It speedily restores the hair when it has fallen off, from sickness or any other cause, strengthens and beautifies it, and imparts to it a permanent lustre and silky softness. It is eminently successful in restoring grey hair to its original colour. Price 2s. 9d. and 5s. 6d. per bottle.

D'ALTENBURG'S DENTIFRICE, an Oriental preparation of peculiar efficacy in preserving and embellishing the Teeth, imparting to them a brilliant polish and perfect whiteness, arresting decay, preventing toothache, strengthening the gums, and in rendering the breath fragrant and pure. Price 1s. 1½d. per box; post-free for 16 stamps.

CAUTION.—The unprecedented demand for these celebrated articles has called forth numerous spurious imitations, under similar names. None can be genuine without the signature of the proprietors, D'ALTENBURG and Co., on each article.—Sold by them at 38A, Lamb's Conduit-street, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

THE following is an EXTRACT from the Second Edition (page 188) of the Translation of the Pharmacopœia of the Royal College of Physicians of London, by Dr. G. F. Collier, published by Longman and Co.:—"It is no small defect in this compilation (speaking of the Pharmacopœia) that we have no purgative mass but what contains aloes; yet we know that hæmorrhoidal persons cannot bear aloes, except it be in the form of COCKLE'S PILLS, which chiefly consist of aloes, scammony, and colocynth, which I think are formed into a sort of compound extract, the acridity of which is obviated, I suspect, by an alkaline process, and by a fourth ingredient (unknown to me) of an aromatic tonic nature. I think no better and no worse of it for its being a patent medicine. I look at it as an article of commerce and domestic convenience, and do not hesitate to say it is the best-made pill in the kingdom—a muscular purge, a mucous purge, and a hydrogogue purge combined—and their effect properly controlled by a dirrigent and corrigent. That it does not commonly produce hæmorrhoids like most aloetic pills, I attribute to its being thoroughly soluble, so that no undissolved particles adhere to the mucous membrane."

FOR THE HAIR.

BALM OF COLUMBIA.

It is unerring in its operations, highly approved in the leading circles of Fashion, and extensively demanded by all who cultivate the graces of the toilette.

IT STRENGTHENS AND NOURISHES,
Exerting a healthy influence, and occasioning an ample and luxurious growth of hair,—

PRESERVES
Where the hair is already full.—

RESTORES
When weak or falling off.—

BEAUTIFIES.
It, gives it a rich and beautiful appearance.

IT CLEANSES THE HAIR,
And for young people supersedes the use of the fine comb, as the most respectable heads of schools can testify.

THE NURSERY.
The peculiar mildness of the Balm, the action of which may be regulated at discretion, especially suits infancy and childhood. No well-regulated Nursery can dispense with it again.

Prices 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per Bottle.
No other prices are genuine.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM.
Sold, Wholesale and Retail, by the Proprietors, 13, Wellington Street North, 7 doors from the Strand, London, and by all respectable Perfumers and Chemists.

Digitized by Google

HOMES for SERVANTS OUT of PLACE: 21, Nutford-place, Edgeware-road, W.; Superintendent, Mrs. Butcher.

110, Hatton-garden, Holborn, E.C.: Superintendent, Mrs. Peake.

52, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-rd., S.: Superintendent, Mrs. Garrard.

Lodgings, &c., at 1s. 6d. per week.

FUNDS are needed from the benevolent public. These Homes have been established many years, and have sheltered more than 6000 young women; 31,000, unable to pay, have registered free. Of the 100,000 servants in London, 10,000 are always out of place and changing places.

Treasurer—R. C. L. Bevan, Esq.
Bankers—Messrs. Barclay and Co.

DANIEL COOPER, Hon. Sec.

AT SANDWELL, near BIRMINGHAM, a HOME is OFFERED to WIDOWS and SINGLE LADIES, and the means of Education to Orphan Children, suitable to their situation in life. Girls from thirteen to sixteen are received and trained as domestic servants by being employed in waiting on the inmates of the Home. Boys from twelve to fifteen years old are also received and employed in the house, stable, farm, or garden. Ladies without family ties are invited to join in this work of usefulness, whereby many young persons are rescued from idleness and its attendant temptations. Further particulars may be obtained by letter addressed to the Superintendent, Sandwell, Birmingham, enclosing a stamped envelope, with the name and address of the applicant. Subscriptions are gratefully received by Messrs. LLOYD, Bank, Birmingham, to the credit of the Sandwell Institute.

THE GIRLS' REFUGE.—The KING EDWARD RAGGED & INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS and EASTERN REFUGE, Albert Street, Buxton Street, Brick Lane, Spitalfields.—The objects of this Institution are to educate and train in habits of industry that class of children who, for want of clothing, or the means of paying for instruction, are unable to attend other schools, and to gather in the vicious and depraved who swarm in our streets, and endeavour to civilize and instruct them, and, as far as the funds permit, to provide food, clothing, and shelter for the most destitute.

In the erection of this Institution, provision has been made for about seventy inmates, while accommodation exists for the daily instruction of more than 400 poor children. The number of Refuges which have of late years been opened for the reception of houseless and destitute boys induced the Committee to depart from their original intention, and make this a Refuge for girls. In addition to the large number of children under daily instruction, thirty-five destitute girls are now enjoying the benefits of the Refuge, and the Committee are desirous of extending the sphere of their usefulness, and to afford food, shelter, and clothing to at least thirty-five more.

The varied operations of such an Institution necessarily involve a large annual expenditure, to meet which, and to carry out to the full extent the objects contemplated in its erection, subscriptions and donations are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Samuel Gurney, Esq., M.P., Treasurer, Lombard Street; Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths, Bankers, 1, Lombard Street; and by the Hon. Sec., 2, Penbury Grove, Hackney.

H. R. WILLIAMS, Hon. Sec.

NINETY-TWO YOUNG WOMEN have been RESCUED from the streets of London and placed in penitentiaries, &c., through the agency of two female missionaries, who have been visiting fallen women in the streets and in their own homes during the past nine months, under the supervision of a Sub-Committee appointed by the REFORMATORY and REFUGE UNION.

This success encourages the Committee to APPEAL to the Christian public for further FUNDS, to enable them to carry on the work with efficiency. The money already subscribed has been nearly expended in payment of missionaries and donations with cases sent to institutions.

A Handbook, (Price 6d.) containing separate accounts of 50 Penitentiaries and Homes for Females, with the terms of admission, &c., has been published, and can be had at the office of the Union; also Tracts and Handbills, for the special use of missionaries to fallen women.

Contributions will be received by the Bankers, Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Co., 1, Lombard-street; and Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co., 1, Pall-Mall East; also by the Secretary of the Union, Mr. Charles Gwillim, to whom post-office orders should be made payable.

The following contributions since the last advertisement are thankfully acknowledged:—

T. Fowell Buxton, Esq.	£25	0 0	George Arbuthnot, Esq.	£3	0 0
R.C.L.Bevan, Esq.	10	0 0	G. W. Bell, Esq. a	0	10 6
Lord Radstock ..	10	0 0	A Friend, per W. J. Maxwell, Esq.	1	0 0
C. S.	10	0 0	A Sailor, per Ransom and Co. ..	1	0 0
C. Ratcliff, Esq. a	1	1 0
W. Robinson, Esq.	3	0 0

Office of the Union, 118, Pall-Mall, S.W.

PROPOSED EXTENSION.—LONDON FEMALE PREVENTIVE and REFORMATORY INSTITUTION, 200, Euston Road, N.W.—President Rev. Canon DALE, 31, Gordon Square, W.C.—97 poor young women have been admitted to the benefits of this Institution since September, 1857. Many distressing cases have been refused for want of greater accommodation and funds. The Committee have resolved to fit up another house for the reception of cases, if possible, before the coming winter. An industrial department will be attached, to make it partly self-supporting. 40 donations of £5 each will enable the Committee to proceed with this extension immediately, and provide a way of escape from vice to virtue to very many poor outcasts. Donations in aid of this special object will be thankfully received by the bankers, Messrs. Bosanquet and Co., 73, Lombard Street, E.C.; the Hon. Sec., Thos. Raikes, Esq., 14, Lower Berkeley Street, Portman Square, W.; or by the Secretary, Mr. Edward W. Thomas, at the Institution.

LONDON REFORMATORY for ADULT MALE CRIMINALS, Gt. Smith-st., Westminster.

President—The Earl of SHAFTESBURY.

The number of inmates in this Institution has necessarily been reduced from 80 to 35, owing to the exhausted state of its funds.

It has sent out 228 emigrants, and has otherwise provided for 171 of its inmates.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Herries, Farquhar, and Co., St. James's-street, Piccadilly; the City Bank; J. C. Wood, Esq., the Treasurer, Victoria-street, Westminster; and the Governor, Colonel Henry Stace, at the Institution.

JOHN M. CLABON, Hon. Secretary.

 Left-off clothes much wanted.

December, 1858.

DISEASES of the EAR.—ROYAL DISPENSARY for DISEASES of the EAR, Dean-street, Soho-square; established 1816.

President—The Duke of BUCCLEUCH, K.G.
Treasurer—John Masterman, Esq.,
Surgeon—William Harvey, Esq., F.R.C.S.

This Institution is open Tuesdays and Fridays to the indigent afflicted with deafness, noises in the head and ears, and diseases of the throat.

The public are earnestly entreated for ASSISTANCE to enable the Institution to afford the requirements for the increasing number of applicants. Since the establishment of the Institution 35,000 patients have been admitted; 200 are in weekly attendance. Subscriptions will be thankfully received by Messrs. Masterman & Co.; and at the Dispensary, by H. SMYTH, Sec.

CLOVE PINK
PRESERVATIVE
TOOTH PASTE,

For Removing Tartar from the Teeth and Scurvy from the Gums, without injuring the Enamel, giving them a pearly Whiteness, and the flavour being most agreeable.

1s. per Pot.

Prepared by GEORGE W. LANE,
13, Rathbone Place, Oxford Street, London.

AGENT for CONDY'S NATURAL DISINFECTANT

IMPORTANT TO SCHOOLMASTERS, Schoolmistresses, and others.—Have you effected an assurance in the SCHOOLMASTERS' and GENERAL MUTUAL ASSURANCE SOCIETY? If you have not, write at once for a form of proposal, and it will be immediately sent to you free, with all necessary information. If you have made an assurance, be good enough to bring the subject under the notice of your fellow-teachers, friends, and acquaintances, and endeavour to prevail upon them at once to join this useful society, and show that an assurance policy is the most serviceable and the cheapest means by which those who depend upon their own exertions, of head or hand, can protect themselves and their families against the consequences of old age, sickness, and mortality.

Rev. RICHARD BURGESS, B.D., Chairman.
SAMUEL J. I. HIND, Secretary.

Offices of the Society, 25, Bridge-street, Westminster, London, S.W.

BANK OF DEPOSIT,

Established A.D. 1844.

No. 3, PALL MALL EAST, LONDON.

PARTIES desirous of Investing Money are requested to examine the Plan of the BANK of DEPOSIT, by which a high rate of interest may be obtained with security.

Deposits made by Special Agreement, may be withdrawn without notice.

The interest is payable in January and July.

PETER MORRISON, Managing Director.

Forms for opening accounts sent free on application.

SEASONABLE PRESENTS.

THE most appropriate offerings are those which tend to the promotion of Personal Beauty in the fair and youthful, who at this festive season are more than usually desirous to shine to advantage under the gaze of their friends: none can be more acceptable than

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL,

A delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation for the Hair; and as an invigorator and beautifier beyond all precedent. Price 3s. 6d., 7s., Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR,

Unequalled for its rare and inestimable qualities in imparting a radiant bloom to the Complexion, and a softness and delicacy to the Hands and Arms. Price 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

AND

ROWLANDS' ODONTO,

Or Pearl Dentifrice,

Which bestows on the Teeth a Pearl-like Whiteness, Strengthens the Gums, and renders the Breath sweet and pure. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

The Patronage of Royalty, and Rank and Fashion, throughout Europe, and their universally-known efficacy, give these preparations a celebrity unparalleled, and render them peculiarly

ELEGANT AND SEASONABLE PRESENTS.

SOLD BY A. ROWLAND AND SONS,
20, Hatton Garden, London,
And by Chemists and Perfumers.

BRITISH PROVIDENT LIFE AND FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

4, Chatham Place, Blackfriars, London.

Established 1850.

Incorporated by Act of Parliament 7th and 8th Vict. cap. 110.

Capital £100,000, with power to increase to £1,000,000.

Trustees.

Sir Edward Bindloss Perrot, Bart., Plumstead, Kent.
The Rev. John Wood, Addington-place, Camberwell.

Directors.

Captain Thomas Malkin, Sandhurst Lodge, Queen's-road, Gloucester-gate, Regent's-park, Chairman.
John Britten, Esq., 21, Basinghall-street, and Collingtree, Northamptonshire.
G. Lane, Esq., Finchley-road, St. John's Wood.
William Burchett, Esq., Cheapside and Hammersmith.
Joseph Gimson, Esq., 1, Harewood-place, Harewood-sq.
John Sheridan, Esq., (Managing), Laburnum House, Brompton.
James Goad, Esq., Islington.

Auditors.

H. Brinsley Sheridan, Esq. (Manager of the "Times Life and Guarantee Company"), 32, Ludgate-hill, and Belfield House, Parson's Green, Fulham.
T. Wilson, Esq., 103, 104, and 105, Cheapside, and 7, York-terrace, Peckham.
Alexander Webber, Esq., Davies-street, Berkeley-square, and 47, Upper Baker-street, (Director of the "Times Life and Fire Assurance Company.)
J. Britten, jun. Esq., 11, Basinghall-street.

Bankers.—

Physician.—William Grove Grady, M.D., F.R.C.S.E., M.R.C.S.I.
Surgeon.—William Harding, Esq., 4, Percy-street, Bedford-square.
Standing Counsel.—Henry P. Hinde, Esq., Hall Staircase, Inner-temple.
Solicitor.—Henry Empson, Esq., 61, Moorgate-street.
Manager.—J. Sheridan, Esq.

LIFE POLICIES indisputable and not liable to forfeiture through inability to keep up the payments. Assurances on single, joint, and survivorship lives. Annuities—immediate, deferred, or survivorship. Endowments for Children. Assurances against accidents. Saving Fund Policies. Profits divided. Yearly, half-yearly, and quarterly payments taken.

EXAMPLE.

Single Life, with Profits, for 100*l. at Death.*

Age.	Yearly.	Half-yearly.	Quarterly.
30 ..	2*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*	.. 1*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*	.. 11*s.* 4*d.*

Printed for the Proprietors, by RICHARD BARRETT, 13, Mark Lane, London; and sold by W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

January 1, 1859.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE.

February 1, 1859.

Index.

Begin at the Beginning ... 303
Birmingham Reformatory Institution ... 307
St. Joseph's Industrial Institute ... 309
Paupers and Prisoners ... 311
Editorial Articles:
The Poor made Criminal ... 312
Visiting Prisoners ... 313
Juvenile Emigration ... 313
Reformatory and Refuge Union ... 314
Ladies of Limited Means ... 314
Our Homeless Poor ... 315
Royal Dispensary for Diseases of the Ear ... 315
The Society of Arts' Economic Museum ... 316
Boys' Refuge, Commercial Street, Whitechapel ... 317
Report of the British Ladies' Society for Promoting the Reformation of Female Prisoners ... 318
The Payment of Common Juries ... 319
Mr. Commissioner Fane on the Bankruptcy Laws ... 319
Correspondence:
Schools of Cookery ... 320
The Houseless Poor ... 321
Manchester Ragged and Industrial Schools, and the Industrial Schools Bill ... 322

BEGIN AT THE BEGINNING.

A PLEA FOR INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

We make no apology for inserting the following invaluable remarks from the Irish Quarterly Review of January, 1859, merely adding a strong recommendation to all those who are interested in the subject, to read for themselves the publications on which the remarks are grounded.

1. Workhouses and Woman's Work, reprinted from the Church of England Monthly Review. Also a Paper on the Condition of Workhouses, read in the Social Economy Department of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, at Birmingham, October, 1857. London: Longman, Brown, Green, Longmans, and Roberts, 1858.
2. The Englishwoman's Journal, Vol. I., August, 1858. London: Piper, Stephenson, and Spence, Paternoster Row.
3. St. Joseph's Industrial Institute: with Special Reference to its Intern Class of Workhouse Orphans. Dublin, 1858.

In the middle of our belauded nineteenth century, after all that has been done by legislative enactments, organised associations, and extraordinary individual exertions for the reformation of offenders, juvenile and adult, it is rather startling to find that crime is increasing in England, not alone in proportion to the increase of population, but far in excess of that. The Criminal Returns for 1857 show this, and also prove sufficiently the significant and most painful fact, that the committals and re-committals of women become annually more and more numerous.

Where, we naturally ask, do the criminals come from? Are they manufactured periodically, assorted, labelled, and forwarded to order? Or, is there some huge hot-bed in which the vicious growth is nourished, and forced to premature deformity? Where do they come from, indeed?—

From the gross, ignorant, half-heathen under-current of the population; from the class of thousands who in "moral England" are left at large to the rule of evil, without education, humane care, or religious teaching; from the hundreds of thousands who in "merrie England" have all decency and self-respect destroyed, and whose untutored natures ripen into deadly maturity of vice, in the dismal, hopeless wards of the Union Workhouse! Six hundred thousand free-born men, women and children, are, in those monstrous schools of evil, constantly undergoing a regular, systematic training for the gaol. The secrets of vice are laid open to them in the dire teaching of corrupting association; idleness is infused into the marrow of their bones by a system which ignores industrial training, and forbids remunerative or encouraging employment; wrathful discontent is engendered in their hearts through the odious display of injustice, by which the aged and decrepid, the unemployed artizan, the stricken widow, and the homeless girl are starved, degraded, and used like dogs, as if to be poor were the one damnable crime in England.

From this source, this "focus of corruption," comes ever fresh, ever formidable, the intolerable curse of the criminal population.

"The workhouse is a depôt of every kind of human misfortune. We must try and reduce its miseries to some sort of classification, and to remedy them piecemeal, by methods suitable to each separate class. It is horrible to huddle them altogether into one hopeless conglomeration, where, in walking down the long wards, we see the beds of the domestic servant, the former prostitute, the peasant's wife, the invalid governess, and a dozen other victims of different distress, ranged sadly side by side, while able-bodied men and women exemplify that 'Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do;' *and we are told that 'it is a fearful and significant fact, that many of the most hopeless and hardened inmates of workhouses are girls, who have been brought up in the pauper schools.'

"Turn to the police reports in our newspapers, or only watch for yourselves the boys and girls who join in the disorders of this metropolis, and fill our prisons—no longer prisons to them—and you will see how imperative it is that something should be done to rescue them. They are mainly the produce of the workhouse and the workhouse schools. Over them society has no held, because society has cast them out from all that is humane. They have been taught to feel that they have nothing in common with their fellow-men. Their experience is not of a home, or of parents; but of a workhouse and a governor—of a prison, and a gaoler, as hard and as rigid as either."†

Now at last we have come to the source of the whole mischief. We take no heed of the "perishing" and "dangerous" classes, until, through cruel neglect, they become vengeful and ferocious—they turn and rend us. The cause of the Convict has been fought out; justice and humanity have conquered there. The offender, after his course of penal servitude, shall not be returned to society weakened in body, and confirmed in evil practices; he shall go forth with power in his hand, and knowledge in his head, to enable him henceforth to earn and to eat honest bread. The poor child in years, whom cruel circumstances and fatal ignorance seduced into a first fault, is not for that shut out of the pale of salvation; he shall be taught better things. Good men hope and work for other triumphs of reform. But, into the profound abyss of that workhouse abomination no helpful hand has yet been stretched; at most some pitying eye has opened in wonder at the mystery of evil there revealed, and fast closed again in horror and despair.

There is hope, however. Inquiry is awake. If the evil still remain, at least it shall no longer be ignored. Those who do no work by halves are now on the track. Mrs. Jameson, all honour to her! struck a chord, the vibration of which shall long be felt. That chapter on workhouses, in her beautiful book "The Communion of Labour," was the first loud note of alarm—it may be of deliverance also. Those whom such powerful, tender words struck to the quick, will not rest until thought takes life in action:—

"The thunder deed following the lightning thought."

At the first meeting of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, held in Birmingham in October, 1857, the condition of workhouses was brought under the notice of the department of Social Economy. A sub-committee was appointed to investigate the subject, and the result of various meetings was the formation of a Workhouse Visiting Society,* which "would lead the minds of various persons to the subject, whilst it would form a centre of communication for all those who are at present working singly amidst great discouragements." Among the Committee we find the names of some well-known men, and some distinguished women. The work is now fairly begun. We may look for more startling, hideous revelations—some remedy speedily applied. Public opinion must sooner or later be impressed by such a method. Make known the evil first, and then the remedy.

* Englishwoman's Journal, p. 386.

† Lectures to Ladies on Practical Subjects, by the Rev. J. S. Brewer, p. 271.

* At a meeting of the Committee of the Social Economy Department of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, held at the Office of the Association, 3, Waterloo Place, Pall Mall, on Monday, June 7th, 1858, the report of the Sub-committee on Workhouses having been read—

1. Resolved, that the report be received.
2. That it is desirable to obtain a more efficient superintendence over the internal management of workhouses than now exists in the great majority of these establishments.
3. That the inmates of workhouses ought to be far more carefully classified than at present, as to sex, age, and character, and that children especially should always be entirely separated from adult paupers.
4. That industrial training and occupation should be more extensively introduced.
5. That a system of inspection by unpaid, and especially lady visitors, sanctioned by the guardians, would be calculated to improve the internal condition of workhouses.
6. That for the furtherance of the views expressed above, the Committee of this department will sanction the establishment of a Workhouse Visiting Society.

Digitized by Google

The Church of England Review, and the Englishwoman's Journal, are strong allies, and bring powerful help to the association. With how just a satire a clever writer in the last-named valuable publication handles the subject we are dwelling on:—

"It has occurred to us that stereoscopic slides of workhouse interiors might be now distributed with greater efficiency than tracts at a penny, or pamphlets at a shilling; and the same wonderful art which is employed to trace and identify the criminal in the eye of the law, might be used to bring Lazarus under the notice of forgetful Dives—the miserable sufferer upon a workhouse bed, under the sympathy of the lady, who, in the very next street, lies hour by hour upon her luxurious couch."—P. 384.

"The one hope, we were told, for St. Martin's Workhouse, lay in the National Gallery! public philanthropy and private ratepayers will not give it a new and well-arranged building; but it was hoped that the ground on which it stands would be wanted for the enlarged gallery which was in contemplation—when the better housing of our Raphaels and Turners would contribute indirectly to the better housing of our poor."—P. 384.

Workhouses and Women's Work is as wise a pamphlet as we have seen for many a day. It is clear and methodic, with a certain suppressed fire, very admirable when the question is of abuses and injustice to make one's hair stand on end. Such a tone gives confidence at once in the writer's power and sincerity. Without giving an outline of the whole, we shall just extract, almost at random, a few paragraphs. Here is the secret of the pauper's preference for the prison:—

"In the first place, whatever the management of workhouses may be, it is stated to be a fact that they are less comfortable than prisons, and that the latter are preferred as places of abode by the lower classes. Magistrates and chaplains and visitors to prisons acknowledge this to be the case. The preference is openly avowed by men and women, especially the latter. What does it matter to them if the degradation of the prison is greater than the workhouse, if, indeed, there be much difference between the two in this respect?*

"The prison offers a clean and comfortable lodging, food far superior to the usual fare of the criminal, and to that of the workhouses; kind and attentive officers of a grade above those provided for the non-criminal poor. Such treatment as is too commonly received even from the porter at the workhouse-gate, would not be suffered in prison establishments, which are governed by a bench of magistrates, gentlemen by character and position, who regularly visit and inspect the buildings. With them rests the appointment of a governor, a gentleman of education and intelligence, who has the supreme command over the establishment, and, generally speaking, this important office is filled with discretion and zeal. The chaplain's is an important and conspicuous post, and lady visitors have long since been permitted to visit the female inmates.

"The Report of the Visiting Justices of the Westminster House of Correction shows that the number of commitments from workhouses to that prison in the year 1856 was 273, and to the Coldbath Fields Prison 221. With regard especially to the boys and girls thus committed, the magistrates speak as follows:—"Your committee cannot but believe, if more attention were paid in workhouses to classification and other improvements of a reformatory character, there would be much less necessity for sending so many of the inmates to prison; and the visiting justices are strengthened in this belief from the fact of the very great difference in the numbers that are sent from some of the workhouses in comparison with others.' They believe that 'an increase in the criminal population must arise from familiarising so many destitute persons with the interior of the prison;' and they further suggest, 'that offences against workhouse rules should be punished by other means than imprisonment in a criminal prison, and that greater facilities should be offered to the poor and destitute, as well as to discharged prisoners, to prevent their committing offences in order to obtain an asylum.' Surely if there is no other argument in favour of an amended administration of our workhouses, this alone would be sufficient. Either our prisons for criminals must be made less comfortable and attractive, or our workhouses, for the non-criminal poor, more so."—Pp. 7, 8.

Very true, say we. And we add, that it were doubly well that reform in this case should for once begin at the right end, and that instead of seeking to pull down what is good, an effort should be made to raise up to the just standard what is now defective and bad. All that we have been doing of late only results in this, that the current of evil is stopped occasionally; the course changed here and there, with infinite labour, and at ruinous expense. But the great body of the stream flows on as of old—turbulent, destructive, ever increasing. We must begin at the beginning. And, adopting the sentiment as our own, with the gifted writer of the pamphlet just quoted, "we trust that a better day has begun to dawn upon the dreary night of workhouse management, and that our non-criminal poor may ere long receive a share of that benevolent zeal and interest which is now so largely bestowed upon the criminal portion of our population."

Sometimes when we are given to "romancing," as our old nurse would say, we begin to hope that the Workhouse Visiting Society may come to spend the summer vacation in Ireland. If the society should not have much light thrown on their labours, by investigations at this side of the channel, perhaps at least they might succeed in showing up to some purpose our own national apathy on the subject. At any rate it would be no discouragement to them to find, that while pursuing their own noble path at home, they may do us good service also, saving at once two kingdoms from destruction and disgrace. We hope they may come. To get a glimpse of our "interiors" would not oblige a member to half an hour's digression from any pleasure route in the kingdom.

On all the high roads of Ireland, whether we steam or ride, the first intimation of approach to any town or district of consideration, is the appearance on a rising ground of the Tudor gables and lattice windows of the union workhouse—or poorhouse, as we call the edifice in Ireland. To unaccustomed eyes the building presents the bearing of a respectable national institution not ashamed to hold up its head. But, as Mrs. Jameson says, it is "an institution peculiar to ourselves," which cannot be spoken of "without a mingled feeling of shame and fear"—an institution, let us add, a parallel with which cannot be found in "despotic" Austria, or "ill-governed" Spain. To experienced eyes, therefore, the tawny edifice, for all its style and neatness, is nothing but a whited sepulchre. What we know to have occurred within those walls, it would not answer to refer to here. History, when calm, shall by and by write the narrative; and writers of fiction, when they want to arouse and shock lethargic readers, will choose such a subject, and will find that to have the story creditworthy they must pare down the truth, making it more probable by making it less true. We value the ennobling power of art too much to make it the medium of conveying frightening and sickening impressions. But the stereoscopic method might we think be adapted to illustrate certain transactions, constantly occurring to vary the monotony of poorhouse life—normal conditions, which, wisely considered, point a moral very sharply. For example:—

Groups of poorhouse-reared girls, surly, audacious, with no work to do, no wish for any; lounging through the prison-like wards with the shadow of the place upon them; power for mischief clearly developed in their faces; the master's step, too evidently, the only rule of conduct to them—a sight, on the whole, in comparison with which a herd of raving idiots suggests more cheerful reflection.—

Playground of poorhouse children, whom society disowns, and whom "justice" and "charity" have taken to their own, stunted little creatures, neither child-like nor human-like; they are at play, sitting close packed against the wall, or gathered into knots, dull and stupified on their nursery floor; no ghost of a ball, or hoop, or pegging-top to mind them of a child's nature; pauper boys must be taught to do without these things.—

Behind the scenes: precocious youths applying deleterious substances to their eyes to stimulate ophthalmia; happily succeeding, though with infinite pain, they may be sent to hospital, where no lessons are said, and where young paupers, if diseased, get good bread to eat.—

Conspiracy brewing among adult paupers to tear away the brickwork and "murther the master"—not under the excusable pretext of inflicting injury on the said officer—but with the understood, avowed intention of being sent to gaol.—

Boys in the act of setting fire to their bedding, in the hope of burning down the whole establishment, and so putting an end to it all.—

* "In fact, the difference is rather the other way. Persons going to prison and confessing that it was for the sake of obtaining relief, have been asked why they did not apply for it at the workhouse? They have actually replied, 'They did not like the disgrace of doing so.' Yet they would commit an offence against the laws, and enter a prison, without feeling that they had contracted any degradation! We are strongly inclined to believe that it is the general management of prisons being felt superior to that of workhouses, that raises them in the estimation of the lower classes, who, even the worst among them, are keenly alive to justice and fair treatment. One of the most refractory female prisoners in a large prison told the magistrates, 'She knew she would receive justice from them.'"

Digitized by Google

Paupers attending divine service on Sunday: several card-parties in full operation in convenient corners of the apartment devoted to public worship.—

But enough. People know little about these things. They care little, just because they know little. The press might utter a cry strong enough to be heard from one end of the island to the other; but the press sometimes forgets its high vocation, and instead of leading and commanding opinion, is content passively to reflect the temper of the times. The press in Ireland, with a few honourable exceptions, reflects in this case very accurately—the apathy of opinion. People, when forced by accident to give the matter a thought, have a vague notion that the poor laws are the destruction of the country, and content themselves with cursing the poor laws. Cursing the poor laws! as if that legislative measure were not meant for good—were not capable of good—a recognition, indeed, of a vital first principle, that the rich should be taxed for the support of the destitute, and that beggars should no longer be quartered on paupers. If cursing were an accredited remedy, one might suggest the propriety of letting malediction fall in the proper quarter; on the heads, namely, of the negligent, ignorant, factious administrators of the law. It does certainly strike one forcibly, that if a body of legislators sat down with cool heads to devise a method by which a whole race might be demoralized and physically debased, they could not hit upon a better plan than to enact a just law, and abandon the administration of it, according to the approved representative system, to a class of men not competent for the trust; a class of middle-men who grind the faces of the poor, and to whom "keep down the rates!" is the first and last commandment.

We should like of all things to hear of the appointment of a parliamentary commission to inquire into the common-sense qualifications and educational status of our "guardians of the poor." An instructive, perhaps amusing, blue-book might be compiled, furnishing such tables as the following:—

A return of the number of guardians who are familiar with the interior of the houses they make rules for on board days.

A return of those who only attend when a job is to be carried, a priest snubbed, or a parson put down.

A return of the boards which do not appear to rejoice in the possession of one supreme bully, who, when a true gentlemen and honest Christian comes in to remonstrate, and say a word for the dumb suffering poor, hounds on his brood of brawlers, and silences the voice of humanity, and affrights its advocate by the apparition of this dragon at the door.

A return of the number of guardians, who, on strict examination, appear to have ever once reflected that every penny they "save the country" by refusing to classify, industriously train, and properly feed mere paupers, is carried over at once to the prison account, and levied with ruinous interest for the maintenance of branded convicts. Lastly, and though we might have a column or two, it would not much increase the printer's bill—

A return of guardians who do act according to right principles, and stand by their post; and though defeated, and left in scandalous minority, still protest, and raise a voice for humanity and justice.

A chapter on blue-book literature would not be the worst subject for a clever essayist. We have tragedy, comedy, farce, nondescript interludes, and finales of fire and brimstone, in the reports of many Royal Commissioners. The reports of the Poor-law Commissioners have a style of their own, and a very remarkable one, too. Official dignity is admirably preserved, and it is really a study to observe with what imperturbable calmness the guardians are recommended to adopt alleviative measures when disease appears; to attend unfailingly to the physician's opinion; to provide vegetables, and vary the diet of the paupers. With grave earnestness, advice is given to educate children, so that they may be enabled to leave the union and obtain employment, for the carrying out of which object it is intimated, that it is necessary to employ persons fully competent to instruct in the schools, and also expedient to pay them sufficiently. Patiently and perseveringly the guardians are reminded, that the care of orphans is an onerous charge, involving moral obligations not a few; that the workhouse is a sorry substitute for a home to these deserted children; that still it is above all things important to keep them in health, care them, and train them industriously. The commonest truisms are detailed in a way to make them level with the comprehension of the most thick-headed guardian; and we can fancy how much art was called into exercise to preserve this tone, and how often the commissioners, instead of recommending, advising, representing, and suggesting, must have longed for powers to command, compel, threaten, and denounce. The crowning point of all is the recorded fact, that in one year thirty-two boards of guardians were dissolved, and paid officers appointed to do their duty. This, at all events, is significant. When "troublous times" arrived, the "system of self-government," and "the great principle of popular representation," as developed in the constitution of boards of guardians, failed to work, except in the dead-letter way, and two or three paid officers were found an efficient and satisfactory substitute for a score of duly elected guardians.

It is exceedingly strange how often men, even of average worth and talent, are spoiled, or rendered useless, when they come in contact with the working of this poorhouse system. Many a man, who in his drawing-room is a frank, kindly gentleman; in his household a good master; and, in business or professional relations "an honourable man;" fails in sense, and courage, and charity, when he takes his place at a board of guardians. His very goodness, if we may say so, is a stumbling-block; he seeks conciliation; adopts soothing methods; accepts instalments of good as he thinks; gathers up shreds and patches of orders and resolutions to comfort himself withal; and succeeds, after all his trouble, just in plastering up abuses, and temporarily concealing offensive sores. But the direct road to reform in this particular case would be a sadly long way. It will take another age, and the operation of a yet undeveloped system of middle-class education to produce a generation of true "guardians of the poor." The appeal for the present lies elsewhere.

The subject of poorhouse management is so vast that we dare not even glance at its extent and ramifications in so cursory a way. Leaving everything else aside for the present, we shall give our parting word for the children who are brought up in the poorhouse. We say it boldly—the greatest evil lies here. Thousands of orphans and deserted children are crammed into the poorhouse; the neglect they endure is fatal; the very care, in some instances, bestowed on them, is vain or injudicious. What we are about to say now, regards the female children more particularly. The boys suffer in their measure; but there are here and there outlets of escape for them; sometimes they are trained usefully; and at any rate the injury done to them and to society by poorhouse rearing is not so terrible and so quickly avenged as in the case of the girls.

In some unions it would appear that the children are well taken care of. They are kept apart from the adults; are well grounded in religious doctrine by the chaplains; have masters and mistresses trained by the Board of Education; and get, in fact, whatever a mechanical national school education can give them—but no more. They are taught no work by which they could earn their bread in the world. It is sometimes asserted that they are made to do the work of the house; that they wash clothes, clean out wards, and so on. Let no one be imposed on by that. The washing of the pauper uniform does not go far towards initiating them into the mysteries of "making up linen;" and the sweeping out of dreary monotonous wards does not exactly qualify for housemaid's duty. To speak plain truth, after undergoing poorhouse training from infancy or childhood, they are found at fifteen or sixteen years of age perfectly useless for all practical purposes.*

Moreover there is no way of disposing of them even if they were able to earn their bread. Here, again, one is sometimes put down by the assurance, that numbers of people come to the union

* "I was in a very large parish union, where there were about 400 children, nearly an equal number of boys and girls, and schools for both. The boys had an excellent master for reading and writing, and had masters, besides, to teach them various trades. There was a tailor, a carpenter, a shoemaker, a hairdresser, a plumber, who at wages from 25s. to 35s. a week, were employed to instruct the boys in their respective trades. The girls were taught reading, writing, and sewing; some of them, under the pauper menials, helped to scour and scrub. The over-tasked, anxious mistress, seemed to do her best; but there was not sufficient assistance. The whole system was defective and depressing, and could not by any possibility turn out efficient domestic servants, or well-disciplined, religious-minded, cheerful-tempered girls. I was informed that, of the boys sent out of this house, about 2 per cent. returned to the parish in want or unserviceable; while of the girls they reckoned that about 50 per cent. were returned to them ruined and depraved."—Community of Labour, p. 113.

Digitized by Google

looking for servants, and that a great many girls are taken out in that way. Shall we tell what this means? We can speak with authority, though we are no guardian—thank Heaven! and for all our bitter speaking have never eaten the bread of affliction within the walls of the union. But we shall tell how it is. The people who come to take out poorhouse children, are low struggling roomkeepers who cannot pay servant's wages, and want a little drudge, who for "her bit," no better generally than pauper's fare, is expected to slave, and trudge, and scrub with the power and energy of full-grown, skilled labour; or they are tradespeople who offering to teach the children their business, get them bound to them, and then use them for common messengers and runners. The treatment the unfortunate children meet with, is the kind one would expect to be given by people who think nothing too bad for a child who is "only a pauper, whom noboby owns." The bad example witnessed in these "homes," the spectacle of vice never dreamt of in the children's ward, is often so shocking that the young servant or apprentice runs back frightened, begging with tears to be taken into the union again. Even in rare instances where fair play and indulgence might be given, obstacles of the most provoking kind, arise from the unbearable ignorance of the children themselves.* The very timidity of creatures so long housed up from intercourse with the world, to whom a run down the street is an adventure, and carrying a message, a service of difficulty and danger, causes them to commit awkwardnesses to no end.

The general result is, that the children are turned off, or run-away; stray about the streets or roads for awhile; meet bad company; and are next heard of in gaol;† or seeking refuge again in the union, are admitted—but not this time among the children. A woman's suit is put on them; they are sent to the woman's ward, and hope is done with them. Their childhood was safe with children; they had one glimpse of the great world, which did not use them well; now they shall have full knowledge of what is meant by a hell upon earth. Suffice it to say, that the very worst characters resort to the poorhouse, just for the purpose of tempting out such ready-reared victims; and as there is no separation of character or class; no protection for the innocent; no corner of shelter in all the desolate, dreary wards, in which the modest girl can be out of ear-shot of the blasphemous talk, and ribald songs of the degraded and shameless herd, evil speedily has its way. Children born and bred in the vilest lane of a crowded city, and surrounded by idle, vicious neighbours, have better chance of escape, better opportunity of knowing right from wrong, greater power of choosing and resisting, than those poor orphans.

If, by rare chance, some few of those who return to the poorhouse, escape the last degradation to which we have alluded, they are sure to fall into another pit. The atmosphere of the place soon tells upon them—lessens, and deadens, and finally destroys all energy of body and mind. The want of work, or the forced work without profit, or reward,* or healthy stimulant, has the inevitable result. After, perhaps, an effort or two to get and keep a situation, they finally return of their own free will to the union, to lead a life, we cannot say of animal enjoyment, but of brutish inaction. The poorhouse stamp is on their coarse garments a badge of degradation; the poorhouse stamp is on their whole moral being, a warning that none need hope much good from them.

The worst cases in a convict prison are the insolent ungovernable subjects from the poorhouse. In their untameable audacity and unconquerable obstinacy they form a strong contrast with the poor girls who are sent up from the country parts of Ireland under sentence of penal servitude. The latter, generally speaking, after holding out for awhile, fall gradually into the routine of discipline, become gentle and docile, take instruction gratefully, and are almost sure to leave the prison better girls than they entered, not unfrequently thanking God that they were brought there. But the former, coming in, too often, of their own accord, and not for purposes of self-improvement, are capable of any enormity, and are the despair of matrons and officers.

Amongst the unfortunate inmates of the Magdalen Asylums, the most thoroughly depraved are of the same class. They have to be watched with most vigilant care, lest the spirit of evil and insubordination so strong within them, should break out anew, and contaminate those, who, in comparison with them, are innocent. The source of all their wickedness and misery they trace to the evil influence of unrestricted intercourse with the worst classes in the poorhouse; and when it is sometimes thoughtlessly suggested to them, that on leaving the asylum, if all fail, they can go to the Union, the answer is quick and to the point—"It were better to go back to the old trade than do that!"

Our lunatic asylums are not without their poorhouse cases, of a kind to baffle the ingenuity of experienced physicians, who find it frequently impossible to decide whether the patients from the poorhouse are really lunatics, or only make-believe mad. As for hospital experience—we leave that to be inferred.

Turn where we may, in every asylum and refuge for the unfortunate, in every place of detention and punishment for the criminal; wherever vice, and misery, and cruel suffering have their abode, the poorhouse and its iniquitous system rise up before the mind. Poorhouse-reared girls throng the streets, or spend their lives on the tramp from one "institution" to another, trying which is the most comfortable, or which answers best the need or the whim of the moment. Truly, our system of dealing with the poor, in spite of all its niggard parsimony, is not an economic one.

Want of classification, and want of industrial training, are not the only evils. There remains another grievous wrong. The children in the poorhouse are not properly fed. It is of no use to say that they would have no better food at home if they had a home. They would have better than that; they would have full liberty of spirit and limb, and fresh air in copious draughts. Irish children, when at large, are known to be hardy, healthy, straight-limbed and well grown. In the Union they are stunted, and deformed, have weak eyes, swollen jaws, and are subject to diseases which permanently vitiate the blood. So that at a time when emigration is carrying off our labouring population, and we begin to fear that we may soon be in want of hewers of wood and drawers of water, we are actually rearing from 1,5000, to 2,000 boys and girls in such a way, that if they survive childhood, they can only propagate disease and perpetuate deformity. A congress of slave-drivers would be too wise for this; they would see the absurdity of destroying the breed of the human cattle which is to do the rough work of life for themselves and their children.*

---

* See our Record of the current number for "St. Joseph's Industrial School, with special reference to its intern class of workhouse orphans."

† This important official statement (Report of Poor Law Commissioners) reveals the melancholy admission that 35 per 1000 of these young persons are either so depraved, or the discipline of the workhouses is so conducted, that of the entire number put in prison, from nine to fifteen years of age, 64 per cent., and of those from fifteen to twenty-one years of age, 61 per cent., were for offences committed in the workhouses, so that their antecedent criminality, even including under this head the larger fraction of vagrancy, has been only about half as active in familiarising them with the debasement of a prison as the very workhouses to which they resorted as an asylum. The outbursts in Cork and Waterford Unions, by which the windows were broken, the workhouses wrecked, the officers injured, and police and military interference required, were not only witnessed, but were shared in by the school children, and by many who had been reared in those institutions. —See Irish Quarterly Review, No. 15, September, 1854.

* In a paper read at the Social Science Meeting at Birmingham, 1857, Mrs. De Morgan suggests the practicability of slightly remunerative employment, and especially urges industrial training for the young, so that "workhouses, from being the lowest step on the downward ladder, might form the first of an ascending scale, and arrest the idle and vicious in their certain course to prison."

* "With respect to some workhouses in Ireland, it has been alleged that the diet for the children is sufficient. In others, as in the North Dublin Union, the mortality of infant children is excessive. Some ten years ago, the mortality there rose to such a height that it became matter of public investigation. What it is at present I do not know, but a remark of a guardian at a recent meeting was significant of his opinion on this point. When a question arose as to the religion in which two deserted children should be brought up, Mr. Roper said, 'I think it a thousand pities to lose so much time about a matter of no consequence, because every man knows that from the system of the house, not one of these children will be alive this day twelve months.' How guardians, with such convictions on their minds, can be found to be the instruments for enforcing the rule, that no child shall receive relief except in the workhouse, it is not easy to understand."—The Workhouse as a mode of Relief for Widows and Orphans. By W. Neilson Hancock, LL.D. Read at the Meeting of the Dublin Statistical Society, 29th January, 1855.

Digitized by Google

There must be an end put to this stronghold of perdition, no matter what it cost. We state the plain fact, and show how things are. Let political economists, and christian philanthropists, and good men and women who take common sense views of things, look to it. We know that some have already set their thoughts in this direction, and are groping for a remedy. To these we say:—Take heart; be not discouraged; if you can do no more, stand even like watchmen on the tower and give notice of the danger; you shall not always be alone! A few earnest men can utter words more full of power than the roar of multitudes. All good work, in our time, is done in this way:—a few true hearts think out honestly their thought; they gain disciples; opinion grows; and soon, suddenly as it seems, a voice is heard which dare not be gainsayed.

Why not turn the children's classes into regular industrial schools? It would cost too much to get masters and mistresses, and working tools—and the guardians would never consent! But, we persist, after a few years' training, they would be fit to leave the Union, and could earn their bread ever after. Is it a wonderful saving to keep them all their lives, and instead of training them for the world, only rear them for the gaol?

Why not, as Dr. Handcock suggested three years ago,* give out-door relief to widows in such a way, that their destitution need not compel them to enter the poorhouse with their children, and condemning the orphans, as a first step towards their education, to a severance from all ties of home and kindred? Why not, as that clear-headed man recommends, make the allowance contingent on the children's attendance at some school in the neighbourhood, and so arrange matters that "the calamity of the father's early death need not have produced the further calamity of breaking-up a human family?"

Or, better still, instead of crushing them into poorhouses, why not charge the rates with their support in extern industrial schools — such as the Aberdeen Feeding Schools for example? What has been effected in that town and in Glasgow by the operation of these schools, furnishes an example which Ireland might very well follow. Sheriff Watson, tired of committing vagrant children to prison for petty offences, thought of a remedy; and having enlisted the sympathy of a few zealous friends, a school was opened in Aberdeen, in 1841. It was notified that children of the lowest description would be received, and in addition to the ordinary school training, would be given work and food; would be kept all day, and would be sent home at night, that family ties might not be interfered with. Children flocked in without further persuasion; their appearance changed rapidly; and the police soon reported a perceptible diminution in the number of juvenile offenders. Here is a telling fact:—The number of boys committed to prison in Aberdeen in the year 1851 had suddenly increased to four times the number of the previous year, and in 1854 quadrupled again; while during the same period the committals of girls never exceeded two in the year. This discrepancy was not to be accounted for until it became known, that, owing to a temporary depression of trade, the subscriptions to the schools fell off; the gentlemen who managed the boys' schools were obliged to restrict the admissions, while the committee of ladies who managed the girl's schools, being more fruitful in resources, contrived to keep going as usual.

Subsequently an Act of Parliament was obtained, known as Dunlop's Act, by which Sheriffs and Magistrates are empowered to send children found begging, or wandering about without proper guardianship, to these schools, when duly certified by the Secretary of State, to be kept there as long as is necessary for their training. The parish may be rated for their maintenance.

The effect of the operation of these schools has been, that the towns in which they are established are almost cleared of juvenile criminals; the demand of employers for the children exceeds the supply; and in the schools the attendance has lessened owing to the exhaustion of the class from which they came. The cost, including rent, salaries, and other expenses, averages from £7 to £11 per head per annum.*

The only sign of life which Ireland has given, is in the establishment of the Cork Benevolent Apprenticing Society, and in the existence of St. Joseph's Industrial Institute in the neighbourhood of Dublin. Both works are in their infancy. In Cork a number of gentlemen lately formed themselves into a Society for the purpose of taking boys out of the poorhouse, at the moment when they should be sent, by the rules of the Union, among the unclassed adults. They not only apprentice them to tradespeople in the city, but continue to watch over their conduct with great vigilance, settling disputes between master and apprentice, and acting the part of a well-organised patronage society. They have already provided for twenty-one boys, whose conduct since they have been placed out has been unexceptionable. These gentlemen with scarcely an exception are guardians, who, finding they could not carry reform into the system of poorhouse management, were not content with remonstrating at the Board, but remembering they were not only poor-law guardians, but likewise christian gentlemen who could not let evil pass without an effort to stay it, began to work in their private capacity, and soon set an example worth following. They have since appealed to the ladies of Cork to go and do likewise, and help the poorhouse girls, and we believe not without effect. The managers of St. Joseph's Industrial Institute, have taken out of one of the Dublin Unions seven orphan girls, "a sort of first instalment" as they say. It is a small beginning, but involves the assertion of a great principle,

No time is to be lost. Reason suggests, prudence dictates, expediency demands that the present state of things should be put an end to. A child in a Reformatory costs £20 a year at the lowest estimation: a grown offender in a common gaol more than £23: and a convict prisoner above £33. A word to the wise is sufficient. Such facts and figures strike in the wedge very bravely. We keep fifteen or twenty thousand children in our Irish Poorhouses, and we think we are excellent managers and do our duty by society and the orphans. Heaven help us!

There is a very precious benediction bestowed on those who "lead others unto justice," and doing the Saviour's work, "bring back strayed sheep to the fold." Let those who give their hearts to the Reformatory cause be comforted with that. There is a grievous malediction pronounced by the same Lord and Master himself, against those who "scandalise those little ones." Let our guardians, and our ratepayers, and our inert public look to it.

* We refer to the paper quoted in the note above. There could not be a better proof given of the want of interest among the public in this vitally important subject, than the fact of the little notice this most able paper attracted. It gives the essence of whole chapters in a few short paragraphs, and ought to have been a text-book for the "leaders" of our daily press.

* "Train up a child in the way he should go." A paper on Industrial Schools of Scotland, and Dunlop's Act, communicated to the British meeting of the National Reformatory Union in 1856. By Alfred Hill, Barrister-at-Law.

BIRMINGHAM REFORMATORY INSTITUTION.

Birmingham, ever forward in any work tending to better the condition of the humbler classes, or to create a proper sympathy between all branches of the body social, possesses a Reformatory, which ranks high in the estimation of the Government Inspector, and affords a good sample of the benefit conferred on the public by a well-managed institution for the moral and social improvement of young offenders.

The annual meeting of their institution was held on Tuesday, January 11th, at the Temperance Hall, Temple Street. In the absence of the Earl of Lichfield, who was detained by family affliction, Mr. Adderley, M.P., took the chair. Amongst those present were the Earl of Shrewsbury; Viscount Ingestre, M.P.; Lord Calthorpe; Col. Lowe, 4th Dragoons; the Hon. and Rev. G. M. Yorke; Sir John Ratcliff, Mayor of Birmingham; Charles Ratcliff, Esq.; T. Bagnall, Esq.; S. Thornton, Esq.; T. C. S. Kynnersley, Esq.; Aldermen Phillips, Lloyd, Manton, Palmer, and Smith; C. Shaw, Esq.; Revs. F. Williams, W. Gover, and S. Gedge; T. B. Baker, Esq., Hardwick Court; Rev. Dr. Mackenzie; Dr. Melson; Messrs. J. W. Ingram, C. W. Elkington, F. Christian, W. Morgan, J. Watton, E. Heeley, W. L. Harrison, J. T. Bunce, and C. Reeves.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, said that the first blue book on the subject of reformatories had recently made its appearance. It was signed by Mr. Sidney Turner, the inspector of reformatories. Of the Saltley Reformatory, Mr. Turner spoke in the very highest terms.

Digitized by Google

He also stated that he had no less than forty of these institutions to inspect. Now, considering that the subject had not been before the country for more than six years, this fact showed that the country had very generally endorsed the opinion which Birmingham first took up upon the subject. From 1854 to 1858 not a single session of Parliament had passed in which there had not been legislation regarding it. At that moment there were two Scotch acts, three English acts, a Middlesex act, and an Irish act; and he (Mr. Adderley) thought that was enough. He would say, then, "A truce to legislation, and let us now set to work with action;" not, however, that they had been at all wanting in action during the progress of that legislation. He had some satisfaction in reflecting that he introduced the first act and the last act upon the subject, and he had peculiar satisfaction in saying that he did it simply as the spokesman of Birmingham. Now, supposing legislation to have taken pretty well its part, let them consider what had been effected. All these different acts had not taken exactly the same view of the subject. Scotland, he thought wisely, had treated as one matter the whole question of juvenile vagrancy; while England had taken pains to make a distinction betwixt vagrancy and criminal children, and had added to the number of its divisions by having local as well as general acts. Now, he (Mr. Adderley) objected to all multiplicity, especially in the matter of schools, and he would rather have the Scotch system than the English one. Ireland had taken a different view from either, and had specially confined itself to criminality, public opinion against vagrancy being probably not very strong in the sister kingdom. But though the three countries had treated the matter differently in detail, yet it was satisfactory to know that all had accepted the same principle—that the public had determined to step in and prevent children from being cast upon the streets to live upon plunder. The old folly which this new principle had superseded was this:—To treat children in the same way as you would treat adults, as fully responsible persons—persons who were in the position of citizens, wholly answerable for their conduct; and that while the peccant children of the upper classes were whipped and subjected to childlike punishments, the children of the most neglected class, the class most exposed to crime were brought solemnly before the judges of the land, and sent to gaol—a process which resulted in nothing but the breaking down, in the minds of those children, of the earliest safeguard which nature has placed around childhood—the sense of shame. At that moment he had nothing more to regret than that the country did not yet fully appreciate the step itself had taken, and that the statesmen of the day were not yet fully aware of the new and reformed treatment of those children to which they had been driven by the good sense of the country. Though at this moment children were being moved from prisons to reformatories, yet reformatories were not being moved into the class to which they belonged, that of schools for juvenile education. They must bear in mind that in all reforms of every administration the officers of the administration are the last to reform; and that even when the administration in their own hands has reformed itself by the good sense of the country, the officers cannot for many years after the change see what a new system has been placed in their hands. Referring to the financial prosperity of the institution at Saltley, Mr. Adderley strongly insisted upon the necessity of not leaning too much upon the State. If reformatories ceased to be private institutions, aided by the State, but chiefly supported by voluntary contributions, they would, before many years were over, be prisons in the guise of reformatories, and, therefore, worse than an open honest prison. There was another reason why the subscription list should be kept up. On the 31st of March next, the contributions from the Privy Council would cease for ever, and the only government payments to reformatories would be through the Home Office. Their income would be diminished to the extent of nearly £300 a year. He was delighted to hear it, as they would still have ample support from the Home Office. He should have preferred receiving it from the Privy Council as if it were a grant for national schools, for the dangerous pressure upon the Treasury was not from this quarter, but from the rich, from those who ought to support schools themselves, and against whose pressure he should put a stout shoulder as long as he was in that office. Let the rich and the middle classes educate themselves; don't let them become paupers, and ask the State to provide for the education of their sons. In this direction, however, that of poverty and destitution, they might safely yield, though even in this direction not too much. One point in the history of the institution during the year had been the increased income consequent upon an increased development of industry; and as a matter of justice, he (Mr. Adderley) must call upon the meeting to acknowledge the debt of gratitude which all friends of the institution owed to the indefatigable energy and attention of Mr. Charles Ratcliff. They were also fortunate in having a good master (Mr. Humphreys), under whom the expenditure had been greatly reduced during the last year. When the Staffordshire magistrates sent their quota of fifty, the per-centage of establishment charges would be greatly reduced. After some further observations the chairman introduced

Mr. W. Morgan, who read the report. It stated that the school had now settled down into good working order, and went on to say, "Your Committee are highly gratified to report the complete success of the appeal which they made at the last annual meeting for contributions towards defraying the cost of the new erections at Saltley. The funds at their disposal are sufficient to pay off Mr. Adderley's loan of £500, and have fully cleared the balance of debt due last year to the contractor for the extension of the school buildings. Your Committee are thus enabled to entertain the subject of still further extending the basis of their operations. The institution at present accommodates fifty boys, but when the proposal for erecting a Reformatory for the county of Stafford was abandoned, and the temporary arrangement which had previously existed for the reception of twenty boys at Saltley was made permanent, it became obvious to your Committee that a large extension of the school buildings would soon be found requisite. The magistrates of Staffordshire have so far concurred in this view of the subject, that they have applied to your Committee to undertake the erection of a new wing, by which plan, if carried out, the institution would be enabled to accommodate fifty boys from that county without interfering with the present capacity of the school, so that the total number of boys inmates of the establishment will in future be 100."

The statistics of the school are as follows:—Boys in the school on 31st December, 1857, 39; admitted during 1858, 20; total, 59. Boys discharged on completion of term and now in employment doing well, 2; absconded, 1; placed in situations where they are still employed and doing well, 2; emigrated and known to be doing well, 2; emigrated with some uncertainty as to the result, 3; transferred to another Reformatory (the Akbar), 1; total, 9. Boys now in the school, 50. Of the 50 now in the school, the following are the number of their previous convictions so far as the same can be ascertained:—27 once; 13 twice; 3 thrice; 3 four times; 3 five times; 1 nine times; total, 50. 18 had received no school education at all; 3 knew the alphabet; 11 could read a little; 17 could read and write imperfectly; 1 could read and write well; total, 50. 21 had both parents living; 8 had lost both parents; 8 had lost their mother; 13 had lost their father; total, 50. 8 were from Lancashire; 9 were from Middlesex; 20 were from Staffordshire; 10 were from Warwickshire; 2 were from Gloucestershire; 1 was from Cheshire; total, 50.

"The following is the result of the inquiries and proceedings which have taken place for enforcing the parental responsibility with reference to the boys now at the school:—In the cases of 20 boys payments are being made; in the cases of 12 the parents are ascertained to be unable to pay; in the cases of 7 there is no liability, the boys being orphans, or illegitimate; in the cases of 2 the cases were dismissed by the magistrates, though the inspector reports that the parents were able to pay; in the cases of 4, addresses wanted; in the cases of 5, under inquiry; total, 50. 19 boys are now working as shoemakers, 13 as tailors, and the remaining 23 as gardeners, each of them taking a share in household and yard works.

"The whole result of the operations of the school may be gathered from the following extract from the report by Mr. Bowyer, her Majesty's School Inspector,—'I have inspected the school, and have the pleasure to report that I find the children much improved in religious knowledge, in intelligence, and in discipline.'

"Your Committee cannot but congratulate the subscribers upon the marked results which the Reformatory enterprise has already produced upon the gaol system. Mr. Kynnersley, the police magistrate of this borough, recently laid before your Committee a return, showing that the average number of juvenile offenders (boys) then in Birmingham Gaol was 15, against 36 at the same period last year, and about 50 in the previous year. In his letter accompanying the return, Mr. Kynnersley very justly says:—'Some at least of this improvement is due to Reformatories.'"

Digitized by Google

CHARLES RATCLIFF, Esq., then read the Treasurer's account, which exhibited a balance carried forward of £132 15s. 9d.

Lord SHREWSBURY moved the adoption of the report and Treasurer's account. The poor children who were generally the inmates of Reformatories he regarded as "more sinned against than sinning." He thought the evils which these unfortunates laboured under were to be remedied by the inculcation of habits of industry. Besides this, those who went to Reformatories would find that the object in view was not punishment; on the contrary, they would find those who were ready to sympathise with them, and who took an interest in their welfare. He was exceedingly glad to find so much good had been done by the institution in connection with the Borough Gaol, and he should be one of the first to say that the public might dispense with the tax-gatherer if they would support that institution. He was so pleased with the report and the interest which was taken in the institution, that from that evening forth he should not fail to give it his support, whilst he also felt indebted to the county members, to Mr. C. Ratcliff and Mr. Morgan, and though last not least, Mr. Humphreys, the master, for the interest they had taken in bringing the institution to its present degree of usefulness.

Lord CALTHORPE, in a few remarks, seconded the motion, which was put and carried.

Mr. T. B. BAKER proposed the Committee for the ensuing year, and in doing so highly complimented the management of the Saltley institution.

Lord INGESTRE seconded the motion, which was put and agreed to.

Mr. KYNNERSLEY, in a few appropriate remarks, moved the thanks of the meeting to Messrs. Ratcliff and Morgan, honorary Secretaries, and Mr. Tarleton, honorary surgeon.

The motion, having been seconded by Alderman LLOYD, was agreed to.

The Hon. and Rev. G. M. YORKE moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Haworth and the students of Saltley Training College, for their services as Sunday School Teachers at the Reformatory.

The usual vote of thanks was then moved by Sir J. RATCLIFF, and the meeting separated.

The following remarks on the meeting, taken from the Midland Advertiser, may appropriately close this notice of the anniversary of the Birmingham Reformatory Institute:—

THE SALTLEY REFORMATORY.

"We judge of a tree by its fruits. We value any movement according to the amount of substantial good it effects. In these modern days we have, especially in this glorious land of ours, many institutions born of British philanthropy and benevolence which reflect honour alike on the motives and the liberality of their founders and supporters. But, perhaps, there are no institutions which accomplish more practical good to society than Reformatories, and prominent, most prominent among these stands the Saltley Reformatory, the anniversary meeting of which has been held this week, and is reported in our columns to-day. We wish those who are at all sceptical regarding the reformation of our juvenile criminals to visit this admirably conducted institution. There they will have solved before their eyes a problem which has baffled not a few great minds. There they will be convinced that it is not the most difficult matter to reclaim juvenile delinquents, and there they will be persuaded that there is some truth in the axiom of Lord Palmerston respecting the natural goodness of humanity. At the Saltley Reformatory no unnecessary restraints are imposed. There is discipline without harshness; there is willing obedience to the rational regulations and a degree of industry and self-application which could scarcely be expected. The unfortunate lads seem contented with their lot, and they apply themselves with most praiseworthy assiduity to the profitable labour imposed on them, and most anxious do they seem to avail themselves of the education afforded, and otherwise to fit and prepare themselves to occupy honourable positions in society. Punishment is useful and salutary, but reformation is preferable to punishment. The boys at Saltley seem to feel that they are not the inmates of a prison, but the members of a social circle whose best interests are studied and promoted by the excellent superintendent and his staff. The annual report of the institution is most convincing as respects the good it has achieved, and the great benefit it is likely to confer, and we do trust that no niggardliness will be evinced by the public in extending to it that support which is so essential to its practical usefulness. To Mr. Adderley, whose great liberality towards the institution is so well known, the thanks of every philanthropist are due; and to Mr. Charles Ratcliff, whose untiring zeal and assiduity in connection with the interests of the Reformatory we have had reason to know and occasion to admire, the benevolent public cannot be too grateful. During the current year we hope to find no want of sympathy and no lack of pecuniary support towards the Saltley Reformatory."

ST. JOSEPH'S INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE:

WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO ITS INTERN CLASS OF WORKHOUSE ORPHANS.

MANY of the patrons of St. Joseph's Industrial School are fully aware of the fact, that within the last few months, seven orphans or deserted children have been taken from the children's ward of the North Dublin Union, and placed in the intern class of St. Joseph's; they are also aware of the circumstances and objects which have induced the founder and managers to take this step.

However, as a misconception seems to exist in some quarters, with regard to the exact amount of responsibility and risk incurred by this withdrawal of children from the union, it is well to state here, clearly and emphatically, that no assistance whatever has been given by the Board of Guardians towards the maintenance of these children. The Guardians merely permitted their withdrawal. The whole cost of their support, instruction, and clothing, is borne by the subscribers and the managers of the Institution, which is for the present the refuge and home of these friendless children.

Some, who have thought deeply on the question of the duty which society is bound to discharge towards unprotected and destitute children, are of opinion that the poor-rates should be charged with their support in Industrial Schools, or institutions in which self-dependance is one of the first lessons inculcated, and in which the "family principle" is not necessarily or systematically ignored,

This is not the ground on which to enter upon controversies, in the course of which unrighteous custom must incur heavy censure, and strong prejudices meet with rough treatment. But to wait for wholesale reforms in such matters, would suppose very "weary waiting," and to decline all personal trouble in resisting evil, until such a time as enlightened opinion should carry the question by acclamation, would deprive all true workers of their real strength and merit.

It is sufficient here, as cursorily as possible, to indicate the motives which have led the founder and managers of St. Joseph's to adopt those workhouse orphans, and to shew what the result of industrially training such subjects is likely to be.

Much experience of workhouse rearing, as shown in the conduct and fate of those who have been subjected to it, and a rather intimate acquaintance with the real history of girls who are now expiating offences against society in the convict prisons of the country, have led to the decided conviction, that the want of moral and industrial training in the workhouse schools is the great source of crime, especially among women and children.

In workhouse schools when vice is not cultivated, idleness, at least, is permitted. In most cases no means are given the children, whereby, on coming to a proper age, they might be enabled to earn their bread in the world. There is no system, or organization within the workhouse itself, by the instrumentality of which the children might be settled independently of the poor-rates—apprenticed—or even got rid of. A transfer to the adult wards when the time arrives, is all that can be looked forward to.

The adult wards of the workhouse contain the essence and concentration of the lowest vice in loathsome variety, and are the gathering place at one time or another of all the unconvicted crime of the country. Pauper-reared children, haplessly divested of all ties of home and kindred, and without that moral stay which only the influence of healthy family life can give, are ill prepared indeed to resist the torrent of evil example and invidious temptation which here besets them. Innocent girls too frequently leave the workhouse in company with designing artful reprobates, and either return again ruined and shameless, or find their way by a more or less round-about road, to the bridewell or the gaol. In the latter case, if the girl be legally sentenced to detention, the stain which her character has suffered, from the consequence perhaps of mere folly, or weakness, becomes an indelible brand, and the deplorable effects of unrestricted intercourse with old offenders to whom a sojourn in the gaol is a mere "holiday from vice" are soon apparent in the mode of life henceforth adopted by the unhappy girl. The convict prison is too often her destination; and, strange as it sounds, the solitary cell is in reality the refuge, and the home, and the school for such as she—the first "institution" of the many she has passed through, in which her rights as a human being are acknowledged, and an effort made to save her by a mildly stern and strictly just discipline, from a fatal descent to a still lower deep. Here at last, in spite of harsh discouragement and fearful waste of time and money, the evil is sought to be partially counteracted which might have been wholly prevented.

Digitized by Google

Facts such as these, which blue books prove, and public officers of many departments are forced to bear witness to, make it difficult of comprehension that conscientious men and women can lie quiet in their beds without having uttered a word of remonstrance or of protest. The managers of St. Joseph's Industrial Institute, feeling convinced that many would be found willing to give help in rescuing the poor children who seem so fatally doomed, if only some way were pointed out of doing so, determined to risk something for so good a cause, and at any rate to save some few from swift destruction.

It is well known that the female children of the North Dublin Union are in many respects well taken care of. The chaplains are vigilant in the discharge of their duties; and the officers in charge of the department are at once humane and efficient. The children are well instructed —indeed much better than a class far superior to them—and above all they are jealously separated from contact with adult paupers. It was therefore resolved that to this foundation should be added the superstructure without which all the rest can be no more than buried treasure —vain and useless. It was resolved to take out some of these children, and by giving them a thoroughly industrial education, prepare them according to sound common-sense principles to take their place among honest respectable bread-winners.

After some visits to the Union a number of girls were selected as likely to be eligible cases; a request was made that they should be put through a course of probation; materials were supplied, and the mistress undertook to teach them the common sort of sewing as a preparation for shirt-making. No opposition was offered by any of the authorities, and much kindly assistance was given by the officers in charge of the children. Of those selected in the first instance some few after a while dropped off disheartened, being unused to active exertion for any definite purpose: and some of those invited declined to enter the class, having a sort of undefined dread of leaving the house—the stories they had heard of what befel girls who had gone to service and met with bad treatment, and come back to the Union to be "dressed in woman's clothes, and sent to the woman's ward," were not likely to give them courage to face the world outside. Many however persevered; and to these the prize was given.

Finally seven girls were brought out, as a sort of first instalment. The guardians gave consent, and the pauper orphans are now Industrials of St. Joseph's.

The children, soon after their removal to the school, were called separately before the managers to give an account of themselves. The answers were noted at the moment, and the following is selected at random from the statements then made.

No. 7.—Age twenty-two; has been sixteen years in the Workhouse; is an orphan. Both parents died before she was brought to the Union by her grandmother who is still there; has a sister, a servant in England, who writes to her, but has no means of helping her; is lame: never left the children's ward; was appointed to assist in the infirmary, but received no other remuneration than extra diet. Has no relatives or friends in Ireland.

These girls were not selected for the strangeness of their history, or as quite extraordinary examples of desertion and utter friendlessness. They were taken almost at random, from a class of nearly three hundred. They can all read and write well; they know accounts, and are thoroughly instructed in catechism and Christian doctrine. But as the greater number of them had never been in an ordinary dwelling-house, their awkwardness on first entering one was both provoking and ludicrous. The use of knives and forks was unknown to them; the hall mat seldom failed to trip them up; they had not presence of mind enough to carry a can of water, and it required practice and experience to enable them to get up and down stairs without falling; as for their proficiency in needlework, it is enough to state that the first week they were put to ordinary shirt-making, the united earnings of five of the class amounted to nine-pence.

At present the intern class of St. Joseph's consists of these seven orphans, one girl selected from the extern class, and a matron. The latter is a respectable middle-aged woman, worthy of trust, full of the hard experience of a struggling life, and not in station much above the position the children must hereafter occupy. They learn much from her which a more lady-like person could not so well give; her homely cordial conversation, and her example of untiring industry, are invaluable as aids to education; she is a soldier's widow, saw a good deal of life in various quarters of the world, and of late years supported herself and an invalid step-daughter by dress making. She is at once overseer of the work department of the general Industrial School, cutter out, and instructor in every branch of household work. As it was found that she could not remain in the Institution at night on account of the said sick child, one of the extern class was appointed to fill her place at that time; the latter is an excellent worker, and in conduct the best example the children could have. Her family live in the neighbourhood, but for the present she remains altogether in the Institution.

The intern class work during the day with the general Industrial School, which continues to be carried on as usual, except that plain work has been substituted for crochet. In the morning hours the interns clean down the house, scour, polish grates, and otherwise qualify for household service; one of them, appointed in turn, remains in the kitchen, and is in fact the cook of the establishment. Two of the externs who are very destitute get dinner daily, making in all eleven at that meal. In the evening after supper the children sit in the kitchen, and under the cheerful influence of candle and fire-light, continue the work of the day, or knit stockings for themselves until it is time for general prayer and bed; passers-by often hear them singing their hymns and school songs in chorus.

During the week they are often sent on various errands for the sake of exercise, and on Sunday they generally get a country walk. On that day also, after hearing mass and sermon in one of the city churches, they return to dinner, and finish the day by remaining from three to six o'clock at the Sunday School of the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul; a great many of the extern class also attend this admirable school. Those, therefore, who are too busily engaged at work during the week to give much time to book-learning, have their knowledge of reading and writing kept up in this manner; while those who might be led into mischief by the idle and vicious companionship of the streets on Sunday afternoons, are safe with the good sisters; who, true to their charitable vocation, not only instruct, but also interest and amuse the children, allowing them to remain after school hours, teaching them small games of various kinds, and giving them books to read. During the summer the children often talked of their play in the garden, and the nice stories they read in "the nuns' summer-house."

This is something like carrying into practice the doctrine of the communion of labour, one charitable institution thus coming to the aid of another. There is one instance of the application of the same principle, by which St. Joseph's profits largely. The superiors of the missionary college of All Hallows have directed that a portion of the broken bread and meat, which is distributed to the poor, shall be sent to the managers of St. Joseph's. This food is prepared with care, and so good nourishment is provided at a time when a longer course of Workhouse diet would be likely permanently to injure the already ill-grown children. Thanks to this assistance, the appearance of the children is much improved; they have grown stout in person, and are fast losing the "poorhouse look," by which visitors so easily distinguish them from the other class. Whether they shall ever reach in height the average proportion of Irish girls is another question.

Digitized by Google

So much being said of the past and present of the Orphans, a word will suffice in reference to their future prospects. The object being to make them good plain workers and good common household servants, no doubt whatever is felt that they shall be easily disposed of when that point is reached. Many applications are made at the School for girls to mind children, or help in kitchens. An honest girl in either capacity is invaluable, and when any kind of training is added to that, the candidate is sure of promotion. In last year's report of St. Joseph's it was stated that twelve girls belonging to the School had been placed in respectable situations in various capacities. Since that time eight others have been similarly provided for. Of these twenty, not one is missing: they have all been heard of within a very short time, and no instance of bad conduct has been reported of any one of them. There are now in the School two of those girls who are out of place for the moment. They are availing themselves of the opportunity of learning plain work. They have come back to the old shelter of the school quite naturally, feeling sure that they have a good chance of being provided for as children of St. Joseph's. Among the benefactors of the Institution, there is one to whom special gratitude is due. This lady has taken at different times no less than five girls from the school—has kept them in her house—trained them as servants under her own eye—and given them what was worth gold to them—the means of earning henceforth an honest, comfortable livelihood.

With such aids as these the managers of St. Joseph's are justified in feeling no painful anxiety about the settlement of their children. In some cases—for all may not be fit for household service—it is contemplated to lodge out the girls with the parents of some who attend the extern class; giving them work as usual in the school, but obliging them to support themselves, and by hard experience compelling them to learn the value of every halfpenny they earn. Some time must elapse before this can be done; for until a girl is able to earn 4s. a-week she cannot be expected to live independent of the Institution.

To set out with the expectation that this Institution could ever become self-supporting would be utopian indeed. It is no factory; factory hours are not kept, neither are factory principles admitted as a rule of conduct. Poorhouse diet would in no case be acknowledged as sufficient for the support of growing girls. When the girls advance so far as to be able to pay their own personal expenses in the Institution, that gratifying fact will only be the signal for sending them out on their own account, and getting others still untrained to fill their place.

If £100 a-year were subscribed for the support of this Institution, there is every reason to hope that under kind Providence the work would be carried on gloriously. As it is, the managers are absolutely without resources; and their efforts are foiled, not only by want of funds, but by sheer anxiety of mind which necessitates painful attention to minute details at a moment when every thought should be given to carrying out larger views. The same noble-hearted friends whose generous encouragement led to the establishment of the Institution three years since, have never ceased to give sympathy and aid. The public have as yet given no help. It certainly cannot be said that the public are either uncharitable or careless. But until lately the existence of the Institution was not generally known, and that accounts fully for the want of patronage. If private means were at the disposal of the managers they would be only too glad to struggle on in obscurity, and work out in silence the principles which they know to be true. Now they are constrained to ask for help—and they feel confident they will obtain it.

Let hope be placed where hope is. Surely there is a message and a promise for the forlorn Workhouse Orphans, just as there was for the down-trodden children of Israel long ago:—

"I am the Lord who will bring you out from the work-prison of the Egyptians."—Exodus, vi. 6.

PAUPERS AND PRISONERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—Why is it that our metropolitan prisons are the best, and our metropolitan workhouses the worst, ordered establishments in the kingdom? Perhaps some of your correspondents will assist in furnishing an explanation, and, with your permission, I, meanwhile, will offer a few observations, which a somewhat extensive experience of the management of these places has suggested.

A goal is conducted under the supervision of a certain number of visiting justices selected from the county magistrates—men of education, position, and influence, whose station and character are such as to command the respect of the people. The workhouse is conducted under the control of a board of guardians, the great majority selected from the most noisy, vulgar, and ignorant of the small tradesmen of the parish, generally conspicuous for nothing but clamour, jobbery, and administrative incompetency.

The officers in the one case are a governor, usually a retired officer of the army or navy, and invariably a person of the highest character; a chaplain, whose whole time is devoted to the duties of his office; a surgeon, who examines every prisoner on admission and attends to all cases requiring his assistance; and a matron, who is generally a lady of good connexions and irreproachable character. In the other case the officers consist of a master, who sometimes is found not above selling the dead bodies of the paupers for the sake of increasing his salary; a surgeon and a chaplain, miserably underpaid—cheap articles which cannot be expected to wear well; a matron, who is usually the wife of the master, and therefore an accomplice in his misdeeds; and various subordinates, for whose duties and the manner of their performance vide the police reports passim.

Under such management, is it surprising that from time to time the public are shocked at revelations of workhouse tyranny which, in spite of all attempts to smother them, will make their cry of anguish to be heard? It is astonishing that at one workhouse in Southwark it is an ordinary occurrence to find upwards of thirty young children, mature women, and old tramps sleeping together in the basement story of the workhouse upon loose straw, covered with vermin, rotten with disease, and foul with every conceivable odour arising from bad legs and filthy garments? Of this house the rector of the parish is chaplain, a parish of 47,000 inhabitants; it can therefore be readily understood how utterly indifferent are the guardians to the spiritual consolation of the unhappy inmates when they affect to believe that the duties can be efficiently performed by a gentleman whose energies must be exhausted long before he knocks at the workhouse door. I confess that when I was informed that morning prayers are read sometimes by the master, sometimes by the porter, and sometimes by one of the paupers, I felt no more astonishment than was excited by my surprise that, under such a system, it should be thought necessary to read any prayers at all. Moreover, if anything were wanting to make the contrast between the workhouse and the goal complete, it might be found in this fact—that, on the unanimous authority of our goal officials, the most refractory prisoners on admission are those committed for the infraction of workhouse rules, and yet these persons speedily become, under other discipline, orderly and respectful, not unfrequently expressing their gratitude for acts and words of kindness, to which elsewhere they had been entire strangers.

And now, Sir, why should these things be, and what is the remedy to be applied? In the first place, I would place the workhouses more directly under the management of the magistrates and less under the control of the guardians. I would select a higher class of officers and pay them better. I would attach to every workhouse a chaplain and surgeon properly remunerated, and whose duties should be confined to the establishment. I would entirely reverse the system now adopted of electing a master and matron who are man and wife; the object I take to be parsimony, and the result a failure. It is difficult to meet with a clever man for a particular office; it is almost impossible to meet with a clever pair. Moreover, I believe that wherever checks can be applied it is wise to make use of them; in the case in question this policy is entirely forgotten. And I would have a most thorough system of discipline observed throughout the establishment. These, in my opinion, are essential to the suppression of peculation, the discontinuance of abuses, and the removal of oppressions which now are a scandal to our metropolis, but which can only be removed by raising the standard of management very much above the disgraceful level at which, through the supineness of the better educated of our parish gentry and the interested activity of the unscrupulous, it has now arrived.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A County Magistrate.

14, St. James's-square, Jan. 18.

Digitized by Google

Notices to Correspondents.

Our correspondents are requested to observe that we cannot be answerable for the insertion of any articles received after the 22nd of the month, or Advertisements after the 27th, though we shall always endeavour to meet their wishes.

N.B.—As "The Philanthropist" will be published in future by Mr. Tweedie, 337, Strand, the Editor requests that all communications may be forwarded to him there, where they will receive immediate attention.

Notice.—All sums due to "The Philanthropist" for Advertisements, and for Subscriptions from this date, to be paid to W. Tweedie, 337, Strand. No other person is authorised to give Receipts.

Jan. 1st, 1859.

 Attention is called to the following scale of charges for Advertisements :—*

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Five lines and under	0	2	6
Every additional line	0	0	4
A column	1	15	0
Half-page	2	5	0
A page	4	0	0

Charitable Institutions, 3*d.* per line.

N.B.—Advertisements in the first and last pages 1*d.* per line extra.

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE,

February 1, 1859.

THE POOR MADE CRIMINAL.

There are many consigned to our prisons, especially the well-managed ones of recent establishment, who most assuredly are more sinned against than sinning, who would not be in prison were there adequate and available means of temporary succour. We have no hesitation in saying that many thousands of pounds are annually expended on our gaols which might be considerably lessened, if not actually avoided, if there were a less complicated machinery connected with the administration of temporary relief, and better accommodation provided in our Parish Unions—by better, we would be understood to imply, not merely of a more cleanly and extended nature, but better classified, to meet the requirements of the casual and other poor. Let it be allowed that there might be much advantage taken of such provisions by the evil-disposed,—let it be admitted also that it would add largely to the rates for the poor—still we affirm that the instances where the idle and lazy would avail themselves of the accommodation would be but trifling compared with the real aid which would be conferred on the properly deserving; and that what would be expended for the poor in this manner would be saved some thirty-fold by the prevention of the criminal career into which the present false parsimony drives very many. It will be observed that we are now throwing out of the question any reference to the moral injury done, not only to the individual, but, through him, to society, by driving any one into crime: we are now treating it simply as a matter of monetary expediency. That we are not grounding our arguments upon false data, will be best shown by a simple sketch, not simply of what might occur, but of what actually has taken place. We give the following tales without reference to the antecedent character of the individuals concerned, because we consider, that however sinning, however vicious, we would even add however criminal, the law of England, and our sense of right, recognises no prejudice, but regards all as innocent until proved guilty; and we have no right to view these instances other than as cases of present poverty, and as such demanding our attention. We may be guided as to the mode of relief by a knowledge of antecedent facts, and be thereby enabled to adopt that relief to the character, so far as results may be concerned; but present want, whencesoever arising, requires present relief. A man may have attempted to cut his own throat, or have received a severe wound in an attempt at burglary, or even murder: we do not let him die, because he brought the danger and injury on himself, but we attempt to restore him to life, and subsequently deal with him as his antecedents may deserve and require. With these preliminary remarks we give the following tales, for which we can vouch :—Some months back a woman, unmarried, was deserted by her base companion, who left her suddenly without notice, foully diseased, and on the point of becoming a mother. The man had lived with her two years, and, together, they had continued to pay the rent for their miserable lodging; but on her desertion, being both ill and weak, the landlady dreading an illness in her house, with no prospect of being paid her rent, turned the woman out of her house. The poor creature went at once to the union, and begged for admission; it was not her own parish, and she was desired to go and get a certificate from her landlady that she had lived there two years. She had come a long distance, but, weak and faint as she was, she trudged her way back and got what was required. She then had to go to the parish doctor, who wrote a certificate that the woman was badly diseased, but said nothing about the other portion of her story, it appearing to him, spite of her assertion, that the critical period was yet at least two months off. The result was, that on going back to the union she failed to obtain admittance, but received a little tea and sugar and bread. But she had no home or covering where she could avail herself of these comforts (!) She went back, and persuaded her landlady to accompany her to the medical man, to try once more to get an order for admission on the ground of her near approach to maternity. The surgeon was still incredulous; and she felt she had no alternative; she was hardly able to support herself even for a few yards, felt seriously ill, became desperate, and resolved to get into prison for food and shelter. She therefore seized a stone, and broke the surgeon's window, was handed over to a policeman, at once conveyed to prison, and the next day her child was born. She may have been a sinner, she may have been vicious, and even hardened in vice; but in this case she can hardly be called criminal, though driven to a breach of the law.

Our next case is as follows :—A woman, aged sixty-three, tottering rapidly to the grave, a few days since applied to her parish union for admission, as having no home, nor means of procuring one; she received an ounce of tea, a quarter of a pound of sugar, and a loaf of bread. As with the previous case, so with her—she had no place to make her tea in; it was therefore next to a mockery to offer it to her. The next day she applied to the magistrate of her district, who told her that he could not interfere. She was fortunate enough to procure the making of a child's frock, and one or two odd jobs, and earned two shillings! and contrived to get on somehow until the next board-day, when she again applied; stating that she had lived with her husband and paid rates in the parish for several years; and since her husband's death, more than thirty years ago, she had still lived in the parish, earning a precarious living, and she was getting too old to be employed. The answer she received was, "that the house was so full they were even then farming out their inmates, and they could do nothing for her." In her own words,—"I went the next day and took the guardians' (qy. overseer's) kettle, and stood in the corner of the street until the policeman came; for I could not go on sleeping in the stony streets, and prison's a pleasure to what it is to be knocked about like that." It appears that she has a son in Cornwall, who cannot do much for her, but might give her a home if she could get there: this she had no means of doing.

Digitized by Google

Now, these cases speak very intelligibly, and it is a singular stain upon the good sense of this country that such things should be possible; and yet, we say it advisedly, very large numbers intentionally get into prison because they have no home, or means of getting shelter: many actually prefer the prison to the union—many women habitually get into prison for the express purpose of passing over the period of their confinement—many men and women for the purpose of being treated for their diseases. Now will any of our readers tell us what steps, if any, were open to the two females whose stories we have given? For our part, we confess we are at a loss, and can feel no wonder that to seek to be cast into prison should suggest itself to the mind of each. But it is a grave error, from whatever point it may be viewed, and undoubtedly calls for very serious attention. Prisons, from the nature of the case, must be more expensive than unions: on the score of economy, therefore, it would be expedient to reduce the number of inmates in every possible way. Yet is poor relief so hard to be procured, and, when obtained, of so inadequate and unsatisfactory a nature, that the prison is actually preferred by many to the union; and John Bull hugs himself in an evasion or a reduction of poor-rates—does his utmost to diminish them. By so doing he drives the poor to crime, and thus what he saves for one of his pockets he has to repay tenfold out the other. We purpose returning to this subject: meanwhile we draw attention to a letter, copied from the Standard, by "J. Day," and one from the Times, by "A Country Magistrate," both of which we have elsewhere inserted, as containing food for deep and earnest consideration. The unions should be improved simultaneously with prisons. It is false economy to neglect the poor,—it is unjust to punish where we drive to crime. Unions should be as well inspected as prisons; at any rate, all incentive to prefer the prison to the workhouse should be as soon as possible removed. There should be Discharged Paupers' Aid Societies, somewhat analagous to Prisoners' Aid Societies. When the pauper is properly looked after, then, and not till then, shall we deal with prisoners more in accordance with their deserts than we do at present. In short, we desire to see both the poor and the criminal assume their proper places in public regard; the one in no degree pampered, and the other no longer driven to become criminal.

VISITING PRISONERS.

There is more danger to be apprehended from what may be termed negative faults than from those of a positive nature. Many would shrink with abhorrence from the commission of open violence even to an enemy, while the very same go on their way utterly unconscious of the future consequences of omitting sacred obligations. "Thou shalt do no murder," is a command, to the breach of which, even in the mind of the most callous, a certain degree of dread must be attached: "I was in prison, and ye visited me not," implies an obligation, with the breach of which Divine authority connects a fearful punishment: yet may even the most conscientious of human beings live in habitual neglect of this duty. We by no means insist upon it that it is every one's duty personally to visit such as are in prison; but we affirm very decidedly that it is every one's duty, so far as his countenance and support are concerned, to aid those who take upon them this work and labour of love. That it is such a labour, none in the least acquainted with prisons and their occupants can for a moment doubt. All honour, then, and respect, are due to those who voluntarily undertake it. And lest our readers should plead ignorance of any body of our fellow-creatures who make it their special business to carry on this work, we draw their attention to some extracts, which appear in another part of our paper, from the Report of "The British Ladies' Society for promoting the Reformation of Female Prisoners."

It cannot be doubted but that these ladies, in their various visitations, must meet with many poor creatures weighed down by the burden of their sorrows, both spiritual and temporal. Nor does it require much thought to be satisfied that the consoling voice which may be exerted to speak peace and give consolation under the former, loses half its influence when the temporal necessities are so great on discharge, as to offer little hope of escape from the temptations which beset them; the same in kind, if not in degree, which originally consigned them to the place in which these ladies find them. We have repeatedly given our opinion, that there is no more pitiable object than a friendless, homeless, and moneyless prisoner, especially of the female sex, just discharged from prison, with good resolutions, and a wish to lead a better life. The object of general distrust, if not of actual ill-will and abhorrence, there may be all the inward requisites for the formation of a completely new character, but abroad and around her may be difficulties well-nigh insurmountable. And if there be no more pitiable object than such an one, then is there no more acceptable fact which mortal man can make to his Great Master than to subdue the distrustful feelings so accordant with our frail nature, and to extend such aid as may be in our power, directly or indirectly, to enable her to battle hopefully against her difficulties. The report to which we have here drawn attention is to our mind extremely satisfactory, so far as the labours of these ladies are concerned, but by no means so as regards the acknowledgment of those labours by the public generally. We ask but that the Report should be read, and we would hardly envy the heart which, after perusal of it, could hesitate to offer some assistance. Surely there is great significance in the words, applied as they are to the great duty here alluded to, of visiting one "sick and in prison," "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me: and these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

We understand that some members of the Committee, impressed with the necessity of making an exertion to supply the rapidly-exhausting funds of the Patronage Sub-Committee, propose to hold a Sale of Useful and Ornamental Work for this purpose, to take place early in next Summer. Contributions and offers of assistance will be thankfully received by the Patronage Committee, No. 4, White-hart-court, Lombard-street, where further particulars may be obtained. Our best wishes attend this valuable society.

JUVENILE EMIGRATION.

By universal consent, emigration is now the great, if not the only, opening, for those whose antecedents, directly or indirectly, have unfitted them to find employment in this country, even when they have satisfactorily passed through the ordeal of a year of probation in a Reformatory or Refuge. Formerly we consigned those adults who had, as it were, outstepped our control,—and whose lawless career of crime subjected themselves to condign punishment,—to distant colonies, and thenceforth we well-nigh forgot them. Now we are compelled to keep them, and even yet are ignorant what to do with them. The system of transportation, in former times, offered at least an outlet for some portion of our surplus population, which its sudden cessation deprived us of. We do not say that we have hit upon the best possible substitute, but we do most unhesitatingly affirm that the sending out, under proper care, the class of juveniles to which we have alluded, is, so far as it goes, a substitute of a very judicious nature. Here again come in the unobtrusive but invaluable labours of the Reformatory and Refuge Union. They can as a body, and as well known to be actively engaged in properly carrying out this work, accomplish that which the influence of a private individual, however great, could hardly expect to bring about. What has been done by them in this matter, and the judicious method of carrying it out, will be understood by the following letter, which has been circulated to all the institutions connected with the Union, and cannot fail to be the source of much gratification to them. It may be well for us to state here, that it is not intended to limit the assistance in emigration to males, but only to commence with them. The letter is as follows:—

Digitized by Google

"118, Pall Mall, London, S.W.
January, 1859.

"Dear Sir,—Through the liberal assistance of a benevolent gentleman, the Committee of the Reformatory and Refuge Union expect to be able, during April, May, and June next, to give free passages to one hundred boys, to be sent as emigrants to Canada from the institutions connected with the Union.

"The boys to be sent out should have proved themselves, by their conduct while in their institutions, to be industrious, honest, and trustworthy, so as by their characters to be deserving of the assistance which is offered them.

"Boys who have formerly been guilty of crime would not on that account alone be considered ineligible, if their conduct has for a considerable time been such as to give valid reason for the belief that they are reformed in character.

"They should be not less than 15, nor more than 20 years of age; strong, healthy lads, will be preferred by the Committee, as they are most readily provided with situations in Canada.

"The boys selected as candidates will have to be inspected personally on behalf of the Union, and their fitness tested in the several particulars mentioned in the enclosed form.

"The institution sending the boy will be expected to provide his outfit (expense about £3 10s.).

"Arrangements are being made to give increased facilities for procuring good situations in Canada for these emigrants, for sustaining constant communication with them afterwards, and for supplying a temporary home to those who are out of employment.

"While the Committee of the Union, therefore, desire to offer these free passages as rewards to deserving boys, they trust that your Committee will endeavour to recommend only such candidates as have been long enough with you to afford opportunity for judging of them, and such as may be likely to do credit to your institution, and to establish a good character in the colony for the emigrants sent by the Union.

"The Committee, therefore, request that you will bring the subject before the Managers of your institution, and inform me, at your earliest convenience, how many boys in it desirous of emigrating to Canada they can thoroughly recommend as suitable candidates, and in which of the three months mentioned the boys will be ready to go.

"The enclosed is the form of a Return which is intended to be filled up for each boy who may be recommended as a candidate. Other copies will be forwarded to you in due time if they should be required.

"I remain, dear Sir,
"Yours faithfully,
"Charles Gwillim,
"Secretary."

REFORMATORY AND REFUGE UNION.

General assemblies of the friends and supporters of charitable institutions are so numerous, either as plain meetings, or as dinners, that it is refreshing to find an Institution which combines with their annual gathering a pleasurable and profitable exhibition. Emboldened by the success of past times the Committee of the above Union have resolved to hold an exhibition of the work of the inmates of Reformatories, Refuges, and Industrial Schools in Great Britain and Ireland, on Wednesday the 13th, and Thursday the 14th of April next, at Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square.

The annual meeting of the Union will take place in the evening of the first day, when brief addresses will be delivered on the various departments of industrial work, and other points of a kindred nature. The merits of the Union, its really practical labours in so good a cause during the past year, the varied nature of those labours, and the energetic manner in which they have been carried out, cannot fail, enhanced as they will be by the exhibition, to draw together a large assembly. The exhibition will, we presume, be an improvement, if that be possible, on that held last year, and it gives us pleasure to announce already that the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Lord Bishop of London, the Rev. Dr. Guthrie, and the Earl of Carlisle, have promised to attend, and will doubtless take a prominent part in the proceedings. The Committee are already in communication with the various Institutions, requesting them to state at their earliest convenience how many square yards of counter and how many yards of wall-space will be sufficient for the articles to be sent by each Institution. It is to be understood that the articles to be exhibited must be delivered at Willis's Rooms not later than Tuesday the 12th of April, before 5 o'clock P.M., in order to give time for their proper arrangement. With every desire to provide space for all the Institutions, the Committee reserves the discretion to limit the amount in each particular case.

Every article is to be labelled with the name of the Institution, and the price at which it may be sold; articles not disposed of at the Exhibition may be removed to the Rooms of the Union for sale, or will be returned if required.

LADIES OF LIMITED MEANS.

We draw attention with much satisfaction to a notice in our advertising sheet of an Association for the Sale of Work by Ladies of Limited Means. Even at the present day there are too many professional men, and gentlemen of limited means, having wives and daughters completely dependent on them, who either cannot or will not avail themselves of the advantage of assurance or provision in sickness. Death or ill health too frequently causes a sudden change, and the wife and daughters are reduced from comparative comfort to almost positive want. There are other sources, also, of trouble which surround ladies, often of very superior education and manners, to fling them on their own resources, to battle against want and privation. Indeed it would be scarcely possible to enumerate the variety of causes which may produce "ladies of limited means." We are well assured that to thousands a society under such judicious regulations as those to which we allude, tendering its relief with such delicate regard to their feelings, will be a real and grateful boon. There are also many benevolent persons acquainted with ladies whose privations they deeply sympathise with, while delicacy of feeling renders it difficult to aid them as they could wish. These, and others, may avail themselves of the privileges of membership of this Society, with comfort to themselves and advantage to their fellowcreatures. We feel that a society of this description supplies a positive want, aids a class of silent and patient sufferers who are much to be pitied, and richly deserves the cordial and substantial support of all who have known and can properly appreciate the worth and value of the gentler sex; and the difficulties they must necessarily encounter, when deprived of the support and protection of those whose duty and privilege it is to contribute to their comfort.

Digitized by Google

OUR HOMELESS POOR.

The appeal made by the Times to the public, on behalf of the above class, and the ready and almost universal response made, in the shape of contributions to the "Field Lane and other Refuges," are both extremely significant. It is clear that "the Poor-law," with all its extensive machinery, fails to a great degree, so far as the exigencies of a vast number of outcasts, having no settled home or occupation, are concerned. It may be want of space, it may be want of funds, it may be want of power; but, whatever be the foundation of the evil, it is clear that for the great multitudes who avail themselves of the scanty accommodation offered by the Field Lane and other Refuges, which have been brought into prominent notice by the Times' appeal, the Poor-law system either makes no provision at all, or such provision as is less palatable than that offered by the Refuges alluded to, or the provision offered is encircled by such a barrier of "routine," as places it beyond the reach of these multitudes.

On the other hand it is clear that the benevolent public have been scarcely aware of the difficulties which surround these objects of charity, but, when made aware of them, have pronounced, with almost united voice, "These things ought not so to be!" The time has unquestionably come when some better administration of relief under the Poor-law must be devised. To this, however, it is not our intention to allude further in this place than to draw attention to the fact, that many hundreds, of both sexes and all ages, either cannot or may not avail themselves of parochial aid, as it is now administered—or rather non-administered—and are thrown on the mercy and charity of the public at large. This much, however, we will say—that so long as benevolent persons will give alms indiscriminately in the streets to beggars, so long will the best system, either of parochial or of private benevolence, fail to accomplish its object. Let any of our readers who may happen to be appealed to in the streets, offer to go with the applicant and procure lodging in some of the existing Refuges, or even to give them good employment, if the tale of woe should be found by a policeman to be correct, and they will soon learn how little effect even the latter offer, much less the former, will have in drawing the applicant away from the lucrative occupation of street begging. The truth is, that the really indigent are thrust aside, and that the largest proportion of street beggars are those who will not dig, and find it gain to beg. Still there are many who require aid, and will thankfully receive it: these are not street beggars from choice, and, unless made so by indiscreet almsgiving, will gladly avail themselves of any offer of food and shelter; and it were well that the benevolent almoners of God's bounties should be aware how to help them to these wants in some better way than in the alluring form of giving in the streets. The evident tendency of almsgiving in the streets, especially to unknown objects, is to do more harm than good. The most obvious counter-agent is a more general knowledge of such aid as is available, and of how to procure it. This knowledge it has been the aim of the Reformatory and Refuge Union to circulate as widely as possible, and with this view the following letter from the Hon. Secretaries appeared in the Times of January 4th:—

Sir,—The very general interest awakened by your powerful appeal on behalf of the homeless poor, has directed public attention to various institutions for the relief of the outcast and unfortunate.

It cannot be expected that all should be noticed in your columns with that prominence which the managers would naturally desire, and it would be a pity that when the heart of the public has been affected to benevolence the mind should be confused by the multiplicity of objects claiming assistance.

We beg, therefore, to address a few words to you respecting the whole of these institutions, presuming that we are justified in taking this liberty, because the managers of more than one hundred Refuges and Reformatories in Great Britain are comprised in the Union we have the honour to represent.

It is generally admitted that almsgiving in the street does much more harm than good. It pampers the sturdy vagrant, and overlooks the real sufferer. It lures children from school, men from their work, and women from their families; and it dries up the fountain of a wise benevolence by calling that charity which is only a spurious sentiment.

While this practice has been often reproved in your columns, and is publicly discountenanced by the most experienced London magistrates, there are thousands of benevolent persons who will still give indiscriminately to beggars, because they are not aware of the numerous institutions specially adapted to supply immediate, and if possible permanent, relief to cases of genuine distress, by the careful use of funds after due inquiry.

The Committee of this Union therefore undertook to supply accurate information concerning all such institutions. In your advertising columns will be found a list of Twenty-nine London institutions, with accommodation for nearly 2,000 inmates.

A pamphlet, containing a condensed account of each, may be had on application at this office, and from it any person may readily discover which of them fulfils the object he desires to promote.

It may be proper to state distinctly, in conclusion, that this pamphlet—the first official and completed account of all these institutions—is issued by a society which does not possess nor seek to favour any particular institution, but has done much to help them all, and is recognised by all as a centre of reliable and impartial information.

We are, Sir, your obedient Servants,

Robert Hanbury, Jun., } Hon.
Stephen Cave, } Secs.

Reformatory and Refuge Union,
118, Pall Mall, S.W.

So long as kind but mistaken people give in the public thoroughfares, so long will there be shrewd fellows to avail themselves of the frailty, who well know how profitable it is, and who will prey upon the public charity, as far more agreeable to them than the workhouse or refuge, and far more lucrative than industrious labour in their proper vocations. Let, then, such ill-judged almsgiving cease; let the Refuges be so supported that no really worthy object may appeal in vain for bodily requirements of a temporary nature, and we shall soon see our streets less crowded with apparently pitiable objects, while the really distressed will not appeal in vain to a public who know both how and where the requisite assistance may be procured.

ROYAL DISPENSARY FOR DISEASES OF THE EAR.

Nothing need be said of the prevalence of the infirmity of deafness, but many who so suffer are unaware that in many cases it is perfectly curable; they are so accustomed to their failing as to regard it at last with almost indifference. Let such visit the above dispensary, and, probably, in a large number of cases, real and sensible relief will be found. That there are many who avail themselves of the proffered aid will appear from a statement made at a recent Half-yearly meeting held at the Dispensary, Dean Street, Soho Square, when the Rev. Dr. Croly occupied the chair.

From the medical report, made by Mr

Digitized by Google

Harvey, the Surgeon, it appeared that during the last six months the new admissions were 1121; consisting of noises in the head and ears, rheumatic deafness, nervous affections of the head, diseases of the throat, discharges from the ears, with some aggravated forms of polypi in the ear, and other diseases of a kindred nature. The public were earnestly solicited for aid to extend the usefulness of this Institution. Votes of thanks were passed to the Chairman and Mr. Harvey, the Surgeon, and the meeting separated.

Hart's Gas Economiser. — It is but common justice that we should draw attention to this useful object of household economy; it having been used by our printers for a considerable time, and by them recommended to our publisher, who appears to be equally well satisfied with its usefulness. It is cheap, and easily adapted to any existing chandelier, stand, or bracket; and appears to produce at the same time a superior light, and a very considerable saving over all ordinary burners. We believe our readers who use gas, will find the advantage of procuring these burners. (See advertisement.)

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' ECONOMIC MUSEUM.

The formation of this Museum has been undertaken, in the name of the council of the Society of Arts, by Mr. T. Twining, junr., one of the Vice-presidents, with a view to its becoming a comprehensive repertory of useful knowledge for every-day life, specially adapted to the requirements of the working classes. It has made great progress within the last year, and is now open to the public at the Polytechnic Institution, a considerable amount of space and other liberal facilities having been granted by the Directors. A programme has been issued for the use of visitors, from which we extract the following data, considering the undertaking as one intimately connected with the philanthropic purposes of this journal.

This collection will show what may be done with limited means and in a comparatively small space, towards realizing in a permanent form the scheme of popular instruction and sanitary improvement, which was so successfully carried out in the form of a temporary Exhibition at Paris in 1855, at Brussels in 1856, and subsequently at Vienna and Felsberg. It is intended to impart to all classes of the community, and more particularly to those whose income is small, that knowledge of common things which is so essential in their every-day life; teaching them what sort of dwellings they should live in to secure health and comfort, what improvements in domestic economy they may derive from the discoveries of science or borrow from the customs and appliances of other nations, what fabrics they should wear, what food they should eat, and how it ought to be cooked, how they may distinguish things which are genuine, wholesome, substantial, durable, and really cheap, from those which are good and cheap only in appearance, and in short, how they may live with judgment, and get the best money's worth for their money.

Arrangements have been made for the delivering of popular and well-illustrated lectures in every branch of the practical philosophy of common life. Minor oral explanations of the articles displayed will be daily given by competent attendants. Moreover, an essential feature of the Economic Museum, is its system of instructional labelling, whereby reference to a catalogue is entirely dispensed with, and the acquisition of useful knowledge made easy to every visitor. It is proposed that the whole collection should ultimately be supplied with labels similar to those of the three first groups of the vegetable food series. In the meantime, provisional labels have been borrowed from the best and most recent publications on the respective subjects, or the books themselves are attached to the counters for the convenience of inspection.

Benevolent persons will find in the Economic Museum an amount of practical information not united elsewhere, for their guidance in the improvement of the dwellings and household comforts of the poor, or in the organisation of provident or charitable institutions. Indeed, the whole of the collection is formed strictly for purposes of social improvement and Christian benevolence, and therefore visitors who may notice deficiencies which they can assist in supplying, or who may otherwise be inclined to co-operate in this undertaking, are earnestly invited to communicate with the curator.

Inventors, Manufacturers, and others, will be afforded every facility for the display of articles deserving of being recommended to the notice of the public for general adoption.

When fully developed, the Economic Museum will, it is hoped, form a medium for the interchange between Great Britain, the Colonies, and other countries, of inventions, contrivances, publications, and authentic information bearing on the physical and intellectual improvement of the people; and the museum library will become a centre for international correspondence on all matters connected with the well-being of the industrial classes, according to the plan recommended by the philanthropic congress held at Brussels in 1856, and of which the realization is now progressing under the direction of the eminent Belgian philanthropist, M. Ducpetiaux.

Offers of co-operation, and other communications relating to the present collection, or to the formation of similar ones elsewhere, or to the proposed International Association of Practical Benevolence, may be addressed to T. Twining, junr., Esq., Society of Arts, Adelphi, London.

Full explanations of everything exhibited, and particulars of the space available for deposits, may be obtained from Mr. W. Freeman, Curator of the Economic Museum at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, W., who can also supply information concerning the Economic and Educational Collections at South Kensington, and other Institutions for popular instruction.

PRESENT ARRANGEMENT.

THE FOLLOWING CLASSIFICATION IS ADHERED TO, AS FAR AS IS CONSISTENT WITH THE NATURE OF THE AVAILABLE SPACE AND THE CONVENIENCE OF DISPLAY.

Class I.—Building Designs.—Upper West Room.

Illustrations of the dwellings of the working classes in various countries, bringing especially into relief the state of the habitations of the poor in the metropolis and other parts of the kingdom. —Building designs for healthy and comfortable abodes in town or country.—Plans for establishments of all kinds for the benefit of the poor—Models or designs for improvements in the construction of parts of buildings; e. g., fireproof staircases and floors, external galleries, terrace-roofs, &c.

Class II.—Materials for Building, Furniture, and other Household Requisites.—(West Balcony.)

Educational and commercial series of the chief varieties of stone, slate, artificial stone, concrete, mortar, and other cements, bricks, tiles, drain-pipes, &c.,—Series of the metals, from the ore to the manufactured state, and of the metallic alloys, with illustrations of casting, laminating, wire-drawing, nail and screw making, metal-turning, &c.—Glass as an economic material.—Wood for building, furniture, &c., with illustrations of the processes for preserving it or rendering it fire-proof.—Felt for roofing and stopping damp and sound.—Materials and appliances for house-painting, white-washing, staining, and other decorative purposes.—Paper hangings.

Class III. — Fixtures, Furniture, and Household Utensils.—(Distributed according to convenience in various parts of the Museum.)

Household appliances furnished by the brass-founder, plumber, &c.—Articles supplied by the furnishing ironmonger, including fastenings, appliances for warming and cooking, and hardware in general.—Earthen, china, and glass ware. —Articles supplied from the turnery and brush warehouse.—Upholstery and joinery.

Class IV. — Textile Materials, Fabrics, and Costumes.—(West Room.)

Illustrations of spinning, weaving, dyeing, &c.—Materials as produced and in various stages of preparation for the loom.—Matting, druggets, carpets, and the like.—Select series of textile fabrics. —Shoes, Hosiery and ready-made clothing for men, women, and children, including the patterns adopted by various public establishments and benevolent institutions. —Illustrations of the costumes of the working classes in various parts of the world, arranged according to climate.

Digitized by Google

CLASS V.—FOOD, FUEL, AND OTHER HOUSEHOLD STORES.—(West Lecture Room.)

Illustrations of the chemistry and hygiene of food, and of the best processes for preserving, cooking, &c.—Food supplied by the animal kingdom. Natural history illustrations of esculent mammalia, birds, fish, shell-fish, &c., and series of products, such as eggs, milk and its preparations, gelatine, and honey.—Food supplied by the vegetable kingdom, arranged as follows:—Cereals; leguminous seeds or pulse; roots and bulbs; vegetables, of which the stalk, leaves, or tops are chiefly eaten; fruits; flowerless plants available for food; condiments; stimulants and narcotics; sugars, starches, and other proximate constituents.—Water, with special reference to the important hygienic facts lately brought to light. Beverages, such as chocolate, coffee, and tea. Fermented liquors, including many which will be the less used the better they are understood. Refreshing drinks.—Fuel of all kinds, and materials for ignition.—Materials for lighting, e. g., oils, candles, gas, with suitable illustrations of processes and appliances.—Stores for washing cleaning, scouring, &c.

CLASS VI.—SANITARY DEPARTMENT. —(Upper West Room.)

Designs for public works of a sanitary or protective character.—Plans and appliances for ventilation, for the prevention of noxious effluvia, and in general for securing healthy dwellings.—Hygienic appliances for all ages, and means of comfort for the infirm.—Educational series of the drugs most commonly used, and of cheap substitutes for expensive medicines, including the medicinal herbs found wild or easily cultivated in Great Britain.—Means for the detection of adulterations, &c.—Means of safety from poisons, venoma, beasts of prey, vermin, &c.—Means of preservation or relief from casualties, such as shipwreck and drowning, asphyxia, fire, colliery explosions, &c.—Appliances for conveying the wounded, for field surgery, &c.—Means of preservation or relief from injuries and diseases which specially attach to various industrial occupations.

CLASS VII. — HOME EDUCATION — SELF-INSTRUCTION—RECREATION—(Begun in the West Balcony.)

Home education of children.—Special education of females in hand-work of all kinds.—Adult self-instruction and scientific recreation, caligraphy, stenography, and notions of printing, bookbinding, &c. Illustrations of the arts of design and the polygraphic arts.—Instruction in the principles of taste, in outline, colour, and subject. Correct patterns for paper-hangings, printed fabrics, earthenware, &c. Select prints, figures, and other articles for cottage decoration, and, by way of contrast, a series of the uncouth ornaments which too frequently prevail. —Music in its popular applications.—Instructive or rational games, gymnastic exercises, etc.

CLASS VIII.—MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES, NOT REFERABLE TO THE FOREGOING CLASSES.—(See Messrs. Silver and Co.'s Working Man's Home and Ship Cabins; also the West Balcony.)

Household stationery.—Scientific appliances for household use, including clocks, watches, scales and weights, &c.—The housewife's workbox.—The cottager's tool chest.—Household requisites, such as string, glue, paste, &c.—Contrivances for lightening labour, especially in the conveyance of burdens.—Appliances and practical instructions for cottage gardening. —Requirements for travellers, emigrants, &c.—Miscellaneous illustrations of the condition of the working classes in various parts of the world, or in former ages.—Samples of museum fittings and appliances, with estimates for the use of persons desiring to form economic collections in connection with mechanics' institutes and other educational establishments.

CLASS IX.—THE ECONOMIC LIBRARY. —(Upper West Room.)

Books, pamphlets, and documents (British and Foreign), selected and arranged for convenience of reference in matters of domestic, sanitary, educational, and social economy, and practical benevolence, and especially intended for the use of persons engaged in the organisation of Provident and Charitable Institutions, and of Clergymen, Medical Men, Schoolmasters, and others intrusted with the bodily welfare or intellectual guidance of the people.

BOYS' REFUGE, COMMERCIAL STREET, WHITECHAPEL.

WE have received the Report of this Institution for the year 1858, and gladly insert the following extracts.

The Committee in giving their account say that they do not wish to mislead by any exaggerated statement as to the amount of good that has been achieved during the past year.

Their object is rather to lay before their supporters a plain statement of its events, which may enable them to judge for themselves of the value of the Institution, and to appreciate the difficulties and discouragements that have to be contended with by those who desire to raise the degraded and reform the criminal.

For any success that has attended the work the Committee would ascribe praise to Him to whom alone praise belongs, and in their disappointments they would ask for more faith to be steadfast in well-doing, knowing that their labour will not be in vain if carried on with a single eye to God's glory.

The need of such an Institution is more apparent than ever, there being at the present time fewer Refuges than formerly to which unconvicted lads can be sent.

These walls are meant as a refuge for the raw material of the criminal class, for the homeless, the destitute, the degraded; and the work of reclaiming such a class is even more difficult than it would be if they had been all convicted, and were thus under legal detention. The wild Arabs of the street approve of regular work, stated hours, and plain diet, as little as their namesakes of the desert. One boy who was admitted in a condition of filth not to be described, and who had been wandering about the streets for nine years, returned to them again after a few days, saying he could not remain where he had not his "biscuits and pipe."

It appears that there have been—

15 restored to their parents.
13 restored to their parents, and sent to situations.
5 for whom further payment was refused were sent home.
7 bound apprentices.
6 sent to sea.
1 sent to an Institution in Aberdeen.
8 provided with situations.
6 expelled as injurious to other boys.
17 left irregularly.

—
78
—

Of those restored to their relations, 13 were taken by them to situations where most of them are doing well; 4 came in wrong names, and were represented as orphans, but they had parents who found them out and took them home; 1 the family all went to Australia. Of those who have been sent to sea, as far as we know, all are doing well; 2 have returned from their voyages, and have visited the Refuge. Of those who have been expelled, 2 were sent to prison for robbing the Institution; 1 has been sent two years to a Reformatory in the country; two others were ringleaders in crime, influencing other boys to acts of insubordination. Of those who left irregularly, 6 were sent from another Institution; 7 were complete vagrants, brought here by City Missionaries, but the discipline and confinement were too much for their vagrant habits; the others had parents who in many cases influenced them to abscond, but the majority had only been in the Refuge a short time.

Of those who have been admitted this year:—

12 were without fathers.
6 without mothers.
21 have both parents living.
2 have step-fathers.
1 has a step-mother.
8 are orphans

—
50
—

IN THE SCHOOL.

30 boys read well.
20 read imperfectly.
22 read scarcely at all.
50 write in copy books.
20 write on slates.

In Arithmetic.

12 are in the higher rules.
30 are in the Compound.
30 are in the Simple.

TRADES.

In this department, though a great deal of work has been done during the year, the account can scarcely be said to be remunerative.

Digitized by Google

Part of Thursday morning is devoted to religious instruction, which is most kindly undertaken by the Rev. JOHN PATTESON, Rector of Spitalfields, at whose church the boys attend on Sundays.

NEW HOUSE AND ENLARGEMENT OF PLAYGROUND.

The Committee announce the completion of the new house and the enlargement of the playground, and they request their friends to visit the Institution, and to see the great improvements that have taken place during the year in the additional accommodation that has been provided.

They rejoice to be able to state that the Refuge has never been encumbered by any debt. Last year the expenses were extraordinary, owing to the extension of the premises; but the outlay for the House has been met, although a considerable sum remains to be raised for the purchase of the ground.

It is earnestly hoped that during the year funds may be provided which will authorise the Committee to complete the purchase of the site. The current expenditure of the Institution has hitherto been assisted by a liberal grant from the Privy Council; but the Committee regret very much to state that they have received an intimation that further aid from that source (except in a very limited degree) is no longer to be expected. Reference to the Balance Sheet will show how ill the Institution is able to meet such a discouragement, and it is sincerely hoped that the Lords of the Committee of Education may be induced to reconsider their determination, and pause before they finally deprive the Institution of a fourth of its annual income.

REPORT OF THE BRITISH LADIES' SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE REFORMATION OF FEMALE PRISONERS.

THE following extracts—all our space admits—do but feeble justice to the Report of the British Ladies' Society for promoting the Reformation of Female Prisoners, for 1858:—

Year after year, ladies belonging to this Society have continued to visit and instruct the poor women imprisoned in the metropolitan gaols, as well as some of those in the counties, with unabated zeal, and they may thankfully acknowledge that they believe with undiminished success. The work is so unobtrusive, the numbers engaged in it are comparatively so few, that it is sometimes asked if ladies continue to visit prisons. To this the reply is, that in Newgate, at Tothill Fields House of Correction, in the Penitentiary at Millbank, they are found still, some of them having persevered for upwards of a quarter of a century. They have also followed the objects of their care into the new prisons at Holloway and Brixton.

If there be any alteration in the system pursued in carrying on this interesting object of reforming female prisoners, it is in the increased care extended towards discharged prisoners, and consequently the increased importance of the charge of providing for such. To this branch of their work they desire, at this time, especially to draw the attention of their friends and subscribers. Prison visiting would be of little avail, the efforts of magistrates and chaplains to render the discipline there reformatory would in most instances be fruitless, if the objects of their care were, when they leave prison, thrown upon the world, to combat, unaided, with their former temptations and adverse circumstances. To afford this needful help, as far as its means permit, this Society has appointed, from among its Members, a distinct Committee, under the name of the PATRONAGE COMMITTEE; it sits on every Friday, and its especial duty is to attend to those cases of discharged prisoners from metropolitan gaols which are recommended to its care by the authorities of the prisons, or by the ladies who visit there. Endeavours are made to investigate the previous history of each individual; and if there be reason to believe that she is in earnest in the desire to reform, measures are taken to assist her in so doing.

The rule of the Patronage Committee is, that the prisoner appears before them immediately on her liberation, to comply with which she often voluntarily stays back in the prison till Friday. She brings with her, under the charge of a warder, a certificate of health, and the written answers to a list of printed questions.

Sometimes a little temporary out-door relief meets the necessity of the case, and occasionally an immediate return to her family is deemed advisable; but in the large majority of instances these poor women are entirely unfit to be restored to society at large without further probation: a refuge is needed to give the opportunity of preparation for entering upon the duties of a changed course of life. The quiet discipline of those institutions, the word of God there faithfully taught, the encouraging influence of Christian ladies there met with, have mercifully been blessed to the softening of many a hard heart, and to the healing of many a broken spirit.

If the case appears doubtful, or of a very low type, the Patronage Committee generally places her for a week or two in the house of a City Missionary, who has opened his doors for the reception of such outcasts, and whose experience and judgment often enable the ladies to decide how to act, with better hope of ultimate success. For this 6*s.* a week is paid for each person. We have also occasionally to avail ourselves of the Homes of the Rescue Society. When, however, it is apprehended that the penitence is sincere, and the hope of restoration decided, the individual is sent direct to the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, as a preliminary to other more permanent asylums, or to await the further arrangements that may appear most desirable for her. The funds of the Elizabeth Fry Refuge permit fifteen of these Patronage cases to be kept in the house free of expense, as on the foundation; all above that number are paid for by the British Ladies' Society, at the rate of 7*s.* each, weekly. Full particulars of this highly-important auxiliary will find a more suitable place in its own Report. It should, however, be borne in mind that without the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, the labour of the prison visitor, and of the Patronage Committee, would be comparatively in vain. This Institution was founded expressly as an auxiliary to the Patronage Committee, and was needed as the completion of the machinery of the British Ladies' Society; it was established in memory of Elizabeth Fry, and of the plan which originated with her, that of Christian women visiting their fallen sisters when in prison.

It appears that from June, 1856, to June, 1858, 264 cases have come before the Patronage Committee; from the commencement, 2045 cases.

It is not possible to do justice to the Report in these pages; but it may be observed that special reports are made as to the operations in Newgate, Holloway, Tothill Fields, Whitecross, Wandsworth, Millbank, Brixton and Fulham Refuge, as also at Manor Hall Asylum, and at Cambridge, Derby, Durham, Exeter, Falmouth, Gloucester, Norwich, Southampton, Worcester, Greenock, Aberdeen, Edinburgh, Paisley, Glasgow, Paris, Strasburgh, Zurich, Berne, Amsterdam, and Stockholm.

One extract, selected more for its length than anything else, may show the kind of interest taken in prisoners, even abroad, by these benevolent followers of Elizabeth Fry:—

Paris.—The ladies in Paris continue to visit the poor women in the prison at St. Lazarre, and are permitted to see some improvement amongst them. It is interesting to learn that the number in that large prison is diminished; ten years ago there were sometimes 1,400 confined there; the number at present is not more than 1,000.

Strasburgh.—The ladies at Strasburgh visit regularly the prison at Haynenan, to which those committed for long confinements are removed; and an Asylum has been established at Strasburgh for liberated prisoners; five girls have been sent there from St. Lazarre, who are behaving well.

THE Duke of Wellington, in reply to a clergyman who was doubting the policy of missionary work in India, said, "What is that to you, sir?—you have received your general orders. Go and teach all nations. Do your duty, sir; never mind the result."

"Now, George, you must divide the cake honourably with your brother Charlie."—"What is 'honourably,' mother?—"It means that you must give him the largest piece."—"Then, mother, I'd rather Charlie should be honourable."

Digitized by Google

THE PAYMENT OF COMMON JURIES.

The following brief but very important paper was read at the Social Science Congress, held at Liverpool, October 5th, 1858, in the department for Jurisprudence and Amendment of the Law, before Lord Brougham: by William Merry, Esq., Magistrate of the county of Berks, Highlands, near Reading.

Probably the first impression on even well informed minds, when entering upon the question of paying common juries, will be one of surprise that common juries are not paid. Possibly, also, in this general unacquaintance with so singular a fact, may be found a solution of the obvious question, "How is it that so striking an anomaly can have been so long allowed to exist?" especially when the further fact comes under notice, that not only are common juries unpaid, but that they are the only persons, whose attendance at Court is absolutely essential to the due administration of justice, whose services are not paid.

I hardly except "the great unpaid," as the magistrates of a county are sometimes designated, and grand jurors; for we are in a manner rewarded, if not remunerated, by honourable position; and there is this further distinction, that while the office of a magistrate is not compulsory, the labours of a Common or Petty Juror are.

Upon enquiry into what class of life the common juror belongs, it will be found in general terms, that a householder rated in Middlesex on an annual value of £30, and in other counties of £20, is liable to serve on juries. The small shopkeeper therefore, and the small farmer, are the humble but respectable portion of the community who are called upon and compelled to render irksome and laborious service gratuitously, while they see every one else in Court are fittingly paid.

The judges, the officers of the court, counsel, solicitors, special jurors, coroners, coroner's jurors, county court jurors, sheriff's court jurors, suitors, prosecutors, witnesses, constables, police,—all whose attendance is required, are paid, and properly so, the expenses to which they are necessarily subjected, by their obedience to the summons of the Court, although all, or nearly all, are released when their respective causes have been heard.

But the Common Juror bears the burthen of all causes, for as many hours between breakfast and bedtime as the Court sits, he finds himself the only person unpaid; he knows that if summoned as a witness he would receive a regulated allowance of some few shillings for necessary expenses, and railway fare or mileage; whereas, if summoned as a juror, he loses day after day of farm or shop business, and has to undergo pecuniary loss besides, for all that food and lodging may cost him, which at sessions and assize periods may amount to a serious sum for a poor man. Who can wonder that an angry sense of injustice done him in a court of justice, prompts the expression, "It's a shame."

I have never heard in any quarter, legal or other, a single reason suggested against the allowance to jurors of real expenses out of pocket, and the only idea thrown out as accounting possibly for the anomaly, has been that the juror of former times was probably of station more resembling our present grand juror, and consequently not needing pay for short and occasional service. In our own day it seems difficult to assign rational ground for the continuance of so exceptional a principle. If it be said that "England expects every man to do his duty," it may fairly be added, that "Every man expects England to pay for the duty when done." If it be held as an honour to be a juryman, it seems at least to be one that a man might equitably be allowed to decline, like witnesses, unless assured that "reasonable expenses" will be allowed. At present the juror is summoned under the penalty of £10. "Answer to your names and save your fines" is the significant, if not complimentary, address of the Court to the jury box.

The principle of paying jurors is shewn in no manner more remarkable than by the payment of special jurors. If, for example, a gentleman of fortune is summoned on a special jury, he receives a guinea for the single cause, and a second guinea for a second cause. He does not want the guinea, but the small farmer or small shopkeeper does want, and does not get, even the one shilling per cause, allowed to all but the common juror.

In the evidence before "the Common Law Judicial Business Commissioners," accompanying their Report to Parliament in 1857, Mr. Justice Coleridge remarks upon "the strange and unjust practice of drawing common jurymen from the classes of small farmers, and small tradesmen, and giving them no payment for their attendance in a criminal court."

Before the same Commission, Sir John Bayley, Bart., many years Clerk of Assize on the Northern Circuit, in like manner commented on "the hardship of petty jurors being compelled to attend without any allowance."

Convinced as we all must be of the deep importance of securing the cordial sympathy of the public mind in aid of the due administration of justice, and having thus before us "the strange and unjust practice," and the acknowledged "hardship" of compelling so large a portion of our respectable middle class, to perform really onerous and expensive duties without the remuneration received by all other classes engaged in the same work, I believe it to be the especial privilege of the "National Association for the promotion of Social Science," to exercise a just influence in remedying a public wrong, by obtaining authority to include common jurors in the list of persons, who, as witnesses, &c., are now remunerated for compulsory attendance in Courts of Judicature, according to a recognized scale.

P.S.—The above observations on the payment of common or petty juries were received in Congress without a single dissentient voice; while Lord Brougham's remark from the chair was, "This is important, and deserves serious consideration."

W. M.

MR. COMMISSIONER FANE ON THE BANKRUPTCY LAWS.

The following opinions in reference to proposed reforms in bankruptcy and insolvency have been published:—

1. I do not think that any legislative assistance should be given to enable any majority of creditors, seeking what is called "liquidation" (which, however, is nothing but a plausible word for "secrecy") to control any minority of creditors, however small. I would not allow even ninety-nine creditors to control the hundredth creditor. The ninety-nine who advocate secrecy are public enemies. The hundredth man who insists on publicity is the friend of the public.

There is nothing so agreeable to an insolvent and his creditors as secrecy, nothing so disagreeable as publicity. The debtor is only too often a knave, the creditors are almost all victims of their own readiness to give credit without inquiry. The debtor hates to have his knavery, the creditor hates to have his folly, exposed. They are in a conspiracy against honest men, and their engine is "secrecy."

The usual course is this. When the debtor cannot longer delay the evil day, he calls his creditors together to hear his statement of debts and assets, and he submits a proposition, which is always to pay so many shillings in the pound. Generally he offers as much as he can pay. The creditors consider his proposition, and almost always stipulate for something more. The debtor is so anxious for secrecy that he generally undertakes to pay the something more, but he proposes to pay it by acceptances, at three, six, nine, and twelve months. Having thus bought secrecy, he obtains, during the twelve month, of tradesmen who have not heard of his insolvency, the means of paying his existing creditors; and thus Peter is robbed to pay Paul, and the result is that a knave is turned loose on the world unexposed. The existing creditors do not trust him during the twelve months, because they know him; new creditors do trust him, because they do not know him. Is this a system which the law should encourage?

If I could make the law, I would not only give the smallest power to the majority of creditors to bind the minority, I would go further and would even enact that the creditor who established the bankruptcy should receive some advantage as a reward for having been the first to denounce the insolvent, and so stop his mischievous career. In a bankruptcy before me a short time ago, two eminent banking houses in the City lost, one £5,000, the other £1,500, by not knowing that a person who put his name to a bill as a second security had privately arranged with his creditors a year before.

I, for one, will never lift a finger to assist private arrangements. The true policy is publicity.

2. I think there ought not to be two laws—a law of bankruptcy and a law of insolvency.

I think that there should be but one law, and that law should be the existing law of bankruptcy. The principle of the law of bankruptcy is right. It is this—take possession of the bankrupt's property, realize it, and after paying expenses distribute it among the creditors. Inquire into the conduct of the bankrupt before and pending the bankruptcy, and treat him accordingly, so far as punishment goes; but, in any event, return him sooner or later to the world of industry, entirely free from all former debts. Let him recommence the struggle to maintain himself and his family; do not impede, or, it might be said, neutralise his exertions by weighing him down with old debts. Creditors are nearly as much to blame as debtors, and ought not to be permitted to oppress those whom they have themselves misled by the carelessness with which they have given credit.

Digitized by Google

"It is proposed to consolidate the Bankrupt and Insolvency Courts, and have only one Court, the judges of which should be called judges, not commissioners. This seems right. I think that the word bankruptcy should be dropped. The proper word is insolvency. The Consolidated Court should, therefore, be called the Court of Insolvency. But it would be expedient to have all cases of insolvency managed in the said Court, as there is great inconvenience in mixing the lowest of the low with persons who have always moved in a higher sphere. The proposal, therefore, to retain the Court-house and establishment in Portugal-street, as well as the building and establishment in Basinghall-street, and use the former for the lower class of insolvents and the creditors, and the latter for the higher classes, seems judicious. It is a great advantage that they are a mile and more from each other. Insolvents should be divided into two classes—say class A and B. Class A should consist of those insolvents whose available assets would probably exceed £200; class B should consist of those whose available assets would probably not exceed that sum. Class A should be dealt with by the judges sitting in Basinghall-street and the bankruptcy court in the country; class B by the judges sitting in Portugal-street and the insolvency judges in the country.

3. The law which now enables a creditor who has got judgment to take the property of his debtor in execution for his own private use should be abolished. He ought to have twenty shillings in the pound on the cost he has incurred, but should come in with the other creditors for a dividend on his debt. Under the existing system the debtor is constantly in league with the execution creditor, and the two contrive to cheat all the other creditors. Even if the demand of the creditor is an honest demand, it is most unjust that he should get 20s. in the pound upon his debt, when the other creditors get little or nothing; but if it is not an honest demand (and is it very difficult to find out whether it is or is not) it is a most revolting piece of knavery, because it is turning the law, which ought to be a protection to honest men, into an instrument to cheat them.

4. The law should declare that it is the duty of every person, when unable to meet his engagements, to record the fact in the Court of Insolvency. The mode of proceeding should be for the debtor to go before the registrar of the day, accompanied by an attorney of the Court to identify him, and declare himself unable to meet his engagements. The Court upon this ought to cause the insolvency to be gazetted, and the usual proceedings should take place. If the insolvent did not originate proceedings against himself, any unpaid creditor should be at liberty to go before the proper Court, and state upon oath a primâ facie case of debt due. There should not be any specific amount required. The smaller the debt due and unpaid, the stronger would be the proof it afforded of the insolvency of the debtor. He who cannot pay £5 cannot pay £50. The judge should immediately issue his summons to the alleged debtor, calling upon him to attend the Court on a fixed day, and show cause why he should not be adjudged insolvent. When the insolvent attended, the Court would deal with the case as justice required. If the insolvency was declared, everything would proceed as now till the insolvent had passed his last examination. He would then ask for his certificate, which would be granted as of course, unless opposed, the Court granting a first, second, or third class, according to the circumstances of the case; but I think that no certificate but a third-class certificate should be given, unless the Court should be of opinion that the insolvent had produced assets which, if they had been sold according to the usual course of business, would have amounted to 20 per cent. upon his debts.

There ought to be a code of commercial crimes or offences and punishment. The punishment should err on the side of mercy, not severity. A law constructed on these principles would, I think, win public favour. I am very apprehensive that the bill, if passed as proposed, will throw us all into confusion, from which we shall not recover for a great length of time.

June 25, 1858.

Correspondence.

SCHOOLS OF COOKERY.

A HELP TO DOMESTIC AND SOCIAL REFORM.

SIR,—Seeing the favourable notice of the "School Kitchen" at Hastings, in the December No. of the Philanthropist, I venture to call your attention, and that of your readers, to a similar undertaking, which is now working very satisfactorily in Albany Street, Regent's Park, London.

I think we may welcome the announcement of this simultaneous movement in different localities, as an evidence of the want beginning to be largely felt, which these Institutions are calculated to supply; and I doubt not that a willingness on the part of the public, to appreciate and support the efforts of benevolent persons in this direction, will prove adequate to the necessities of the case.

It will be seen by the following extract from the prospectus, that the Institution in London is on a more comprehensive plan than the one at Hastings; that is to say, it combines and carries out several objects by means of the same machinery.

* * * "The object of this Institution is to teach young girls cookery in its various branches, and to bring them up for service; it is also meant to assist the poor, by giving them well-cooked meat at a cheap rate. There are, therefore, dishes dressed daily for the poor and sick, and ladies can order any of the following dishes to be sent to them at their own houses, thus giving the girls an opportunity of learning the higher branches of the art: custom of this kind is very earnestly solicited." [Then follows a list of dishes, containing some of an elaborate description.] "Tickets may be had at the School, to give away to the poor, at 6d., 8d., and 10d. each, for which they obtain the value in a dish of wholesome and nourishing food."

It appears from the above, that the "School" is open to pupils generally, requiring only the recommendation of subscribers or other persons of respectability in the neighbourhood.

"Orders for dishes are solicited from private families." This part of the plan has a two-fold object; it enables those of the pupils who desire it to learn the "higher branches of the art," and at the same time the profits arising out of this kind of custom would greatly help to carry on the Institution; although it should be stated the charges are moderate, not exceeding the cost certainly of the same prepared at home; so that, after the expenses of the first outlay have been cleared, it would become almost self-supporting.

By this means cooks may receive instruction in various degrees of proficiency, to fit them for the different situations in life which they may be appointed to fill; a knowledge of the science of cookery is imparted, the want of which is the cause of the great dearth of really good cooks, which is so generally complained of.

But the great value of this School of Cookery is, that it imparts a true knowledge of the art to those young women who will, in most cases, and at no distant day, become the wives and mothers of the working classes. It will teach them how to dress food, in the most economical and wholesome manner; thus, a poor man's earnings will be made to go much farther, and the whole family will fare much better than heretofore, by means of a very small amount of thought and trouble on the part of the wife.

It is impossible to over-estimate the benefit to a poor working man, which a tidy house and comfortable meal afford him; a cheerful happy fireside must possess attractions more powerful and satisfying to the husband and the father, than those which the London Gin Palace or the village ale-house can possibly offer. But the advantages arising from this improved state of things are not limited to the physical condition only, nor are they confined to and shut up in a narrow sphere of an individual home; the moral influences by example and so forth, are numerous and wide-spreading. It has been truly said, by one who has had good experience in such things, that "one clean, well-kept cottage, with orderly inmates, will do more to reform a village than all the papers, preachings and pamphlets, that could be written or spoken on the subject."*

Digitized by Google

I introduced the "School of Cookery" recently to the Brighton public through the medium of one of the local papers. It is very desirable that such an Institution should be established in every considerable town in the kingdom. It is a branch of industrial training which deserves encouragement and support at the hands of philanthropists of every profession and degree; for it will not only help to the domestic comfort and health of families of the better ranks, by producing a superior race of cooks to that which we now possess; but, as I have just now endeavoured to show, it will promote in a great measure the physical and moral elevation of the poor man's home; for I have a very strong conviction, that if we are to win the drunkard from his ways, if we are effectually to check those numerous evils which occupy the attention and employ the efforts of the benevolent and the wise in this our day, we must recognize the fact—slowly and unwillingly as some minds seem to approach the idea—that Social Reform (like charity in the parable of old) must begin at HOME.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
M. A. B.

Brighton, December 3rd, 1858.

THE HOUSELESS POOR.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Some of us, who have long protested against the merciless treatment of the houseless poor, can but feel thankful that public attention is at last directed to an evil so disgraceful to a wealthy and Christian community, and it is pleasing to find that the Poor-law Board have very opportunely called upon the guardians of the poor of the metropolis to put into operation an act of the legislature, 7th and 8th Vict., c. 101, passed so far back as 1844.

This act authorises the guardians of the poor to provide asylums for the houseless and destitute, who are not charged with crime, at the joint cost of the different parishes in the metropolis. Had this been done when the act passed thousands of wretched human beings would have been saved from starvation and crime, whilst gaol expenses, charged on the county rates for the maintenance of those committed for petty offences when refused shelter in the workhouses, might have been saved to the ratepayers.

It is unfortunately the truth that the houseless and destitute have been treated without distinction as common vagrants and street beggars. It is therefore satisfactory to find that this class of poor are no longer to be confounded with "common vagrants and gross impostors," because we are very properly told that the houseless poor "need not be beggars or rogues, but may be the victims of misfortune, ejected from some cellar or starved out of a garret." I could myself relate authenticated facts, and give numerous instances proving the shameful refusal of shelter to destitute persons which have come under my own observation, for I have filled the office of guardian, and have been connected with parochial offices, and have necessarily mixed among all grades of the poor, for the last quarter of a century, in a densely populated and poor locality. I have seen at our own workhouse-gate, (St. George's, Southwark), on a cold freezing night, women and young children craving shelter from the inclemency of the weather, but who could not be received, because there were already 60 or 70 human beings packed together in a place where 25 could scarcely be housed; and I have then called upon the police to take them in mercy to the police station, but this could not be done, because they had committed no crime.

That all was done that could be done to assist these poor outcasts in our crowded district is proved by the fact which is recorded in the parliamentary return referred to by the Poor-law Board, namely, that in the year ending Lady-day, 1857, the number of instances where these houseless poor were taken into our workhouse for shelter was 12,998, whilst in the next parish (Newington) the number was only 824, in St. George's, Hanover Square, 210, and St. Marylebone, 348.

The generous sympathy recently shown by the public in the pouring in of voluntary subscriptions in aid of the refuges is at once a proof that Englishmen condemn the barbarous treatment of these wretched outcasts, who are their fellow-countrymen, and that they are not willing, for the sake of any paltry saving, that this class should perish in the metropolis of hunger and cold for want of shelter and bread. But is it to be expected that a state of things so deplorable can be effectually remedied by occasional private benevolence? Have we not poor-law machinery which ought to be made applicable to all that is required? Some express fear about the expense of providing asylums for shelter at the public cost; but let it be remembered that it is calculated that one penny in the pound, even under the present defective mode of assessment, will raise in the metropolis £50,000. Now, according to the statement from the institution for the houseless poor referred to by the Poor-law Board, the cost of providing shelter and relief in 53,311 instances, including the rent of the premises and the payment of salaries, was £1139 16s. 4d. The parliamentary return referred to gives the number of houseless poor taken into the metropolitan workhouses in one year for a night's shelter at 66,009, making with the other 119,320. Now, suppose we take the number requiring such shelter and relief in the year at four times the number taken in by this institution, say 213,344, the cost may be expected to be four times the amount given above, that is £4559 5s. 4d., which would be less than one-tenth of a penny in the pound per annum upon the assessable property of the metropolis.

Why, then, should we feel alarmed at the prospect of this trifling outlay to accomplish this righteous purpose, and it should not be forgotten that county rates taken out of the poor rates have of late years frightfully increased, and large additional gaol accommodation has been necessarily provided at an enormous cost to the ratepayer, and this to a large extent to provide for petty offenders who could not obtain workhouse shelter. But I regard this to be only a righteous retribution upon the ratepayers for the merciless treatment of the destitute poor.

In the circular of the Poor-law Board it is very properly stated "That plans might be adopted for ensuring the co-operation of the police, who have the earliest and most complete means of becoming acquainted with all persons wandering in the streets in a destitute state; and thus, by the combined action of the police and the officer of the guardians, all proper objects would be immediately transferred to the asylums, while impostors would be detected and rejected."

It is worthy of remark that this plan has been adopted for years in the town and borough of Gravesend. The establishment of these asylums would be at once adapted to carry out the important and humane proposition now made—"That misery should be tracked to its haunts, in order to reclaim those in whom there is still some lingering instinct of society, duty, and order.

If the proposition of the Poor-law Board to adopt this act of parliament is objected to by the guardians of the metropolis, surely these elected bodies, who are now responsible to the public for an alteration of the present system, should at once confer together with a view of adopting some mode of meeting any difficulty that lies in the way of carrying out a proposition so necessary for the sake of humanity, as well as for the security of property and the peace of society. There is no doubt but the cost and charges of the required accommodation should be equally borne by all the metropolitan parishes, and this would certainly be the commencement of a system of equal rating, which, we think, must be shortly generally adopted. The casual poor return to the House of Commons referred to was, at our request, obtained by Mr. John Locke, the member for Southwark, and the present system is thoroughly exposed by reference to this document by making a comparison between the value of the property and the relief afforded to the casual poor in two richer parishes with that of two poorer parishes; for instance, the parishes of St. George's, Hanover-square, and St. Marylebone, received in the year 558 cases of houseless poor, whilst the parishes of St. George's, Southwark, and St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, housed 26,228, nearly half the number received in the whole metropolis, which was 66,009; whilst the value of the two first-named parishes is given in the returns at

---

* Sir Harry Verney, Bart., M.P., of Winslow, Bucks, who has made very successful sanitary experiments in his own neighbourhood, and who has suggested to the writer that similar undertakings in sanitary reform might be commenced with great advantage in different localities in various parts of England. It is worth while calling attention (in connexion with this suggestion) to the Ladies' National Association for the Diffusion of Sanitary Knowledge, which solicits the co-operation of clergymen, medical men, and all who are interested in Sanitary Reform, to establish such institutions, in connexion with Branch Associations, in their several localities.

Digitized by Google

£2,265,237, and the value of the two last-named parishes at only £505,833, whilst the value of the whole metropolitan rateable property is 14 millions. Surely this state of things has gone on long enough: some remedy must be at once found.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,
JOHN DAY.

Vestry Hall, St. George's Southwark, January 15, 1859.

MANCHESTER RAGGED AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS, AND THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS BILL.

AT a special meeting of the Committee, held on the 22nd of December, it was unanimously resolved that the Honorary Secretaries should take the necessary steps to have the schools certified under the Industrial School Bill, 20 and 21 Vic., cap. 48, according to the requirements of the Minute of Committee of Council on Education, of 31st December, 1858. The Manchester Ragged and Industrial Schools at Ardwich Green, were inaugurated in October last, by the Right Hon. Lord John Russell, M.P.; they can accommodate 300 children, including 100 dormitory inmates, and the schools are considered to be amongst the best constructed and most convenient in the kingdom for the purposes proposed. We understand that it is the intention of the Managers to endeavour fairly to bring the Industrial School Bills into operation for the classes contemplated by its powers. "To make better provision for the care and education of vagrant, destitute, and disorderly children," the juvenile "Arabs" of our large cities and towns.

Hopeful Thoughts for the Merry or the Sad. London: Clements Little Pulteney Street, 1859.

A small tract, having for its object to make the widow and the fatherless less the object of general charity than of the anticipatory prudence of those on whom they depend, and generally of preventive measures. The author's plan requires further detail.

A LIBERAL LANDLORD. — One of the tenants of the Duke of Roxburgh having been necessitated to relinquish his lease, which had several years to run, the farm has been re-let at an advance of £140. The duke, compassionating the misfortunes which had caused his tenant to leave, has generously presented him with the entire surplus rent till the expiry of the old lease, being equal to more than £1000.—North British Daily Mail.

DUTY cannot be neglected without harm to those who practice as well as to those who suffer the neglect.

THE clouds that intercept the heavens from us come not from the heavens, but from the earth.—W. S. LANDOR.

BOYS AND MEN.—Take a company of boys chasing butterflies, put long-tailed coats on the boys, and turn the butterflies into guineas, and you have a beautiful panorama of the world.

SHIRT MAKERS IN DERRY AND BELFAST.—The shirtmakers in Belfast at present earn 4½d. per day! The trade, says the Belfast News Letter, is now being carried on extensively, yet the applicants for work at this very low figure exceed the demand for their services, especially since the depression in the sewed muslin trade has thrown many out of employment, REPEAL OF THE PAPER DUTY. — The annual meeting of the Association for Promoting the Repeal of the Taxes on Knowledge, will be held in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, the 2nd of February, 1859.

How many fathers there are who always comfort themselves with saying, "I shall die poor; but let my sons make their way in the world as I have done!" To which some complaisant neighbour replies, "And I am sure, sir, they cannot do better!" Parents, however, should reflect that their sons have not only the same difficulties to encounter which they have had, but the additional disadvantage of having been brought up in luxury and idleness, to which the parents themselves in their youth were strangers.

EDUCATION OF CHILDREN.—If your child requires pressing to learn, do not urge it forward; if it does not require pressing, keep it back. Let all its acquirements be natural viva voce ones; talk of anything you like within the scope of his observation, but of nothing that can exercise, and therefore injure, the brain. Exercise its limbs and its fingers; educate its eye, its ear, its hands; let the pure breath of heaven blow on it, and let it live on the simplest food, and drink nothing more exciting than good milk; and rather discourage than urge any attempt even to read until the child is five or six years old. Do not think, however, that nothing can be learned in all those years because the spelling-book is forbidden. Much valuable knowledge may be conveyed in the intercourse of parent and child; many virtues may be strengthened; and the body will be prepared to bear its share in the struggle of life without sinking under it.—Mrs. Pullan's Children, and how to Manage them.

NUMBER OF BEDS IN THE METROPOLITAN HOSPITALS.—St. Bartholomew's, 650; St. Thomas's, 520; Guy's, 549; Westminster, 175; St. George's, 325; London, 400; Middlesex, 300; University, 120; Charing Cross, 100; King's College, 120; Marylebone, 150; and the Royal Free Hospital, about 200.

WHAT WILL THIS COST TO PRINT? is a thought often occurring to literary minds, public charasters, and persons of benevolent intentions. An immediate answer to the inquiry may be obtained, on application to RICHARD BARRETT, 13, MARK LANE, LONDON. R. B. is enabled to execute every description of PRINTING on very advantageous terms, his office being furnished with a large and choice assortment of TYPES, STEAM PRINTING MACHINES, HYDRAULIC and other PRESSES, and every modern improvement in the Printing Art. A SPECIMEN BOOK of TYPES, and information for authors, sent on application, by RICHARD BARRETT, 13, MARK LANE, LONDON.

ALARM GUN.—Captain NORTON'S ALARM GUN, without vent or touch-hole, fired at the muzzle by friction, for protection against burglars, poachers, &c., is to be had of the London Gunmakers: Field, Blisset, and Beckwith, Holborn; Reiley, New Oxford Street; Lang, Cockspur Street; Daw, Old Broad Street; and Wilkinson, Pall Mall.

ESTABLISHED 1810.
JAMES FLOOD, AUCTIONEER, SURVEYOR, APPRAISER and UNDERTAKER;
Valuer of every description of Property, and for Probate-Legacy Duty, &c.
ESTATE, HOUSE, SCHOLASTIC, BUSINESS, MEDICAL AND CLERICAL AGENT,
84, WELLS STREET,
Next 64, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

LATE DWERRIHOUSE and CO.
27, DAVIES STREET, BERKELEY SQUARE.
ESTABLISHED 1760.
J. WHITESIDE begs most respectfully to invite an inspection of his extensive and elegant Stock of ENGLISH and FOREIGN CLOCKS and GOLD and SILVER WATCHES.
CLOCKS WOUND and KEPT IN REPAIR by the year, as usual.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent.
CONDY'S PATENT CONCENTRATED PURE MALT VINEGAR,
AS SUPPLIED TO HER MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT, the Council for India, the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, the United States Mail Steamers, Prisons, Poor Law Unions, Hospitals, Public Institutions, the principal Club Houses, &c., &c., is the only Pure Vinegar made or to be obtained; Vinegar, in its ordinary state, is water and poisonous acids. This Vinegar does not contain any impurity or adulterating ingredient whatever, and Families, by using this delicious Vinegar, insure purity, and effect a saving of 50 per cent. See Reports of Dr. Letheby, City Officer of Health, Dr. Hassall, of the "Lancet" Commission, Dr. Ure, M.D., and many others. Sold by the Trade in bottles, labelled and capsuled. Wholesale
63, King William Street, London Bridge, E.C.
Six-Quart Sample sent to any Railway, for 3s. 6d.

TRELOAR'S
COCOA NUT FIBRE MATTING
IS THE BEST.
PRIZE MEDALS AWARDED—LONDON, NEW YORK, and PARIS.
Catalogue, containing Prices and every particular, post free.
WAREHOUSE, 42, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

RITCHIE'S PATENT GRANULATED CORK MATTRESSES and BEDS expel Vermin, effectually cure Rheumatism, prevent Cramp, and, by preserving electricity, promote Health and prolong Life. The Patent Cork Mattress and Cork Fabric Manufactory, 66, Hatfield Street, Blackfriars.

SHIP OAK LOGS for WINTER FIRES Superior SHIP OAK TIMBER for Firewood, cut into suitable lengths, for grates of any size, is sold at the old-established Ship Breaker's Yard, Bridge Wharf, Battersea, at 20s. per cart load, delivered within four miles. It makes a warm, agreeable, and lasting fire, and having been patronized for many years, can with confidence be recommended. Address W. C. TANNER, Bridge Wharf, Battersea, S.W. Cash on delivery.

HARD WATER rendered as SOFT as RAIN WATER by the HOLLAND PATENT COMPOUND, by perfectly uninjurious and cheap means. Sold in packets of 1s., 6d., 2d., and 1d., at our Agents, and some of the most respectable Oil and Colourmen, Grocers, and Chemists.
We beg to call the attention of the public, and especially of the Managers of Philanthropical Institutions, Laundries, &c., to this recent discovery, which supersedes entirely the use of soda, and is highly recommended by Dr. A. W. Hoffman, F.R.S., for washing and domestic use. All water softened and purified by its agency makes superior tea, remains quite sweet for several months, and is particularly adapted for shipping purposes.
For large quantities and particulars, apply at DE JONG and Co.'s, 8, Baynam Terrace, Camden Town, London, N.W.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE.

March 1, 1859.

Index.

Northamptonshire Educational Society 323
State Industrial School for Girls, Lancaster, Massachusetts 328
Unmarried Wet-Nurses 330
Editorial Articles:
The Permissive Bill 332
Physical Education at Oxford 333
The British Beneficent Institution 334
School of Cookery 334
France Johnston 335
Wet-Nurses and Lying-in Institutions 335
Correspondence:
Letter from T. B. L. Baker, Esq. 336
Industrial Schools 337
Cheap Clothing 337
Reviews:
The Claims of Ragged Schools to Pecuniary Educational Aid 339
Hint for the Improvement of Village Schools and the introduction of Industrial Work 339
The Paper Duty 341
Houseless Asylum 341
Bazaar 342
Mr. W. H. Miller at the Horns 342
Meeting of Coal Whippers 342

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE EDUCATIONAL SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the Northamptonshire Society for Promoting and Extending Education in Accordance with the Principles of the Established Church, was held on Tuesday, February 8th, at the George Hotel. There were present, William Smyth, Esq., in the chair; the Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton, the Rev. H. J. Barton, the Rev. Thomas James, the Rev. Chr. Smyth, the Rev. G. S. H. Vyse, the Rev. J. T. H. Smith, the Rev. D. Paul, Edward Thornton, Esq., General Bouverie, the Rev. H. J. Bigge, the Rev. W. Barry, the Rev. H. L. Elliott, H. Osmond Nethercote, Esq., the Rev. T. Hutton, the Rev. Robert Isham, H. P. Markham, Esq., Mr. W. J. Peirce, Mr. Jas. Robinson, Mr. William Robinson, Mr. W. White, the Rev. J. N. Simpkinson, the Rev. H. Delafons, the Rev. E. Parker, T. Scrivens, Esq., &c. &c.

The following extracts are taken from the Report of the Training and Parochial Schools:—

"The Practising School was finished and given up to the society by the contractors, Messrs. Ellis, of Peterborough, early in September. It is a handsome building, and fully in accordance with the understanding upon which the site was obtained, that nothing should be erected by the society so close to the Cathedral and Deanery, of a dissightly character. The expense has amounted to £1,040. The committee fear that some further outlay will be necessary, as there is not sufficient light in the south-east corner of the building. The government grant towards the building, of £366, has not yet been received.

"In April, the committee advertised for a principal of the Training School, at a minimum salary of £150. Sixteen candidates offered themselves, some of high University standing, others more or less experienced in school work. From among these the committee selected the Rev. Charles Daymond, who had for some time filled the important post of normal master at St. Mark's Training College.

"The next step taken was to open the Practising School. A master, holding a first-class certificate, was engaged, and the school was divided into two parts; one, of such boys as could attend regularly, and so be more fully instructed, paying 4d. a-week, or 3s. 6d. a-quarter; the other of those who, from various causes, well known to all who have experience of national schools, expected to be irregular in their attendance, at 2d. a-week. These charges may, perhaps, appear high, but they have not checked the popularity of the school. It opened with 175 boys, on the 27th of September, and there were 216 on the books at the close of the year, besides many additional applicants for admission. The attendance has been remarkably good, averaging, at the close of the year, upwards of 200 daily, so that a large 'capitation grant' may be hoped for.

"The Practising School is opened five days in the week, and also upon Sunday morning: the boys being, however, permitted, if their parents desire it, to attend the Parochial Sunday School instead. Those who come to the society's school attend the service in the Cathedral; they number about 120.

"Having thus provided the school in which the students were to practise the art of teaching, the committee next proceeded to take steps to open the college itself. But here a difficulty arose. The Committee of Privy Council for Education, by whose large grants the college must be chiefly supported, refused to recognise the society's scheme of opening the college at first in temporary hired buildings, and of deferring all further expense till the county should have been enabled to judge of the character and utility of their work by a few years' experience. Several letters passed upon this subject, until at length the Committee of Council gave their final decision on the 16th of October, that they would make the usual grants at Christmas, 1858 and 1859, but would continue them at Christmas, 1860, only on condition that, by that time, the society should erect a building for twenty students and the necessary staff of teachers, on some plan admitting of subsequent enlargement for thirty students. Your committee, after full consideration, determined on accepting this offer. They felt, indeed, that they could not pledge themselves, or the society, to raise the sum necessary for such building, as the Government required, and would have much preferred to carry out their original scheme, of deferring all further expense on their capital fund for the present. But, on the other hand, they had already engaged a principal, under the idea that no such difficulties would be raised by the Committee of Council; they had no reason to hope that any delay would make the terms offered to them, as conditions of Government grants, less onerous; and the only two courses open to them were, either to accept the offer of the Committee of Council, or to defer altogether the opening of the Training College.

"They, therefore, directed the secretaries to reply to the Committee of Council that the society would accept the grants offered to them, and would immediately take steps to prepare the necessary plans and estimates, and then, if possible, would build in 1860. For this purpose a committee has been re-appointed; as soon as they have presented their report, steps will be taken to bring the matter under the full consideration of the society.

"The number of students now in residence is 15, of whom nine live at Swanspool House, with the master of the Practising School; the six in hired apartments, with the principal. The number originally proposed to be taken was nine, but the committee finding that the grants for six more students would meet the extra expense of the additional teacher whom the Committee of Council would, in that case, require to be placed on the staff of the college, determined that the larger number would be preferable, as giving a fairer trial to the scheme of the society. An estimate of the probable expense of the Training Institution for the current year has been prepared, from which it appears that the present subscriptions will suffice for the permanent carrying on of the college on its present footing. But such an estimate, of course, can be only approximation; and should the college hereafter be carried on with twenty or thirty students, and a "sufficient staff" in the proposed new building, there will, on the one hand, be increased numbers to board and maintain, and an increase of salaries to provide for, while on the other hand not only would the Grants from Government be larger, but a considerable saving would be effected under the head of rent."

The Reformatory School Report was read as follows:—

"Reformatory School.—Your committee hope that the third annual report of this branch of the Northamptonshire society's proceedings will not be considered less satisfactory than the two former ones.

"During the past year eleven boys have been admitted into the school. Of these, six had not been convicted before, one had been twice convicted, one seven times, and the rest not known. The total number admitted from the commencement is thirty-four, of which, at the end of the year 1858, nine had been discharged, on the expiration of their terms of detention, two expelled, five were out on trial, and eighteen in the school. Of those discharged seven are reported as doing well, and two doubtful; and of those out on trial the reports are generally favourable.

"These facts, together with the name of the court at which the conviction took place, the offence, the numbers of years' detention, and the results, as far as they can be ascertained, will be found in a tabulated form at the end of this report. Your committee propose to carry on this form from year to year, but, for obvious reasons, they do not give the names either of the boys or of their parents.

"There have been three cases of absconding during the year, a proof, amongst others which might be mentioned, that a reformatory school is not quite so agreeable a residence as those who know little about its proper management have supposed.

"The school has been visited on two several occasions by the Rev. Sydney Turner, her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons and Reformatories, and H. G. Bowyer, Esq., her Majesty's Inspector of Reformatory and Workhouse Schools.

Digitized by Google

"On his first visit, Mr. Turner did not enter minutely into the conduct and arrangements of the institution, but expressed his general satisfaction with the buildings, the nature of the land, and the appearance and management of the boys. After visiting the second time he writes as follows:—'I was greatly pleased with Tiffield. Your progress since my last visit is very marked and satisfactory. The looks and demeanour of the boys are such as one would wish to see—open, bright, and healthy, civil, and self-respecting. The land, too, is in better cultivation, and while I hope to see some parts of it cleaner by the persevering application of the boys' labour, I am bound to say that the root crops and potatoes and Lois-Weedon ground showed good signs of attention, and that, on the whole, the weeds were getting the worst of it. I believe that the thorough cleaning and deepening of the soil is one of the points in which the peculiar kind of labour that we have to handle in boys' reformatory schools can be made most effectual and profitable. I should be glad if you would tell Mr. Benn from me that I felt much encouraged by all I saw of the school. The whole seemed to me to wear much more of that cheerful and yet orderly aspect which is so desirable. I thought the dormitory and the beds especially neat and comfortable. I had not so much time as I could have wished to test the religious and general teaching, the hours went so fast; but I saw enough of the boys' answers, and their attention to the subject, to feel very well satisfied. I hope that your association will soon consider seriously the necessity of enlarging the school, say to make it adequate for forty boys. You have plenty of land (thirty-two acres) at your disposal, a very good master and matron, and a building which is in every way adapted both for present use and future extension. The returns from your prisons seem to show that your present school does not meet the probable wants of the county and its chief towns. Unless we grapple with juvenile crime thoroughly we can hardly hope to gain an adequate return from our efforts. Half measures disappoint and so discourage by their imperfect results. Heartily wishing all success and encouragement to your good work, which promises to take its place in the first class of boys' reformatories, I am, very faithfully, yours,

'SYDNEY TURNER.

'The Rev. H. J. Barton.'

"Mr. Bowyer, on the occasion of his last visit, after an examination of upwards of two hours, left the following report:—'I have this day inspected the school, and am happy to be able to state that the boys have made fair progress since my former visit. Their answers were intelligent, and they seemed interested in what they were about. I was much pleased with the general expression of their countenances, which denoted the improvement of their moral tone in consequence of the training and instruction they had received.'

"Your committee wish it to be understood that these results have been obtained by strict discipline and hard work, combined with kindness and encouragement, and by an amount of punishment, whenever needful, which they have wished to make sufficiently severe to intimidate before punishment, sufficiently just to convince during punishment, and sufficiently humane to correct the offender; but they place no reliance upon mere discipline. The boys are taught, as far as possible, to think and act on honest, and kindly and religious principles. They are trusted. And if your committee felt inclined to make a parade of such things, they could mention several instances to show that many of the boys feel proud of the trust reposed in their good behaviour, and evince a degree of honesty and generosity which could hardly be expected from them. One case, however, seems especially deserving of notice. It is that of an old man who came all the way from Plymouth to see his son. The boys were so struck by this proof of parental affection, and seeing the tired and worn condition he was in, that they went in a body to the superintendent and begged that they might contribute the amount of their small earnings to carry him back again. It is also gratifying to know that in every instance where parents have been written to after their sons have left, they have immediately answered the letters, and expressed their gratitude for the treatment of their children, and thankfulness for their improvement. In one instance a father requested permission to send his son back to the school for a few months till he could find some situation for him, and offered to pay at the rate of 2s. 6d. a week for his board. His object in doing so was to prevent the boy from returning to his old haunts and associates, but on trial, he found him so steady and trustworthy, that he determined to keep him at home, and he is still going on satisfactorily.

"The boys are chiefly employed as last year in agricultural labour; they are dressed like labourers, in smock frocks and corduroy trousers and caps, which they learn to make and mend for themselves; they can wash their own shirts and mend their own stockings; they rise at the same time as the labourers in the neighbourhood, and live on labourers' fare. Under the influence of this discipline they are vigorous and healthy, doing their work cheerfully, and acquiring habits of regularity and order, which it is hoped they will carry with them into after life.

"It must not be supposed, however, that a reformatory can do impossibilities, and that every boy who has been in gaol can be transformed at once into a pattern of obedience and virtue. 'A reformatory,' as one of our first and ablest managers has said, "is no patent filter to turn Thames water into the crystal element.' But still much may be done; much has been done; and much more, your committee hope and believe, yet remains to be done, for the benefit of these outcasts of society, and therefore of society itself.

"And here your committee must be allowed to mention with satisfaction and thankfulness the faithful and conscientious discharge of his duties by their superintendent, by whose unceasing exertions and judicious management they attribute, under Providence, the gratifying results of the past and previous years. And with regard to the domestic arrangements they wish to speak in the same high terms of the conduct of the matron.

"Before concluding this report, it may be necessary to say a few words to those who are still opposed to the reformatory movement. They tell us (which we entirely believe) that prevention is better than cure, and (which we do not believe) that we are doing more for the outcast and destitute than for the children of honest labourers. They look upon the movement itself as the offspring of 'a morbid philanthropy,' and we are advised, instead of raising the lost, to prevent the upright from falling. Our answer is, that we do both. We are members of a society which embraces the whole question both of education and reformation; and in proof of this we need only refer to the first lines of the Northamptonshire Society's first report after it was remodelled and enlarged in 1854.

"It would be travelling out of our own immediate department to say more upon this subject, but we are anxious that it should ever be kept in mind, and we believe not only that no other county has taken up the subject in the same broad and comprehensive spirit, but that it requires only the liberal support of the county to render it thoroughly efficient and effective in all its branches.

"In regard to the female reformatory, your committee have to state that, acting under the advice of Mr. Sydney Turner, they have determined to put off, for the present, the establishment of such an institution; and, therefore, they have resigned all claim to the buildings of the old Militia Storehouse, which, by an order of the Court of Quarter Sessions, had been made over to them for that purpose.

"They have also to state that the Committee of Privy Council has determined to give no further aid to reformatory schools from and after the 31st of March, 1859. And though this will be attended with considerable loss, they cannot consistently object to it, feeling as they do that such educational grants ought to be confined to the unconvicted children of honest parents, and that if more public money than that which is now supplied by the Home Office were given to reformatories, the life and earnestness of private sympathy and exertion would be extinguished.

"Your committee will conclude this report by earnestly pressing upon the consideration of the society what they consider to be the two main things to be looked to to securing permanence and completeness to the reformatory movement. The first is the safe disposal of the inmates on discharge. The second, the pressure on parents for contribution towards maintenance.

As to the first, your committee hoped that, by the appointment of corresponding members, an interest would have been excited on behalf of the boys who left with good characters, so that many of them might have been placed out with respectable farmers or tradesmen or even with some of the members themselves. But this hope has been disappointed, and the consequence is that, with the exception of those who are willing to emigrate, the boys return to their parents, and to their old haunts and associates, and are subject, therefore, to all the dangers of falling back again into crime, and becoming worse than they were at first. Your committee are thankful to say that hitherto this has not been the case, and they derive much encouragement from the fact, that these trials and temptations, as far as they know, have been resisted. But without some great and salutary change in this respect, and without help from some quarter or other to meet this difficulty, they can never hope to see the reformatory principle successfully carried out. Emigration, no doubt, may do much, but it is expensive, and it is beset with difficulties. Home emigration is what we want; and your committee feel confident that in five cases out of seven, if these boys could be properly located after they leave the school, they would turn out honest men, and become useful and valuable servants. Some, no doubt, must be sent abroad, and we have the satisfaction to state that a member of your society, who happened to be in the county gaol when two of these poor lads were brought there, was so impressed with the pitiableness of their case, and the necessity of this requirement, that he instantly placed £5 in the secretary's hands to assist in the formation of an emigration fund. What we want, therefore, and we must have it, or we shall utterly fail in the attainment of our object, is sympathy and assistance from employers at home, and subscriptions for emigration abroad. In regard to parents' payments, your committee venture again most respectfully to urge upon magistrates the importance and necessity of stirring up the police to back the proceedings of her Majesty's inspector. He has already done much, but it will be impossible for him to carry out his intentions so as to enforce parental responsibility, and to prevent one of the worst abuses of the reformatory system, if magistrates will not insist upon these payments, and require the police to collect them.

Digitized by Google

One other consideration your committee would beg leave to bring before the magistracy, and that is the immense importance of carrying out a consistent system in the treatment of juvenile offenders; substituting lengthened terms of correctional discipline for the present short imprisonments.

And, lastly, they would impress upon all who take an interest in this movement, the necessity of having distinct and separate schools of correction for the more hardened offenders.

It is impossible, within the limits of this report, to do more than touch upon these points; but knowing and feeling them to be of vital importance, your committee are assured that they cannot be too often mentioned, and, relying upon the goodness of their cause, they can only trust that it will be taken up with energy and spirit by other and more able advocates.

As to the ultimate and absolute success of the reformatory movement, your committee must speak with diffidence. It is still a great experiment, but it is a great requirement also. And on this point, because his authority is so much greater than theirs, your committee beg to adopt, in conclusion, the words recently spoken by a learned judge:—In his address to the grand jury, after alluding to the crimes of the past year, and the misery and ruin which they have caused, he goes on to say, "but on these I will not dwell, for I wish to recur, in conclusion, to the exception—the one bright spot in the darkness—I mean the steady success of the reformatory system. I, for one, am watching it closely and calmly, deprecating over-sanguineness and spurious sentimentality as strongly as any one can, and greatly grieved to see any tendency to exaggerate success, and overestimate difficulties. It is a very great experiment which we are trying, trying with general prudence and energy, and, as far as I can obtain, trustworthy information. I verily believe that the experiment is succeeding, and will succeed more and more eventually. If we meet again this time next year, may I be able to speak, and you to hear on this subject with still greater satisfaction and exultation."

Mr. Hutton enquired how many parents contributed to the maintenance of their children in the reformatory?—Mr. Barton replied more than one-half. He hoped her Majesty's Inspector would report two-thirds. Mr. Barton, in reply to Mr. James, said it was the Committee of Council on Education that had withdrawn the allowance, and properly too, as not consistent with their object,—Mr. James said that might be, but they would in consequence be deficient next year £88—a large sum.

The Rev. T. James read the report of the Middle Schools as follows:—

"Middle School Report—Your Middle School Committee have at length something tangible to lay before you. Two grammar schools, those of Guilsborough and Clipston, have this year been formally placed by their trustees in union with our society. Of Clipston, in consequence of the unfortunate postponement of a proposed examination, there is little to say, but your committee have great reason to congratulate the society and the county that the school of Guilsborough, so long a cause of shame and dissatisfaction to all concerned with it, has at length been restored to its proper place among the middle schools of this diocese. It was reopened on the 6th of October with appropriate ceremony, and not the least pleasing feature of the holiday enjoyed by all, was the presence of a large number of those classes for whom the school is chiefly designed. The trustees consider themselves fortunate in having obtained the Rev. Jon. Jones for their head master, who commenced his work with twenty-five pupils, but now numbers thirty-five, of whom ten are full boarders. The terms and particulars of this school, as well as of every other middle school in connection with our society, will be printed at the end of our report. The head master has expressed a wish of co-operating with this society in securing a middle-class examination for this district, and has also determined to conduct his school with especial reference to this public examination.

"Your committee heartily concurs in this view, because, although the preparation for an examination necessarily leads to a certain amount of what is called 'cramming,' yet even this result, the greatest anticipated evil of the new system, may be looked upon as an advantage in comparison with the desultory and indefinite course of study which resulted from the absence of all public competition or attestment.

"Your committee ventured to suggest to the Oxford Board that by a less distinct specification of the books for examination, especially in the class of English literature, even this alleged objection might be greatly obviated, and the system made, as far as possible, a healthy stimulus to general school work, and a fair test of the candidates' real abilities and attainments.

"With confidence in the benefits afforded by the middle-class examinations, your committee have offered their aid in organizing a local examination for the midland counties, and have invited all masters of middle schools and other persons interested in the subject to join them in securing the attendance of the Oxford examiners in June, or the Cambridge examiners in December, at Northampton or some other convenient place for candidates from the midland counties, and they recommended a grant of £10 towards the expenses that may be incurred.

"They regret that, as far as this county is concerned, very little encouragement has been given them to proceed, and perhaps while the present indifference to the establishment of good middle schools continues, it is vain to hope that fit candidates will present themselves. It is only by the gradual multiplication over the county of such schools as Kettering and Guilsborough that the educational torpor of the county can be expected to be removed, and Northamptonshire take its place in the competition so active in many other districts of England.

"It may be in your recollection that we proposed last year to offer a sum of not less than £10 annually for prizes in books or otherwise to middle schools in connection with our society. As some difficulties have arisen which have prevented the majority of the grammar schools in the county from joining us, we are disposed now to recommend as a provisional grant for the present year, the sum of £3 for prizes to the Guilsborough School, the only school at present in union with us that seems to call for a special grant. If by co-operation with the trustees and head-master we can give such publicity and dignity to this small prize, as all may believe to be in the power of our society, by a public examination, and by awarding it possibly through the hands of our chairman at one of our annual meetings, we shall at least be offering a useful stimulus to the boys in this particular school. This, however, would not be wholly meeting the object of the original grant, which was to originate an active competition between the several middle schools in the county, and to reward not the best scholars in each school, but the two or three best scholars on the general examination. Though as regards the grammar schools in themselves this is at present impracticable, yet the same object may be in a degree obtained, and at far less expense and trouble to the society, by applying the £7 remaining of the £10 grant for awarding prizes to those candidates resident in this county, whether in schools connected with us or not, who shall have most distinguished themselves in the middle-class examinations of Oxford or Cambridge during the present year. As it would be extremely difficult in the present experimental state of matters to lay down a set of fair and definite rules to meet all the cases that may arise, your committee propose that, in the first instance, you should entrust to their discretion the formation of such general rules as will meet the occasion, though no final award will be made without being first submitted to the sanction of a general meeting.

Digitized by Google

"Your committee have been in renewed correspondence with the president and fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, in regard to the re-establishment of the Grammar School at Brackley. Though the propositions of co-operation made on behalf of the society have been declined, yet your committee are happy in reporting that there is now every prospect of a good school being shortly opened there, attended with circumstances which promise well for the ecclesiastical as well as educational prospects of the town.

"At Northampton no further step has been taken for the organization, so much required, of a good middle school, either by the extension of the old foundations, or by a new establishment, on the proprietary or other system. Your committee feel that until this matter is heartily taken up by those whom it most concerns, any active movement on their part would be worse than useless. They have more than once endeavoured to give an impetus to a movement in this direction, and though their efforts have been hitherto unsuccessful, they are still prepared to avail themselves of any opportunity that may offer where their assistance in providing so desirable an object may not be deemed intrusive."

Mr. James added that since the report was written the masters at the schools at Guilsborough, Kettering, and Brackley had intimated their intention to send in for examination.

Lord Alwyne Compton read the report of the Sewing School Committee as follows:—

The Sewing Prize Report.—"The following is the list of prizes awarded for needlework, to the schools in the Eastern Division of the county.

"Out of the 64 schools only 13 competed; and of those, two failed to obtain any prizes for cards of merit. The work in general was far superior to that sent in last year from the schools in the Eastern Division.

	1st class prize.	2nd class.	Card of merit.
Barnack	1	1	0
Brigstock	0	0	1
Great Billing	1	0	1
Cosgrove	0	2	0
Cogenhoe	0	0	1
Geddington	0	2	1
St. Giles', Northampton	1	1	3
Little Houghton	1	1	2
Peterborough	0	0	2
Rockingham	0	2	1
Rushton	0	2	0

Arthingworth and Raunds sent in work, which the ladies were reluctantly compelled to reject without awarding to it any prize whatsoever."

The Rev. H. J. Barton read the Inspector's Report as follows:—

Inspectors' Report.—"Since the annual meeting last February we have examined nearly all the schools in union with the society.

"If you are pleased again to adopt the suggestion made last year with regard to the Langham prizes, viz., that two, a first and a second, should be awarded in each division of the county, we beg to recommend the master at Kettering for the first, and the master at Oundle for the second prize, in the eastern division, and, in the Western division, the masters of All Saints, Northampton, and Middleton Cheney, for the first and second respectively. We are glad to take this opportunity of testifying to the careful manner in which the children are taught in the schools at Eydon, Harleston, Pitsford, Castle Ashby, and in All Saints' and St. Giles' Girls School, Northampton. It would have been our duty to recommend the mistresses of the two last-named schools for prizes, if the terms of Sir James Langham's will had not limited the competition to schoolmasters exclusively. As the number of well-trained and efficient mistresses in the county has been much increased of late and is still increasing, it seems very desirable that they should no longer be shut out from a share in this benefaction, £10 has hitherto been given yearly in prizes from the Langham fund, but it is now possible to grant a larger sum. We would suggest, therefore, that the society should procure from the Charity Commissioners the requisite authority for the establishment of one or, still better, two prizes for mistresses. There can be little doubt that this would not be at variance with the intention of the benefactor, especially as no deduction need be made from the sum awarded to masters. To establish separate prizes for mistresses appears a better plan than to simply increase the number of prizes, and open the competition to masters and mistresses indiscriminately.*

"We would draw the attention of the meeting to the circumstance that Middleton Cheney has gained a prize for the third time in succession, and that the three remaining prizes have been carried off by town schools. It is certainly a matter for consideration, (1) whether a school, after winning a prize two years in succession, should be allowed to compete on equal terms, or indeed at all, the third year; and (2) whether separate prizes should not be given to town and country schools. The chance of winning a Langham prize is, at present, a great stimulus among country schools; it will cease to be so if the village schoolmaster finds himself pitted against the town schoolmaster, who holds, very likely a first-class certificate, and has a staff of pupil teachers to assist him. We would venture to suggest that the original plan of three prizes to schoolmasters for the whole county should be resumed, of which one should be given to the town and two to the country; and that of the two for mistresses, if two can be granted, town and country should each have one.*

"Until last year, the society's inspectors examined only village schools. But it was determined, at a committee meeting last February, that, for the future, inspection should be offered to the town schools. It was accepted in almost every instance. The number of schools under inspection has consequently been increased by nearly a third. Owing to this cause, and also to the continually increasing number of village schools in union, and still more to the growing wish on the part of school managers to avail themselves of regular diocesan inspection, the inspectors' duties have become much more laborious than formerly. In the eastern division, for example, the number of schools inspected never before reached 40; this year it has exceeded 60. We think it will be impossible to find amateur inspectors who can spare, from their own parish work, sufficient time for the examination of so many schools, and we, therefore, propose that the number of inspectors should be increased to seven. There is a difficulty in multiplying the number of inspectors, with regard to the Langham prizes. The comparative merits of the competing schools could not, of course, be fairly judged by different examiners. It was to meet this difficulty that we propose to fix the number at seven. We would divide the county into six districts, each of which should have its own inspector. The office of the seventh inspector should be to examine the schools in all six districts which wish to contend for the Langham prizes. For this purpose, all schools intending to compete should signify their intention to the secretaries early in each year. This addition to the number of inspectors will not entail any increase of expense on the society. The usual grant of £70 will be quite sufficient.

"We have, during the past year, drawn up a new form of inspectors' report, which we now submit to the meeting. It is intended to represent the highest standard at which we think it desirable that national schools should aim. Our objects in adopting this form were—1. That the school should be judged and reported on relatively to this standard, 2. That the form should admit of being filled up easily and rapidly; 3 That it should convey an immediate impression to the eye of the school's merits or demerits, as the case may be."

Lord Alwyne Compton read the General Report as follows:

General Committee's Report.—"We beg to report, again, a steady advance in the society's work. The Training Institution at Peterborough is opened with 15 students. It will be seen by the report of the Training School Committee that the continuance of the Government grants, on which the college is mainly dependent for

* The number of our schools in Northamptonshire under the sole management of mistresses is about one-half; of the remainder, the number under the combined management of a master and mistress exceeds the number under masters only.

* It was found necessary, in awarding the sewing prizes for girls, to make a distinction between town and country schools.

Digitized by Google

its support, is conditional on the society's erecting complete buildings during the year 1860. It is quite impossible for your committee to judge how far this is practicable till plans have been prepared, and approved by the Committee of Council, and estimates made of the probable expense of such plans. In such case, the Government grants at the rate of £50 for each student whom the building is calculated to accommodate. A grant may, also, probably be obtained from the National Society; and the remainder of the expense would have to be defrayed from the funds now in the hands of the society (amounting on the general account to about £800), to which may be added the proceeds of the sale of the former Central School, or from further donations to be specially raised for the purpose. In the latter case, your committee hope that an appeal to the other chief landowners in the diocese, and still more in the neighbourhood of Peterborough, might be attended with some advantage.

"The grants toward building schools during the past year have amounted to £30, besides which £20 have been granted in books and school apparatus from the Joint Book Fund of this and the Parent Society. The church collections received during the year have amounted to £4 8s. 3d. It is in contemplation to take steps, with the bishop's approval, for recommending to the clergy a regular triennial collection, the proceeds to be equally divided between this society and the National Society. In some churches such collections are made annually. The amount now in hand in the Church Collection Fund is only £18. We beg to recommend that an additional grant of £30 be made to the Training and Parochial School Committee, to be added to this fund, to enable them to make grants towards the building of schools. In the Book Fund there is a surplus of £80, of which £45 is, by the vote of the last annual meeting, applicable to evening schools only.

"The Ladies' Sewing Prize Committee have this year distributed four first-class and eleven second-class prizes, and twelve cards of merit, to the schools in the eastern division of the county. Next year the western division will be taken again.

"The inspection of schools in union with the society during the past year has been conducted by the Rev. Mr. Clay and the Rev. Mr. Capes, to whom the best thanks of the society are due for the great trouble they have taken. Your committee regret sincerely that the services of these gentlemen can no longer be secured. It would, perhaps, be advisable to increase the number of inspectors, thus approaching the system pursued by some diocesan boards, where a large number of persons take each a few schools, and thus divide the work among them. There are some difficulties, no doubt, in such an arrangement; but, should it be practicable to carry it out in this county, we believe that some saving of expense might result to the society. We purpose, however, that the same grant as last year should be made on account of inspection, trusting that it may not be necessary to expend the whole of it.

"The Reformatory Committee continue to report well of their branch of the society's work. The great difficulty they have to contend with is that of placing out the lads as their time of detention draws to a close. A commencement has been made of a special fund to assist them to emigrate, when such a step appears advisable or necessary. At the same time the committee has always kept in view that, while it is the wish of the society to assist in restoring those who, often not by their own fault, have entered into the paths of crime, care must be taken not to make their lot enviable to the honest; nothing must be done for them beyond what is really necessary for their permanent reformation.

"No further steps have yet been taken with respect to the establishment of a middle-school, at Northampton, or with respect to prizes for such schools. It will be seen by the report of the committee for middle-schools that they wish to obtain at Northampton, or in some other place convenient for those who reside in the midland counties, a university examination; for this object they propose, with the approval of this meeting, to expend a sum not exceeding £10 from their special fund.

"The balance at the banker's at the close of 1858 amounted to £636 2s. 9d., besides £1200 funded capital. The payments for the last quarter of 1858 will reduce this balance to £160. The former Central Schools have not yet been sold, but are let for one year additional to St. Giles' parish, at the rental of £65. The parish wished to be allowed to hold them for one year more at the nominal rent of £4, but the committee feel that, considering the great expenses the society has to meet, they should not be justified in acceding to their request; it would, in fact, have been equivalent to a grant of £61 to a single parish. The committee beg to recommend that they be authorized by this meeting to sell the site, subject to their lease, at an adequate price.

"In conclusion, the committee beg to recommend the following grants from the General Fund for the year 1859, which will be submitted seriatim to the meeting:—

	£	s.	d.
Inspection	70	0	0
Clerk's salary	25	0	0
Messenger's	1	10	0
Printing and stationery	30	0	0
Sewing prizes	5	0	0
Towards building schools	30	0	0
Grammar school prizes	10	0	0
	£171	10	0

After a vote of thanks to the Secretaries, Lord Alwyne Compton and the Rev. H. J. Barton, The Rev. H. J. Barton said he hoped the gentlemen present at that meeting would tell the rest of the great landed proprietors what was being done, what had been done, and what, with their assistance, was proposed to be done. They had every reason to be thankful for the support the society had received, from the five hundred and three hundred pounds of the great landowners, down to the ten shillings and five shillings annual subscriptions from the less wealthy, but not less earnest supporters of the good cause. He would, however, say one word more about the charge that they were undertaking too much, and as far as education was concerned, doing too little. He could quote the very highest authority for saying that they had not done so, but, on the contrary, were the only society who had embraced the whole question, and had stopped the mouths of all gainsayers. It would almost always be found that they who went forth to seek the lost were generally the very parties who would do the most to save the upright, and they might depend upon it that the reformatory schools would never interfere with the honest poor man's education. He was almost ashamed of trespassing upon their time so long, but there was one circumstance he wished to mention. There was in the reformatory school a boy, now indeed a young man, who came with their superintendent from the Home in the East, and, from the influence for good which had been brought to bear upon him, since he had been with them, his conduct had been most exemplary, and he was at the present time one of their most useful servants. He (Mr. Barton) was sorry to say that they were about to lose him, not from any fault, but because he had determined, and he, (Mr. Barton) thought he had determined wisely, to emigrate. In one respect in that case there was a similarity to the great Leviathan, for they wanted to get the steam up, and if, in addition to what the youth had saved, £5 could be raised for him, he would consider himself a rich man. They had ventured, as secretaries, to head the subscription with small amounts, feeling sure that the sum would be easily and willingly raised, and that it was really and honestly deserved.

W. Smyth, Esq., proposed that the General Committee be authorised to sell the premises in St. Giles'-street, which was seconded by H. P. Markham, Esq., and carried unanimously.

After a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting broke up.

A drinking fountain will soon be erected in the west area of the London Royal Exchange. The figure will be of bronze. The stone supporting the right foot and the drinking vase will be a portion of a basaltic column from the Giant's Causeway. The frame of the pedestal is to be of polished red granite; the centre, ornate panels of bronze; and the styles and rails surrounding the panels of polished Cornish serpentine; the whole raised on three cast-iron steps. The water, constantly flowing, will be supplied from the mains of the New River Company, passing through one of Messrs. Ransomes' patent charcoal and sand filters. The cup into which the water falls will be of enamelled ware, or of glass, secured to the pedestal by a chain from the bottom. The two side cups will be of similar construction. The waste water will be caught by a hollow in the top of the basalt column, and, after passing downward over the outside of the filter, be conducted to a dog-trough at the base of the pedestal. During hot weather it is intended that rough ice shall be placed round the filter, which may be done at a trifling expense. Thus a constant fresh supply of pure cold water will be gratuitously afforded to all comers.

Digitized by Google

STATE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

LANCASTER, MASSACHUSETTS.

We are glad to have another opportunity of drawing attention to the labours of our Transatlantic brethren, in the cause of Education. We have received the annual report of the Industrial School for girls at Lancaster, Massachusetts, and from it make the following extracts:—

The Trustees of the School report to his Excellency the Governor, and the Honourable Council of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, that since August 28th, 1856—

There have been received into the school	121
There have been indentured . .	17
And there are now in the school, (Oct. 1st, 1858)	95
The average number of the year is .	94
The amount of appropriation for the year 1858 was .	Dlrs. 13,000 00
Of which there has been expended and appears by the Treasurer's Report appended hereto	11,943 28
Balance . .	Dlrs. 1,056 72

During the year the girls have been employed in needlework and in knitting, and we have sold and have ready for sale socks to the value of 368.44 dollars.

The expenses of the farm, during the year over its receipt is 256.33 dollars.

The report of the Farmer which is appended will show the kind and extent of improvement and production. In this connection, and as the economy and advantage of retaining this part of our property has been questioned, it may be well to notice some of the reasons for and against that policy. It is objected that the idea of a farm is not in harmony with that of an industrial school for girls: that in cities and elsewhere no such appendage exists to such institutions; and that it must be quite unnecessary in the agricultural district of Lancaster: that crops are precarious, and so our investment is liable to risk and loss; and that the manual labour needful to the good conduct of a farm is more than would be required about the proper out of doors management of such an institution as ours. On the other hand it may be stated that, the whole original purchase money having been ten thousand dollars, the buildings which were on the ground, namely, the three-story brick building called the Stilwell house, the spacious two-story wooden building of the Superintendent, and that occupied by the Farmer, together with the barns and outbuildings appropriate to a large farm, are, of themselves, worth the first cost of the whole property: so that it may be said that the farm portion has cost nothing. But to make the whole profitable as an investment, certain improvements must be made. The farming land had been exhausted by crops or deteriorated by neglect; and for the development of its internal strength, and to bring out its hidden value, it was deemed judicious that, first, crops should be produced, and that then it should be laid down to grass. This has been done; and during the last two years a system of renovation and of culture has been introduced, which has restored the soil to its original vigour. It is now, therefore, the opinion of Mr. Boynton, the farmer, who has a high reputation in his profession, that the farm can not only produce the cost of its management, but that the receipts for supplies to the institution and otherwise will next year equal the expenses, and that thereafter the farm will be a source of profit.

It is also very important that there should be no near neighbours to the buildings occupied by our pupils. To avoid the possibility of such proximity, a small piece of adjacent land was bought about a year ago. And this argument will have increased force as new buildings may be added, according to the prospective growth of the establishment. We conclude, not reciting some other collateral arguments, by expressing the opinion that, on the whole, the farm is of much advantage to the institution, and that both economy and general policy warrant its continuance under its present management.

In regard to the economy of our institution of ninety inmates in place of sixty the previous year, although it has been carried on at less expense this year than last, we would say that the measure of duty is not to be found in the reduction of expense to a minimum point. Neither production of material value by its inmates, nor success in a petty struggle to keep down expense, ought to be the ambition of a board of trustees appointed to conduct the charitable and reformatory institutions of a great Commonwealth. We humbly conceive, however we may come short of its discharge, that ours is a higher and holier duty. We shall, therefore, present no comparison of our expense with that of institutions somewhat similar in other parts of the country; nor shall we admit that our office would have been any more worthily performed, could we show a saving of a few more cents per head, in our annual average of cost. But, assuming that to save character, to redeem human beings from sin and shame, has been our grave duty and responsible trust, we will briefly sketch what has been done in this behalf, referring for more particulars and interesting details to the annexed report of the Superintendent.

We began this experiment, (no institution exactly similar existing in the world,) by aiming in the management of our pupils, to cultivate self-respect, and to develope self-sustaining power in each child.

We sought to change the heart as well as the conduct: to establish character as well as behaviour: to create and confirm principle as the law of the mind and of life; and we proposed to govern not by vigour, but by moral suasion; and to control, not so much the bodies as the minds and hearts of the members of our several families. And now, sufficient variety of character having come under our régime, and time enough having elapsed to test its power, we have the honour and the joy to express our conviction, that the success of the scheme has equalled our most lively hopes.

Although our progress has not been equal in all, nor according to our wishes in each particular case, yet there is not one of our flock who has not been benefited to a valuable degree in physical and moral health. When we consider from what diverse quarters come the members of our households: from what haunts of sin and shame some have been snatched away; how much hereditary taint of character and of physique was ingrained in others: what absence always of good influences had enfeebled some: what abundance of evil contagion had polluted more: what ungovernable temper in some, and what weakness of purpose in others, had become the law of the mind: and that these and many other diversities were, all at once almost, and not by small and far between instalments, brought under one control, and that administered by hands new to the responsible and delicate duty, it will be seen that we assumed a perilous task. Yet in two years, by the faithful and unceasing co-operation of the Superintendent and Matrons, the system has borne abundant fruit, in some of our charges twenty, in some fifty, and in some an hundred-fold, and the once experiment is now an accomplished fact.

Some practical testimony have we of establishment of character, in the fact that of seventeen bound out to service during the year not one has been returned for moral delinquency. Improvement in general health and in comeliness of person is apparent, and medical gentlemen who have visited the institution have especially noticed these points.

In control of temper and personal purity there has been a marvellous change, and a marked growth in that dignity and modesty which are equally the charm and the pride of women. Moral sense has been developed. Said a little girl who was overheard talking to her companion, "I didn't know I had a conscience 'till I came here." Another, who knew not even her letters when she came here, now can commit to memory an hundred verses in a week.

One who was taken from the streets, convicted of a criminal charge, who was morose and sullen of temper and unable to write, now has religious exercises in her room with some of her associates. Another who set fire to one of the buildings in a spell of passion, is now one of the most industrious and obedient of our number.

In going about the grounds many pretty improvements are noticed, which have been made by the voluntary labour of the children. Each house has its flower-bed; and in front of the chapel a flower-garden blooms with the bouquets which daily grace the table of the Superintendent during the services in the chapel.

If, as a fine writer* has said, "a lover of nature is not likely to be a bad man, because such love pre-occupies the mind so as to arm it against evil approaches," how much should we rejoice when the objects of our anxious solicitude find a congenial employment amongst plants and flowers.

A form of the monitorial system to aid

* Hillard.

Digitized by Google

in self-control has been introduced, and some of the girls are made accountable for others: the advanced girls (not necessarily arranged according to age) having the oversight of others not so firm in character.

Day by day we see the marks of progress achieved, and the signs of promise for the future. Indeed a tangible proof of what has been done is found in the fact, that the Superintendent is confident that from our members may be selected material abundantly qualified for the post of assistant-matron in the new houses for which we hope funds may be appropriated at this session of the legislature.

Now being aware that the expediency of the appropriation which we ask for, at least two more houses, must depend both on the excellency of our principle of administrating the charity, and on the number of subjects needing its benefits, the Trustees would remark that in each of our families and in all the business and the intercourse of the establishment, the principle of kindness and of fellowship between the authorities and the children reigns supreme. Deeming this the secret of true government, we have applied it, and it has reformed and saved all whose redemption has crowned our labours and swelled our hearts with joy.

Rigid discipline and the penitentiary system, austere and lofty bearing of authority, have failed and will for ever fail to reform character. Bolts and bars and whips may suppress the manifestation of evil, but the heart can only be changed so that its spontaneous product shall be good fruit, by the application of the law of kindness. Human nature revolts against force: under its savage control either the spirit is broken and the soul is crushed, or in minds of native energy the hard demoniacal passions are inflamed. The victim applies to his humble case the great political truth that "resistance to tyrants is obedience to God." And no tyrant ever raised, or reformed, or refined a people.

Seizing on this truth we started with one sure element of success; and our other has been the family system; by which subdivision of our numbers into small groups and in separate houses, a closer supervision is had over the children, and opportunities are all the time afforded for direct operation on the character by the matrons, whom the children address by the endearing name of mother.

We would here in passing pay a tribute to the faithfulness and painstaking aid of the several matrons. Without their help in applying the principle the scheme would have failed. For their assiduous dealing with particular cases of different character, we owe them strong expressions of obligation. And we have to regret that the close confinement of our work has obliged one of them, of noble mind and high gifts, Mrs. C. M. S. Carpenter, to remove to another and less laborious field of service.

And now the application of these two principles just spoken of, the mode of training and of arrangement into family groups, obliges us to present the urgent necessity of two more houses, and the establishment of two more families. Since our quarters have been full, numerous applications have been received and rejected. It was a painful necessity which compelled us to publish in the newspapers a notice that no more subjects could be received.

The material all over the State is most abundant, and we have positive information that some, not having been received by us when adjudged by the commissioners to be fit candidates, have fallen into crime and become castaways, while waiting for a vacancy. There are very many poor creatures not yet confirmed in vice, but who having no natural protectors, no friends, can only be saved by the interposition of the State. By the aid of the Hon. Judge Rogers of the Municipal Court of Suffolk County, we have reports from the different police districts in Boston, which show in that city after an examination not very thorough, that there are 230 girls who do not attend school and are not under the control of parents or guardians. Of a large proportion of individuals of this number we have particular reports: and our conclusion cannot be avoided, that these girls are all surely tending to ruin. In other counties of the State, especially in those having the large manufacturing towns, it is the same; and nothing but the prompt interposition of the Commonwealth can save this unfortunate class from falling. And why should not the State interpose? Not with lagging service, but heartily, promptly! Those whom the world gives up, why should not the State take up? Why should not the body politic of a Christian community redeem those who are perishing, and snatch from death those who are just overhanging the fatal fall?

Passing the argument of Christian duty and humanity, does not public security demand that those who will become the women of the country should receive the protection, the training, the culture of the State? As are the women so are the men of a nation; refinement, dignity, modesty of women are equally, by an alternate action, the cause and the reflex of those traits in a people. Her life and conduct give tone to the family circle, and by a thousand influences make the character of the young, and so of a race.

To meet the known demand, and that which will be made from existing materials, we propose the immediate construction of, at least, two wooden buildings, suitable each for the accommodation of not more than thirty inmates.

We also need, at once, a barn of capacity to receive the grain and produce of the farm and to serve as a storehouse for the institution. Much loss is suffered every year by the decay of vegetables and injury to stores caused by the want of such a building. For more particular reasons we refer to the report of the farmer which is annexed

It is the dictate of willing gratitude on our part that we should acknowledge the generous gift of 100 dlrs. from C. Gayton Pickman, Esq., sent to the Trustees for the use of the school after a recent visit. This liberal donation shows the impression made on unbiased minds by the inspection of our little families and of the institution. We also have much pleasure to acknowledge the gift of an ornamental fountain from George Cummings, Esq., of Lancaster.

During the year one of our number, Dr. James Dean, M.D., has been removed by death. Distinguished by rare scientific attainments and by amiable temper, high moral worth, and correct judgment, we would here record our regret at his loss.

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES BUNKER; DANIEL DENNY; WILLIAM R. LAWRENCE; FRANCIS B. FAY; JACOB FISHER; THOS. TUCKER; GARDNER BREWER.

October 12, 1858.

This report is followed by one from the Superintendent and Chaplain upon the expenses and condition of the school for the year ending October 1, 1858, together with the acompanying remarks. After giving the farm accounts, and a present valuation of the farming utensils and stock, a somewhat curious tabular statement is given, which we copy.

TABULAR STATEMENT PRESENTING THE CONDITION OF THE SCHOOL FOR THE YEAR 1857–8.

No. in school October 1, 1857	92
received to October, 1858	22
present in school October, 1858	95
largest number present during the year	97
average for the year	94
indentured during the year	15
" from the opening, (two years)	17
received into school from the opening	121
Of this number there are now—
in families	17
with parents	3
in lunatic hospital	1
discharged for Rainsford Island	2
escaped (last year)	2
deceased	1
in school	95
Received the present year from—
Suffolk County	4
Middlesex County	6
Worcester County	7
Essex County	3
Norfolk County	1
Hampshire County	1
Received from opening of school from—
Suffolk County	29
Middlesex County	21
Worcester County	24
Essex County	18
Norfolk County	11
Hampshire County	3
Bristol County	8
Berkshire County	3
Barnstaple County	2
Plymouth County	1
Franklin County	1
Number of American children from opening	85
Irish	24
English	6
Scotch	2
German	2
French	1
Italian	1
One or both parents deceased, or separated	85
Of the indentured girls, there are in—
Worcester County	9
Middlesex County	6
Franklin County	1
Lawrence, Kansas	1

By the increase of numbers, and by the experience gained in previous years, the current expenses, per capita, have been considerably reduced. Every article of apparel, except shawls and shoes, have this year been made by the girls. Whatever may be the particular service upon which a girl shall hereafter enter, each one, in her turn, shares in every form of housework, and if permitted to remain a suitable period in the school, will be familiar with all the details of domestic economy, from the care of the kitchen to the making of her own dresses.

Digitized by Google

A coloured girl, of fourteen years of age, after a lingering consumption, in which she received the constant attention of her companions—affording them a new and powerful discipline—was carried by them to the grave.

During the year we have exceeded our accommodations in the number of girls admitted, still we have been forced to refuse almost daily applications from commissioners and persons interested in the cases of criminal children. Many of these applications have been of a very pressing character, and often urged by a personal visit to the school.

We are not unmindful of the fact that generous provisions for paupers naturally increase the demand for public charity, and that the thoughtful benevolence of the State in behalf of exposed and criminal girls may be expanded to an undue extent, and tend to relieve families from the burden and training of children, who are in circumstances adequate to enable them to meet their parental obligations. To this it may be answered:—

1. That while the terrible "social evil," as it is called, fills the streets of our larger cities with a corrupting vice, and our houses of correction with young women, the State, as a matter both of economy and benevolence, will look patiently upon the occasional impositions to which it is subjected by unnatural parents, in its efforts to cut off the supplies to this flood of corruption by the reformation of exposed childhood.

2. The defence of the charity and treasury of the State rests in the hands of the commissioners under the "Act." They are made acquainted with all the facts in each case, and have every opportunity to learn if the friends of the child are seeking to obtain a relief from a burden that they ought to bear and would assume without fatal injury to the child, if the school did not exist; or if she is in the high road to crime and ruin. Perhaps if the probate judges were the only commissioners, and the process of committing a child were thus rendered a little more difficult, only the most pressing cases, in which manifest necessities urged to considerable exertion, would be presented for examination. Certainly none but those who have been criminal in their conduct, (but still children,) or those in whom the criminal tendency is unmistakeably manifested, ought, in the present limited state of our accommodations, to be sent to us. And of this class, as we have only room for a certain number, and a choice must necessarily be made from a multitude of applicants, a discrimination based upon natural talent, peculiar exposure, or tender youth, may be properly made. Those certainly promise to afford the largest returns who are the youngest and the farthest removed from mental weakness and idiocy.

3. It should not be forgotten, in considering this question of expense, that if the commissioners are faithful in the discharge of their duty, the prevention of a proper subject for our training from entering the school, will not be a saving of so much outlay upon the part of the State. If these children are already, or presumptively will be, criminals, they will certainly burden and heavily tax the community in other forms, and become the occupants of gaols or poor-houses. As to the comparative cheapness or wisdom of providing for their restoration to good society, over their detention for crimes or for abject poverty, no one can, for a moment, hesitate in his opinion. An officer in bringing one girl from Newburyport, referred to another case that had come under his professional supervision. A girl only fourteen years old, without proper guardians, had fallen upon the street. She was arrested for night-walking and sentenced for six months to the house of correction—not long enough, even if there were virtue in penitentiary discipline, to secure reformation, but sufficiently long to blast the character and confirm for life the terrible course of sin. In only a fortnight after the expiration of her sentence, this girl (a child still) was arrested for the same offence and sentenced for the same period to the same gaol. Who can feel any surprise at this? What other door opened before this girl but that of the house of death or the prison?

4. Some effectual and humane law may yet be established by the legislature, by which a portion or all of the expense of supporting an inmate may be obtained from parents or from the cities and towns in which they reside. We are receiving a small sum from this source at the present time; and there can be but little doubt but that others ought to aid in the same manner.

5. In our own case, without any additional expense for superintendency; with a diminished outlay for assistants, as we shall be able to supply, in part, the officers of new houses from the girls that we have trained, and in houses of much cheaper construction, we could undertake safely the care of twice our present number.

As to the positive results of our efforts thus far we would speak modestly. Personal reformation is a serious and slow work. Our labour will be hereafter exposed to a stern trial, and it remains for time to show how permanent are the impressions that we are now making upon the hearts and lives of these children. Certainly all philosophy and experience are in our favour. If we may rely upon the unanimous judgment of those who have looked in upon us, in our daily labours and our Sabbath services, the external improvement and the mental and moral advancement of the children have equalled every reasonable expectation.

The conviction grows stronger in our minds of the safety and even expediency of having older and younger girls together in the same family, rather than to have them classified by age. It is rarely the older girl simply that corrupts the younger, but it is the decidedly and persistently bad girl, whether old or young, that spreads a dreadful leaven in the company. The young children that come to us, for the most part, have little to learn of evil, but the personal experience of it, and there does not seem to be an inclination with the older inmates to make them the confidents of their sad lives. We have found one of the most impressive appeals to the older girls to be based upon the effect of their example and words upon the children. In a number of instances they have chosen one of the younger girls to watch over, and it is quite affecting to notice the sensitive anxiety with which they mark the conduct and reprove the least semblance of wrong. Among this class (the older girls) are some of great promise, and there are several that we should not hesitate to as teachers or as assistants in the kitchen, in a new house, and over a company of girls with whom they have not so intimately associated, as the families in which they have been trained.

To the Heavenly Parent, by whose providence and grace we have so happily reached this stage in our history, and upon whose promised aid is based all our expectations in the future, we would humbly offer our devout thanksgivings. The religious state of the school has been encouraging. The services on the Sabbath, and at the morning chapel devotions, are marked by a peculiar reverence and tenderness; a moral sensibility has been developed, and in some instances a well-attested religious character appears to be established.

It only remains for me, gentlemen, to express my gratitude to you for the uniform kindness and support which I have received at your hands, both in health and in sickness, during the year.

Respectfully submitted,

BRADFORD K. PEIRCE.

UNMARRIED WET-NURSES.

THE following letter appeared in The Lancet, and, as bearing on two questions on which we have already commented, namely, "The Social Evil," and "Lying-in-Hospitals," we give it insertion. There appears to be reason in it, and it does not militate against the arguments we have elsewhere advanced against unnecessary wet-nursing; rather perhaps it makes for it; for if it be objected to employ such characters, let mothers perform their own proper duties where they can.

To the Editor of The Lancet.

SIR,—You have animadverted in your "Medical Annotations" of January 29th, p. 113, on the attempt that has been lately made to have fallen women employed as wet-nurses, and thus to open to them a path of return from vice. I am, heart and soul, an advocate for that scheme; and, therefore, I take upon myself not so much to reply to the remarks in your columns, as to point out the grounds on which myself and many other members of the medical profession think it highly desirable, and intend, until convinced of our error, to continue acting on it.

In the first place, let none suppose it is a new invention, proposed for the first time. Hundreds of mothers are physically unable to nurse their own children; hundreds more ought not, and are told by their medical advisers that they ought not, on account of disease or debility; and for years past, and every year more and more largely, this want has been supplied to a certain extent by single women.

Digitized by Google

No accoucheur in extensive practice can shut his eyes to the demand for wet-nurses. He has to meet that requirement every day; and I ask him (whoever he is) if he has ever been able to supply it exclusively from the ranks of married women?

There is the demand, already largely supplied by the very class that most wants help. We only ask that the supply may be enlarged and regulated. Heaven knows there are enough to select from. Remember it is not street-walkers nor professional prostitutes we are speaking of. We are speaking of the young house-maid or pretty parlour-maid in the same street in which the sickly lady has given birth to a sickly child, to whom healthy milk is life, and anything else death. With shame and horror the girl bears a child to the butler, or the policeman, or her master's son. Of course she is discharged; of course her seducer is somewhere else; of course, when her savings are spent, she will have to take, with shame and loathing, to a life of prostitution. Now, she is healthy and strong, and there is a little life six doors off, crying out for what she can give, and wasting away for the want of it, and in the nursing of that baby is a chance, humanly speaking, of her salvation from the pit of harlotry.

Send her to a reformatory, say some. Why? Is not the best reformatory a helping hand stretched out in the way of honest work and honest wages to the poor girl that the devils of want and despair are pushing into the sin she shrinks from? Why send her into an establishment meant for harlots, not for her? And if you send her to a reformatory, the lady's baby may die. You cannot get married women, or, if you do, they are of a kind that make the anxious doctor long after the unmarried. A married woman who voluntarily leaves her own child for money may not be much better than the girl accidentally seduced, who nurses another's child for bread. It is not well to inquire what they were before they married. It is not safe to look too closely into their present life and habits, if you wish to keep them, or your own peace of mind about the child. It is not wise to be too acute in your inquiries about the husband, and the nature of the conjugal solicitude that keeps him eternally hanging about your area steps, or lounging in the back kitchen. You know the worst of the parlour-maid that has recently fallen. You certainly know the best of the married wet-nurse, who hawks about her breast of milk, accompanied by her husband and the certificate, but you know little else.

Again, if they were, one and all, paragons of virtue and maternal rectitude, they are not to be got; and it speaks right well for English working mothers that they are not. Every accoucheur will bear me out in this, that no wages can procure married women of any protence to respectability to raise one-half the children whose mothers cannot and will not.

Now, Sir, I assert, and I challenge anyone to disprove my assertion, that employment as wet-nurses is, beyond all comparison, the most harmless and the most effectual means of reclaiming fallen women. No other comes near it.

It offers no premium to vice. The most vehement objector will not venture to say that any girl submits to be seduced on the faith of getting employment as a wet-nurse when she becomes pregnant.

It does not encourage a continuance in vice. My own experience, and the testimony of the authorities of Queen Charlotte's and other lying-in institutions, convince me that in nearly every case the responsibility and enforced regular life attached to the employment, reclaim the girl at once and for ever from the unformed habit of sin. She has had an awful warning; and the charge of infancy, instead of being a burden crushing her into despair and ruin, is a solemn and joyful task, impressing that warning with irresistible force. They very rarely err again, but make the best and saftest servants that can be obtained.

The next question is—Is there anything in the fact of the secretion of breast-milk having been unblessed by the church, or unsanctified by the registrar's office, that ipso facto renders it, although still the natural and wholesome nourishment of the illegitimate child for whom Providence has prepared it, a deadly poison for any other? The writer of your "Medical Annotations" is led astray, I think, by the contemplation of possibility that never can arise. No one proposes to employ prostitutes. Prostitutes hardly ever have children. No accoucheur on the look-out for a wet-nurse could be deceived into taking a syphilitic harlot. Of taint from milk there is much more chance from a nurse who has patched up a bad reputation by marriage, and has been accepted on the faith of her certificate, than from an unmarried girl whose one fault would excite the most rigid and unceasing scrutiny.

Now, is there, can there be, any danger, bodily or moral, to an infant, from allowing a girl with her first child, carefully ascertained to be absolutely healthy, to nurse it? To herself or her employer we have seen there can be none. I deny that there can be any to the child.

Physically, the nurse would be ascertained, and is now ascertained, in every case, to be perfectly healthy, and her milk perfectly wholesome. There can be no doubt, no deception about this, if the selection of the nurse, as it always should, be made the doctor's task.

You express a fear as to the effect of "bursts of rage or passions of grief," or other temporary affections that are likely to affect the milk—more likely, he thinks, in a case where the previous life has been "disordered and irregular." Which is most likely to have healthy milk?—a sickly, feeble, nervous, dyspeptic, or fashionable mother, such as those generally are who cannot or will not nurse their children: or a penitent girl, rejoicing at her escape from final ruin, and bodily healthy and strong?

As to any permanent moral effect, I need only state the fear to calm it. It is feared that if a child be suckled for a few months by a woman who has illegally obtained the power of nursing it, though otherwise moral and healthy, that baby will, by virtue of its illegally-secreted food, contract a love of illegality and forbidden pleasure.

With what omniscient power should the previous lives, nay, thoughts and feelings, of all nurses—ay, and mothers—be scrutinized, if this be true! And how many infants, had we this power, would be condemned to the pap-bottle, indigestion, and the grave!

No, Sir, this philanthropy is not "ill-judged," and all requisite care is now, and will be, as the custom extends, "exerted to avoid the mischief that might flow from it."

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

W. Acton.

Queen Anne-street, Feb. 1859.

At the Ashton-under-Lyne council meeting, held on the 9th February, a letter was read from Alderman George Higinbottom, offering four drinking fountains, with waste-water troughs, one for each ward, on condition that the corporation supply them with water, and hereafter keep them in repair. The offer was cordially accepted.

In the House of Commons, February 15, Lord John Russell, in accordance with the request of the Social Science Congress, moved for leave to bring in a bill to amend and consolidate the law relating to bankruptcy and insolvency. He explained, that among other alterations, it was proposed to abolish the legal distinction now existing between traders and non-traders, and to give a certain majority of creditors the power, if they thought proper, of seeking their remedy in the county court. With regard to voluntary settlements it was proposed that they should be effected when a majority in number, and four-fifths in value, of the creditors were favourable to such a mode of procedure. The motion was agreed to.

The "Expectation of Life."—Every man, woman, and child, has a property in life. What is the value of this property? Mr. Charles M. Willich has established an extremely easy rule for expressing this value—this "Expectation of Life," at any age from five to sixty. His formula stands thus:—$e=\frac{2}{3}(80-a)$; or, in plain words, the Expectation of Life is equal to two-thirds of the difference between the age of the party and 80. Thus, say a man is now 20 years old. Between that age and 80 there are 60 years. Two-thirds of 60 are 40; and this the sum of his expectation of life. If a man be now 60, he will have an expectation of nearly 14 years more. By the same rule, a child of five has a lien of life for 50 years. Every one can apply the rule to his own age. Mr. Willich's hypothesis may be as easily remembered as that by De Moivre in the last century, which has now become obsolete, from the greater acuracy of mortality tables. The results obtained by the new law correspond very closely with those from Dr. Farr's English Life Tables, constructed with great care from an immense mass of returns.—Athenæum.

Digitized by Google

Notices to Correspondents.

Our correspondents are requested to observe that we cannot be answerable for the insertion of any articles received after the 22nd of the month, or Advertisements after the 27th, though we shall always endeavour to meet their wishes.

N.B.—As "The Philanthropist" will be published in future by Mr. Tweedie, 337, Strand, the Editor requests that all communications may be forwarded to him there, where they will receive immediate attention.

Notice.—All sums due to "The Philanthropist" for Advertisements, and for Subscriptions from this date, to be paid to W. Tweedie, 337, Strand. No other person is authorised to give Receipts.

Jan. 1st, 1859.

* Attention is called to the following scale of charges for Advertisements :—*

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Five lines and under	0	2	6
Every additional line	0	0	4
A column	1	15	0
Half-page	2	5	0
A page	4	0	0

Charitable Institutions, 3*d.* per line.

N.B.—Advertisements in the first and last pages 1*d.* per line extra.

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE,

March 1, 1859.

THE PERMISSIVE BILL.

The judges of our land, the bulk of the magistracy, the recorders of our principal cities, the chaplains of our various gaols and houses of correction, the police inspectors, and all who are more or less directly or immediately connected with crime and its punishment, have over and over again given it as their opinion that drunkenness lies at the root of by far the largest portion of the crime and poverty for which England has to pay so dearly. Our own opinion perfectly coincides with this, and dealing as we desire to do with the causes of crime and poverty, as well as the amelioration of distress, it seems to us clear, that whatever improvements of a social character may be suggested and carried out, so long as this appalling evil is left as it is, and the facilities to it so widely authorised by those whose duty it is to care for the public welfare, so long shall we labour in vain to bring about a lasting change. Public-houses and beer-shops are seldom or never resorted to by any but the working classes and mechanics: the more wealthy portion of the population have little or no need of them. It is, therefore, a fair presumption that the magistracy by whom they are licensed are in many cases really ignorant of the true nature of the feelings of the poor and labouring classes, and that they license these worst of man-traps, frequently under a mistaken impression that they are acting in accordance with the wishes of the poorer (i e. the larger) portion of those over whom they have been appointed ministers for good. Men and women in the class alluded to, now the chief if not the only supporters of public-houses and beer-shops, have seldom opportunities of expressing their wishes at the time of licensing; the houses spring into existence, the temptation proves alluring, hard earnings are poured into the "public" treasury; homes are ruined; unions and prisons are filled; the blindness of infatuation falls upon hundreds and thousands; and the idea grows up, in the authoritative circles, that to suppress the beer houses, to check the public-houses, would be an interference, not to say with the rights, but with the wishes of the people. Yet what is the fact?—probably the great mass of these very people would heap their blessings upon the magistracy who could and did stop this great curse, as they well know it to be, to themselves and their families. We say probably; and we say it advisedly. In their cooler moments a very great majority of the men and women who spend their hard earnings in the public-house would be glad that there were no such places. We know a prison where the chaplain visited consecutively 137 prisoners, committed for being drunk and riotous, or committing common assaults arising out of drunkenness; and out of that number, no less than 86 expressed a distinct wish that there was no such stuff as beer or spirits to be got at; 32 said they should be glad if there were no public-houses, but they should like a glass at their own homes, and 19 did not care about it. But surely all doubt on the question of the wishes of the majority of the working men is set at rest by the canvass which is now going on to ascertain their opinions in reference to a Permissive Bill. A very important demonstration took place in Exeter Hall on Wednesday, February 17, when the platform was crowded up to the very roof, and the body of the Hall and galleries filled to overflowing, besides multitudes, eager to catch a word, standing in the passages. We observed that the greatest portion were of the working class, and chiefly males. The principles of the Permissive Bill were fairly laid before the meeting, successively by Dr. Jabez Burns; Professor F. W. Newman; Mr. Digby Seymour, Recorder of Newcestle; Mr. Pope; and the Chairman on the occasion, Sir Walter C. Trevelyan. The following resolution was received with the most enthusiastic cheering:—

"That this meeting is of opinion, that the only satisfactory mode of dealing with the traffic in strong drink, is to empower the people—who are, both as to its supposed convenience and its real burdens, interested in its existence—to decide for themselves as to its necessity.

"That this meeting, therefore, earnestly recommends the insertion of a clause in the forthcoming Government measure, which will enable the ratepayers of a given district to veto the licensing of public-houses and beer-shops within that district, as suggested by the United Kingdom Alliance.

"That a copy of this resolution be signed by the Chairman on behalf of this meeting, and forwarded to the Right Hon. S. Walpole, M.P., Her Majesty's Home Secretary of State."

But it may be said public meetings are carried away generally by the impulse of the moment, and do and act as their neighbours. We think the meeting too large to be so completely enthralled by fallacy. Reason was forcibly appealed to, and would have her sway; and to this we attribute the extraordinary unanimity. But there is yet a more expressive proof of public opinion as regards this Bill: a careful canvass has been made in many large and important towns and districts; and the following are some of the results of their returns:—

England.	Adults Canvassed. For.	Neut.	Agst.
Blackburn (partial)	106	6	15
Grimsby (partial)	167	75	59
Whitehaven (partial)	251	42	12
Coxwold (Ratepayers)	49	12	6
Manchester (St. George's Ward)	2589	451	246
" (St. John's Ward)	1144	273	94
" (Medlock-street Ward)	2978	848	308
Allhallow's Parish, Cumberland	104	18	12
Torpenhow " " ...	207	100	24
Crookdale Township " ...	83	1	1
Blisland	219	90	2
Salford (Blackfriars Ward) ...	108	7	5
Cowpen Township, Northumberland	350	38	22
Wickwar (Householders) ...	80	69	24
Blyth	252	179	11

Digitized by Google

	Adults Canvassed. For.	Neut.	Agst.
Bristol, St. Philip & Jacob's Parish (Householders)	488	110	134
„ St. Paul's (partial) „ ...	236	192	56
„ St. Peter's „ „ ...	133	71	9
Neilston...	1307		156
Sowerby Bridge	823	135	42
Wicksworth, St. John-street District (Householders)	60	28	5
„ (Adults) ...	71		7
Dean Raw, Haydon Bridge ...	350	101	16
Irlam's-o'th'-Height...	181	61	27
Brough, Yorkshire	148	12	5
Skipton (Householders)... ...	310	18	9
„ (Adults)	381		21
Cowling, Yorkshire (Householders)	264	44	9
Aspatria, Cumberland	659	97	73
Brawley, Pickering	40	16	1
Warrington (Adults)	2154		153
„ (Ratepayers) ...	2248	722	312
Egerton (Adults)	89		6
„ (Householders)	69		6
Worsley (ditto)	948	755	75
„ (Adults)	206
Madeley	556	102	34
South Newbald	29	7	0
Wrentham	140	82	4

Scotland.	Adults Canvassed. For.	Neut.	Agst.
Selkirk	997	240	86
Bellshill (Householders) ...	260	117	88
Do. (Adults)...	751	117	22
Greenock	14352	1858	349
Barrhead	2630	358	238
Galashiels	1811	299	186
Peaicuick, N.B.	450	49	85
Jervistown, Holytown (householders)	260	117	8
Do. do. (Adults) ...	751	117	22
Mearns	811	168	88
Balfron	511	131	16
Kelvinhaugh	994	112	14
Glasgow (partial)	10964	1300	798

Ireland.	Adults Canvassed. For.	Neut.	Agst.
Leanderg Townland, Tullylish Parish	172	4	2
Tullyrain „ „ ...	193	14	6
Drumnacamp „ „ ...	140	6	2
Lismafiffy „ Seapatrick & Tullylish	121	0	2
Ballykelly „ „	85	0	0
Ballylough „ Seapatrick Parish	83	3	6
Tonaghmore „ Magherally „ ..	95	22	4

These facts are too striking to permit of their being overlooked, by any at least who have the welfare of their fellow-creatures at heart. The passing of such a clause as is recommended, must be hailed as a boon to any neighbourhood. Public-houses will be compelled to be more careful. The dread of this permissive power would be constantly before their eyes. If those who mainly support them felt that they really wanted them, they would not use the permissive power; if they felt that they were being tempted to their ruin, and would rather be without them, there can be no solid reason why they should not be able to remove the bait which so allured them. In brief, if public-houses were required, they would exist, under, possibly, some better restraint than at present. If they are not required, why should they be forced upon the people to their ruin?

PHYSICAL EDUCATION AT OXFORD.

Education will always be defective, and not unfrequently positively injurious, when confined solely to the drawing out of the powers of the mind. Concurrently with the attempt to impart scholastic knowledge, and enlarge the faculties of memory, and of the reasoning powers, there must be a corresponding care for the developement of the physical capacities of the body. No one who is at all cognizant of the great modern improvement of our various scholastic establishments; the increased facilities for imparting information in an agreeable and concise form; the encouragement given to head knowledge by the system of public examinations and rewards; and the competition and emulation thereby called into play in the minds both of parents and offspring; can fail to observe that the state of education has considerably advanced of late years. At the same time the pressure on the mind in youth is considerably greater than it has been heretofore; and it has an evident tendency to increase. Now, whatever may be the advantages derivable from such early and erudite scholarship, certain we are that it will not compensate for a diminution of the physical faculties. It is, nevertheless, too frequently acquired at this irremediable expense. We have always thought that too much was expected from young minds. Not that young minds are incapable of putting into play very great mental exertions, resulting in the formation of prodigies of scholarship. But this can seldom or never be done, without a sad reaction on the body; and eventually on the mind. The young prodigy rarely lives out half his days, or generally ends them ruined both in intellect and bodily capacities. We attach more value to good physical training, were the bodily powers properly called into healthful action, in the days of childhood and youth, accompanied by a good foundation for subsequent mental training; the young might not carry off so many prizes for learning, in his very early days, but when both mind and body had attained a healthful vigour, the same great facilities which exist for imparting and acquiring information, would produce even more rapid results, and would be employed without the present danger to the physical powers, which too frequently accompanies the use of them with the very young. These being convictions strongly impressed upon our own mind, we are glad to find that the University of Oxford is assuming its legitimate place in favour of physical education. It has come forward in the van, and added the weight of its authority and example to the movement in this direction, and given it a further practical development, by the erection of a large and commodious building devoted to the purposes of gymnastic exercises. Oxford has been the first to establish a gymnasium, which, in point of size, and the scientific manner in which it has been fitted up, is superior to any institution of the kind, not only in England, but we believe in Europe.

"The building is situated in Alfred-street, in the thoroughfare leading from High-street to Christ Church, and is thus, as all Oxonians will recognise, nearly in the centre of the University and City. It is built of grey bricks, with semi-circular-headed doors and windows, having very deep reveals. A splayed and dentilled string course marks the line of the first floor, and is an important feature in the elevation. The upper-floor windows stand in semi-circular-headed recesses, springing from corbels, and above these is a handsomely moulded cornice in brickwork, finishing about 33 feet from the ground. The roof is in three divisions, the centre being a dome, square at the base, and diverging to an octagonal form at the top, which is surmounted by a lantern and ornamental vane. Altogether the building has a handsome appearance, and the architect has made effective use of simple materials.

"The interior is divided in the height by one floor, consisting of two large rooms, one at each end, connected by side galleries, which thus enclose a large quadrangular central space, open from the ground to the roof, a height of sixty feet, and is protected by a handsomely mounted handrail, with ornamental newells, and wooden trellis-work ballustrades. On the ground floor there is a well-fitted dressing-room, a private room, and staircase, the remaining portion forming a large room, sixteen feet high at each end, under the upper rooms, and open to the dome, in the centre. The timbers, which are varnished, are very massive, and interlace each other in the roofs and ceilings to form panels. The principal girders are flitched with iron, to prevent vibration, and supported by eight cast-iron ornamental columns, 12 inches in diameter, four of which on each side extend from the floor to the roof. The building is 84 feet long, 45 wide, and the highest part of the dome is 60 feet.

"Great care has been bestowed on the details of the structural part of the edifice, and there is a striking adaptation of the architectural features to the peculiar uses of the building. In the centre a very fine Norwegian pole, 60 feet high, has been fixed for climbing exercises. The timbers of the roof and ceiling afford facilities for fixing the numerous machines for gymnastic purposes, which machines, as here provided, are of an extensive and multifarious character. There will be exercises suited to pupils of all ages and conditions of health—some to train the body to its natural development, others to correct the evils of bad training, and others to test in the severest manner the matured powers of the accomplished athlete. Very young and delicate children even may here be directed in their play, in such a manner that any local weakness or defect may receive the undeviating effect of properly directed exercise. It may be presumed that fencing forms a most important branch of educational gymnastics, and accordingly one of the large upper rooms is devoted especially to that purpose. The large area on the ground floor is for exercises of a most extensive and varied character, as we have said, and, to ensure perfect safety, the floor is constructed of padding, soft, thick, and elastic. The numerous windows give plenty of light, and care has been taken that where it would be injurious to have the windows open, free interchange of air can be effected in the roof, without any risk to the health of the pupils; thus embracing all the advantages of open air, without any of its disadvantages.

Digitized by Google

"Mr. M'Laren, the projector of the institution, whose long experience and favoured position is well known to all Oxonians, has thus been enabled to erect a Gymnasium, in which the value of physical education, scientifically conducted, may be fully proved, and some copy of which we hope before long to see attached to every public school in the kingdom.

"Mr. Wilkinson is the architect, and Messrs. Joseph Castle and Co., are the builders, of the Gymnasium."

Could not the example be in some degree followed in the "People's Parks," which have been set aside for public amusement, in Birmingham and elsewhere? Let this subject be considered, it is of more consequence to the improvement of our rising generation than many may now imagine. We have no doubt that the advantages will soon become so apparent at Oxford, that these healthful auxiliaries to a sound education will soon become abundant.

THE BRITISH BENEFICENT INSTITUTION.

So long as men in public situations, men professionally engaged, men, in a word, having families dependent upon their health and strength, continue indifferent to the sudden reverses to which they may at any moment be liable, so long may we expect to see frequently the sad spectacle of ladies, who have lived in superior stations of society, and have been surrounded by luxuries and comforts, suddenly reduced by monetary reverses of fortune, or by the death of those on whom they have been dependent, to a state of destitution. This is often the more distressing, because the very example of want of forethought in those to whom they were bound to look up, not only for support, but for example, has probably kept them in complete ignorance of any means of self-support. The head of the family too frequently withholds all information about the prospects of his wife and children in case of unexpected calamity, and rears them in ease and quiet, and generates by his own want of prudence a state of false security. Let our readers for one brief moment endeavour to realise the position of such people, suddenly deprived of their little all, the feeling of extreme sorrow, shame, and wretchedness, and in the midst of all a bright hope springing up that the sufferer can turn to a society formed expressly to aid such as they are; not indeed to relieve them from all anxiety, from the exercise of the talents and capabilities with which they may have been blessed by God; not to encourage a life of indolent reliance on the charity of others; but to lend them such an aid as shall place them beyond the reach of actual want, and afford scope for the development of that education and experience which in their former station they must have acquired. The British public ever has found, and ever will find, men of piety and benevolence, who endeavour to cope with the various phases of sorrow and distress which come under their notice, and in 1848 the claims of ladies suffering under unfortunate changes of circumstances, who had moved previously in superior stations, were prominently placed before the public, and this Institution formed to provide for them permanent incomes not exceeding £30 per annum.

The society is worthy of regard; but, like all societies of a kindred nature, requires to be continually kept before the public.

It has held twelve elections, and numbered forty-four annuitants. We have before us the ninth annual report, from which we make the following selections, more with a view to induce our readers to ascertain for themselves the operations of the society, than as an adequate rescript of the report.

Referring to rule XIV., which enforces on approved candidates the procuring of four subscribers or life governors, the report states that objections have been made that—

"Ladies are put to much inconvenience in soliciting subscriptions on their own behalf after being elected annuitants, but especially while they are only candidates. In the case of candidates, the requirement, that they shall find four new subscribers, may be felt insome cases to be oppressive, but the council cannot allow it to be unjust. When the institution has been longer established, and taken that place amongst the Metropolitan charities which it assuredly deserves, and which it is believed it will occupy, it will then be a matter for consideration whether the guarantee rule should any longer be binding on candidates.

"In the case of annuitants, the abandonment of the rule is not anticipated, on the following grounds:—First. The Institution does not contemplate relieving persons of a humble rank of life, whose friends cannot afford amongst them to give the sum of four guineas annually for their benefit, but its declared object is to relieve 'ladies who have moved in a superior rank of society;' who are therefore supposed to have a circle of friends 'willing and able' to give this small sum for a society which benefits those in whom they themselves are interested, and with whom very frequently they are personally and relatively connected.

"Secondly. The Institution, in assisting the lady annuitants, does in reality relieve their friends (in the generality of instances), from the larger contributions which duty and generosity bestowed upon them, previous to their election.

"Thirdly. The guarantee rule has the effect of sustaining an interest in the Institution among a large number of influential subscribers. Some of these may give 'grudgingly and of necessity,' but it is known that many give 'cheerfully and of a willing mind,' under the belief that, while their own friends whom they had seen in more prosperous circumstances are aided, the aggregate of the guarantee subscriptions is a great help towards the Institution conveying the same aid to others; the subscriptions of the guarantees of seven annuitants or candidates almost making up an annuity of £30.

"Fourthly. It should be borne in mind, that this institution, while it confers annuities equal to other kindred societies (with one or two exceptions), is prevented from appealing to all grades of the public of Great Britain, by the exclusiveness, in one sense, of its charity."

We may close these remarks by stating that there are now thirty-six annuitants, receiving £30 per annum, and two receiving £25.

It must always be remembered, that this Institution gives greater advantages than most of our benevolent societies. Its annuities are larger, and they are given at an earlier age. True it takes in only ladies; but on that very account a more uniform annuity, of a larger amount, is absolutely necessary. Let the public acquaint themselves with that operation of the British Beneficent Society. We ask no more, but leave it to their own hearts.

SCHOOL OF COOKERY.

Our readers will remember a letter from Brighton, signed M. A. B., on this subject, which appeared in our last number. We are glad to find that it has awakened considerable interest. Probably few are ignorant of the great difficulty which exists in finding really good cooks; and few but are well aware what an effect for good or evil, a knowledge of this art or otherwise, by the wife and mother, has upon the poor man's home. M. A. B. alluded, in strong terms of approbation, to the School of Cookery, established recently at 90, Albany Street, Regent's Park. Such of our readers as may require more complete information, will naturally apply at the school for themselves; meanwhile we feel that we shall be affording grateful information to very many, who have experienced the difficulty in getting good servants, if we give a slight sketch of the object and operations of this establishment. The aim appears to be two-fold; 1st, To teach cookery, &c., to the poor, so as to gradually improve the comforts of their homes, by bringing up future wives and mothers, who shall be equal to their duties, and make what little they have go as far as it will; 2d, To improve domestic servants by turning out kitchenmaids really well instructed, and by giving the best lessons to be had, to plain cooks, at the lowest possible charge. Girls are received at about the age of sixteen up to twenty, as boarders at 7s. a week, for not less than three months, which just covers their expenses. In some cases, however, a reduction is made in this charge. Cooks who wish to take lessons in the higher branches of the art, 2s. 6d. per single lesson, or 12s. per week; this charge includes food during the hours of attendance.

Digitized by Google

The girls, from the national schools of the adjacent districts, are instructed in the kitchen by an experienced cook. Parents and friends who wish to place girls not connected with the schools, as boarders, can do so; and young women wishing to receive occasional lessons, are taught at lower prices than at clubs. A matron resides in the house, superintends the management of the Institution, and the instruction and moral training of the girls. A large portion of the food is disposed of to the poor at very moderate price. There are dining-rooms on the premises, both public and private, in daily use; and many families of the upper classes order dishes to be sent to their own residences. Opportunities are thus provided for the instruction of the girls, not merely in the elements of cooking, but also in the higher branches of the art. Orders by medical men can be received for sick persons, and the food sent to them, if required. It is proposed to give, as rewards, certificates of competency to those young women who distinguish themselves as pupils, and they will thus carry with them into service the surest evidences of their proficiency.

There appears to be plenty of employment for more than they have at present, and it is stated that a quick girl will in about six months learn enough to take a place as an efficient kitchenmaid. The direct benefit conferred by these efforts, not only on the poor, but also on the richer people, in the production of useful wives and servants, cannot but be very real indeed; but we venture to think that the indirect boon to the poor is even larger in promise; for we are certain that a very large portion of those of the working classes who habitually haunt public-houses, and become confirmed drunkards, are in the first instance drawn from home, by the inability of the wife, with the best wishes, to make that home comfortable, to supply him with fairly dressed food, and to make the best of his little. He deems his means insufficient, his home neglected, and his wife perhaps careless; when, so far as she is concerned, it is the power and not the will which is wanting; and the result is too frequently ruin to all concerned. The Albany School of Cooking, like all other charitable institutions, requires funds; but we trust the day may come, when it will be almost, if not altogether, self-supporting. Meanwhile we commend it to the favourable notice of our readers.

FRANCES JOHNSTON.

Our readers will remember the remarks we made on the case of Johnston the cutler in our issue of October last, as one of almost inconceivable inhumanity on the part of a father towards his family of daughters, and calling strongly for interference on the part of the British public. We at that time pointedly deprecated the mere contribution of money for the relief of Frances Johnston, who had been goaded on to an attempt at suicide by the situation to which she had been reduced through the hideous depravity of her unnatural father. We counselled that care should be taken rather to strengthen than undermine that spirit of independence which had manifested itself in the past conduct of this family of sisters. We only desired that the family should be placed in circumstances to help themselves. We always consider this, in fact, to be the legitimate mode of alleviating distress, whenever it is practicable. We are glad to find that arrangements are being made to this effect; though there has been, from some cause as yet unexplained, some delay in perfecting them. Sir R. W. Carden not long since announced, for the information of the many charitable persons who had forwarded contributions on behalf of Frances Johnston, that he much regretted that certain negociations for obtaining suitable premises to enable her and her sister to commence business had been unavoidedly delayed. The donors, however, might rest assured that no time should be lost in carrying into effect the contemplated arrangements, which, when completed, he should have much pleasure in announcing to the public. We shall hope, therefore, soon to be in a position to show, not only that the British public have well responded to the call on their benevolence in this distressing case, but that it has been judiciously expended.

WET NURSES AND LYING-IN INSTITUTIONS.

The subject alluded to in the following correspondence which appeared in the Brighton Gazette of February 3rd, is of so much importance, and the evils therein deprecated so little considered, that we draw attention to them, in the hope that medical practitioners, mothers, and all who may have influence in checking the pernicious practice will take the matter into their serious consideration. A study of this subject can hardly fail to lead to the conviction that the mortality among infants is greatly increased by the practice referred to. The children of wet-nurses form a large proportion of those who die annually from the effects of ignorance and neglect.

The Lancet is continually calling on benevolent and thoughtful people to do what they can to stay this wholesale "slaughter of innocents."

It may be an unpalatable sentence which we are about to subjoin—the truth is often disagreeable, but it is not the less a truth,—but we affirm it to be our decided opinion, that numbers of mothers in the middle and higher classes resort, for fashion's sake, to the pernicious practice, who are by no means physically incapacitated for the complete exercise of the duty which a higher Power has imposed on them,—a duty, the relinquishment of which is a resignation of a blessed pleasure, and the inviting of much misery. We look upon it as a matter of disgrace to such mothers. An eminent physician has said that the Lying-in Institution of London are literally besieged for wet-nurses, extravagant sums being offered to tempt poor women from their own babes—their own home. We have been given to understand that the authorities of the Brighton Lying-in Institution are scrupulously careful in this respect, and never recommend but in cases of very great emergency. This is an example which should be followed, and the practice would then receive a considerable check.

Digitized by Google

The correspondence which has called forth these remarks is as follows :—

"TO THE SECRETARY OF THE BRIGHTON LYING-IN INSTITUTION.

"SIR,—As I understand that a meeting of the committee and governors of the Lying-in Institution will shortly take place, I beg to submit for their consideration the desirability of altering that part of their plan by which the recipients of the charity are recommended to ladies who apply at the institution for wet-nurses.

"The practice of hiring wet-nurses is fraught with so many evils, moral and physical—evils which become very pernicious and wide-spreading in their influence on society, that for a public institution of this nature to be instrumental in any way in promoting so objectionable a practice, seems inconsistent with the high character which a philanthrophic establishment should endeavour to maintain.

"The subject which I now venture to lay before you, has not, until very lately, attracted the attention its importance demands. To this cause may be attributed the indifference with which it has been regarded, and the unchecked prevalence of the custom referred to.

"The tract recently issued by the Ladies' Sanitary Association, on the "Evils of Wet-Nursing"—a copy of which I now forward to you, is calculated to place the subject in a strong but true light before the minds of the thoughtful public.

"Medical men especially would do well to consider how far it is their duty, and how great their opportunities, to stay by their counsel, as conscientious advisers, this pernicious practice.

"I do hope that, after a deliberate consideration of the whole question, both in a medical and moral point of view, the Committee of the Lying-in Institution will deem it advisable to recommend the poor women who receive attention through the medium of the Institution, to act the part of mothers to their own infants, instead of deserting them to undertake an office, the good pay of which is a poor return for the loss of their own babe often, and the certain discomfort, by neglect, of the whole family.

"Many ladies are tempted to indulge in the so-called 'luxury' of a wet-nurse for their child, through the exceeding facility of meeting with women willing to undertake such duties.

"By checking the supply, however, the demand would naturally be starved out; thus a twofold good would be promoted, the rich as well as the poor mother, would be more likely to follow the dictates of their maternal nature, which feelings are now too often stifled on the one side by yielding to the love of ease, on the other by gratifying the desire for gain.

"I am, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"Brighton, "M. A. B.

"Jan. 11th, 1859."

"76, West Street.

"Jan. 14th, 1859.

"MADAM,—I beg to inform you that your letter, of the 11th inst., was laid before the Governors of the Brighton Lying-in Institution, at their general annual meeting yesterday.

"In reply, I am requested to state that our medical officers fully concur in the views therein enumerated, and are alive to the evils of the system generally; but they are yet induced to recommend wet-nurses in those cases of emergency, where the health or life of the child are endangerred, for cases sometimes arise in which the employment of a foster-mother seems the only means of saving life.

"I have the honour to be, Madam,

"Your obedient Servant,

"THOS. A. BREW,

"Honorary Secretary."

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

SIR,—I must beg your leave to correct a statement made in my last letter to you "on the mode of releasing Convict Prisoners," which I find to be an error. I now find that neither Captain Crofton nor Mr. Sentaigne—the two first of the Irish Convict Directors—ever served in the English convict department, or under Colonel Jebb.

This, however, permit me to say, makes in my view no very important difference to the public. It is indeed important that justice should be done—that we should know to whom our gratitude is due, for introducing valuable improvements into our system; yet I feel sure that even Colonel Jebb and Captain Crofton themselves would agree, that the carrying out of a really good system was of more importance than the deciding to whom the merit of that system should belong.

The discussion, however, has given rise to two very interesting papers, each well worthy of attention, though, alas! somewhat bitterly opposed to each other: viz., one in the January number of the Meliora Quarterly Review (Partridge, Paternoster Row); and the other in our old and staunch ally in all reformatory matters, the Irish Quarterly (Simkin and Marshall). Both give much information; both shew that the writers have carefully studied the subject; both—which is yet more important—agree fully in the practicability of fitting by far the larger number of our convicts to make good and useful and safe English citizens; and both agree that this must be done by a commencement of sharp punishment, allowing the prisoner, by continued good conduct, through different stages, to work out a gradual approach to freedom.

The writer in Meliora, however, claims the whole merit of this discovery, and of all improvements since made, for Colonel Jebb; of whom he says that "no man since the days of John Howard has done so much for prison improvement:" while the Irish Quarterly represents him as a man only driven to improve by the urgent demands of "public opinion and the press," and not very successful in carrying out the alterations he had unwillingly recommended; while to Captain Crofton alone we owe the example of a highly successful and satisfactory system.

It is always difficult, if not impossible, to discover exactly the originator of a system, and though in justice one would endeavour to give honour where honour is due, yet it is difficult to determine with accuracy exactly how much any one may be acting on his own original views, or how far he may be swayed by circumstances. There can be no doubt, I believe, that the establishments at Portland, Dartmoor, Chatham, &c., are a grand improvement on the lamentable Hulks. There can be no doubt that these improvements have been carried on under the reign of Colonel Jebb. To whom the invention of the Portland system is due, I have no means of saying with certainty, though I have always heard this first true reformatory step in convict management attributed to the energy and true philanthropy of Captain Maconochie, to whom also I believe we owe the mark system of which Captain Crofton makes valuable use, and which must and will become one of the most important parts of prison discipline, though possibly not until after the name of Maconochie may have become as much neglected by the public as has that of Captain Brenton, from whom I learned that Reformatory system for which he, alas! gets far less credit with the public than I do.

However, to whomsoever the original invention may be due, there is no doubt that the change has been effected under the general superintendence of Colonel Jebb; and though possibly one or other of the convict officials under him may justly claim merit for some portions of the total success, yet to him who has been the chief in a long and successful movement credit will always be justly due.

On the other hand, it is allowed by nearly all, except some English Convict Officials, that the Portland system, excellent as its outlines are, is not in itself sufficient. At least two steps are needed between that and a full restoration to all the immunities of the honest freeman; though we may doubt whether still more gradations may not be eventually found an improvement. These steps appear to be best attained by the system adopted in Ireland, of, first, what is there termed an intermediate prison, or in England a Refuge; and secondly, of allowing prisoners to go to work on a ticket of leave, under a surveillance as practised in Ireland, but only talked of in England.

Whether the credit of priority in the first of these steps should be given to Colonel Jebb for his, I believe, excellent Refuge at Fulham (which, however is, alas! confined to females), or to Captain Crofton for his extensive and valuable examples at Smithfield, and the iron huts at the forts, is a matter of dates easily ascertained. Very possibly, in truth, both gentlemen may have hit on the same idea with equal originality. For the second step, Colonel Jebb may probably claim the priority in idea, inasmuch as in his Report for 1851 he lays down an excellent system of ticket-of-leave for the colonies; but in practice he failed to make it succeed in England, abandoned all but the name, and brought sad obloquy on that; while Captain Crofton's energy and good judgment carried out the same system (only abandoning the name) to a most successful issue, which we heartily hope to see copied in England.

Digitized by Google

But in whatever proportions our gratitude may be due to these gentlemen, there is no doubt that the subject is one which vitally imports the welfare of our nation, and that amongst those who have aided in calling public attention to the subject we are principally indebted to the Mediora Review, the Irish Quarterly, and yourself.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,
T. B. L. Baker.

Hardwicke Court, Gloucester,
January 23rd, 1859.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

To the Editor of the Philanthropist.

Sir,—The space which has been devoted in your journal to describing the condition and prospects of children brought up in workhouses, and to recommending the establishment of Industrial Schools, induces me to hope that the following account of a small "Orphanage" in one of our inland agricultural counties, may not prove uninteresting to your readers.

It sprang from a conversation between two young ladies. One, the daughter of a country gentleman, had for the two years previous been much amongst poor children, and had felt, as all who know them must feel, the apparent hopelessness of their position when orphans or the offspring of careless or depraved parents. The other, a clergyman's daughter, was at that moment wondering what could be done to save a favourite school-girl, whose home afforded her only examples of evil. Between them a scheme was arranged. Four girls,—the one who had suggested the plan being of the number,—were lodged and boarded with a widow having one little girl of her own. The house was next door to the Parsonage, and the clergyman's daughter superintended; the other lady, whose home was a few miles distant, furnishing the funds, with some assistance from friends, the relations of some of the children, and in one case from the parish.

The institution has now been in work somewhat more than two years; and the results, as seen in the children, are most satisfactory. The numbers have risen slightly; there are now six girls in the Orphanage, and another is shortly expected; one is entirely paid for by her friends. They are instructed in the usual elementary branches of learning, and the elder ones do the work of the house, besides occasionally assisting in the parsonage, and in another gentlemen's house. It has also been determined occasionally to admit elder girls temporarily, to be trained for service, who are labouring under disadvantages at home. One who was thus taken in, not without misgivings, proved a useful and willing assistant to the matron, and has obtained a good place as nursemaid.

The children are, I believe, happy, and surprisingly healthy, considering the circumstances in which some of them were found. The village in which the Orphanage stands is, however, favourably situated on the summit of a hill overlooking a large extent of surrounding country. Want of funds alone forbids further enlargement, which might render the institution a blessing to the neighbourhood.

I have now perhaps said enough for the present. Should any one feel so far interested in my account as to wish to know more of this attempt at rescuing a few poor girls from probable ruin, I shall be happy to furnish such information.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. H. D.

February 14th, 1859.

Private communications may be addressed to A. H. D., care of Mr. Charles Pearce Ponting, draper, Thame, Oxon. Donations and subscriptions will be gratefully received.

CHEAP CLOTHING.

The following remarks are culled from an article on cheap clothing in the Englishwoman's Review, which does credit to our deserving contemporary. It has been reprinted, and should be circulated in our villages and elsewhere. There needs no apology for their appearance in our pages; we shall be glad if they have any effect in stopping the evil alluded to.

The great competition amongst manufacturers in the last forty years, owing to the many improvements in machinery, and the assistance of ill-paid children in the factories, has brought every article of clothing down to the most trifling cost, at least such as are in common use with the working-classes; and such is the outcry for cheap goods, that those of a better quality can hardly find customers. The taste for dress, and variety in dress, are come to such a pitch, that, provided the inferior article is showy and smart, durability is not considered. It is allowed by all, that the appearance of the English peasant, in the present day, is very different to what it was fifty years ago; the robust, healthy, hardy-looking country woman or girl, is as rare now as the pale, delicate, nervous female of our times would have been a century ago. I was led into these reflections a short time since, after having witnessed a village funeral in a country church in the north of England. The deceased was a young woman who had died of consumption, and she was borne to her grave by six of her young companions, all of whom were much under twenty years of age. I had been accustomed to see the sickly complexions of the women in large towns; but this I considered was easily accounted for: the close streets they dwelt in, the sedentary employments in which they were engaged, with various other reasons, contributed to this appearance. "But here," I said to myself, "are the children of parents living in a pure air, well fed, well housed, well clothed, and, for the most part, engaged in healthy, rural occupations; and yet those young women are as pale and sickly-looking as those I left in the city—a reason for this there must be;" and while I sojourned in the village, I made myself acquainted with many of the cottage wives, and talked to them on domestic affairs, and the management of their children. In this district the wages of the labourers were good, their cottages well built and comfortable, most of them having attached a little garden or orchard, with pasture for a cow, and where a cow is kept, a pig is fed, and thus their family are always above want; the air was pure and healthy, a running stream found its way through the village, the water was wholesome, and for years no epidemic had spread its baneful breath amongst the inhabitants. I visited the school: both boys and girls were pale, or sallow-complexioned, with few exceptions; and though the weather was that of a genial spring, many of them had severe coughs. My friend with whom I was staying told me that consumption and glandular disease were greatly on the increase, and had carried off many of the rising youth during the last ten years, and many of their mothers were delicate and weakly, often requiring medicine and the advice of the doctor; indeed, there is scarcely a large village now without a resident medical practitioner. On mature consideration, I have become impressed with the idea that one cause for these evils may be traced to cheap clothing.

To begin with the tender infant. How can it find the necessary warmth and nourishment which all young animals require, clothed as it is? The beast of the field is clothed by an all-wise Providence in a warm coat of fur; the birds of the air have their feathery covering; but the offspring of man is half-clothed in some flimsy manufacture, without weight or warmth, such as cheap flannel, and still cheaper cotton. The cottage child is mostly nursed by one but a few years older than itself, and when not in the cradle is usually with its young nurse out of doors, exposed to every change of weather, the blighting wind, the keen frost, the damp fog, the evening dew; and how is it prepared to resist the changes of our many-varying climate? The poor blue-faced, shivering infant, has not even a good warm cloak to enwrap its limbs! No wonder that inflammatory disease carries off so many children ere they reach two years of age; no wonder that croup and bronchitis are so prevalent. Those children who escape infancy have still much to cope with; the several disorders of childhood are to come; and if they are strong enough to combat with them it is well; if not, they are victims of an early grave. The celebrated Dr. John Hunter's receipt for rearing healthy children was, "plenty of milk, plenty of sleep, and plenty of flannel." An able and experienced physician of the present day adds his testimony to the beneficial effects of warm clothing, in these words:—"Flannel is well adapted to infants and young children, especially in spring and autumn; woollen garments are of great service to the inhabitants of all cold and temperate climates, more especially when the vicissitudes of temperature are considerable; it produces moderate warmth, promotes perspiration, readily absorbs the perspired humours, and easily parts with them again by evaporation, on account of the porous nature of its substance." The celebrated Dr. Fothergill was decidedly of opinion that "if the ladies of this country would clothe themselves in warmer habiliments, fewer would fall victims to the too prevalent disease—consumption." How much more, then, is it necessary for such women as are exposed to all weather, in working out of doors, to follow this advice. The village street is usually the nursery and play-ground of its young inhabitants in all seasons, and I have seen a party of them sliding on the ice when the thermometer was below the freezing-point, and how were these little creatures clad? To a certain age boys and girls have the same form of dress; and I will venture to affirm that the garments of each would not have weighed many ounces. How were such children clothed sixty years ago? Their garments would have been a combination of coarse linen, thick, substantial flannel, and warm linsey-woolsey, probably all spun by their mothers, and woven by the village weaver. So clothed, they were well able to endure the vicissitudes of our climate, as the children of the hardy mountaineers in Scotland are to this day—I mean such as are beyond the reach of factories. Follow the children to the village school; there you see them apparently well-clothed, they have a showy cotton frock, whole and neat, but this and the scanty under garment produce no warmth, no comfort; and how should they? The printed cotton frock probably cost threepence a-yard, the flannel petticoat sevenpence, which flannel is one-half cotton. When the boys arrive at six or seven years of age, they are habited in coarse woollen cloth or corduroy, and the close dress furnished by the tailor may save many of them from an early grave; but the female children continue victims to cheap clothing, notwithstanding that their more delicate forms require peculiar care. At eleven or twelve years of age the village girl finds employment in the family of some farmer, her outfit not costing more than a few shillings, so cheap are the articles she has need of; in this situation she has generally much hard work, chiefly out of doors; she drudges on, and if she stands the hardships of her first service for a year or two, and can compass a smart dress for Sunday, she is satisfied; indeed, to such a pitch of vanity has the easy possession of showy garments brought the young woman of the present day, that I know for a fact, they will lay out two-thirds of their wages in outer garments, leaving but one-third for shoes and other necessary articles. As to laying up a store for "a rainy day," that is never thought of. After a few years they marry, young, inexperienced, and improvident, so that they are soon overwhelmed with the burden of a family, and have to seek relief from the parish, or take up their quarters in the union house. Such is the case in the agricultural districts, in too many instances. I have often seen the wives and daughters of the labourers going out to fieldwork of different kinds, according to the season; in the spring, weeding the young crops on the ground; in summer, hay-making, or binding sheaves in the harvest field; in autumn, gathering stones from the fallow land. Instead of the warm garments of bygone days, these women are clothed in scanty garments of flimsy cotton, which become thinner every time they are washed; the consequence is, they contract severe colds, obstinate rheumatism, and other diseases, which render them old in constitution, though young as to years. I believe this is the only country in Europe where the dress of the lower class is not appropriate to the climate. The peasantry in Normandy and Brittany, though their climate is far better than ours, and the winter much shorter, clothe themselves in substantial woollen garments as cold weather approaches; indeed, they carry a weight of clothing at all seasons which to us appears extraordinary. The costume of the women in these provinces, who come to the markets with country produce, is usually the following:—A close-fitting suit with long sleeves, of dark blue cloth, a very full plaited petticoat of dark woollen plaid, a scarlet or yellow shawl of small size, crossed in front and tightly pinned down; an apron of showy pattern, with large pockets, of some cotton fabric, and passing out from the short upper garment may be seen a red woollen petticoat and thick grey worsted stockings; in addition to this they wear a camisole, or under-vest, close to the throat, with long sleeves of their own knitting: and with the crowning article the coiffe, which in Normandy is made up of muslin, lace, and pasteboard, the female peasant looks more picturesque than ours do with their attempts at the fashion of their betters. The natives of Holland, of Norway, Sweden, and other cold countries, suit their dress to their climate; the English alone sacrifice their health to cheap clothing, which helps to fill the coffers of those whose have sent thousands of young creatures to an early grave, inasmuch as without the aid of children they could not have sent forth such cheap goods. Those medical writers who have studied the diseases of childhood, all agree that warm clothing is absolutely necessary to that period. But it signifies little who writes or who reads; while cheap goods are made they will find purchasers. I have heard a tradesman in a large village say it was of no use to him to keep a good article, such as would wash and wear well, for his customers say they would rather have two new dresses of inferior substance than one that would last. This factitious taste is too common, and on the increase throughout the land. A friend of mine purchased a yard of white calico, by way of experiment, at threepence a yard; it looked well to the eye, and felt substantial to the touch by means of the stiffening; it was washed twice, and still felt stiff, then laid on the grass in showery weather, and not before a fortnight was it quite free from the paste with which it was saturated; then it bore the appearance of coarse muslin. Such is the miserable substitute for the stout homespun linen of former days. I know for a fact, that when a piece of calico is woven, it is drawn out at full stretch by means of machinery, and the interstices are filled up with a liquid paste made of the finest flour, which is brushed over the web, to prevent its shrinking, and to add to the measurement; the loss of course is to the consumer, but of what concern is that to the manufacturer? Thousands of quarters of wheat are used in making this paste, to assist in deceiving the public; and here again the poor man suffers, for bread he must have, however dear, and surely this consumption in the factories must help to keep up the price. It is only in this country that common fabrics are so stiffened. Indian long cloths and foreign calicoes are quite in an undressed state, so that the purchaser sees at once the quality of the web. Cheap flannels have a cotton thread one way, and a thin, wiry, woollen thread the other; these wash hard, and have no pretensions to warmth. Stockings also have much deteriorated since the use of machinery; they are drawn out so thin, and consequently shrink in proportion; and even if the cottage wife knits for her family, she will find it difficult to procure woollen yarn to wash and wear well. In short, the lowest class in their poverty pay the highest price in the end, though they will not believe it; they have only observation for the present, and never look into the future. We never now see the useful stuff gown on woman or child, because cotton is so much cheaper; the commonest stuffs cannot be made for less less than tenpence or a shilling a yard, and as the poor like to see a good deal for their money, they prefer the cheapest article, not foreseeing the consequences which may be serious in time to the nation. The hardy British soldier and sailor have been the boast of the sea-girt isle; they have triumphed over more powerful nations, they have bid defiance to the whole habitable world; but these were the offspring of hardy parents, to whom serious complaints were unknown. Feeble mothers have usually feeble children, and if one generation after another degenerates, the English peasant will become timid and powerless as the Hindoo; then will this once-favoured nation become the prey of the enemy which it cannot repulse. It is a circumstance well known that insanity and scrofula have been sadly on the increase during the past thirty years; and our hospitals and pauper lunatic asylums are melancholy monuments of this. "A small spark creates a great light," and cheap clothing may produce the above-named scourges, which render so many miserable. The children of the higher classes, though not exposed to the vicissitudes of the weather, or inhabiting cold, damp rooms, are warmly clad; their garments are suited to the season, and if disease attacks them, they are surrounded by suitable comforts; but the poor cottage child must struggle through all the evils of its destiny, and when disease fastens on its frame, a life of pain and suffering is before it. The baneful effects of cheap clothing are numerous. Starvation from cold produces disease, disease produces mental malady, early death, or a long life of misery; and thus the apparent trifling circumstance of the clothing of an infant may tend to serious and irremediable evils.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

The Claims of Ragged Schools to Pecuniary Educational Aid, from the Annual Parliamentary Grant, as an Integral Part of the Education Movement of the Country. By MARY CARPENTER. London: PARTRIDGE and Co., Paternoster Row. Bristol: I. ARROWSMITH, 11, Quay Street. Price 6d.

NATIONAL education may convey to our minds a twofold signification: it may be either that general education which consists in a nation, capable of appreciating the advantages of training the young, individually undertaking the task; or it may signify the education which the executive powers deem it proper to pay for out of the national funds of the country at large. A Parliamentary grant is annually made for the express purpose of encouraging and fostering the education of the young; the question of the class to whom this aid is to be specially given is one of considerable importance, and is at present a subject of much agitation. Irrespective of extraneous considerations, whencesoever arising, it would appear but a common-sense principle, that the first care of a government in this matter should be to educate those who are completely without means of procuring education for themselves; secondly, those whose parents can but will not make the effort for their children; and lastly, those who are both able and willing to do their part in the matter. Possibly, some may feel disposed to reverse the two last claims on government support, believing that the poor who do make an effort should be preferred before those who are equally able, but refuse. But we are speaking now only of helpless children,—the question of dealing with neglectful parents we set aside. We take up the broad principles, that education is essentially and absolutely necessary—that children are pro tanto helpless in the matter;—and that State education implies education given by the State to those who would not otherwise obtain it; and this category may fairly be taken to include the two classes which we have put first. We will not deny that the former of these classes may be largely subdivided; we only insist upon it, that, as they are completely helpless, they have the first claim, not merely as a matter of moral and religious right, but as a matter of political and economical expediency; for it is clear, in the expressive words of Miss Carpenter, that "those children whom the extreme poverty or vice of their parents renders inadmissible to ordinary pay schools, and who without help must grow up in gross ignorance, form a seed-plot of pauperism and crime in the country, which, unless eradicated, must continually perpetuate itself." The announcement made by the Royal President of the Educational Conference, which met in June, 1857, is sufficiently indicative of our short-coming in this respect, to cry for immediate help. "We are told," he said, "that the total population of England and Wales of children between the ages of three and fifteen being estimated at 4,908,690, only 2,046,848 attend school at all, while 2,861,848 receive no instruction whatever."* Again, His Royal Highness further remarked:—"Carefully collected statistics reveal to us the fact, that, while almost 600,000 children between three and fifteen are absent from school, but known to be employed, no less than 2,200,000, are not at school, whose absence cannot be traced to any ascertained employment or other legitimate cause." But no one who gives the least attention to the subject of education, will venture to deny that an immense proportion of our children are totally neglected so far as education is concerned. Receiving, meanwhile, the worst kind of training in their own homes and crowded alleys; bred up by parents whose language is habitually harsh, and frequently blasphemous; humanly speaking, the only hope of escape for these from the trammels of vice and irreligion, of crime and poverty, is in their being taken and properly educated, either at the expense of private benevolence or of the public grant. If any have a claim for the consideration of Parliamentary aid, surely these have. And yet for these, until lately, little or no effort has been made; at present they are the special objects of "Ragged Schools." We confess to an objection to the name "ragged" as applied to these schools, which are, or should be, in our estimation, more than all others termed "national." They ought to be rather "Free-State Schools" offering the inestimable boon of education to that portion of the community which in very deed most requires help. Let indeed government see that the education imparted in these schools is adapted to the class for whom it is intended, fitting them for the station in which they may probably have to move in this life, as well as preparing them for that which is to come. But the internal management of such schools may be safely left to those who have interested themselves in the work. We have always held it to be an essential to any serious improvement in our national education, that a more practical character should be given to the instruction; as the higher ranks live mainly by the exercise of the brain, so the lower live mainly by the exercise of the hand. And these latter, if their education is to be adapted to their sphere in life, should find in it a large portion of industrial character.

To say that there are practical difficulties connected with so accommodating does not gainsay the principle;—we believe that there are no difficulties which may not be overcome by the steady perseverance of the English character. This we will assert,—that the ragged schools, refuges, and industrial schools, are assuming their proper functions in this respect, yet are they looked upon as unworthy of aid from a grant expressly made for national education; while those now termed national schools, which embrace indeed the moral and intellectual elements of education, to the complete exclusion of the physical or industrial, are large recipients from the educational fund. The claims of the ragged schools cannot much longer be overlooked; there are many influential parties, as well corporate as individual, who are bringing the matter prominently before the public. Miss Carpenter probably will rank as high in authority as any with whom the public are acquainted; not only as having large practical experience, but as having on many occasions laid the result of her reflections before the world, with an able hand. She has in these pages stated fully and fairly what has been and is being done for ragged schools, with a view to lead to more serious consideration of their importance. With this object she discusses the Minutes of the Committee of Council on Education of 2nd June 1856, and 31st December 1857, respectively; the thirteenth report of the Ragged School Union; and the reports of the Bristol Ragged School, and the Cardiff Industrial and Ragged School. Clearly establishing, that if these schools are to be recognised at all, they should receive greater support than they do.

Not the least powerful portion of Miss Carpenter's labours, is the manner in which she deals with the objections felt by the Committee of Council on Education to giving efficient aid to ragged schools, as stated by the late vice-president. We quite agree with her that certified industrial schools, even were they not, as they are, placed in a worse condition than ragged schools, by the minute of December 1857, can never take the position of substitutes for the latter. We recommend this pamphlet very cordially to our readers. It will place the whole subject well before them; and we shall be surprised if they do not come to the same conclusion as the writer,—that this class has a very evident claim to a large share of the parliamentary grant, and that if retrenchment be necessary, it should rather be on aid granted to those who can help themselves. But Parliament will not move in these matters without great external pressure. Let those who know that from the midst of the ragged classes come the inmates of our gaols and unions, and the candidates for our reformatories—who know and feel that prevention is better than cure; let all who know that the lost and the outcast are to be the special objects of our care and protection take this matter into their serious consideration, and bring such weight and influence as they may possess to bear on the Committee of Council, in the hope that the grants made for educational purposes may be impartially applied to the benefit of those who require them: and foremost among these will stand the ragged schools.

* We take the figures from Miss Carpenter's pamphlet. There seems to be some miscalculation; but, at any rate, it appears that at least half are uneducated.

Hint for the Improvement of Village Schools and the introduction of Industrial Work, suggested by an Experiment made in the Parish of Shipbourne, Kent. By the Rev. JOHN FITZWYGRAM, M.A., Incumbent of Shipbourne.

TRUE education must, as a matter of course, have for its foundation the fear and love of God, and that knowledge of the Scriptures which is good for the soul. Without the one thing needful, all other knowledge becomes invaluable, if not positively injurious. Taking this as admitted, as the training we are bound to impart to our young, to fit them for a future life; we find that there is another portion of education, which has respect to this life, and is necessary to qualify for useful existence and success in it. Religious education is not left as a matter of question, or one on which we may regulate our conduct by circumstances; it is as it were placed beyond our control or interference; a positive and plain duty, from which we have no right to shrink. But in training youth we must of necessity have regard not only to the world to come, but also to this present state. We are to fit our young to do their duty, each in his several station. As regards secular education, there is, and always has been, scope for many opinions, and almost endless variety. It has, however, seemed to us as an axiom almost incontrovertible, that as the higher classes exist, and have their influence on the general good of society, mainly by the exercise of the head, so, on the other hand, the lower classes exist and produce in their way an almost equal influence on the general welfare, by the exercise of the hand; and that education, in order to be really adapted to society, and to be recognised as a boon by each separate class, should, as we gradually descend in the scale of society, gradually embrace in it more and more of an industrial character. But while many will, perhaps, quite agree with this as a rule, it must be admitted that it is by no means an easy matter to put it into practice. We have on several occasions made our suggestions, leaving it to others, who had opportunities, to carry them out. We have never hesitated to express our opinion, that in any plan that may be suggested, to engraft manual instruction on our national schools, the matter of expense should not be allowed to interfere too much; because we have now for some years been doing at our reformatories for criminals, that which ought to be done before the criminal life is commenced; that if the industrial and useful instruction given at these moral hospitals were connected with our national schools, it could not cost more than it does now, even if so much; while it would anticipate, in hundreds of instances, not only the reformatory treatment, but act as a preventive for that costly career of crime, which renders that treatment necessary, when it is almost too late to bestow it.

Digitized by Google

We attach no value to the idea that the introduction of industrial training into our national schools is impossible, as some have held. It is a mere question of money and ingenuity. What is done for the criminal, certainly can be done for the honest. We rank ourselves among those who hold "that a combination of hand-work and head-work would make our national schools more valued by the parents—would retain the children longer at school—and would be the means of introducing those habits of cleanliness, and order, and that knowledge of domestic economy, in which the labouring classes in this country are now for the most part very deficient." To the want of this combination we trace the idle habits, and the uncomfortable homes, which induce intemperance, poverty and crime, and fill our unions and gaols with hundreds of fellow-beings, more sinned against than sinning, the victims of our past neglect, to teach them how to use those hands by which it has been ordained that they shall live. For, if we have not taught them the proper use of those hands, can we well feel surprised that they should employ them to purposes that are improper? It is pleasant to find that, to a certain extent, an experiment has been made in this respect, and, so far as it has gone, it has apparently succeeded. The subject is too important to admit of being completely handled in the space we can afford for extracts from Mr. Fitzwygram's account of his actual trial to effect this object. Our readers will find the pamphlet well worthy of regard, and will recognise some of our oft-repeated opinions on this subject, in the following extract: "I am no advocate of any 'high-pressure' system of education. It seems to me to be of the utmost importance to keep each class of society in its proper place; and with this view to give to each child such a measure of instruction as its station in life is likely to require, and no more."

Parents can and will appreciate an industrial training, and, what is more, they will pay for it, "when their girls come home more handy and useful. When Sally can make good soup out a few vegetables, with an infinitesimal small fraction of meat—when Betsy can convince the most sceptical that rice and oatmeal are not to be despised when properly dressed—when potatoe pie is voted at the family board to be uncommonly good—when Polly, with a little composition yeast, costing a mere nothing, can bake better bread than her mother—in short, when mothers find that their girls can save many a sixpence by their knowledge of domestic economy," they will leave their children readily for a longer period to reap the advantages afforded by such instruction. We should be disposed to go considerably further than Mr. Fitwygram has gone; but we think he has acted well and wisely in making small attempts at first. His account of his operations is clearly and succinctly written; and we think that the full circulation of his pamphlet among the clergy, especially in the rural districts, would tend greatly to bring about the change in the kind of National Education which we have so long desired, and to which many things are, as we think, insensibly leading the mind of the public. The writer gives every information as to what he considers a requisite apparatus for the efficient conduct of such a school, and the means at hand to supply them. He speaks with boldness, and yet correctly, upon the question of government inspection and government grants, and we have pleasure in transferring to our pages his closing remarks on these subjects:—

"There exists, I am aware, a strong feeling among some of my clerical brethren against any system of inspection, or any interference in any way with local management: they fear that some day the State may step in and interfere with the teaching of those sacred truths, which they hold to be essential to salvation; they do not, I believe, generally apprehend any immediate danger, but they dread the idea of a centralized power which may eventually be exercised to the prejudice of the Church. Now, attached as I am to the Church of England and her doctrines, I cannot share in this feeling. I see no fear for the Church, if only she rises to her work. She must educate, if she would not have the State step in. Only let her educate in the true sense of the word the masses of the people, and then I have no fear but that she will hold her own, either against State interference or sectarian hostility. The Church of England's power lies in the affections of the people, and so long as the rising generations are trained in her schools, and owe the knowledge of CHRIST to her teaching, I have no fear for her. Why is it, I would ask, that the middle classes in our large towns have so wandered from the Church of their fathers? Is it not, in a great measure, because we have neglected to direct the education of their children? Once bring a child's mind into contact with a pious and able minister, so as to impress it with the truths of the Gospel and gain its affections, and, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, that child will continue a member of the Church until the day of its death. If there is some prospective danger in accepting State assistance, there seems to me to be a far more real and pressing danger in leaving large masses of people in a state of ignorance; for it is nothing but ignorance that makes them so easy a prey to the Dissenter, the Mormon, the Chartist, or the Infidel. The funds of the Committee of Council are administered, I will not say on the best principle, but on the only principle which I believe is possible in a country like ours, which is so divided into religious sects. No one can deny that an immense impulse has been given to voluntary efforts by these Parliamentary grants. The principal objection to my mind against the present system is, that the poorest and most ignorant spots receive little or no assistance, not being able to meet the Government requirements, while richer and well-to-do parishes benefit largely. In large town schools the Capitation money amounts to a considerable sum, but in small agricultural parishes it seldom amounts to more than £3. or £4. The required attendance of one hundred and seventy-six days is very high for a country parish, when we take into account the great demand for juvenile labour, and the many contingencies by which a regular attendance is prevented. I might mention, as an instance to show the uncertainty of obtaining a Capitation grant, that two following years at Shipbourne, we have been forced to close the school, owing to the prevalence of some epidemic disease, and as no allowance is ever made for such emergencies, we of course forfeited the greater part of the Capitation grant for each of those years. I would venture to suggest that some deduction from the required attendance should be made, where a school is closed by the order of the medical officer of the district.

The alteration of another minute would also, I think, add very considerably to the efficiency of many schools. The minute to which I allude, provides that an ex-pupil-teacher may be appointed as assistant master or mistress in place of two pupil-teachers. The idea is excellent, but in small schools the managers can rarely ever avail themselves of the privilege, because there are probably already two pupil-teachers, and it is a great chance if their terms of apprenticeship expire together, in which case only could an assistant teacher be obtained. Would it not be better, if the Committee of Council, in place of one pupil-teacher, would pay half the salary of an assistant, say £12 a year, on the managers undertaking to pay the other half? This would involve no increase of expense to the Government, and would enable many schools to have an assistant instead of a pupil-teacher. I would also relax the requirement that the assistant must be an ex-pupil-teacher, and would allow any young person to be eligible on passing a satisfactory examination, and showing an aptitude for teaching. My reason is this, that in many parishes there would be found some tradesman's daughter who, living with her parents, would gladly accept such an appointment, even at a low salary, and thus we might train up a class of teachers who would afterwards probably keep private schools; such schools are now usually conducted by very incompetent persons, and it would be a great public boon if somewhat of the system of the National Schools was introduced into them. If a few modifications were made in the existing minutes with a view of giving assistance to poor parishes, I do not myself see how any Parliamentary grants can be administered in a more just or less objectionable form. Our wisdom, I believe, speaking as a minister of the Church of England, is to take all we can get in the way of State assistance, and, while we keep in our own hands the superintendence of the religious instruction, to adapt the secular instruction in our schools to the practical wants and requirements of our respective parishes. It is impossible to lay down any general rule, except one, which I believe to be the great secret of any really effective school, viz., 'Love the children and treat them as your own."

Digitized by Google

THE PAPER DUTY.

A deputation of gentlemen engaged in the manufacture and use of paper, waited, on Friday, February 11th, upon the Earl of Derby, at his official residence, Downing-street, to call the attention of Government to the grievance inflicted on them by the existence of the duty on paper.

Mr. Milner Gibson, M.P., introduced the deputation, and observed that as the House of Commons had last session unanimously condemned the duty on paper as a source of revenue, the gentlemen present looked upon it as a thing of which the days were numbered, and hoped the Government would not call upon Parliament to revoke that decision by seeking to continue to levy the tax.

Mr. Collett, the secretary of the Association for the Removal of Taxes on Knowledge, read to the noble earl the memorial of that body, setting forth the restrictions which the duty imposed upon literature, trade, commerce and enterprise; and

Mr. Vizetelly, secretary of the Newspaper and Periodical Press Association, having read a portion of a similar document on the part of that body, and Mr. J. Cassell, Mr. Francis, Dr. Gray, Mr. W. Chambers, and other gentlemen having spoken upon the subject,

The Earl of Derby replied that he had carefully listened to all that had been stated, and before going any further he had to thank them for having supplied him with what was no doubt a large amount of improving and entertaining knowledge which would be sufficient to occupy all his leisure moments for the next six months, should he continue so long in office. The subject was, no doubt, one of great importance, but did not contain any novelty. The statements which they had placed before him were very fairly put; but he had heard from them nothing in addition to what had been urged upon him on former occasions. Indeed, some of the statements he had heard led to the conclusion that whatever were the objections to the tax it had not had the effect of checking the increase and expansion of those very publications on account of which they sought its abolition. He was not aware if the duty was on the increase.

Mr. Collett—There is a slight decrease.

The Earl of Derby—Well, there was a decrease. The present was not the first time he had had the honour of receiving a deputation on this subject, and he had never concealed his opinion as to the objectionable character of the impost, not only on the grounds they had stated, but also on a ground, which, with the exception of some slight allusion to it by Mr. Chambers, they had entirely overlooked, namely, as an impediment to the process of manufacture. The real fact, however, which they had to consider was not whether the tax was an objectionable one, but whether, looking at the position of the revenue, the present state of the finances of the country, and the engagements into which the House of Commons had entered, they could afford to throw up a revenue of £1,200,000. It would of course be wholly improper for him to make any statement in anticipation of that of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In conclusion, he could only say that he should be both surprised and gratified if the Chancellor of the Exchequer should find himself in a position to take off taxes instead of imposing new ones.

A Negro was brought up before the mayor of Philadelphia for stealing a chicken. Theft conclusive proved.—"Well, Toby," said his honour, "what have you got to say for yourself?"—"Nuffin but dis," replied Toby. "I was as crazy as a bed bug when I stole dat pullet coz I might hab stole de big rooster an neber done it. Dat shows 'clusively to my mind dat I was labouring under de delirium tremendus."

HOUSELESS ASYLUM,

Playhouse Yard, Whitecross Street,

Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President.—The Rt. Hon. the Lord Mayor.
Treasurer.—Jno. Labouchere, Esq.
Secretary.—Mr. Coleman, 75, Old Broad-street.

This charity, which is the oldest Night Refuge in London, was founded in 1819 by Mr. Hick and other benevolent men of the city, at a period when very little public sympathy manifested itself in behalf of the houseless poor; its object is to afford nightly shelter and sustenance to the absolutely destitute working-classes who are suddenly thrown out of employment, by the inclement nature of the weather during the winter months; and the committee are consequently guided in opening the asylum, in a great measure, by the condition of the weather, as tending to produce the distress which the society is specially intended to relieve.

To fulfil this object the asylum is kept open, and available at all hours of the night, without the need, on the part of the applicant, of any passport, or plea, than his, or her, own statement of helpless necessity, and in order to limit the relief to the really houseless, this has been confined to bread (in sufficiency to sustain nature) to a warm shelter, and the means of rest.

By this restricted plan, little inducement is offered to individuals not absolutely homeless and destitute to avail themselves of the shelter for the sake of the food, which would infallibly occur, if a more liberal system were adopted, and thereby defeat the object of the charity; but in all cases of debility and inanition, from exhaustion, or fatigue, appropriate nutritives, both in food and medicine, under medical superintendence, are applied to the relief of the sufferers, many of whom have been rescued from the grasp of death.

Divine service is performed by a clergyman of the Established Church twice every Sunday. Religious tracts are distributed to those who can read, after the morning service, and the juvenile inmates of both sexes are instructed in the afternoons. The inmates are permitted to remain in the asylum during the Sunday, and a dinner of bread and cheese is then provided for them.

The asylum is capable of accommodating more than 700, and has on a few occasions of great severity of weather been quite full, but as this, if uniformly allowed, would, in a sanitary point of view, be attended with danger; the number, as far as practicable, is usually kept below 600. The applicants are admitted by a carefully devised system of tickets to prevent imposition,—the name, age, parish, occupation, and reason of applying for relief, are written in a book for that purpose, and the applicant is then admitted into the asylum for seven nights. Every applicant is inspected by the medical officer, and if found to be suffering from any contagious disorder, is either sent to the workhouse or hospital, as the case may require, to prevent infection.

The amount of relief afforded from the opening of the asylum, in 1819, to the close of the last season, is as follows:—night's lodgings, 1,449,047; rations of bread, 3,515,951.

Digitized by Google

BAZAAR.

A bazaar is proposed to be held early in next June, for the benefit of the funds of the patronage branch of the British Ladies' Society for promoting the Reformation of Female Prisoners,—established in 1820, by Elizabeth Fry and her coadjutors.

The expenses of this society are almost exclusively connected with the care of discharged female prisoners; this constitutes a most important branch of their labours, and one of increasing importance, since transportation has ceased: their funds, however, have on the contrary decreased; it is in the hope of assisting these rapidly-exhausting funds that some members of the committee propose to hold a sale of useful and ornamental work, to take place early in next summer.

Prison visiting would be of little avail, the efforts of magistrates and chaplains to render the discipline there reformatory would, in most instances, be fruitless if the objects of their care were, when they leave prison, thrown upon the world, to combat unaided, with their former temptations and adverse circumstances. To afford this needful help, as far as its means permit, this society has appointed, from among its members, a distinct committee, under the name of the patronage committee; it sits every Friday, and its especial duty is to attend to those cases of discharged prisoners from metropolitan gaols which are recommended to its care by the authorities of the prisons, or by the ladies who visit there. It is very rarely that the application of one thus recommended is refused. Sometimes a little pecuniary help, but generally a guarded private lodging, or immediate admission into the Elizabeth Fry or other Refuges, is accorded to her. These institutions, however, are not rich enough to receive them all without weekly payment for board; nor can they be placed in service or sent home without expense for clothes, travelling, &c. Under these circumstances the ladies actively engaged in promoting the Bazaar venture earnestly to solicit the aid of those who desire to raise the fallen and restore the outcast.

Contributions and offers of assistance will be thankfully received by the Patronage Committee, No. 4, White Hart Court, Lombard Street, where further particulars may be obtained; and by the following ladies:—Miss Neave, Thurlow Lodge, Clapham; Mrs. Pelley, Woodford, Essex; Mrs. Gurney, 24, Princes' Gate, Hyde Park; Mrs. John Henry Gurney, 25, Kensington Palace Gardens; Mrs. Cresswell, King's Lynn, Norfolk; Mrs. Head, Rickerby House, Carlisle; Mrs. Warner, Sidmouth, Devon; Mrs. Fry, Hale End Woodford; Mrs. Joseph Fry, Beddington Lodge, Mitcham; Mrs. Henry Ford Barclay, Walthamstow; Miss Fraser, North Terrace, Camberwell; Miss Wood, New Lodge, Reigate; Miss Irving, Allan Road, Stoke Newington.

MR. W. H. MILLER AT THE HORNS.

A LARGE and respectable audience was attracted on Monday, February 14th, to the Horns Assembly Rooms, for the purpose of hearing Mr. W. H. Miller, of Ragged School celebrity, and the indefatigable superintendent of Lambeth Ragged School, give one of his entertainments. On the occasion referred to, the entertainment was on behalf of the Prince's-street Ragged School, and the title of it was "A journey from the North Pole to Spain." The chair was occupied by E. CORDEROY, Esq.

Mr. MILLER, in commencing his subject, remarked that he usually prefaced these entertainments with a few reasons why he had been induced to bring them before the public, but among the audience he saw so many familiar faces, that he believed he was well understood, and it was thus rendered unnecessary for him to make any further observations. He found that others were following in his wake, and the Horns Assembly Room was becoming quite familiar for entertainments and lectures in behalf of Ragged Sunday Schools. He still, however, retained the idea he originally set out with, that of his entertainments being for children, and he must therefore request his audience to imagine, while he was delivering his discourse, they were ragged school children. The entertainment on the present occasion was one half of a journey from the North Pole to the Equator. The whole journey being too long for one evening, he had, therefore, divided it.

A picture of the Polar regions was then exhibited, and Mr. Miller commenced their journey southwards. The next illustration was that of the Mock Sun. This was succeeded by a whaling ship in the Polar regions. The next illustration was sledge travelling in Norway, from which country Mr. Miller took ship to Scotland, and on his arrival there the audience were presented with a representation of a mountain scene in Scotland, followed by a view of the City of Edinburgh. A rural landscape in England, was followed by a representation of railway travelling, which brought the audience to Portsmouth. An illustration of a man-of-war followed, when an embarkation takes place for the north of Spain, and after shipwreck the closing scene of Madrid finishes the journey from the North Pole to Spain. The illustrations were accompanied with amusing descriptions and tales concerning the various places and habits of the people whose countries were passed through. The entertainment was rendered more agreeable by the ragged school teachers singing some appropriate selections of music.

THE CHAIRMAN, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Miller, observed that they had travelled a long way that evening, but if they had gone further, they would have fared worse (laughter). It was the least to say of Mr. Miller that he was a good lecturer, but that gentleman was a good, earnest, and indefatigable ragged school teacher (cheers). That gentleman had shown that he knew how to adapt an entertainment so as for it to be appreciated both by children and adults. He (the chairman) hoped Mr. Miller's life would be spared to do more good in that higher and more noble calling in which he was engaged.

Mr. STRATTON, having seconded the proposition, it was most enthusiastically responded to.

Mr. MILLER briefly returned thanks, and said that he felt in those entertainments he was in the path of duty, and that he had not over-stepped the mark.

The proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

We are glad to find that Mr. Miller's efforts are appreciated and understood, as the entertainments are alike amusing and instructive. Amusing on account of the lively anecdotes and easy style in which the descriptions are given, and instructive on account of their religious bearing, and their strictly moral tendency, religion being held up as that which can only originate real happiness, and moral worth is really depicted in his "Honesty is the best policy."

MEETING OF COALWHIPPERS.

A GREAT public meeting of the coalwhippers and their friends took place, Feb. 9th, at the Beaumont Institution, Mile-end, for the purpose of facilitating and advancing the measures now in progress, and the adoption of such others as might be deemed necessary for the establishment of a public office. Coal merchants, coalfactors, coalmeters, the inhabitants of the Tower Hamlets, and all persons who felt an interest in promoting the welfare of this oppressed class of labourers, were in attendance, and also a great number of coalwhippers, coalbackers and others working in the trade. The chair was filled by Lord Kinnaird, and after letters of apology had been read from the Bishops of London and Oxford for not attending, but expressing their sympathy in the movement, the chairman said that they had met that evening to form a solemn league and covenant together never to cease from their endeavours till they had gained the object in which they were embarked, and to take as their watchword what the reformers had taken in 1832, "The bill, the whole bill, and nothing but the bill." When this subject was first brought to his notice he felt surprise why the act which had worked so well for thirteen or fifteen years should have been allowed to drop. But he had found that self-interest had been at work, and that the late Under-Secretary for Trade, Mr. Lowe, had been opposed to the bill from the belief that it was opposed to the true principles of political economy. He quite agreed that there should be no interference between master and man, but the peculiarity of the coal trade was that the employers were not brought in contact with those whom they employed, and therefore that trade could not be affected by the principles of political economy. Moreover, political economy never intended that the interests of the many should be sacrificed to the pockets of the few. He assured them that they would not succeed except they took "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether," by which he meant that there must be union among themselves. He then said he would ask a few questions, which, if answered satisfactorily, would strengthen his hands in pleading their cause in Parliament. The noble chairman was then informed that when the act was abolished one-third at least of the men were dismissed from the office; that it was in consequence of the men having been driven from the office that they had sought employment in public-houses; that the number of those was increasing who were seeking employment in public-houses; that more than one-half were employed out of the office—that is, in public-houses; that when the office was abolished it was understood that the new office would be conducted on the same principle as the old, but faith had not been kept in this respect; that the men working in the present trade-office wished for Parliamentary regulation, and that the great majority had joined the association to obtain the act. As a proof of this last assertion, the majority of the meeting rose, holding in their hands their cards, which were shown amid loud cheers, and the cheering was considerably increased by the chairman telling them not to part with those cards until they had gained their rights. The meeting having been addressed by two coalwhippers, Mr. Garland, the secretary, moved the resolution, "That this meeting, having heard the evidence of the coalwhippers, is of opinion that the coalwhippers are entitled to a revival of their Parliamentary office;" which, having been seconded by Mr. Bacthorpe, and supported by Mr. Charrington, was unanimously passed. A petition to Parliament was then adopted, and shortly after the meeting separated.

Digitized by Google

New Female Penitentiary in Brighton.—A building, gothic in style and of considerable pretension, is rapidly rising into view and becoming a conspicuous object on the east of the town, near the Queen's Park. People are naturally asking, "What is it?" and a good many curious answers are given to the question. The fact is that it is intended as a Penitentiary—as a home for those unfortunate outcasts whom philanthropy may rescue from the pollution of our streets. It originates with influential persons of evangelical views. The site is well chosen. It is retired yet accessible, and commands a magnificent view. Mr. E. E. Scott is the architect, and Mr. G. Lynn the contractor.

WHAT WILL THIS COST TO PRINT? is a thought often occurring to literary minds, public characters, and persons of benevolent intentions. An immediate answer to the inquiry may be obtained, on application to RICHARD BARRETT, 13, MARK LANE, LONDON. R. B. is enabled to execute every description of Printing on very advantageous terms, his office being furnished with a large and choice assortment of Types, Steam Printing Machines, Hydraulic and other Presses, and every modern improvement in the Printing Art. A Specimen Book of Types, and information for authors, sent on application, by RICHARD BARRETT, 13, MARK LANE, LONDON.

INKS FOR EXPORT, &c.

G. BELL and CO. beg to call the attention of Buyers to their superior PRINTING INKS and WRITING FLUIDS—Blue and Red, for use with Metallic Pens—Copying, Blue-Black, Violet-Green, Black Bordering, Ruling and Japan Ticket Inks of first-rate quality. All large purchasers treated on liberal terms. Lists sent free by G. Bell and Co., Wellington Street, St. Luke's, E.C.

PENCILS! PENCILS! PENCILS!

GOOD STATIONERY,

AT REASONABLE PRICES,

AT G. BLIGHT'S,

68, FENCHURCH-STREET, LONDON, E.C.

WHAT A NUISANCE!!!

There's the point gone again, just in that fine outline, too!

AND THE GRIT!!! Oh, what shall I do?

I must try those Gilbert's Pencils that Blight sells.

Let me see, it's G. BLIGHT, General Stationer, 168, Fenchurch Street, London, E.C.

And he sends a Set of Six different Shades, post free, for Eighteen Postage Stamps.

ACCOUNT BOOKS, first-class.—Ledgers, Journals, Cash and Bill Books, Accounts Current, &c. Foreign Bills, English, French, German, and Spanish, in Books of 100 sets.—Copying Machines, Stamping Presses, Bankers' Cheques and Foreign Bank Notes Engraved; Overland Papers, the new "Bankers' Envelope."

NISSEN and PARKER, Printers and Exporting Stationers, 43, Mark Lane, London.

Established 1800.

CHASSEREAU AND ROBERTS, Practical Dyers and Cleaners, 198, BLACKFRIARS-ROAD (Two Doors from Surrey Chapel), at OLD KENT ROAD (Twelve Doors South of the Swan), and at 46, CASTLE STREET, Hemming's-row, Leicester-square.

All the modern and most approved Processes applied in every Branch of the Trade. Strict attention paid with regard to punctuality and cheapness.

THE MUSEUM OF PRACTICAL GEOLOGY, Jermyn Street, is OPEN every day but Friday. Admission Free.

SAVINGS' BANK DEPARTMENT.

SOUTHWARK, METROPOLITAN, and PROVINCIAL FREEHOLD LAND and HOUSE SOCIETY.

Trustees.

Thomas Pillow, Esq., Edward Collinson, Esq., and W. H. German, Esq.

FIVE PER CENT. ON DEPOSITS.—Dividends payable on and after the 1st of January and the 1st of July.

Offices: 4, Wellington Chambers, London Bridge, Southwark.

RICHARD BRETT, Secretary.

Prospectuses forwarded on application.

SUPERB FLOWER SEEDS, for early sowing, selected with care from the best varieties, sent post free at the annexed prices:—100 fine hardy annuals, 5s.; 50 ditto, 3s.; 36 ditto, 2s. 3d.; 12 ditto, 1s. 2d. Catalogues, with sample packet, for 2d. Choice polyanthus, petunia, double balsam, double daisy, at 6d. each, from W. B. KNIGHT, Florist, 67, High Street, Battle, Sussex.

PERSONS about to Decorate should inspect SILAS TUCKER'S splendid assortment of PAPER HANGINGS, at his Warehouse, 234, High Holborn, ten doors East of Little Queen Street, London. Estimates given for every kind of Decoration; also for General Repairs in Town and Country.

SPECTACLES and STEREOSCOPES, by GEORGE COX, Author of "Spectacle Secrets."—Photographic Apparatus Dissolving Views, Telescopes, Achromatic Microscopes, and all Optical, Mathematical, and Philosophical Instruments. The Sight carefully suited, at the Manufactory or at the purchaser's residence, and any article exchanged after trial. Prepaid orders carriage free.—GEORGE COX, 5, Barbican, E.C., Inventors' and Manufacturers' Agent. Established 150 years.

ALLEN'S PATENT PORTMANTEAUS AND TRAVELLING BAGS, WITH SQUARE OPENING; Ladies' Dress Trunks, Dressing Bags, with Silver Fittings; Despatch Boxes, Writing and Dressing Cases, and 500 other articles for Home or Continental travelling, Illustrated in their new Catalogue for 1859. By post for two stamps.

J. W. & T. Allen, Manufacturers of Officers' Barrack Furniture, and Military Outfitters (see separate catalogue, 18 and 22, Strand.

ESTABLISHED 1810.

JAMES FLOOD,

AUCTIONEER, SURVEYOR, APPRAISER, AND UNDERTAKER,

Valuer of every description of Property, and for Probate-Legacy Duty, &c.

Estate, House, Scholastic, Business, Medical and Clerical Agent;

84, WELLS STREET,

NEXT 64, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

ALARM GUN.—Captain Norton's Alarm Gun, without vent or touch-hole, fired at the muzzle by friction, for protection against burglars, poachers, &c., is to be had of the London Gunmakers: Field, Blisset, and Beckwith, Holborn; Reiley, New Oxford Street; Lang, Cockspur Street; Daw, Old Broad treet; and Wilkinson, Pall Mall.

LATE DWERRIHOUSE and CO.

27, Davies Street, Berkeley Square.

ESTABLISHED 1760.

J. WHITESIDE begs most respectfully to invite an inspection of his extensive and elegant Stock of ENGLISH and FOREIGN CLOCKS and GOLD and SILVER WATCHES.

CLOCKS WOUND and KEPT IN REPAIR by the year, as usual.

TRELOAR'S

COCOA NUT FIBRE MATTING

IS THE BEST.

PRIZE MEDALS AWARDED—LONDON, NEW YORK, and PARIS.

Catalogue, containing Prices and every particular, post free.

Warehouse, 42, Ludgate Hill, London.

HARD WATER rendered as SOFT as RAIN WATER by the HOLLAND PATENT COMPOUND, by perfectly uninjurious and cheap means. Sold in packets of 1s., 6d., 2d., and 1d., at our Agents, and some of the most respectable Oil and Colourmen, Grocers, and Chemists.

We beg to call the attention of the public, and especially of the Managers of Philanthropical Institutions, Laundries, &c., to this recent discovery, which supersedes entirely the use of soda, and is highly recommended by Dr. A. W. Hoffman, F.R.S., for washing and domestic use. All water softened and purified by its agency makes superior tea, remains quite sweet for several months, and is particularly adapted for shipping purposes.

For large quantities and particulars, apply at De Jong and Co.'s, 8, Baynam Terrace, Camden Town, London, N.W.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN BREWER. Containing Practical Instructions by which any man can brew his own Beer, equal to the best London Porter, at 4d. per gallon; Stout at 5d., and a variety of Ales at a proportionate expense. Also, Instructions for making Soda Water in Bottles, without a machine, at a cost of 5d. per dozen, fully equal to the best machine-made article. Also, Ærated Lemonade, Ginger Beer, Fruit Beverages, and Ærated Mineral Waters.

Sent free for 24 Stamps, by Mr. Clarkson, 35, Chancery Lane; and of Piper and Co., Paternoster Row; and by order of all Booksellers.

CIVIL SERVICE, Merchants, Civil Engineers, and Surveyors' OFFICES.—Foster's Initiatory Counting-house, 161a, Strand, next door to King's College Gate.—This Institution is intended as an intermediate between school and business, where gentlemen are thoroughly prepared to perform the duties in the above.

PHRENOLOGY APPLIED TO CHILDREN may lead to the avoidance of many of the errors so frequently committed in their education and subsequent destination. During Mr. DONOVAN'S long and extensive practice as a consulting phrenologist, his attention has been particularly directed to this most important branch of cerebral science. Consultations from 9 to 6 daily. Free Lectures on Monday evenings, as usual. 1, Adelaide Street, Trafalgar Square, W.C.

Digitized by Google

ELEGANT TOILET REQUISITES,

SO EMINENTLY SUCCESSFUL IN THEIR OPERATION ON

THE HAIR! THE SKIN! AND THE TEETH!

The August patronage conceded by our Gracious Queen, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe, confirms by experience the infallible efficacy of these renovating Specifics, and gives them a celebrity unparalleled.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL

Is a delightfully Fragrant and Transparent Preparation for the Hair;

And as an invigorator and beautifier beyond all precedent.

It bestows a permanent gloss, with a silky softness, and a strong tendency to curl, and is THE ONLY KNOWN SPECIFIC capable of effectually sustaining the hair in decorative attractiveness, during the exercise of dancing, or the relaxing effects of crowded rooms.

Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; Family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR

FOR THE SKIN AND COMPLEXION.

A BALMY, ODORIFEROUS CREAMY LIQUID, as equally celebrated for safety in application as Unequalled for its Rare and Inestimable Qualities.

The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, the softness and delicacy which it induces of the hands and arms, its capability of soothing irritation, and removing cutaneous defects, discolorations, and all unsightly appearances, render it

INDISPENSABLE TO EVERY TOILET.

Price 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO,

OR PEARL DENTIFRICE,

A White Powder, compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the ORIENTAL HERBAL, and of inestimable value in Preserving and Imparting a Pearl-like Whiteness to the Teeth,

STRENGTHENING THE GUMS, AND IN RENDERING THE BREATH SWEET AND PURE.

Price 2s. 9d. per box.

 Sold by A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London.

AND BY CHEMISTS AND PERFUMERS.

 BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!!

THE HAIR.

THE BEST MEANS to ADORN it is to use CHURCHER'S TOILET CREAM, which imparts fragrance, softness, and beauty to it, and is admitted to be the most economical article for the purpose extant. Price 1s., 1s. 6d., and 6s.

Decidedly the best Hair Dye is BATCHELOR'S INSTANTANEOUS COLUMBION, in the New York Original Packets. Price 4s. 6d., 7s., and 14s.

Sold by Hairdressers, and by R. HOVENDEN, Wholesale Perfumer, &c., No. 5, Great Marlborough Street, (Three Doors East of the Pantheon), W., and 57 and 58, Crown Street, Finsbury Square, London, E.C.

D'ALTENBURG'S ORIENTAL OIL is the finest and most agreeable remedy ever used for Baldness. It speedily restores the hair when it has fallen off, from sickness or any other cause, strengthens and beautifies it, and imparts to it a permanent lustre and silky softness. It is eminently successful in restoring grey hair to its original colour. Price 2s. 9d. and 5s. 6d. per bottle.

D'ALTENBURG'S DENTIFRICE, an Oriental preparation of peculiar efficacy in preserving and embellishing the Teeth, imparting to them a brilliant polish and perfect whiteness, arresting decay, preventing toothache, strengthening the gums, and in rendering the breath fragrant and pure. Price 1s. 1½d. per box; post-free for 16 stamps.

CAUTION.—The unprecedented demand for these celebrated articles has called forth numerous spurious imitations, under similar names. None can be genuine without the signature of the proprietors, D'ALTENBURG and Co., on each article.—Sold by them at 38A, Lamb's Conduit-street, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

CLOVE PINK

PRESERVATIVE

TOOTH PASTE,

For Removing Tartar from the Teeth and Scurvy from the Gums, without injuring the Enamel, giving them a pearly Whiteness, and the flavour being most agreeable.

1s. per Pot.

Prepared by GEORGE W. LANE, 13, Rathbone Place, Oxford Street, London.

AGENT for CONDY'S NATURAL DISINFECTANT.

THE following is an EXTRACT from the Second Edition (page 188) of the Translation of the Pharmacopœia of the Royal College of Physicians of London, by Dr. G. F. Collier, published by Longman and Co.:—"It is no small defect in this compilation (speaking of the Pharmacopœia) that we have no purgative mass but what contains aloes; yet we know that hæmorrhoidal persons cannot bear aloes, except it be in the form of COCKLE'S PILLS, which chiefly consist of aloes, scammony, and colocynth, which I think are formed into a sort of compound extract, the acridity of which is obviated, I suspect, by an alkaline process, and by a fourth ingredient (unknown to me) of an aromatic tonic nature. I think no better and no worse of it for its being a patent medicine. I look at it as an article of commerce and domestic convenience, and do not hesitate to say it is the best-made pill in the kingdom—a muscular purge, a mucous purge, and a hydrogogue purge combined—and their effect properly controlled by a dirrigent and corrigent. That it does not commonly produce hæmorrhoids like most aloetic pills, I attribute to its being thoroughly soluble, so that no undissolved particles adhere to the mucous membrane."

A Good FAMILY MEDICINE CHEST, with a prudent use, has saved many a life; and yet we think the idea might be improved upon, and reduced to a more simple form. Take some good Compound, such as COCKLE'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS, and we find that the desired end may be obtained without scales and weights, or little mysterious compartments and enchanted bottles with crystal stoppers. Others might be used, but Cockle's Pills, as tested by many thousands of persons, and found to answer their purpose so well, may be set down as the best.—Observer.

WHY GIVE MORE?—Excellent TEAS, Black, Green, and Mixed, are now on sale, for Family Use, at 2s. 8d. per pound, at NEWSOM and Co.'s original TEA WAREHOUSE, 50, BOROUGH, near London Bridge Terminus. Established A.D. 1745.

FOR

BEST TEAS AND COFFEES,

GO TO

EDMONDS',

93, TOTTENHAM-COURT ROAD.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,

Used in the Royal Laundry,

AND PRONOUNCED BY HER MAJESTY'S LAUNDRESS TO BE THE FINEST STARCH SHE EVER USED.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,

SEE THAT YOU GET IT,

as inferior kinds are often substituted.

Sold by all Chandlers, Grocers, &c., &c.

WOTHERSPOON & CO., GLASGOW AND LONDON.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent.

CONDY'S PATENT CONCENTRATED PURE MALT VINEGAR,

AS SUPPLIED TO HER MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT, the Council for India, the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, the United States Mail Steamers, Prisons, Poor Law Unions, Hospitals, Public Institutions, the principal Club Houses, &c., &c., is the only Pure Vinegar made or to be obtained; Vinegar, in its ordinary state, is water and poisonous acids. This Vinegar does not contain any impurity or adulterating ingredient whatever, and Families, by using this delicious Vinegar, insure purity, and effect a saving of 50 per cent. See Reports of Dr. Letheby, City Officer of Health, Dr. Hassall, of the "Lancet" Commission, Dr. Ure, M.D., and many others. Sold by the Trade in bottles, labelled and capsuled. Wholesale

63, King William Street, London Bridge, E.C.

Six-Quart Sample sent to any Railway, for 3s. 6d.

NICOLL'S NEW REGISTERED PALETOT, has all those advantages which secured such general popularity to Messrs. Nicoll's original Paletot; that is to say, it avoids giving to the wearer an outre appearance, so that professional men, and all others, can use it during morning and afternoon, in or out of doors. Secondly, there is an absence of unnecessary seams, well known to secure a more graceful outline, as well as to effect a great saving in wear; the latter advantage is considerably enhanced by the application of a peculiar and neatly-stitched binding, the mode of effecting which is patented. Great exertions are being made to supply Messrs. Nicoll's agents throughout the country and the colonies with an assortment of this new garment simultaneously with the display in London, but it is necessary to inform the public that all Messrs. Nicoll's manufactures may be distinguished by a trade mark, consisting of a silk label attached to each specimen; to copy this is fraud, and may be thus detected: if the garment is dark-coloured, the label has a black ground, with the firm's name and address woven by the Jacquard loom in gold coloured silk; if the garment is light-coloured, the label has a pale drab ground, and red silk letters. Each Paletot is marked in plain figures, at a fixed moderate price, and is of the best materials. In London, the NEW REGISTERED PALETOT can alone be had of H. J. & D. NICOLL, 114, 116, 118, 120, REGENT STREET, and 22, CORNHILL.

A NEW DEPARTMENT FOR YOUTH, &c.

H. J. and D. NICOLL recommend for an outside Coat the Havelock; and for ordinary use the Cape Suit, such being well adapted for Young Gentlemen, as exhibiting considerable economy, with general excellence. Gentlemen at Eton, Harrow, Winchester, the Military and Naval Schools, waited on by appointment. A great variety of materials adapted for the Kilted or Highland Costume, as worn by the Royal Princes, may be seen at

WARWICK HOUSE, 142, and 144, REGENT STREET.

FOR LADIES.

NICOLL'S PATENT HIGHLAND CLOAK is a combination of utility, elegance and comfort. No lady having seen or used such in travelling, for morning wear or for covering full dress, would willingly be without one. It somewhat resembles the old Spanish Roquelaire, and has an elastic Capucine Hood. It is not cumbersome for heavy, and measures from twelve to sixteen yards round the outer edge, falling in graceful folds from the shoulders; but by a mechanical contrivance (such being a part of the patent) the wearer can instantly form semi-sleeves, and thus leave the arms at liberty; at the same time the Cloak can be made as quickly to resume its original shape. The materials chiefly used are the soft neutral-coloured Showerproof Woollen Cloths manufactured by this firm. The price will be Two Guineas and a Half for each Cloak; but with the Mécanique and a lined Hood a few shillings more are charged. This department is attended to by Cutters, who prepare Mantles of all kinds, with Velvet, Fur, or Cloth Jackets, either for in or out-door use. These at all times—like this Firm's Riding Habit—are in good taste and fit well. Female attendants may also be seen for Pantalons de Dames à Cheval, partially composed of Chamois. As no measure is required, the Patent Highland Cloak can be sent at once to any part of the Country, and is thus well adapted for a gift.

H. J. and D. NICOLL, Warwick House, 142 and 144, REGENT STREET, London.

GLANVILLE'S HYDROSULPHATE of IRON MIXTURE, a certain and expeditious cure for Cholera, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, and Bowel Complaints, Spasms, Pains, Sickness, Cramp in the Limbs or Stomach, Weakness of the Chest, Stomach, and Bowels, General Debility and Nervousness. Hundreds of testimonials of its wonderful effects: recommended by eminent medical men.

Manufactured only by the Proprietor, 3, Clifton Terrace, West Brompton, London. Sold by all Chemists and Druggists. Price 1s. 1½. and 2s. 9d.

RITCHIE'S PATENT GRANULATED CORK MATTRESSES and BEDS expel Vermin, effectually cure Rheumatism, prevent Cramp, and, by preserving electricity, promote Health and prolong Life. The Patent Cork Mattress and Cork Fabric Manufactory, 66, Hatfield Street, Blackfriars.

SHIP OAK LOGS for WINTER FIRES Superior SHIP OAK TIMBER for Firewood, cut into suitable lengths, for grates of any size, is sold at the old-established Ship Breaker's Yard, Bridge Wharf, Battersea, at 20s. per cart load, delivered within four miles. It makes a warm, agreeable, and lasting fire, and having been patronized for many years, can with confidence be recommended. Address W. C. TARVER, Bridge Wharf, Battersea, S.W. Cash on delivery.

Printed for the Proprietors, by RICHARD BARRETT, 13, Mark Lane, London; and sold by W. TWEEDIE, 337, Strand.

March 1, 1859.

Digitized by Google

The Philanthropist,

AND

SOCIAL SCIENCE GAZETTE.

April 1, 1859.

Index.

Reformation of Criminals 343
Reformatories and Refuges 348
Annual Meeting of the Islington Reformatory 350
Editorial Articles:
The Reformatory and Refuge Union 352
Discharged Prisoners 352
Public Playgrounds 353
Summary Convictions 354
Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society 354
Correspondence:
Wet-Nurses from the Fallen 355
National Association for the Promotion of Social Science 356
"The Jebb and Crofton Controversy" 356
Roman Catholic Institutions 357
Review:
The Improvement of the Dwellings of the Labouring Classes 358
Royal National Life-Boat Institution 358
Red Lodge, Bristol 359

REFORMATION OF CRIMINALS.

On Monday, February 21st, a meeting was held at the rooms of Mr. Commissioner Hill, at the Guildhall, Bristol, for the purpose of hearing statements from Captain Crofton, C.B., of Ireland, and Mr. Barwick Baker, of Hardwicke Court, with reference to the systems adopted by them respectively for the reformation of criminals. Tea and other refreshments were served in the private rooms of Mr. Commissioner Hill to a large number of influential persons, among whom were several ladies. After tea the company adjourned to the Bankruptcy Court, and the meeting was presided over by Mr. Commissioner Hill. The arrangements made for the accommodation of the large company assembled were excellent, and, although the court was crowded, no inconvenience was experienced.

Mr. Commissioner Hill said his first duty was a pleasing one—it was to thank those present for the promptitude and readiness with which they had responded to his invitation to enter the Court of Bankruptcy, and he trusted they would all pass through it with very great credit. They were attracted there, no doubt, with the hope of hearing Captain Crofton, who, with his worthy colleagues in Ireland, had been the founder of an improved system of treatment for criminals in that country. He was glad also to see present his friend Mr. Barwick Baker, of Hardwicke Court, to whom the inhabitants of Bristol and Gloucestershire were so much indebted for the beneficial effect he had produced on juvenile criminals, diminishing their number very much, and in the best way, by reforming them. His excellent friend, Captain Crofton, who would explain the system upon which he had been acting, and the results of that system up to the present time, was anxious that he (Mr. Commissioner Hill) should in some degree clear the way, by explaining the circumstances under which he tried an experiment, sufficiently difficult, but not more difficult than it has been entirely successful. It was known to all who heard him—because all who heard him had read the history of England—that for ages our country was under the reproach among foreigners, of having the most sanguinary and severe system of criminal jurisprudence known in the civilized world, and most assuredly, although there was much exaggeration mixed with this reproach, there was also sufficient truth to make the chapter of criminal administration of justice a chapter of horrors to all Englishmen who read it. During the time of Queen Elizabeth the number of criminals executed for minor offences, in one year, independently of those who suffered death for murder, treason, and the higher crimes, was—as we learn from Harrison, in his introduction to Holinshed—four hundred, out of a population of four millions, or equal to two thousand out of the present population of the country. In the county of Somerset alone, in the reign of Elizabeth, forty persons suffered death upon the gibbet in one particular year. In those days not only judges at assizes, but magistrates at quarter sessions, had jurisdiction of life and death, and great indeed was the profusion of capital punishment. No doubt there was an improvement from that time to the last century, but whoever would look at the statute book of the last century would find that the multiplication of capital punishments betokened the belief that severity was the best mode of diminishing crime, and would find that doctrine standing its ground against all experience, argument, and reason that could be adduced from a feeling of humanity or the teachings of religion. With regard to one offence an experiment was tried, which will leave no doubt in the mind of any experienced person of the inutility of this extreme punishment. The offence of forgery was simply a misdemeanour, but it was treated as a capital felony, the determination of the ruling powers being, by extreme severity and the execution of the last penalty of the law on every person convicted of forgery, to destroy, or at all events greatly to diminish that prevalent offence, and therefore no mercy was shown to the convicted forger. For half a century was the experiment tried, and it was found that in proportion to the number of executions was the increase in the number of crimes. In 1764 was written that remarkable work on crimes and punishments, by the great Italian jurist Beccarini, in which was shown by arguments and the most indisputable facts that severity of punishment was an error, as well as a crime. He showed that at all times it had been futile, that in proportion to the sanguinary nature of the criminal law, was the sanguinary disposition of the criminal, and that it occasioned an increase in crime. He also showed that prosecutors, witnesses, and judges revolted from time to time against this severity; and that which was proved in Italy, was proved over and over again in England, that the severity exhibited, by disinclining prosecutors to prosecute, by tempting witnesses to prevaricate in favour of mercy, by tempting jurymen to forget their oaths in favour of mercy, by causing judges to indulge in the most extraordinary crotchets for the sake of saving the criminal from the scaffold—all these matters worked together to make severity, beyond the due mark of justice, a shield of impunity for the criminal, instead of a sword to smite him. He remembered in his own time, a remarkable instance of a person connected with the proprietors of many of the banks in London, who, depending upon that connection, forged almost with impunity. They treated him with forbearance from time to time, then treated him with every possible indignity, but did not prosecute him. The man pursued this career for twenty years, but at last—whether he forged upon persons with whom he had no connection, or whether he had worn out the forbearance of his friends—he was given up and executed. One only wonders that this knowledge of the futility of extreme severity, joined to that feeling of humanity and tenderness, which the gradual increase of kind feeling and sympathy of the people of England induced, did not put a stop to this extreme severity at an earlier period. But during the whole of the eighteenth century, the severity of punishments was increased, and many offences were created capital felonies, or, in other words, additions were made to the black catalogue of offences, which carried our fellow-creatures to the gallows. There were not wanting, however, wise and benevolent men, following in the steps of Beccarini, to adduce new facts and add fresh reasons, and to enforce his doctrine with all that learning, talent, and eloquence could bring, as would be seen when he mentioned such names Romilly and Macintosh, and although what they said seemed to fall on deaf ears, it had its weight and produced its effect. During the commencement of the first half of the present century, it was found by those most desirous of preserving the severity of the English law, that it could not be maintained. The tide which had flowed towards the point of severity for so long a time, now began to ebb. Now it was that the penal statutes enacting death were, statute after statute, torn from the book of our law, and the law of England became as remarkable for what he must believe undue and unreasonable lenity, as it had been for the absence of all mercy. From 1825 to the present time, there had been a gradual increase of lenity of punishment, which he saw no ground for supposing would be stayed for years to come, for he believed it unreasonable to suppose that when the tide has flown for ages in one direction, it can be brought to low-water mark in a few years. But the consequences of this misplaced lenity are very much to be deplored. According to his view of things, the sentences of our courts are gradually diminishing in length and severity of infliction, until in many cases they have become almost ludicrous, and he should not be surprised to see the time when an offender would receive some sort of remonstrance from the presiding judge, and told to go about his business, and not repeat such tricks again. About fifteen years ago our Government found an

Digitized by Google

